U. S. Congress.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 77th CONGRESS FIRST SESSION

Appendix

VOLUME 87—PART 12

MAY 20, 1941, TO JULY 14, 1941
(PAGES A2385 TO A3402)

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE, WASHINGTON, 1941

DEPOSITED BY THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

APR 2 '42

United States of America

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 77th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Appendix

No Convoys: No War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GERALD P. NYE
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. GERALD P. NYE, OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address of my own, delivered over the Mutual network on the evening of Wednesday, May 8, entitled "No Convoys: No War."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fellow Americans, the floodgates of war propaganda, flung wide open these last few days, are subjecting the people of our country to a frantic verbal whipping.

America's interventionists are on the spot, driven frantic by discovery that the people could not be moved by pleas for any aid in Europe's war beyond that which could be given without dragging us into the war.

In this frantic hour the interventionists are putting the people of America on the spot. This week, or these next few days, are to determine whether or not America is going to be in Europe's war, and the people who determine that are going to be the fathers and the mothers, the sons and the daughters of America. Determination of this critical question rests now upon the question of whether the American people will make their wishes heard.

I cannot believe that there are people listening tonight who are not aware of the fact that members of the President's administration and spokesmen for the cause of intervention are blitzkrieging the American people into this war. All possible pressure, accompanied by deception, is being brought into play to cause that great majority of the people of our land opposed to going to war to be fearful and quiet, while the organized interventionist minority strives to give the President reason to believe that there is overwhelming public sentiment favorable to our getting into Europe's war—at least, with our Navy—at once.

While the interventionists and the Cabinet members serve as shock troops, tossing their trial balloons, it is anticipated that the President will sit back and await tomorrow what is the public reaction to these proposals. If none but the organized interventionists pour their thoughts into the White House by letter and telegram now, the President may be given reason to say that he is forced to convoy by public sentiment. If, on the other hand, the American people will continue making their mind known, the result that accumulates in the White House can only be good.

This verbal blitzkrieg which has prevailed now for a few days was precipitated by discovery that the people are unqualifiedly opposed to convoying. The President knew it because his mail and telegrams revealed it. Everyone knows it who has contact with the people of this country. The interventionists know it and they now find it their last chance to drive forcefully and quickly for action which cannot be revoked but which will lead America straight to war.

This verbal blitzkrieg by the interventionists has been cleverly organized. Survey it for just a moment:

Down the road to war we have been going with assurances by our leaders that ours were steps "short of war." Hesitatingly, the people have gone along, approving repeal of the arms embargo, the unlawful dispossession of 50 valuable destroyers, peacetime conscription. On down the road to war we have moved, adopting the lend-lease bill, abandoning the cash-and-carry feature of the neutrality law, appropriating, as a first installment on our leasing and lending and underwriting of a foreign war, $7,000,000,000. All the way have the people gone, but always with the positive assurance that these were steps to keep us out of war, steps "short of war."

It was fair to assume that ultimately the request would come to use our Navy to convoy production intended to aid Britain through the dangerous war zone. But when, 2 weeks ago, the stage set for the "push" to convoying, the American people rose up in magnificient might, left no uncertainty in official Washington respecting their unqualified opposition to this further step, reminding the President that he had said some time back that "convoying means shooting and shooting means war." The people at that stage cried out "enough," and began demanding greater frankness on the part of American leadership.

The anger of those who were displeased by this showing of public determination found outlet through declarations by columnists that there was terrible and dangerous apathy over the country. This anger brought deception into largest play.

The Nation was told by the press one day that an administrative Member of Congress had said that it was reliable information that at least 40 percent of our aid to Britain was being destroyed before it reached Great Britain. It followed that we must convoy this aid. "What is the sense of spending $7,000,000,000 to aid Britain when 40 percent of it does not get there?" we were asked. This was unadulterated deception, and when motion was made last Wednesday to get the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to invite the authorities who knew what the losses were to give the committee and the Congress the benefit of their information, the administration forces upon that committee denied the motion. There was determination that not even the Congress should be given access to truth in this hour when men were driving us to war.

But today truth has its hour. Admiral Land, of the Maritime Commission, has advised the Congress that from December 31 to March 31, 205 vessels loaded with goods for Britain have cleared from United States ports for United Kingdom ports, that of these 205 vessels only 8 have been destroyed. A further disclosure is that in the months of March and April not one shipment of these goods from United States ports to British ports has been destroyed.

With that excuse for convoying smashed, what shall be stated by the interventionists as a sizable excuse for convoying now?

On the same day that this deception about losses was planted the anger of that hour found the President declaring that there might be Nazis in Greenland. Knowing the circumstances that surrounded that declaration, the only conclusion to be drawn is that the apathy of the people had to be met by frightening them into doing the thing against which their sober judgment dictated.

That was but the beginning of this blitzkrieg to move America into this war. These last 3 days have brought into the drive deception, incitement to fear, demands for immediate action, and organization to roll onto the President's desk a mighty telegraphic response from people demanding convoying by our Navy.

Three days ago came the headlines announcing that 17 so-called experts were agreed that we could defeat Germany. On the same day came the word from one of these grasshopper statesmen who hops to England and hops back, President Conant, that it was time for America to throw her might into this war on just the naval side. And on that same day the President let the headlines say, "America is ready to fight for democracy again." Yesterday the blitz continued, with Senator PEPPER tossing up his trial balloon, proposing that we grab Dakar and the Azores, bomb Tokyo, get tough. Only last evening came Secretary Stimson with an unadulterated demand to use our Navy to deliver aid to Great Britain through the war zones, and declaring that Great Britain "has been accepted by us for a century" as having "accommodated our whole method of life" in America. No man knows better than Secretary Stimson the part that Britain played during this last century in striving to destroy our Union, and yet he would cause the people to adopt the theory that our very life depends upon Great Britain and her Navy.

Tonight the blitzkrieg continues, with Mr. Wendell Willkie's panzer division in a rally in New York, broadcasting a continuation of this spirit of hate and fear, and this demand for America to get into this convoying business without further delay.

Only when men lend their personalities to questionable programs are we entitled to deal with personalities. In this hour when personalities would drive America to war, I am not going to hesitate to speak clearly with respect to some of these personalities. It is time now to speak and to act, tomorrow may be too late; to be as bold as are the interventionists. This is the time to be demanding that American leaders keep their promises, write an end to deception. This is time to be turning our backs upon those who have condemned themselves as insincere leaders.

Many of you heard Mr. Willkie tonight. His purpose in this hour is so diametrically opposed to the one he pledged last fall that I insist that his appeal now is subject to question. It was Wendell Willkie who, last November 4, said:

"Let us remember that dictatorship always begins by asking the people to give up some law or tradition for some special reason. The reason given may even seem logical. The motives behind it may be honorable and sincere. But if you give in to such reasons, little by little the structure of democracy is taken away from you without your realizing it."

This was the same Mr. Willkie who was prevailed on in February to do his hop to England and back, just in time to testify on the last day of the hearings on the lend-lease bill, and appeal for this largest grant of power ever extended by a Congress to an Executive—the same Willkie.

During his testimony at that time Mr. Willkie was reminded of his campaign assertion of October 30, when he said:

"On the basis of his (Roosevelt's) past performance with pledges to the people, you may expect we will be at war by April 1941, if he is elected."

When asked whether or not he still agreed that might be the case, Mr. Willkie responded, "It was a bit of campaign oratory."

It was Willkie who, on November 12, with all call for campaign oratory gone, said:

"Mr. Roosevelt and I both promised the people in the course of the campaign that if we were elected we would keep this country out of war unless attacked. Mr. Roosevelt was elected, and this solemn pledge for him I know will be fulfilled, and I know the American people desire him to keep it sacred."

Could there be language more emphatic? Yet today we hear Mr. Willkie say things that have us wondering if he ever meant what he said when he expressed the desire to keep sacred promises that he and Roosevelt had made to keep out of war.

Let us be sure who leads these days, and that sincerity governs.

America, don't you see what has been happening, what is being done now? Don't you realize that here is concerted effort to drive against the determined will of the American people, to take this Republic of ours into another futile European war that involves no issues new to those that were involved in the last war?

It is time for the people who have a heart for the future of America to emphatically make known to official Washington, from the President on down, that all of this blitzkrieg by the Winchells, the Thompsons, the Stimsons, the Peppers, and the Willkies is not a reflection of popular faith and popular belief. It is time to be demanding frankness, the abandonment of deception, to be reminding official Washington of the promises it has made as these so-called steps short of war have been taken. Among other things the people should be reminding their President and their representatives of assurances that were given on September 21, 1939, when the President said:

"With the repeal of the embargo this Government clearly and definitely will insist that American citizens and American ships keep away from the immediate perils of the actual zones of conflict."

Remind the President, and remind your Congress, that these words of 1939 were accepted as being a sincere assurance to the American people, and that May of 1941 finds the people demanding reassurance on this score of keeping out of the fields of war.

One does not associate with people in the East and West in this land of ours without knowing that there is an overwhelming demand that our country stay out of war. All the beautiful words in captivity are not going to alter that determination so long as the facts remain what they are today.

Interventionists may go forth with their program of planting and fanning hate and fear, but so long as that part of our great people who constitute this overwhelming majority make it clear that they are for America first, the fanning and planting are to no avail.

To talk about carrying freedom of worship, freedom of speech, freedom from want, and freedom from fear to all the world, in our time and generation, does not mean much when all the people of America know that there is a considerable portion of these freedoms not yet available to all Americans. The cause that takes America into these foreign wars again has got to be a better cause than that.

I am not one of those who believe that the President of the United States has been without knowledge of the steps that have recently been taken by interventionists and members of his administration to make it seem that public opinion is driving him to convoying and to war. There will be those who will insist that the President has promised to keep us out of war, therefore he will not let these interventionists drag us in. But let me remind you that however much assurance may have been given to the people by the President, that Mrs. Roosevelt so very recently gave notice that the President had never given any such assurance, or made any such promise.

Don't—I plead with you who hear me—don't let official Washington have any reason, after this pending blitzkrieg is ended, to believe that the people are for the purposes which the blitzkrieg has enunciated. Make yourselves heard, just as the interventionists are going to make themselves heard these next few hours, when with all the might of their organizations, they will flood the President with telegrams and communications which would give the President chance to demonstrate that he was being pressured into convoying, that public demand insisted that convoying be undertaken.

Americans, use the same machinery that your interventionist foes are using in this hour. It is the telling hour. It is the critical hour. It is the determining hour. Don't let the record of public expression that comes to rest in Washington these next few days be any excuse for a conclusion that the American people are for convoying, shooting, and going to war.

Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH H. BALL
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. JOSEPH H. BALL, OF MINNESOTA

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address which I delivered on Saturday night, May 17, 1941, at Minneapolis, Minn., over the Columbia network, on the subject of our foreign policy. The address is a reply to the America First spokesmen.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I welcome this opportunity you offer me to refute the defeatism and the confusion which the America First leaders have preached in this city and are spreading throughout the Nation.

It is to that duty that I humbly address myself tonight.

I remember well the first Norwegian Independence Day celebration that I covered as a newspaperman. It was a joyous occasion—an occasion for singing and dancing, for speeches recalling fondly and proudly that May day in 1814 when Norway declared her independence at Eidsvold, and adopted a constitution for free men and women modeled on our own American Constitution. It was a gay anniversary.

But I see no gayety, no joyous remembrance of the birth of Norway's independence on the faces before me tonight. Another date, a date of grim and ominous significance, has blacked out—and we pray God that its eclipse is only temporary—the memory of that older, happier date of May 17, 1814. That newer date is April 9, 1940, the day when Nazi warships appeared suddenly in Norwegian harbors, when Nazi warplanes darkened her skies, and when thousands of Nazi tourists whom friendly, peaceful Norway had made welcome, suddenly stripped off their sheep's clothing and were revealed as the hated Gestapo agents who repaid Norway's hospitality by driving a dagger into her back.

Many of you here still have friends and relatives back in Norway, for whose safety you are concerned. The 17th of May can never be for you a joyous anniversary as long as those friends and relatives are within the reach of the cruel and ruthless Gestapo. All of us join you in praying for their early deliverance, a deliverance that can come only if Britain succeeds in stopping the steady, onward march of Nazi barbarism.

That march must be stopped, or like the relentless tides of the ocean, it will engulf the whole world. And I, for one, would rather see it stopped and hurled back 3,000 miles across the Atlantic than to wait complacently until it laps against our very shores. I would not wait until it is our streets that echo to the fearful shriek of the air raid warnings, our cities that are turned into shambles by bombs and fire, and our women and children who are forced to huddle in subterranean shelters like our prehistoric ancestors.

And just as Norway, Poland, and the other conquered nations cannot hope to regain freedom if England falls, so Sweden, Ireland, Finland, and the few remaining independent countries of Europe cannot hope to escape Nazi domination if England falls.

Tonight all of you are thinking of the homeland of your fathers across the Atlantic. Your thoughts are sad. But I know that you are also thinking of your own homeland here in America and of what the future holds for her in this hour of world crisis. It is of America's future I speak—a future that may hold the key to Norway's future also.

A little over 2 months ago Congress passed the lease-lend bill. It carried in both Houses by nearly a 2-to-1 majority after the fullest kind of debate and public discussion. I believe that vote reflected generally the will of the people of this Nation. By passing the lease-lend bill, the United States did two things:

First, it turned its back finally and completely on an isolationist foreign policy. It admitted that this great Nation is in the world and of it, that its interests are affected vitally by major events and upheavals in other hemispheres, and that henceforth we would use our tremendous political and economic influence in a positive fashion to protect our security wherever it was threatened.

And, second, this Nation declared that the defense of Britain and other free nations fighting Axis aggression is vital to our own defense, and that we therefore would aid those nations to the limit of our productive powers.

Subsequently we appropriated $7,000,000,000 to effectuate that policy.

I voted for that bill, and I supported that policy. I still support it.

Now, why did we, a great and powerful nation, suddenly decide that our security was threatened vitally by a war 3,000 miles across the ocean; so threatened that we passed this unprecedented law?

We didn't do it just because from the beginning our sympathies had been strongly on the side of the British and against the Nazis. Mere sympathy is not sufficient excuse for any nation to run the risk of war, and we recognized at the time that the lease-lend policy did involve grave risks of war. Only the strongest kind of realistic self-interest should ever impel our country to run such risks.

We took those risks because we suddenly realized that this war is not just another European war over the balance of power or commercial markets. We realized that it was the beginning of a world revolution, a revolution plotted and planned over 25 years with the most diabolical cleverness and ingenuity the earth has ever seen. Out of the brutal, ruthless past of mankind had stalked a man—Adolf Hitler. Make no mistake—he is not a madman. He is a genius, a great genius, but a very evil genius. His philosophy is that of the Dark Ages, when men made slaves of conquered peoples, when might made right, when there were no laws and the strong and cruel trod upon the weak and helpless.

To that barbaric and anti-Christian philosophy he has harnessed the great organizing and producing genius of the German people. He has turned the decent instincts of civilized mankind, their respect for laws and treaties, their hatred of war, into the weapons he uses to destroy their liberties, and into the chains he uses to bind them to his war machine. Because he respects no laws, no treaties, because his pledged word has been but a subterfuge to divert suspicion until he was ready to break it, he has enjoyed a tremendous advantage over the civilized men and nations who respected these institutions.

It had become clearly apparent to us that Hitler's aim was, and must of necessity be, world domination. This so-called European war already had spread far into the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The Nazi legions invaded Africa, and the Axis acquired a partner in the Far East. We have Hitler's own word for it in Mein Kampf that his aims include the Americas, and his promises in that book are the only ones he has ever kept. Only last year a plot by his agents to seize control of one of our South American neighbors was frustrated. Furthermore, no conquerer in history, from Xerxes of ancient Persia to Napoleon in the last century, ever stopped his conquests until he was stopped by force. Xerxes was stopped at Salamis, Napoleon at Moscow. Shall we sit back and try to stop Hitler at New York, Baltimore, and Charleston, or possibly Buenos Aires and Brazil, or shall we help stop him at the cliffs of Dover?

We recognized this aim when we passed the lease-lend bill. We decided to aid the fight for freedom wherever it was being waged, and not to wait until all the rest of the free nations had fallen and we fought with our backs to the wall and the enemy at our shores.

The leaders of the America First Committee fought passage of the lease-lend bill to the very limit, and since its passage they have fought every move to implement the policy underlying that act. I believe and I trust that these gentlemen—Mr. Lindbergh and Senator WHEELER, and the others—are advocating sincerely the course they believe best for this Nation. I deplore the personal attacks on them and on their patriotism. But I believe also that they are creating serious national disunity which hampers our defense effort and threatens our security. Let's examine their position.

Fundamentally, they are still saying the foreign policy underlying the lease-lend bill is wrong and that we should abandon it and completely reverse our policy to one of isolation.

Actually, we have been opposing the Nazis on the economic and political front for more than a year. You know it, I know it, and so does Hitler know it. Our efforts have been intensified since the passage of the lease-lend bill. If we now reverse ourselves and quit, we not only throw overboard the faith of Britain and her allies, but we gain nothing from Hitler but his contempt for our vacillation and fear. Hitler would be only the more certain to attempt conquest of this hemisphere when the time to him seems ripe if we now, at the first sign of trouble, turn and run.

The America First argument boils down to this: Our present policy is heading closer to naval intervention, so reverse it and turn back. They say Hitler is a reasonable man and we can make terms with him. But even if we can't, we can still build an invulnerable defense for this hemisphere and defeat him if he attacks us.

If we accept their advice, we face two alternatives. One, and they admit it although they try to minimize it, is that Hitler, if he succeeds in conquering Britain, will attempt to gain a foothold in South America as the first step toward eventual conquest of this hemisphere. In that case, we would fight and we would go to war. We would fight alone. And we would fight here in America. Our cities would be subject to bombing attacks, our towns would be blacked out, and our civilian population would know the horrors of night air raids.

The other alternative, and this is the one they stress, is that we come to terms with Mr. Hitler. That is what Czechoslovakia did at Munich. That is what Rumania did, what Bulgaria did. Our terms probably wouldn't be as bad as those imposed on Rumania and Bulgaria—not at first anyhow, because we are much larger and potentially more powerful. But there would be terms—make no mistake about that. We would have to adjust our policies to Hitler's new world order. The adjustment might be slight at first, but it would be an entering wedge. And eventually, unless we rebelled at some period in the process and went to war, we would capitulate completely and some American Quisling would sit in the White House taking orders from Berlin.

Is that farfetched? Study their arguments, analyze them. They reiterate again and again that Poland was not prepared, that France, Yugoslavia, and Greece were not prepared. They say those nations were in no position to resist aggression successfully, and therefore they should have accepted whatever terms Hitler laid down. Then these defeatists declare the United States also is unprepared. Logic leads us inexorably to the conclusion that it is this kind of peace, the peace of Munich, toward which the America First Committee is trying to lead the American people. They would not make America first. They would merely make America the final victim on Hitler's list.

Those are the two alternatives offered by the America First leaders, and I reject both of them with all the emphasis at my command.

The job of stopping aggression is primarily one of production. And America has blazed the trail for the whole world in that field.

Our defeatists speak today in awed fashion of totalitarian efficiency. But who developed the airplane, the submarine, the telephone, the electric light, the radio, all the mechanical marvels of this modern age? It was free American workmen and free American industry. As long as we stand united, as long as our workmen and our industries strive shoulder to shoulder to do the job we have set out to do, they will outproduce all the slave labor in the world, and this great Nation need never appease the dictators.

Our forefathers traveled a long and arduous road toward freedom and civilization. They were told again and again by the defeatists of their generation that "it can't be done." And they proved again and again that it can be done; that defeatism, however useful it may be to Hitler in dividing his enemies, has no place in the lexicon of liberty.

We hear much about a negotiated peace with Hitler. How anyone can talk seriously of that in view of the plain facts of history during the past 2 years is beyond me. Peace treaties and nonaggression pacts are part of Mr. Hitler's war strategy. He makes them when they suit his purposes, and he breaks them whenever he is ready to march. There can be no real peace in the world until Hitler is stopped and hurled back, and then our best hope is that the civilized people of Germany, perhaps the army itself, will overthrow him and set up a government whose word would be worth something.

Here in Minnesota we have thousands of neighbors whose fathers came to this country from Germany. We know first-hand what a great contribution the industry, the thrift, and the solid common sense and democracy of these neighbors have made to the progress of our State. And so we are convinced that the slave system of the Nazis and their lust for conquest are not characteristics of the German people but policies forced upon them by leaders who have betrayed their trust.

The defeatists also like to go back into history and point out all of England's past sins. They claim this is not a war between democracy and nazi-ism, but a war to preserve the British Empire. And that is a very dangerous statement because it is half true It is true that England is fighting for her life, that the British Empire is fighting for its life.

But it is also true that Britain is fighting on the side of freedom against nazi-ism. The opponents of our present policy conveniently overlook that part of the truth. Their conclusion from this line of reasoning is that, except for our sympathies, it doesn't really matter to us who wins the war in Europe. And that conclusion is a deliberate distortion. To prove it, we need only ask ourselves: Why are we spending billions to enlarge our Navy and build an army today? Because we are afraid of Britain? No; because we are afraid of what the Nazis may do if the British Fleet falls. That is the ultimate answer to this half truth given such wide circulation by the America First spokesmen.

They attempt to convince the American people that we are aiding Britain solely for the sake of Britain. That is false. We are aiding Britain, not for Britain's sake but for our own sake.

And, finally, these defeatists make a great point of the fact that public-opinion polls in the United States show sentiment 80 percent against going to war now. They are telling the President and Congress that they dare not take steps they might believe necessary for the security of this Nation because those steps might lead to war and the people are against war and, therefore, it would be bad medicine politically.

Well, maybe these gentlemen of the America First Committee place the safety of their political skins above the safety of their country, but I do not, and I fervently hope and believe that the President and a majority of the Congress do not.

I know the American people don't like war and are against war. I don't like it and I'm against it myself. It's horrible and stupid and uncivilized. Nobody wants war.

But let us not permit our desires to blind us to the realities of the world today, even though we may not like those realities.

America must travel one of three roads.

We can reverse our present policy of aiding Britain and prepare to make the best terms we can with Hitler. The United States can journey to Munich and buy peace at any price.

Or we can abandon Britain to her fate and concentrate on preparations to meet Hitler's attack when it reaches our shores. That road leads to war, not peace, and to a war fought right here in America.

Our defeatists would lead America down one or the other of these craven paths.

But there is a third course. That course is to drive forward on the tremendous task of building an impregnable defense for this hemisphere and at the same time to use the great energy and productive resources of this Nation to help Britain stop Hitler on the other side of the Atlantic. That course involves grave risks, yes, but they are less in the long run than those on either of the other roads.

We of America courageously chose this third road when we passed the Lease-Lend Act. Our immediate objective is to assure the survival of Britain and her fleet.

The best information I have been able to obtain in Washington is that the administration now is doing everything it believes wise and necessary to carry out that policy. It may be that further steps will be necessary in the future to make certain that the guns and the airplanes we are producing reach the fighting men of Britain in time.

Only the administration has all of the facts as to shipping losses, the availability of American and British naval power, and the over-all military and naval knowledge on which to base decisions as to exactly what steps we should take from time to time to achieve our objective, the survival of Britain and her fleet. I believe the administration should and will take whatever steps are necessary to reach that goal. And we should not attempt to tie our Government's hands in this emergency.

The job ahead of us is a big one. Everyone of us will have to make sacrifices to do it. But we can and will do what is necessary to make sure that we hand on to our children intact our own precious heritage of freedom. No task is too great for the sons and daughters of those sturdy Americans who hewed this nation of ours out of a wilderness in the short span of 150 years.

Our America, which has held the torch of liberty for a hundred and fifty years, will never succumb to defeatism and extinguish that torch in this hour of world crisis.

The black tide of aggression and slavery that is sweeping the world must be halted. Only then can liberty be secure here in these United States. Only then can freedom and happiness be restored to the courageous peoples of Norway, Poland, Denmark, Czechoslovakia, France, Yugoslavia, Greece, Belgium, the Netherlands—all the long list of nations under Nazi rule. Only then can the people of Sweden, Finland, Ireland, and Switzerland, those little islands of freedom in Nazified Europe, retain their freedom and happiness.

Let us here in America, with a united will and determination, prepare to throw back this wave of barbarism if worst comes to worst and it laps against our very shores. But let us resolve, with the same united will and determination, to do all we can to hurl back aggression before it comes closer.

And let us now determine that when this conflict is over, we will join with all other freedom-loving and peace-loving peoples in the world to find methods of making certain that never again can the peace of this earth be shattered by the lust for power of a single man.

Thank you.

Home Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a talk I made on Wednesday night, April 9, 1941, from 11:15 to 11:30, over a Nation-wide hook-up of the Mutual Broadcasting System, entitled "Home Defense," and I respectfully request that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD immediately following the aforementioned address an article which I have clipped from the New York Daily Mirror under date of April 9, 1941, entitled "Green Blasts 'Reds,' Tie-ups by Minorities."

There being no objection, the address and article were ordered to be printed in the Appendix, as follows:

Good evening, ladies and gentlemen; may I say initially that I am indebted to the Mutual Broadcasting System for this opportunity to talk with you briefly this evening pertaining to home defense, which means national defense. That is one subject, of course, in which we are all greatly interested and are growing more interested daily, particularly when we take into consideration the fact that Germany has recently invaded another country, Yugoslavia, and, apparently without a great deal of difficulty, has penetrated all the territory southward from the German border to the very important seaport of Salonika in Greece.

In the early morning hours of April 9, 1940, the gray-clad legions of the German Army poured in a steady stream into Denmark, and from there they proceeded by plane and ship to Norway. On the morning of May 10, countless other divisions of the German troops invaded the Netherlands, Luxemburg, Belgium.

What followed is now history, but there are many in this country who, like myself, held to the belief that the quick conquest of Denmark, Norway, Netherlands, Belgium, and, lastly, France, was not due entirely to the might of the German panzer divisions or the great destructive forces of the Stukas and the hundreds of thousands of trained and well-equipped infantry. We know that these destructive forces, as powerful as they were, were aided immeasurably by the so-called Trojan horses, "fifth columnists," spies, and saboteurs. These had preceded the German soldiers onto the field of battle, and long beforehand they had marked the vital spots, and when the time arrived to strike they knew just where to deal the most devastating blows.

History fails to record in all its annals more rampant treachery, the debauchery of nations by men in high places, and the complete destruction of the morale of the people than by these sinister and subversive groups.

We in America in these dark and trying days, when hysteria and fear stalk our land, should profit by the sad experiences of Norway, Belgium, and France. We should now, while we still have the time, ferret out these poisonous groups now lurking in our midst whose sole interest is the destruction and overthrow of our Government. Now is the time; tomorrow may be too late.

In considering the matter of further promoting the defense of the United States, we should, I aver, take into consideration the defense of this country from within for the reason that the fundamentals of a defense program must of necessity be constructed upon the solidarity, unity, and firm structure here at home. By that I mean we must firstly build solid concrete foundations here in America. We must clean house here in America before attempting to launch forth in foreign fields to clean house over there. We are firstly interested in the defense of our country, and as a result thereof, we should firstly make construction of the foundations upon which we can build these defenses here in America. We must firstly see that democracy is safe here at home and that its preservation is assured before we go to Europe or any part of the world to impose our American form of democracy upon those countries who have evidenced their unwillingness to adopt the American way of life.

In speaking of home defense, or national defense, I recall well the obligation that I assumed by oath when I entered the United States Senate in 1932 when I swore that I would defend my country against the enemies from within as well as the enemies from without. And in this connection I wish to call to your attention a statement by the sixteenth President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, in which he said that if this Nation is ever destroyed it must be destroyed from within. He was right then. He is right now, and I am thoroughly in accord with the statement he made pertaining to the enemies from within.

As this fateful year of 1941 is now running its course our country is the battleground of men and women—American men and women—fighting out upon American soil the feuds of two hemispheres, Europe and Asia, and in my opinion I respectfully submit that those men and women should be devoting their time, their thought, and their energies to a solution of our defense problems here at home.

And so I say, ladies and gentleman, that today our immediate and imminent danger is from within. We must eternally guard ourselves against the inroads being made against our form of government by the enemies of this Government who are eternally boring from within—Nazis and Fascists, their spies and saboteurs, Communists and their propagandists—day and night, night and day—making terrific assaults upon the very foundations of our Government.

I repeat, instead of going across the ocean to make destruction of these "isms" that are constantly working toward our destruction here, I assert that we should devote our time and our energy to destroying these vicious, foreign "isms" right here in our midst.

Home defense—that's what we are interested in. National defense—that is really what we are all striving for. We are all desirous of perfecting a real genuine national defense for the protection of the United States of America, for the preservation of the Western Hemisphere. In order to attain this, in order to build the foundations, firstly it is necessary that we have national unity, and I am just wondering how we may bring about national unity when we have today in our midst millions of aliens, hundreds of thousands of whom are followers of Stalin in Russia, Hitler in Germany, and of Mussolini's Fascists? These people are not interested in the preservation of our country; these groups are not interested in the preservation of our ideals and our institutions. Their first duty and their first loyalty and love is for their countries across the sea—Russia, Germany, and Italy. These are the very forces that made destruction of France, the very ones who destroyed France from within even while she was endeavoring to prepare herself against attack from without, and that is the very thing that we here in America must today guard against.

In this connection it is interesting to note the figures recently released by the Department of Justice regarding the number of aliens in the United States who recently were registered and fingerprinted. The total number who registered at the post offices throughout the United States under the Mandatory Registration and Fingerprinting Act totaled approximately 5,000,000. I estimate that there are in this country several hundred thousand additional aliens who failed to register due to the fact that many thousands entered illegally, while other thousands entered legally but remained illegally. Amongst all these aliens there are, as we all know, many criminal aliens who are subject to apprehension and deportation but who cannot be deported for the reason that the countries from which they came refuse to take them back.

Much of the trouble today in this country regarding strikes on defense projects is attributable largely to subversive influences and forces that are bent upon impeding the progress of our national-defense program—such as Nazis, Fascists, and Communists.

Last year I introduced in the Senate of the United States a resolution prohibiting any labor organization or union from having as an officer or representative any alien, Communist, Nazi, or Fascist, or anyone connected with these un-American, subversive organizations, as well as prohibiting any American citizen who had been convicted of a felony, thus depriving him of his citizenship, from holding any office in any labor union or organization; but, unfortunately, that resolution never got out of committee, so I have again reintroduced that resolution, which is designated as Senate Joint Resolution No. 64, entitled "A resolution to provide for the national defense by prohibiting labor organizations from employing certain persons as officers or agents," and reading as follows:

"Whereas it is common knowledge that 'fifth-column' activities in various European countries contributed largely to their defeat; and

"Whereas such activities consisted in part of sabotage in key industries and propaganda disseminated among the workers of such industries; and

"Whereas such activities are now being carried on in this country and will gather more momentum in the future, thus undermining our national defense; and

"Whereas because of their key positions in our industrial mobilization plans, officers and agents of labor organizations should all be American citizens whose allegiance to their country is unquestioned and who can be depended upon to cooperate: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any labor union or other labor organization to have as an officer or agent any person who is not a citizen of the United States, who is a Communist, Fascist, or member of any Nazi bund organization who has been at any time within the past 2 years a member of or affiliated with any Communist, Fascist, or Nazi Bund organization, etc."

As stated above I am of the opinion that these foreign influences and members of organizations bent upon the destruction of our American way of life are largely responsible for labor troubles in this country today, and I believe that if my proposed resolution had been enacted into law last year much of the trouble that we are experiencing now would have been eliminated.

So to those of you who do me the honor to listen in tonight I wish to say that if you are interested in the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 64, you should immediately make your desires known to the two United States Senators from your State, and to the congressman of your Congressional District. Write or wire them today and I should likewise appreciate from you an expression concerning this proposed legislation.

[From the New York Daily Mirror of April 9, 1941]

GREEN BLASTS "REDS," TIE-UPS BY MINORITIES

WASHINGTON, April 9.—Communism and minority strikes—the one hiding behind labor to commit sabotage and the other seeking every shifty advantage—are denounced by President Green, of the A. F. of L., in a signed editorial appearing today, as the deadliest enemies of the Nation's defense plans.

He appeals to unions to submit controversies to mediation and arbitration during the crisis.

Twenty-four hours after O. P. M. Labor Director Sidney Hillman told Congress "there is no doubt that Communists in this country are organized to make inroads into labor unions," Green makes the following statement in the American Federationist, official A. F. of L. publication:

"We steadfastly charge that when a responsible union official countenances Communists in representative capacity or sanctions Communist policies or practices, he is false to the American trade-union movement and unworthy of the privileges which our Government affords him."

Green does not identify this union official. It is believed Hillman's statement to Congress was based on a similar cognizance of the situation. Hillman is vice president of the C. I. O. as well as one of the top men in O. P. M.

"Our democratic institutions and the very existence of a free labor movement are at stake," writes Green.

"While we must insist on fundamental principles, when collective bargaining breaks down we should submit issues to mediation and arbitration, doing everything within our power to avoid strikes.

"The American Federation of Labor declares that the gravest dangers which menace defense production are these: Tolerance of Communist Party members in positions of influence, and minority strikes as a method of building up technical control to extend nominal organization."

The veteran labor leader makes the flat charge that some recent strikes were "seditious." He says tolerance for differences of opinion or religion is one thing, but that tolerance for revolutionaries seeking to undermine democratic institutions "is the essence of stupidity and disloyalty to our Nation."

"The second menace to our defense program," he writes, "is the strike by a minority group to gain control by strategy that has not been earned on a basis of union membership.

"The picket line keeps workers out of the plant so that production is stopped and the minority leaders, with the help of Government friends, gain credit for negotiating a truce.

"Later the picket line is used to force payment of dues."

(This practice, extended to the homes of "delinquents," has been adopted by Mike Quill's transport-workers union in New York.)

Address by Senator Claude Pepper, of Florida, at McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, May 19, 1941, Upon Being Awarded the Degree of Doctor of Laws, Honorary

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. CLAUDE PEPPER, OF FLORIDA

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix an address delivered by me at McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, on May 19, 1941.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Your Honor, Mr. Chancelor, honorable officials, faculty members, and students of McMaster, friends and neighbors of Canada, you have honored me beyond measure to allow me to come into the fraternity of McMaster. Although my heart goes out to you in overflowing gratitude, I cannot restrain my feeling that you have honored me far beyond my deserts. To come to Canada is for an American a sort of visit to kinsfolk. But to come here under such happy auspices as brings me here today makes me aware of even closer ties that bind us and our countries together.

Except for the embarrassment of a keen sense of unworthiness to bear this great honor which is bestowed upon me in this distinguished company, and with these eminent colleagues today, I heartily welcome the opportunity that it gives to speak to a brave and free people about our world and the overcast but challenging days ahead.

On a recent evening I saw on the screen a creation called Fantasia, by Walt Disney. This remarkable man, as a visual accompaniment to the Rite of Spring, by Stravinsky, has put on the screen a picturization of the evolution of the world from its first plastic forms to the end of the age of dinosaurs. One saw the belching volcanoes, the rivers of molten fire, the elements torn by thunderbolts mightier than Jove ever hurled, the mountains tossed about like pebbles in Nature's giant convulsions. Yet in the passing of time the sky cleared, the sun moderated its terrible glow, the rivers fell docilely into their grooves, the mountains and the valleys held their distances, and the pattern of a peaceful world emerged from the tumult and the chaos.

Then the earth burst forth in riotous abundance. The fishes filled the sea and the birds and the animals swarmed over the land. Amongst this number there grew up one which was the giant killer—the monster against whom none could stand. He terrified the whole kingdom of life. He was the Tyrannosaurus Rex.

The Fantasia ended with the death of the dinosaurs, including the giant killer, Tyrannosaurus Rex. But you and I know that was not the end of the world. It was just the curtain of an era. The world had outgrown the dinosaur. He belonged to a species which Nature had repudiated.

The eyes and the hearts of the men and women of the world—the children, too—now turn to the sources they trust, to their own private oracles, to such old and honored institutions as McMaster, to know whether these horrible things we now see and hear shall, too, pass away.

The answer is, "Yes."

They always have passed away because they break the law of God and man, and the fundamental laws of God and man are immutable.

There are certain absolutes which may be depended upon in any age—the divinity of God and the dignity of man.

The organism of progress has been many times throttled but never destroyed. The trek of the human family has been long and arduous. The way has wound through the wilderness and the desert, over the mountains as well as the plains, through the jungle and upon the broad bosom of rolling rivers. The way has been beset by every kind of enemy, both the bold and the treacherous. The elements themselves have not always been kind. There have been hard times—times when there could be seen no "pillar of cloud by day" or "pillar of fire by night." Again and again stalwart leaders have been smitten and no voice remained big enough to be heard above the tumult and the doubt.

But here we are. Look back and see how long the road is. Is it not marvelous that we made it?

Can anything present or future be worse than we have mastered already? Candor bids us all say no.

What then is our course?

To be steadfast, to be bold, to know that nothing can cheat us of our destiny, to look outward and not inward, upward and not downward, forward and not backward—that is the way, the truth, and the light

The way of progress lies primarily in the hearts of men. Man's dreams are the unvarying north stars by which he sets his course. Hope is his compass. The will, the legs of achievement.

What we are and where we go depends more upon what we think, what there is inside us, than on what there is on the outside. Nothing is either good or bad but thinking makes it so.

The struggle which bleeds the world today bases upon a mighty conflict in what men think. Some men like their ancestors for many generations back think that they have found the tripod upon which truth firmly rests, namely:

1. That race is the basis of morality.
2. That the ultimate test of all value is physical force.
3. That there must be a master class of rulers.

Not upon the Continent of Europe, not in the Near East or Africa, not even upon the waters of the Mediterranean or the Atlantic does the battle for the world and the race now rage, but upon the broad fields of the minds of men around the truth or the falsity of these concepts. In this struggle every creature who is human is engaged. There can be no neutral who claims the dignity of man.

If the first concept of a superior race having the natural right to rule the earth is a truth, then the doctrine of the brotherhood of man is a lie. If the superiority of race is the cornerstone of the moral code, then right is only human and God is an imposter in the kingdom of good. If there is no higher law than a race, there is no future beyond the grave, to which the most lordly race must inevitably fall. And there is no immortality for even the souls of men.

Those who countenance such perfidy, of course, scorn as mockery the cross and denounce as an imposter the One who said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Naturally, they proscribe the race which gave the world the Son of Man and leash every tongue which would speak His name.

If physical force is the final test of value, then the body is the master of both mind and soul, and the actions of men are guided not by the gentle wooing of the spirit but by the bludgeoning of the club. The brute displaces the Christ Child in the seat of adoration. In such thinking, passion is not "trained to come to heel by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience," but is enthroned in the Olympian seat of all power and lust becomes a noble sentiment.

The real business of man is war, say they. Then they are not the subjects of the Prince of Peace. One of their prophets—Prof. Ewald Banse—declares that "war provides the ground on which the human soul may manifest itself in its fullest height; * * * nowhere else can the will, the achievements of a race or state rise into being so genuinely as in war. War is a purifying bath of steel, breeding new impulses and an infallible test of fitness."

Oh, wounded soldier, bereaved mother, lonely wife, hear this cry from the jungle, where rules

> "The simple plan,
> He may take who has the power,
> And he may keep who can."

Chesterton caught this pagan spirit in the lines:

> "Their gods were sadder than the sea,
> Gods of a wandering will,
> Who cried for blood like beasts at night,
> Sadly, from hill to hill."

What of all those wise and kindly men who have spoken of the good life, who have preached and practiced the gentle arts of peace?

If this be truth, what of that simple One who said, "Blessed are the peacemakers," and "The meek shall inherit the earth"?

"The Teutons believe in a divine origin of inequality," said Fulop Miller. "Who cares," asks Haiser, "about the life, the fate, the interests of the millions, if only the representatives of the racial soul prosper?" "The whole beehive," he adds, "is incarnate in the queen."

Small wonder they scorn the concepts of a democracy which honors what they call the stupid masses.

The master race must, they claim, be pure and undefiled. Hence, there is hate and persecution for the inferior peoples, scorn of that Christianity which dares to teach that all men are equal in the sight of God.

I shall never forget attending, during the Nuremberg Congress in 1938, a session at which a prominent leader spoke on jurisprudence. I noticed the frequent outbursts of laughter of the audience of 22,000 Nazis in response to what were obviously the sarcastic references of the speaker. I learned upon inquiry that the speaker was deriding the Anglo-American system of law which preserved the archaic principle of specifically defining crime for the citizen instead of the new Nazi technique of making crime whatever might harm the state, in the opinion of the Nazi judges.

A superrace, a superstrength, a superclass, then, is the demand and the doctrine of the so-called New Order. The passion with which this faith is propagated, however, leaves no doubt but that it is part of a great fanaticism. Young men rush into battle with arms locked and singing their faith and their defiance even to death. An Australian remarked on the Battle of Thermopylae that the Nazis charged their artillery with bayonets like crazy men.

Here, then, are the zealots of a new paganism—a modern, scientifically sustained, streamlined blitzkrieg adaptation of the ancient barbarian, the bleak religion of the hardy warriors of long ago who lived in the land of long night, sterile earth, dense forests, and relentless rock.

Against this dynamic doctrine what do we appose?

Maybe it cannot be better stated than to say, we believe in God, we believe in man. We believe in a God greater than Odin, greater than Zeus, "Our Father who art in heaven." We believe in the dignity and the nobility of man and man's destiny. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

We believe that freedom is the inheritance of man; that slavery of the body, mind, or spirit is wrong by the law of God and man.

We believe that the human, like the tree, is due the right to unfold into all his or her potential majesty.

We believe that the spirit is the master of all things; that it is the silken cord which leads man to the land beyond the stars.

We believe in the free flowering of the mind; that it is an abortion to curb the curious reach of one of those tender roots of the intellect toward the moisture of truth.

We believe in the sentiment of compassion, the laudable example of the Good Samaritan. The weak are not to be despised but helped, the underprivileged to be nourished, the rejected to be encouraged, all the brave to be honored.

We believe in the good life; the beauty, the gentleness, the nobility, the affection, the lucid light that illuminates it.

We believe in human progress in the past and in the future. Nothing can shake our faith in a better race and a better world through the effort of man.

Does ours continue a dynamic faith, or has it lost its ardor?

Is our life worth fighting for—worth dying for?

Are its apostles, like Peter, ready to deny it at the first question?

At what price do we hold the virtue of our life?

Is the strange apathy we have so widely presented to the new menace due to our failure to see it, or has its hideous face lost its horror to us?

What shall the historian say of our stewardship of our faith?

I sense that we are today going through one of the great transitions of history. The plastic concepts of the social norm, of life itself, are forming and reforming, combining and separating, breaking up and coming together again.

Is the reluctance of some and the declination of others, who give lip service to our faith, to defend it with determination due to their lack of conviction; or to their feeling that that faith has run thin; or, indeed, to a sense of values which does not appraise our doctrine above life, liberty, or even comfort?

Or is it, one may ask, that we have become too civilized all over to be able to meet the kind of centaur who has a modern head and a barbaric heart?

The time for equivocation has long since passed. Those who hesitate now run the violent risk of forever being lost. The world has never seen such a crusade as now sweeps across the globe. With fanatical determination to drive every enemy to cowering cover, with every principle and instrument of science prostituted to purposes of destruction, with a mockery made out of the moral code and the instincts of humanity, this juggernaut rolls on with seeming irresistibility.

All men of good will must be called to their colors. The standards of the Cross, the Bible, the Church, the libraries, the homes, the families, of all the old landmarks, of all we love, must be raised high and held up. The rallying cry must come as clear as a mountain call from those who speak "as with authority."

Ours must not be a negative but an affirmative effort. Our strategy must not be a defense but a counterattack. Our only hope to rally oppressed and dejected men and women, the frustrated hopes of boys and girls the world over is to show them that our faith is not a worn-out dogma, a hollow chant, but a living vital fire and without it all life is a cold oven, a frigid hearth. Let us confess that our way of life has been tardily adapted to the technology of the current day and that most obsolescent of all our equipment is our thinking, the excessive tenacity with which we hold to the old, the overreluctance with which we embrace the new.

Let us admit that we have not fully grasped how the principle that we are our brother's keeper applies to our duty to make available in our social order to every man and women, boy and girl, a trade, a skill, a profession, a job, a home, medical care and hospitalization, security—the four great freedoms President Roosevelt eulogized—freedom of conscience, freedom of speech, freedom from want, freedom from fear.

Let us ask our God forgiveness for all we have not done with opportunity and for much we have done with power.

Let us put our faith and our motives through the trial of fire and refine out the dross and the impurities because our position now is that of one who wants to speak to his God with a bare conscience before he engages in mortal combat the enemy.

We must tell those young men who have left their classes and their desks, their simple pursuits of peace, who have broken the ties of hope and home and family, and soared into the clouds or ploughed through the waves or across the desert sands—we must tell them that before God we will not let them down as we did their fathers.

They must go with the conviction in their hearts that they are not sheep to the slaughter, but knights of a greater round table than King Arthur's on a mission as noble as the search for the Holy Grail.

This terrible ordeal may be in the mysterious way of the Divine One—a testing time for the race when we, like Job, shall have our faith tried.

We have already seen enough to know what the outcome will be. We have seen the aroused spirit of a great nation, a mighty empire rising like the glory of a morning sun which no thing on earth can darken or cool. We have seen the majesty of the human will rising unconquerable above every material assault which the forces of hell may loose. We know now that the greatest power on earth is the soul of man.

This heroic example has touched those who have lingered behind hesitant, confused, or shrinking from the terrible struggle. But now the conscience of the world, including my country especially, is stirring like an awakening giant.

You and I know that when it is once aroused its terrible wrath shall shake the earth in righteous indignation, and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Here in McMaster, in other schools and colleges, you have the great task of keeping the signal fires lighted. Your generation counts upon you to keep them bright, to keep them true, to see that the flame does not flicker but is steady and strong.

In the heavy night valiant men will lose their way if those lights go out, and they must not lose their way because they, too, are the wise men bound east to keep their own rendezvous with the Christ Child.

United States Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER

OF KANSAS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

ADDRESS BY FORMER GOVERNOR LANDON AND COMMENT BY ARTHUR KROCK

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio broadcast delivered by former Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, over the Columbia Broadcasting System from station WIBW at Topeka, Kans., on Sunday afternoon, May 18, dealing with the foreign policy of the United States. Also I ask to have printed in the Appendix, following Governor Landon's broadcast, an article by Arthur Krock, published in the New York Times of this morning, commenting on the speech by Governor Landon.

There being no objection, the address and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

First, I want to protest against the attempt to discredit those who are seeking to continue a realistic discussion of the issues of peace or war for the United States.

In a recent editorial an anti-Semitic organ attacked me for using the Jewish word "tolerance." That was the first time I knew that word belonged to the Jews, or to any other race. I know plenty of creeds it does not belong to. It is not any part of the so-called liberal New Deal. It does not belong to the Nazis, Fascists, or Communists. They seek now, since they have become strong enough, to force their horrible beliefs on the world by starvation, by the concentration camp, and by the sword.

But before they became powerful, Hitler and Mussolini in their early days suppressed free speech by discrediting their opponents. Thus the influence of the opposition was weakened, and the effect of what they said was destroyed before they said it. That has been the technique this present national administration has used since its first days in public office.

Always this administration attempts to smear all opposition as a whole, and its leaders individually. Also, there has been a steady attempt to undermine the confidence of the people in the newspapers of this country. There has been a steady and persistent attempt to discredit private business in this country. Right now some of the most radical of the New Deal war crowd are attempting to lay the groundwork for the ultimate destruction of private business by blaming its management for the deficiencies of our national-defense efforts. And now freedom of the air is on the carpet, with apparently the usual broad stretching of administrative powers.

My record on aid to Great Britain speaks for itself. I favored outright subsidies, as a matter of our self-interest, before the lease-lend bill was ever proposed. My opposition to the lease-lend bill was based on its dishonest label, and its vague and limitless grants of power to the President.

I think it is greatly to every American's interest that England win. But I do not think our security depends upon an English victory. To my mind, this is a weak and defeatist attitude. I deplore the long-range effect on our national thinking, either individually or collectively, of the idea that we cannot stand on our own and that our security depends on anyone else. This is the second time within a generation that we have been told our security depends on England. It is coming too close to a habit of permanent thinking for a strong, virile people like us.

Now, the President has said convoys mean war. So there is no argument there. But it is a shock to the moral conscience of the Nation to see how quickly the campaign promises of last fall are being circumvented in administration circles. They are seeking to do indirectly what the President said he would not do. The end may be the same—war.

If the American people are confused, it is because of this fact. It is because every observant citizen can see there is a direct conflict between the President's own statements and his promises to the American people and the recent statements of the members of his Cabinet. It is because of the statements of the President in the last campaign assuring them, among other things, if he were reelected, of business as usual and peace for the United States. It is because since then the lease-lend bill was sold to them as a way to aid Great Britain and remain at peace.

It is because the President talked about taking the "silly old dollar sign" off of aid to England and turns around and knocks the American citizen silly with an enormous increase in taxes.

It is because the facts of the English shipping situation are clouded.

To convoy presumes a place to deliver our goods. What is our basis at the other end of the line? My information is that England has only two ports available, and that it takes 3 weeks to turn a ship around in these ports. I mean, by the time a ship enters the ports and is unloaded and started out again it takes 3 weeks. This is an important point that we should know more about before we rush into convoying.

How can we have the national cooperation so desperately needed, until we know some of these facts and to what we are committing ourselves? The President has been sending his boys to the mill. But we want to hear from the head man as to any changes he proposes to make in the policies on which he was reelected.

We were told last fall, "no fighting." And there has been no change in the situation since then, the possibilities of which were not contemplated when those promises were made.

The foreign policy of this country has been decided, rightly or wrongly. It was decided in the last campaign. And before that, Congress had passed the Neutrality Act, giving up our 150 years' contention for the freedom of the seas. The President signed this act. Later it was modified, on his recommendation. I supported the modification. But in the modification the theory was maintained that the warring countries must come to our ports to get the materials and pay the cash. As I have said, I early advocated the further modification of the payment, because this did not mean war.

Now the attempt is being made to induce us to deliver these materials. As the President says, this means war. It means, despite assurances to the contrary, another A. E. F. I repeat again, the greatest deception that is being practiced upon us is the implication that we can have war and not suffer the consequences of war.

Nineteen seventeen to eighteen will seem like a picnic, compared with the demands on us for our money, our ships, and our men, in order to underwrite a Hitler defeat.

We can do the job, in the end. Our natural resources, our industrial production, our splendid American boys, can do the job. But, under the slogan of preserving democracy everywhere in the world, we will destroy every vestige of it at home and sacrifice millions of lives.

I say again that moral conscience and common honesty demand that before the President reverses the policy of the United States established by the Neutrality Act and its amendment, and established in the last campaign, he should make his recommendations frankly and honestly to the Congress and to the American people. He should tell us the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the facts. And, of course, he should do this before it is too late for Congress to do anything else but declare war.

Any other course will place a stigma for all time to come on his record of honesty and straight dealing with the American people who have trusted him for one term more than any other President.

But, I am asked, what if Germany wins? From what I have read of the proconvoy arguments, I am reminded all the time of children telling each other ghost stories. Each one tries to make it worse, so as to frighten the others.

Now I don't mean to say that we are not in dire peril. We are. But the argument that we should go to war because of economic conditions under a German victory is to me a narrow and hateful reason for war. Furthermore, as I have said before, free labor will always whip forced labor, and without going to war to do it.

But what of our security if Germany wins? Well, we are facing a nation that was whipped in the World War 23 years ago. It has had numerous internal revolutions since then, and currency depreciations, and 1½ years of actual warfare. It is spread out thin.

But I am no military or naval expert. So let me quote from one of the leading military and naval authorities in the United States, Hanson W. Baldwin, of the New York Times, in his new book, United We Stand:

"The author does not know a single responsible military or naval officer or Government official who believes that this Nation is threatened by direct invasion. Even if Germany wins we need not fritter away our great strength in foreign theaters, thereby destroying that impregnability that today means virtual security for America. But I do suggest that militarily we are upon sound ground when we assert, with Monroe, that the Western Hemisphere belongs to the American nations.

"There has been no majority in favor of our entry into the war in Europe, no milling crowds demand war with Japan. But hemisphere defense has the overwhelming endorsement of a considerable majority."

To that I agree 100 percent. There is no enthusiasm in America to enter another Peter the Hermit crusade; to make the four freedoms effective in Europe, Asia, and Africa. There is practically overwhelming agreement to defend the Western Hemisphere. As I have said before, let us arm ourselves so terrifically that we can lick any nation or combination of nations that are foolish enough to attack us here.

Let us pull together again. Let us destroy our doubts and hesitations in the fire of our convictions in our ability as a people to defend ourselves against tyranny here in the Americas.

DOUBTING FARMERS HEAR FROM A GOOD PROVIDER

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Two speeches about armed intervention in the war were made this week in Kansas, part of a region where widespread doubt is reported that armed intervention is a wise or necessary course, or can be successful. By pilgrim, grapevine, and other means of communication Washington has been steadily informed that in the Plains States—of which Kansas is one—and in the Northwest the opposition is strong.

One speech, by Alf M. Landon over the radio from Topeka yesterday, typified this point of view. The other was over the Farm-and-Home Hour in Hutchinson, and the orator was Secretary of Agriculture Wickard. It was not difficult to deduce from the content of the speeches that Mr. Wickard had been assigned to combat the other viewpoint, and the reasons for his selection.

He addressed wheat farmers to tell them two things. (1) No wheat loan will be made by the Government unless the growers vote for marketing quotas. Without the loan no 1941 wheat parity is possible. The farmers can get parity for wheat only by voting for the quotas. (2) Lease-lend goods must be delivered to the British because "events of the last few days give new proof that the Nazis are deliberately trying to form a combination of nations to attack us" and the history of the people of the Plains States "proclaims that you will do what needs to be done in your own interests and in the national interests * * * something the Nazis understand and respect, armed might."

In Mr. Wickard the farmers saw and heard the incarnation of their Government bounties. His is the hand that usually is not bitten; from it cascades the torrent of periodic Federal checks. This made him Washington's obvious missionary to a land where the logical development of the President's foreign policy is said to be unpopular. If Claude Wickard, talking about sure parity and wheat loans, is so certain that Nazi success means the destruction of freedom and democracy in the United States, and armed intervention is necessary to prevent this, the Plains States and Northwestern doubters will pay more attention to him than even to the Secretary of State, certainly more than to Secretaries Knox and Stimson. This is the way the political strategists reason, and they may be right.

Mr. Landon, a private citizen, did not have the advantage of the aura of wheat loans, parity, and periodic checks that surrounds Mr. Wickard. But his Sunday talk was probably heard with respectful attention by many in the audience that was addressed by the Secretary. He supported British aid and the antidictator policy of the administration up to the form of the lease-lend law. He proclaimed 3 years ago that in international matters politics "stops at the water's edge." He served Mr. Roosevelt as member of a diplomatic mission to Latin America. He parted company with the President only when official statements and moves appeared to him to foreshadow armed intervention, in which he disbelieves.

This record alone would have gained Mr. Landon a hearing among so many like-minded citizens. But he spoke their own arguments Sunday: Our interest in British victory is paramount, but not our security. The President should tell the people the facts on which he bases any intended changes "in the policies on which he was reelected," and quit "sending his boys to the mill." "He should tell us the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the facts * * * and he should do this before it is too late for Congress to do anything else but declare war."

Mr. Wickard is another of the President's boys who was sent to the mill. But his economic and social relations to the neighborhood of this particular mill are intimate. And since it is now believed in Washington that the President is shortly going to undertake the journey himself, this prior visit by a member of his family who comes from those party was probably an effective "readying-up," as they say in the Plains States. Also it served to provide a prompt reply to Mr. Landon, though doubtless each of the speeches was arranged without knowledge that the other was to be made in that same area, or when.

By all accounts the region of those orations is the most difficult terrain for the germination of Mr. Wickard's (and the President's) views. The citizens have been bred to the belief that Americans can take care of themselves against all comers. Persistent reports are that, though they have come to support the idea of hemisphere defense, they do not believe military invasion of this country is possible from any direction; and they are sympathetic with the viewpoint that (as one authority quoted by Mr. Landon put it) "if Germany wins we need not fritter away our great strength in foreign theaters, thereby destroying that impregnability that today means virtual security for America.

Nearly every visitor to this area, and nearly every report sent from it to Washington, agrees in this estimate of the popular sentiment there. It is this sentiment which the Cabinet "has been sent to the mill" so often to counteract, for which errand Mr. Wickard probably has special qualifications. But the President must eventually go himself, or Hitler must do something to change the viewpoint if it is to be changed substantially.

Attitude of the People Toward War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD P. NYE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Washington Times-Herald of Saturday, May 17, entitled "Why Not Find Out How the People Feel Toward War?"

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of May 17, 1941]

IN THE NEWS—WHY NOT FIND OUT HOW THE PEOPLE FEEL TOWARD WAR?

Col. Frank Knox is a good citizen, a good soldier, and a good journalist.

He certainly appears to be a good, constructive Secretary of the Navy.

He is a bit warlike, but he comes of a fighting family, and warriors will be warriors.

Sunday school superintendents are not as a rule put in charge of a fighting fleet.

If, when, and where we get into war with the Japanese, and the Germans, and the Italians, and the Russians, and the Bulgarians, and the Rumanians, and the Hungarians, and the Turks, and the French, the doughty colonel will eat 'em alive, and that is the kind of man we are surely going to need.

There will be a lot of 'em to eat.

Colonel KNOX is also a fiery speaker.

On May 11 he addressed the American Society of Military Engineers with relation to the war now raging, and America's duties and desires regarding participation in it. It is our duty, declared the Colonel, "to oppose the aggressor with enough force either to scare him off or to defeat him."

"And," continued the Colonel, "all America is waiting for the word to go forward. We've made our choice."

That is a ringing statement, but it brings up a lot of questions.

In the first place who are "we"?

"We" can surely not be said to be all America.

We are a divided Nation, as ex-President Hoover truly says, as far as the use of force to get us into the war is concerned.

"We" positively does not mean the mothers of America.

The polls and tests show that 95 percent of the mothers are opposed to war.

"We" does not mean the women as a whole.

They are nearly 90 percent opposed.

Nor the men, who are some 75 percent opposed.

"We" cannot mean the citizenry at all because the administration with which Colonel Knox has allied himself has not consulted the citizenry on any part or phase of this question.

Nor has the administration even disclosed to what extent it has secretly committed the Nation to war.

The citizenry has been wholly ighored on this question most important to the welfare of this Republic and of the plain people who are supposed to control it.

In 1937, when war clouds began to loom on the European horizon, Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, a progressive Republican Senator, introduced a bill in Congress to repose in the hands of the people by constitutional amendment the right to determine by their vote the question of peace or war.

This bill was smothered and killed in the Foreign Relations Committee of Congress under orders from the Democratic administration.

And the people were denied by a Democratic Congress the definitely democratic right themselves to decide whether or not there shall be a war which will determine the fate of their country, and in which they will have to sacrifice their blood and treasure.

Says one-time Republican Secretary Knox, representing this hybrid administration:

"Everything we have over here has been bought for us at the price of sacrifice."

But that surely does not mean that everything we have over here, which has been bought for us by the blood of our fathers and our sons, shall be sacrificed without our citizenry being allowed to express a registered opinion whether the cause is worth the sacrifice.

As early as April 1936, a bill similar to Senator CAPPER's was introduced by Representative LOUIS LUDLOW, of Indiana, and was killed by administration Congressmen.

As late as January 1939, Senator CLARK of Missouri introduced another bill providing for a constitutional amendment to require a national referendum before Congress could declare war, except in the event of an invasion of North America.

Several bills have been before the Representatives of the people in Congress to repose the right to declare war in the hands of the people.

But Congress has ignored these measures and proceeded in the opposite direction, bestowing more and dictatorial powers upon the President and depriving the people more and more of democratic control of their own Government.

No; assuredly "we" does not mean all the people of the United States.

Nor does "all America" mean all the churches, or all the legislators, or all the civic and patriotic organizations of the United States.

On May 6 in St. Louis 7,000 delegates representing 8,070 Christian churches and 1,669,222 church members, urged the President to adopt "no further measures which will carry the hazard of involvement in the war."

The resolution adopted read:

"The embroilment of our country in the conflict which is itself devastating civilization will only add fuel to the flames.

"The American people are overwhelmingly opposed to belligerent participation"—and "we look with grave foreboding upon any action which will plunge a divided Nation into war."

Only 1 member of the 7,000 delegates opposed the resolution.

The remaining 6,999 approved and passed the resolution and apparently disagreed with Secretary Knox's opinion that "all America is waiting for the word to go forward," and that America must oppose the aggressor with force and that we "must make our opposition felt at whatever the price may be to see this thing through."

The Christian delegates expressed the opinion which ex-President Hoover, Republican Presidential Candidate Landon, and many of our wisest and most patriotic statesmen entertain—that "the American people are overwhelmingly opposed to belligerent participation," and that it is a matter of "grave foreboding" to "plunge a divided nation into war."

The delegates of the Christian churches further said:

"We make bold to present this petition, in view of the President's repeated and solemn pledges assuring the country that the armed forces would not become involved in the war."

Most of the Senators and Representatives in Congress who are not in the earmarked, branded, and gelded administration herd realize that all America has not made its choice for war but rather for peace.

One distinguished American statesman, ex-Gov. Philip F. La Follette, of Wisconsin, advocates that Secretary Knox and Secretary Stimson, too, be removed from the Cabinet because they are attempting to "frighten and terrorize the American people into a war they do not want."

Governor La Follette impolitely refers to these eminent Cabinet representatives as "two Republican jokers running wild in the New Deal" and publicly urging the President "to break his pledges to our people."

But our eminent Secretary of the Navy declares that the Nation has but three courses to pursue:

Namely, employ force or become isolated from the rest of the world, or to surrender.

"And," says he, "every red-blooded man and woman in this audience will agree with me—we won't surrender."

Surrender what?

Our chief danger is that if we plunge into war we may surrender our democratic rights and liberties to an irresponsible autocracy in our own land.

Another complication is that if we use force to oppose the aggressor we may not scare him and that it may take years and great sacrifice of blood and treasure to defeat him.

Finally, why, pray, is it so wholly unlikely for us peace-loving Americans to choose the isolation from foreign conflicts which has made us in all our past a great and happy people?

What is isolation except minding our own American business, developing and protecting this Western Hemisphere, and not meddling in every war or diplomatic dispute that may arise in Europe, Asia, Africa, or Australasia?

Secretary Knox, this humble columnist respectfully offers the opinion that the American people do choose to mind their own business, and would like their eminent statesmen to mind the American people's business, and not be so deeply and dangerously concerned in minding the internal and external business of all the other peoples on the face of God's green earth.

If our presumably American Federal administration disagrees with the estimates of American sentiment expressed by ex-President Hoover, and Governor Landon, and other noted leaders of patriotic thought, why does it not ordain a national referendum to find out definitely, for the guidance of the American people's representatives in Congress and in the White House, what the sentiment of the American people actually is.

There are several bills for that purpose in Congress buried in New Deal committee rooms, and smothered by New Deal Congressmen.

Let us dig them out and put an accepted democratic policy of popular government into practical operation.

Americans of Germanic Extraction

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD P. NYE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

RADIO ADDRESS BY THEODORE H. HOFFMANN

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio address delivered by Theodore H. Hoffmann, national chairman of the Steuben Society of America, over station WHA, at Madison, Wis., on April 30, 1941.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Radio friends and fellow Americans, in connection with my visit to the Robert G. Siebecker Unit, No. 778, in Madison, Wis., I have been granted the privileges of station WHA. It is, indeed, an honor and pleasure to speak to you over the oldest radio station in the United States, and I wish to thank station WHA for giving the Steuben Society of America, a national fraternal patriotic society, representative of the majority opinion prevailing among American citizens of Germanic extraction, an opportunity to present its views and objectives.

To speak about the contributions of the men and women of the German race to the United States one must begin 258 years ago.

On October 6, 1683, the ship Concord sailed up the Delaware River to discharge her passengers, who forthwith established themselves at Germantown under the leadership of Franz Daniel Pastorius, the first considerable group of German immigrants from the country from which a continuous stream of newcomers has since that time arrived in America to become a part of the American people and to contribute to the building of the great Nation of which we are proud today.

Like the landing of the Mayflower at Plymouth, the landing of the Concord is symbolic of the future history of America. The coming of the Pilgrim Fathers of Plymouth foreshadowed one aspect of the character of the American Nation, and the arrival of the Pennsylvania Pilgrims foretold another aspect. They are not true Americans who cannot grasp the common national significance of both these events, as well as of similar occurrences during the infancy of the American Nation.

We of Germanic extraction are glad to share with our friends who claim descent from other nations of Europe the veneration, love, and affection we owe and give to this, our country. For, after all, we are all extensions of European stock, some of our parents stepping off the immigrant ship a year or two ahead or behind the parents of other men and women who have blended, fused, and merged so that the native-born American is or will be a composite in a very large measure of Irish, English, Scotch, Italian, German, and other blood. To that composition Germany has contributed courage, loyalty, industry, and a love for freedom. German blood has been spilled on every battlefield ever since the existence of the United States. Its crimson trail may be traced from Valley Forge and on through the history of our country.

Firm as a wall of iron the Germans have ever stood in defense of true Americanism, like Steuben at Valley Forge and Yorktown, like von Kalb at Camden, like Armistead at Fort McHenry, like Kichlein at Long Island, like Herkimer at Oriskany, like Quitman at Chapultepec, like Osterhaus on Lookout Mountain, like Schurz and Steinwehr on Cemetery Ridge, like Custer on the Little Big Horn, like Schley at Santiago, like Barbara Fritchie at Frederick, like Muhlenberg in his pulpit, and thousands of others. Americans of Germanic extraction will be on the firing line in any crisis—striking hard blows for the priceless heritage of liberty, the radiant hope of humanity—that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the face of the earth.

Today the dark clouds of war are over Europe, pouring death and destruction over many countries, threatening to engulf the entire world.

Today in our country we are faced with the same sinister and insidious war propaganda which drove our country into the World War, a war which it is now conceded we ought never to have entered.

As Americans, interested in American institutions and principles, we do not consider it to be within our province to presume to prescribe to any other country what form of government its people shall adopt.

Ours is a nation composed of citizens of all countries, and no one has a place in our ranks whose allegiance is not wholly to the United States of America.

We deprecate and disapprove of any exhibition of foreign politics on our shores, which can have no other result than to create a feeling of hostility against those who exhibit it and the country which they claim to represent.

We resent it as in conflict with the principles on which our country is founded. Our problems are different from those of any other country. We here have representations of all the races and nationalities of the world, and when they leave their respective countries they must also leave behind the differences which separated them at home. They must learn to consider and study all questions and problems from the American perspective, and none other. As Americans we cannot tolerate any attempts made to be influenced by any of the many factions in European countries, and for the sake of the continued peace of our people we must frown down any attempt to spread among them the seeds of dissension, which, if allowed to germinate, will cause them to forget and disregard their oath of allegiance to the country of their choice and adoption, and thus be guided in their conduct by foreign-born prejudices and not by what should be their first and only consideration—the welfare of America.

The great justification for the last war was that it was to end war; but what a consummation of that devout wish. The world has not only gained nothing, but has lost almost everything, even its soul. It has violated its pledges to the quick and the dead, has dishonored its signatures under solemn treaties, has defiled its past, and jeopardized its future. The sacred tenets of old have been cast to the winds, the manly fight between foemen was distorted into a deviltry of madmen with pen in hand and sacrilege on tongue.

Various groups and certain individuals in this country are assiduously working through propaganda and organized influence to get the United States to join in this war. They are spreading the crusade idea that this great, powerful, Christian Nation must join the intrigue and military debauchery of the Old World to save democracy, and trying to create the fear of possible invasions by foreign powers. We need have no fear of invasion, because it would mean economic, financial, military, and naval suicide for any nation that would try it.

Today, in the red reflex of the glare cast from the battlefields of Europe, the invisible manacles that have been cunningly forged and which are endangering the policies of the founders of our Republic have become appallingly apparent.

The traditions of our country, and our liberties, are once more threatened by our ancient enemy. Freedom of the seas is denied us. Our friendly intercourse with other nations has been disrupted. Insolent agents and propagandists infest our shores, seeking to drag us into the final horrors of a war in which we are already so gravely involved. So-called Americans dare suggest that we again become a colony of Great Britain.

According to statistics there are over 32,000,000 souls in this country of ours who are of German origin. History is replete with accounts of the devotion, sacrifices, and achievements of the German element in the founding and upbuilding of the United States, yet there are those who dare question the patriotism and loyalty of Americans of Germanic extraction, and who dare to state directly or by inference that they are "fifth columnists."

Yes; there have been "fifth columnists" in this country. They existed in our own struggle for independence in the form of the British Tories; they were in Washington's bodyguard to such an extent that the Father of our Country was forced, for his own safety, to reorganize his bodyguard under the command of Maj. Bartholomaus von Heer and 150 men—each and every one an American of German extraction, who remained faithful to their duty to the end.

We had the "fifth column" with us in the war for the preservation of our Union, in the form of British agents and provocateurs, who tried desperately to split the Union asunder. Abraham Lincoln put a stop to that.

We had the "fifth column" with us in the World War, in the form of an army of British propagandists and anglophiles, and we have with us again today an army of "fifth columnists" in the form of British propagandists, anglophiles, interventionists, and warmongers.

As far as the Americans of Germanic extraction are concerned, you will not find them in the "fifth column," but in the "first column," ready in any crisis, dealing hard blows for the priceless heritage of liberty and justice, and fighting for the preservation of the ideals, institutions, and Constitution of our beloved country, the United States of America.

Americans of Germanic extraction do not want communism, fascism, or nazi-ism, and they do not want British imperialism. They want Americanism.

We believe that the future of American youth is on top of American soil, not underneath European dirt.

Long before the present war hysteria, the Steuben Society of America, in 1932, came out definitely for adequate preparations for national defense. Americans of German descent have always stood for national defense. In order that we may be correctly understood, allow me to read to you the aims and purposes of our society:

Loyally to support the Constitution of the United States of America by advocating the proper application of its provisions and inculcating the principles underlying true democratic government;

To quicken the spirit of sound Americanism; and fostering a patriotic American spirit among all citizens;

To aid in maintaining the independence and sovereignty of the United States of America and its freedom from all foreign influence;

To establish cooperation among its members in the exercise of their civic duties and to encourage among them an active participation in every phase of our national life;

To promote the welfare and enhance the happiness of its members and their fellow men;

To perpetuate itself as a patriotic and fraternal voluntary membership organization and to provide for its government;

To guard our political liberty by maintaining an honest equality of citizenship, regardless of the birth, origin, or religion of any citizen;

To maintain the traditions of our country.

There must be no repetition of 1914 to 1918, resulting in more than a hundred thousand American boys dead, hundreds of thousands maimed or gasping out a miserable existence from shell shock and gas poisoning, and the record of the war debts of our dear Allies to the tune of $13,000,000,000.

What will our country do? Will our young men be sent over once more to be slaughtered on foreign fields to "save the world for democracy?" Shall we be fooled once more by British propaganda and British agents in this country?

This is the great hour in which our country's honor is in our keeping. Our people must speak out with clear and clarion voices or forever sit silent in shame.

Don't delay! This may be our last chance. Write, wire, or telephone, the President, your United States Senators and your Congressman now, and tell them, "We don't want convoys! We don't want 'Union now'! We don't want war!"

Criticism of Nonintervention Advocates

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. D. WORTH CLARK

OF IDAHO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE HELENA (MONT.) INDEPENDENT

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial by Law Risken, editor of the Helena (Mont.) Independent, entitled, "Stop Smearing."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STOP SMEARING

[From the Helena (Mont.) Independent]

Many Americans, regardless of their personal views on how far this Nation should go in its foreign policy today, must be getting utterly disgusted with the smear tactics of high administration officials against prominent persons, who are attempting to keep us from being pushed steadily toward actual involvement in the terrible conflict raging overseas.

Secretary Ickes vented his spleen on Colonel Lindbergh and virtually all the well-known Americans who oppose our active entry into war, by labeling them "Nazi fellow-travelers" and "Hitler stooges." Senator WHEELER, who is determined that the public shall be alive to all of the perils we are facing through hasty and sometimes ill-advised acts, and who points to the Nation's relative unpreparedness to take action, if we are drawn in, has been roundly condemned by the more hysterical and like the others has been called pro-Nazi. But Montana's Senator and other noninterventionists are standing their ground in the face of this unfair and unwarranted criticism, hoping that the United States shall keep out of the most ghastly war of all history.

Because he considers a Nazi victory inevitable, even if America should fight side by side with the British, Col. Charles Lindbergh has been the object of bitter and unjust attacks. Now, President Roosevelt terms Lindbergh an appeaser because his views don't happen to coincide with those of a group which is moving us precariously near actual embroilment. It is the old story of Mr. Roosevelt's anger when someone dares to take exception with his ideas. When the President and others of his official family act in that manner they are forgetting the constitutional guaranties of free speech to all Americans.

No doubt there are many who do not agree with Lindbergh, Senator WHEELER, and others in their so-called isolationist stand, but most of them will hardly deny these men the right to expression of their views. It should be interesting to some persons to know that polls show more than 80 percent of the people agree with the leaders who are making every effort to keep us out of war.

Where Is Leadership?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALLEN T. TREADWAY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE PITTSFIELD (MASS.) EAGLE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Eagle, of Pittsfield, Mass.:

[From the Pittsfield (Mass.) Eagle of May 19, 1941]

WHERE IS LEADERSHIP?

In the days when the New Deal was in its fullest flush, as much as the organized taxpayers and conservatives bemoaned wasteful and excessive governmental spending, the spenders at least had a strong social argument for deficit financing even if it did not jibe with economic orthodoxy. Today, however, there is room for little difference in opinion that the staggering burdens of all-out defense should dictate a drastic cutting in nondefense items in the Government's budget. If we are not to have business as usual, is there any reason for politics and the pork barrel as usual?

Therefore it was particularly disquieting for the President to announce last week that if there is to be economy in government the suggestions must come from the Congress. This is only another way of saying that the President doesn't think that savings in nondefense Budget items are essential, or, if he does, that the problem has him licked or he hasn't the time to deal with the problem.

For the President to say that Congress must deal with the problem is all right theoretically. But, for better or worse, the executive branch of the Government has attained powers and prestige far out of line with the original concept of the relationship of the executive to the legislative. Certainly, strong central government with driving executive leadership has been one of the underlying issues in the last two Presidential campaigns, whether it was overshadowed by more specific and concrete issues. The people have decided that they want strong personal government in the White House, and, in one way, this has been a wise choice, because centralized authority and strong leadership is essential in such a crisis as faces the democracies in their struggle against the efficiency and the swift and arbitrary decisions of dictatorship.

Therefore, if government is to depart from the concept of political spending as usual, the initiative for that departure must come from the Executive. Merely to label every item in the Budget as indirectly concerned with total defense, as has been the tendency in the executive departments, is dishonest subterfuge. That the President doesn't agree with the proposition that it would be desirable to cut nondefense items is unthinkable.

Obviously, the problem is difficult in all its implications. But at least on April 24 a start was made with the suggestion by Secretary Morgenthau that nondefense items should be trimmed by at least $1,000,000,000 The President, in effect, however, repudiated the suggestion from the Treasury Department when he put the problem in the lap of Congress.

The problem is further complicated by the immense burdens of leadership which rest on the President. He has chosen not to delegate authority either in defense or in administering the ordinary peacetime activities of government or in relaxing his leadership over Congress on important issues. As a result the issue of government economy, which is but one of the several momentous decisions facing the people, is in a mild state of chaos. A responsible department head who is concerned with the financial structure of America in its hour of need is tacitly disavowed by the President. Mr. Roosevelt himself offers no program but rather seeks to dodge the issue. Because of the particular position of President Roosevelt in respect to Congress, some leadership is essential on any problem and failing it Congress can be no less confused than the man on the street. And confusion and doubt are not something which can make the country equal to the task before it.

Gala Occasion

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD P. NYE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 20 (legislative day of Monday, May 19), 1941

ARTICLE BY WESTBROOK PEGLER

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, yesterday the Representative from Minnesota, Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, placed in the RECORD the address delivered on Sunday evening by the widow of a former colleague of ours, the late Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Lundeen. I had hoped that this address might be presented in the Senate for printing, because I wanted so much to have offered, in conjunction with the splendid address of Mrs. Lundeen, a recent article appearing in the Washington Post, by Westbrook Pegler, entitled "Gala Occasion." I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post]

FAIR ENOUGH—GALA OCCASION

(By Westbrook Pegler)

You can't tell but that this idea could be the means of financing a great part of the war effort. It popped up in an idle conversation when one guy said he would gladly pay $5 right now for a ticket to the funeral—when, as, and if held—of the dirtiest individual in the history of the United States, and another one said, "Why, you chiseler! You have paid as much as $25 in your time to see punk fights in the Garden, but when it comes to an occasion of national purification and rejoicing, the like of which the country has never known, you want to come in on practically a pass."

"Well, that is just a nominal figure," the first guy said, "because, even though I have held no pair for years, and it has been nothing but nickel-nickel in my life since I hate to tell you when, still I think I would be willing to save, beg, or borrow as much as $100 for a ticket to this gladsome occasion, and, if necessary, go out and get it with a gun. I think any American jury would acquit me on patriotic grounds, considering the motive."

"That much might get you a bleacher seat in double Z, out by the flagpole," another guy said. "Ringside would be around a thousand bucks, and I don't know but that the demand would be so great that you could raffle off ringside seats and get a lot more. The public demand would be something fabulous, and, after all, the little guys would feel pretty sore if they didn't have some chance of sitting down front."

As first one, then another, guy recalled the unclean influence on American morals of the dirtiest individual in the United States, the nasty rumors about the intimate life of married people, the degradation of love, the low gossip piped out of flashy dives run by criminals, the indiscriminate lies and the sudden access of passionate patriotism in a gutter ignoramus who carried two guns and a bodyguard for fear of a slap in the face, the funeral project glowed brighter and brighter as a national service of thanksgiving and reform, attended by possibilities of a great advantage to the Treasury.

"There must be 50,000 decent newspapermen who would pay at least a couple of months' salary to celebrate the cleansing of the profession," one guy said, "and every respectable woman would want to be there to realize that henceforth she could have a baby in decent privacy. And how about the hundreds of thousands of people who would rejoice in the fact that they could now go to a hotel or a restaurant without feeling that some bellhop was spying through a keyhole or frisking their private papers for information to sell about their private life, or that some waiter was running straight to the gents' room to report their personal conversation? Or that some slimy sneak of a press agent for the hotel or night club was telephoning dirty whispers about them for publication in return for a mention of the place? I tell you this would be a colcasal funeral. It would be a national celebration."

"We could take it on the road," another guy said. "After all, they took Lincoln and Harding on the road, but that was mourning. This would be a national fete. People would feel that the country had been relieved of something shameful to the American character and a source of spiritual, moral, and cultural pollution which had degraded them insidiously. Chicago should be good for a week's play twice a day in Soldier Field, and you have a big, clean American population on the Pacific Coast that would book the attractions solid for months. All the decent Americans would go for it."

"But," said another guy, "it might not happen for years."

"That would be all the better," the first guy said. "It would give more time for the build-up. People would buy tickets and leave them to their heirs, but the Government would get the money now for war financing, and no obligation to pay it back. But I would not want to take a chance on the Yankee Stadium for the premiere. That holds only 80,000, and your overflow would tear down the joint. You would have to get some airport where you could handle around 500,000 head. I will bet plenty of decent American business firms would bid their heads off for the radio rights."

"Well," said the guy who had the original idea, "it looks like I dig up a wonderful thought and then it gets so big I can't get within half a mile of it. I'll probably be behind a stanchion in the next county, but I will be there. That is one that the United States marines can't keep me away from, if I live."

Waste

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LINDLEY BECKWORTH

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

ARTICLE BY HUBERT N. HARRISON

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks and include therein a very timely article by Mr. Hubert N. Harrison, manager of the East Texas Chamber of Commerce, entitled "Waste," as follows:

WASTE

One of the lessons we may get out of the disturbance of war is the importance of the study of waste in American life and industry. With the softness and ease of modern life, its high standard of living for many, and the subsidies of a generous and paternal government, there is danger that we may grow profligate of time and resources.

We are going to be jolted into action all along the line. Labor must develop its craftsmanship to the limit. Business capital and management must enlist themselves for the most efficient production ever known. Substitutes must be found for raw materials we have been importing from across the seas.

The industrial chemists, finding new ways to use the things we have thrown away, must attack the problem of countless leaks and waste in industry. They must battle against ignorance, apathy, skepticism, and scorn of those who say of any new idea that it can't be done because it has never been done.

Waste is a sin—a sin against the waster and a sin against the country. And of all the wastes, the waste of precious time in idleness is the worst. Pity the poor rich man who has not developed inner resources of mind and heart to employ his talents wholesomely when he doesn't have to work for a living.

For the poor man who is idle through no fault of his own, there should be great sympathy. It is one of the tasks of community leadership to try to find ways to employ these men. A hero's shrine awaits the man who finds a way to employ and rehabilitate the uprooted thousands from the cotton farms of the South. This group constitutes an appalling waste of manpower and a menace to the Nation.

The average American family throws enough food into the garbage can to support the average family in less favored countries. We should not wait for war's disruption to force us to conserve what we have. Saving tinfoil and old tin cans and car license plates is a small step in the right direction. We must get down to business in a very serious way on this matter of waste. Perhaps if we can find new ways to use the waste products of farm, mill, and shop, war's threat will not have been without its compensation.

HUBERT M. HARRISON.

Louisiana Flood Control Problems

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. LEONARD ALLEN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

STATEMENT BY HON. A. LEONARD ALLEN OF LOUISIANA

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, Louisiana is bounded on the east by the Mississippi River and is traversed by many other rivers, all of which have made the problem of preventing floods and securing the proper drainage very important. As a member of the Flood Control Committee of the House I have sought to help solve these problems for the entire State. The biggest job along this line that we have is to get rid of the Eudora Floodway in northeast Louisiana. I set myself to that task immediately upon coming to Congress, and I have never let up in the fight. A few days ago I covered the subject rather fully in a statement I made to the Flood Control Committee of the House, and under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert that statement:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we are approaching the close of the hearings before this committee. We have heard many witnesses from all over the Nation. I shall confine myself to a discussion of the particular flood-control problems in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, as they affect Louisiana.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER

I shall first take up the problems which have been presented here concerning the Mississippi River. There are three phases of this problem which present themselves to us at this particular time:

1. The question of overland floodways.
2. The question of the Yazoo backwater area.
3. The question of the Red River backwater area.

Unfortunately, a controversy exists between the State of Mississippi on the one hand and the States of Louisiana and Arkansas on the other hand. This controversy is not of our making nor choosing. When I first came to Congress I took two definite positions with respect to this problem. I found that a great disparity existed as to the protection afforded by law and by existing levees between the State of Mississippi on the east and the States of Louisiana and Arkansas on the west. Mississippi enjoyed then, and still enjoys, a superiority in levee height of 3 feet. The law provided in what is commonly known as the Eudora spillway that excessive flood waters should flow over Arkansas and Louisiana. This arrangement was so manifestly unjust to the west side of the river that my sense of justice revolted against the continuance of that condition. I therefore began immediately to do my best to correct it. From that time on, interest in the equality of treatment on the east and west banks of the river has increased, until now the people of Louisiana and Arkansas are unanimous in the demand that this inequality be eliminated. We have, therefore, proposed, gentlemen of the committee, two things:

1. That all overland floodways be completely eliminated; and
2. That the Red River backwater area be given the same levee protection as the Yazoo River backwater area.

MISSISSIPPI'S VIEWS

The spokesmen for the State of Mississippi have opposed these propositions, and after we have listened to their various arguments, I think we can safely say that practically all they have said rests upon two propositions: (1) That Mississippi is entitled to retain her present superiority of levee height because she—as they contend—started her levee projects before the levee projects on the west side of the river were started, and (2) she contends that since the waters have been flowing over Louisiana, this condition should continue. In other words, Mississippi takes the position that she has a sort of easement or flowage right over Louisiana. I think if anyone will take the trouble to read all of the testimony presented by the gentlemen from Mississippi, it all will boil down to one of these two arguments.

Now, as to the first proposition that Mississippi is entitled to have her levees higher than the Louisiana levees because she started a little before Louisiana did. I do not know whether Mississippi started her levees before Louisiana did or not, but even if it is true, does that grant to Mississippi the right to keep that continued superiority? Can one argue that a State, for example, that was admitted to the Union first, or that did anything else first, has superior rights to another State? Do we in America consider that an older child in a home has rights superior to the younger children? Equality is one of the first principles of Americanism. The argument that the gentlemen from Mississippi set forth, therefore, has no basis in law or reason.

Now, turning to the second point that Mississippi has a natural right to let the water flow over Louisiana, let us examine that. I think all will admit that before any levees were built on the river, in case of a flood the waters spread out over all lowlands, whether in Mississippi, Louisiana, or Arkansas. Mississippi contends that she built up her levees first. If so, this certainly threw the excess water on Louisiana. Later, the Eudora floodway was established, which threw more excess water on Louisiana by act of Congress.

So, gentlemen of the committee, it is bound to be clear to anyone who will view this matter in a fair and impartial way that it was not an act of God that made a spillway of Louisiana but it was an act of man. The Yazoo Basin is about as low as the Red River Basin. The Creator did not design the Red River backwater area to take care of the backwater from the Yazoo area. The design for running water over Louisiana is man's. How can it be said, then, that Mississippi has a natural right to have excess water that rightfully belongs on Mississippi land transferred over the soil of Louisiana? But if you will read the hearings, you will find that that is the burden of one of the arguments presented.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF ENGINEERS

The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors has carefully reviewed the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau, Mo., to the Head of Passes in Louisiana, and this review has been made largely in an effort to avoid making an overland floodway out of the States of Arkansas and Louisiana. I have long sought this review. Although the report embodying the review has not been officially reported to Congress by the Board of Engineers, we have the report before us and we know what its provisions are. The engineers have suggested and recommended four additional plans for the existing floodway project. It must be conceded that those projects are engineeringly sound and economically feasible. Otherwise, the engineers would not have suggested and recommended them. The Engineers suggest and recommend the following plans:

	Cost
Plan 1. Existing project	$84,600,000
Plan 2. Narrow Eudora	84,084,000
Plan 3. Eudora extension only	62,030,000
Plan 4. Levee plan project flood	45,441,000
Plan 5. Levee plan based on 1927 flood	35,307,000

Plan 1 is the present Eudora floodway plan. It will, therefore, be seen that plans 1, 2, and 3 are overland floodways and plans 4 and 5 are levee plans. We shall consider them in order. Plan 1, the existing Eudora floodway, is the most expensive, places the most land in jeopardy, and is utterly objectionable. Witnesses testified that the Eudora floodway never would and never could be built, and I concur in that opinion. I do not believe our people would stand for the destruction of nearly a million acres of the finest soil in Louisiana. As a Member of Congress I will never consent to it. The other overland projects, Narrow Eudora, and Eudora extension only, are also very objectionable. We can dismiss them also.

PLAN 4

We come now to plan 4, which is a levee plan to confine the project flood within the river levees proper. Under it the levees would be the same height on each side of the river. The Eudora and other overland floodways would be eliminated and the backwater areas of the Red River in Louisiana and the Yazoo River in Mississippi would be treated alike. General Tyler stated that this plan will protect the greatest amount of acreage in this entire region considering both sides of the river. The engineers frankly admit that it is difficult to place each side of the river on absolute equality, but General Tyler admitted that this was the goal toward which the engineers had been working for many years. Now, let us see how plan 4 would approach that goal.

Under the existing floodway project the testimony of General Tyler shows that for each acre that would be flooded in Mississippi about 2.54 acres would be flooded in Louisiana. General Tyler further stated that plan 4 would reduce the disparity between the States to the point that for each acre of land flooded in Mississippi, Louisiana would have about 1½ acres flooded. The general then admitted that plan 4 would more nearly equal the goal of providing equal treatment to the east and west banks than the other plans suggested.

Mississippi is contending that plan 4 would somewhat increase the area in Mississippi subject to the maximum flood; but if this is true, it is true only because the present plan provides for running all of the water over Louisiana; and when you undertake to approach the goal of equality between the banks of the river each side ought to be willing to share its portion of the burden and should not seek to place the burden entirely on one side of the stream. So, after all is said and done, the burden now rests almost altogether on the Louisiana-Arkansas side of the river and we feel that plan 4 would ease our burden somewhat. The above figures show that Louisiana would still, under plan 4, have the greater part of the burden. Our burden would be 50 percent greater than Mississippi's burden, even under plan 4, because for each acre that Mississippi had flooded we would have 1½ acres flooded.

Plan 5 is objectionable because it would give protection—complete protection—to the east bank but would still leave Mississippi with a 3-foot advantage in levee height which would jeopardize every foot of land in the alluvial valley west of the river. Moreover, plan 5 is admittedly an interim plan and does not propose to settle the problem. Why take a substitute when plan 4 offers a real and permanent solution to the whole problem?

So, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we urge that this floodway plan be settled once and for all. The engineers tell us that overland floodways are no longer necessary. We accept their statement. We have the highest regard for their ability and integrity. When they come in and tell us that they can now confine the project flood between the river levees, we accept their statement and are willing to abide by it. We, therefore, hope that this question which bobs up every year may be settled by adopting plan 4, which General Tyler says will more nearly approach equality between the banks of the river than any other plan suggested.

RED RIVER BACKWATER AREA

Plan 4, as stated above, calls for putting the Yazoo backwater area in Mississippi and the Red River backwater area in Louisiana upon a position of near equality. The engineers in this plan consider only the area lying between Red River and Black River on the south and west and the Mississippi River on the east. The plan would not give complete and all-time protection to the Yazoo and Red River backwater areas because the engineers hold that such is not feasible. The situation in the Red River area between Black River and the Mississippi River would be considerably better than it has ever been before and would protect that region, so the engineers say, from backwater to a point within 1 foot of the 1927 flood. If this could be accomplished it would be far better protection than we have ever had before in that section. I hope to see this incorporated in the bill.

I am interested in protecting the land lying to the west of Black River also but, unfortunately, the engineers say that this is not economically feasible and they will not at this time recommend any protective works west of Black River.

RED RIVER BASIN

Now, I wish to discuss for a moment other matters in which I am also vitally interested. I refer particularly to projects in the Eighth Congressional District of Louisiana. For several years I have been working to get a favorable report from the engineers to clean out the channels and provide for proper drainage for the southern part of Rapides Parish and a great portion of Avoyelles Parish. This is to be accomplished by cleaning out and otherwise improving Bayous Rapides, Boeuf, and Cocodrie. Rapides Bayou starts right outside of Alexandria and all of these bayous run in a southerly direction. This project would be one of the greatest blessings possible for Rapides and Avoyelles Parishes because it would run the surface water down through these bayous. This project also calls for running this fresh surface water down through Bayous Teche and Vermilion and the Ruth Canal to provide additional water for the Teche-Vermilion rice lands. I have introduced a bill (H. R. 4684) to accomplish this. The report of the engineers has not yet been officially presented to Congress, but I hope this will be done. The estimated cost of this work is $2,630,274.

I have also introduced H. R. 4738 to authorize the construction of a levee project with appurtenant drainage works and to provide for the improvement of Bayou Rigolette channels on Red River and the separation of Bayous Darrow and Rigolette channels on Red River in the Aloha-Rigolette area in Grant and Rapides Parishes. The estimated cost of this project is $914,500. This bill also provides for a levee project and appurtenant drainage works on Red River in the Rocky Bayou-Pineville area in Rapides Parish, the estimated cost to be $150,100. I am anxious to get favorable action on this, also.

In addition to the projects which I have outlined here on Red River, I wish to say further that my colleague, Mr. BROOKS, has projects farther up Red River in the Fourth Congressional District which he represents, and I understand that he has, or will, present bills to cover these projects. I am heartily in favor of them and he will have my full cooperation.

I wish to mention now that my colleague, Mr. MILLS, representing the Fifth Congressional District of Louisiana, will propose legislation for certain flood-control projects in his district and he will have my cooperation.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in conclusion I wish to say that I have frankly and fairly set forth the position and desire of Louisiana in these matters. We need to have the reports of the engineers officially presented to Congress. I ask your cooperation in all these matters. I respectfully submit that our case is just.

Huey Long—Live Forever

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. LEONARD ALLEN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

POEM BY HORACE C. CARLISLE

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert a poem composed by Mr. Horace C. Carlisle entitled "Huey Long—Live Forever."

HUEY LONG—LIVE FOREVER

H-uey Long, dynamic statesman,
U-nique man, that dared oppose
E-verything that hurt his people,
Y-ielded never to his foes.

L-ife to him, yea, was a battle—
"O-nward!" was his battle cry—
N-ever did his courage falter,
G-od knows, e'en when death drew nigh.

N-ature gave him wit and wisdom,
A-nd the tact to put in force
M-easures that might help men forward,
E-ver in life's onward course.

T-rue to those in whom he trusted,
H-uey Long, unto the end,
A-lways proved himself a willing,
T-imely, faithful, fearless friend.

W-hen he crossed death's unseen river,
I-n their hearts, his friends anew
L-et earth know that they most surely
L-onged to see his dream come true.

L-ike the Master, he wrought always
I-n the int'rest of the poor,
V-oicing their needs, in the open,
E-ver doing more and more.

—Horace C. Carlisle.

Machines—Servants or Masters

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE E. GEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 19, 1941

ARTICLE BY WALTER RAUTENSTRAUCH

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, the article following appeared in a late issue of the magazine, Friday. Mr. Walter Rautenstrauch, the author is professor of industrial engineering at Columbia University.

This article certainly is a challenge to all Members of the Congress. At the close of this artificial prosperity, the depression will fall with full force. Let us plan now to meet that impending danger with something other than "stopgap" measures. The machine must be made the slave of society and not its master.

The article follows:

[From the magazine Friday]

A SCIENTIST LOOKS AT INDUSTRY

(By Walter Rautenstrauch, professor of industrial engineering at Columbia University)

More and more in recent days I have been asked: "How much can America produce? What limits are there to the capacity of our men and machines?" As an industrial engineer, I am supposed to know the answer. The answer is supposed to be simple. But it isn't.

Engineers are often tempted to answer such a question by computing the total amount of raw materials available, the number of factories capable of being mobilized, the number of men available to work the machines. The national plant itself is seen as a giant machine; and the production problem is viewed merely as one of organization, of increasing the technical efficiency of the machine, of raising the level of man-hour output.

This might be true in a vacuum. But we don't live in a vacuum. If technology alone were the answer, we in America today would not be faced with a situation in which more than half the population is "ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed"; where ten to fifteen million men have been chronically unemployed for more than 10 years; where production for war is used as a temporary stopgap against national economic collapse.

I have seen America develop miracles in technological advance. In the 14 years between 1920 and 1934, man-hour output in direct manufacturing jumped almost 100 percent. That should have meant twice as much goods on the market, a 100-percent increase in the standard of living. But it didn't. It only meant that the same amount of goods was produced in the factories. Human labor time was cut 44 percent. Millions of workers were tossed on the scrap heap.

The introduction of strip mining in open-pit mines raised their total output in 1929 to three times that of 1919. The next 10 years saw a further increase of 56 percent in productivity. But from 1929 to 1939 employment in the United States dropped 21 percent.

We see a similar story in steel. Automatic hot-strip mills have made it possible for 126 men to turn out 2,500 tons of tin plate a day. Formerly that would have taken 96 mills with a combined crew of 4,512 men. From September 1937 to September 1939, 88,000 tin-plate workers were driven out of the industry.

According to testimony before the Temporary National Economic Committee in Washington, production per man-hour in the electrical-equipment industry has increased by 36 percent between 1929 and 1939. Employment has dropped 16 percent. In the manufacture of radios during the same period labor productivity has doubled.

Before 1939, 6 girls working 8¾ hours per day produced 3,500 packed lamps. Today fewer than 6 girls are turning out 18,000 packed lamps in 8 hours. The use of new automatic feeders enables 1 girl to operate 5 machines in 1 operation on radio tubes. Formerly the same operation required 4 girls on 1 machine.

The same story is repeated in the rubber industry. Recent changes from the "pot-heater" method of vulcanizing tires to the automatic watch-case mold have more than doubled the man-hour output. In changing from the core method to the flat top crown method of building truck tires 150 out of 525 tire workers were dispensed with. From 1929 to 1939, 35,000 workers lost their jobs in the tire and tube branch alone.

The installation of continuous processes in the manufacture of synthetic yarn has increased man-hour productivity by 333 percent. Operations which formerly required 85 hours are now completed in 5 minutes.

The Ford laboratory is now at work on the production of synthetic wool fiber from soybeans. Today 2 acres of land are needed to nourish sheep which will produce 10 pounds of wool per year. The same 2 acres, sown with soybeans, can be made to supply 400 pounds of fiber for clothing.

These are but a few of the amazing technological advances which the genius of American scientists has made possible. But this is not all. Hundreds of new inventions, ready for immediate use in industry, have been held back; plans and patents lie locked in the vaults of the big corporations. America's industries are equipped to produce almost unlimited billions of dollars' worth of wealth. Why, then, are people hungry? Why are they asked to "sacrifice"? Why are there millions out of work?

I want to make it clear at once that it is not science, not the machine, which has created poverty and unemployment. The machine is a source of wealth. Not the machine, but those who own and control the machine bear the responsibility for social misery.

For the Nation as a whole the machine is an instrument for the production of wealth. For the few who own the machines it is an instrument for the production of profit. But in order for a producer of commodities to make profits he must find a market for his goods. There must be people willing and able to pay for them.

The owners of the machines have every year been taking for themselves a larger and larger percentage of the income from the goods produced. Immediately after the first World War, the ratio of wages to interest, dividends, and overhead services in all manufacturing industries was 88 to 12. Ten years later, in 1929, the proportion going to wages had dropped to 80 percent, while that which went to capital had risen to 20 percent. It was impossible for the working population to buy back the goods it had produced. The owners, on the other hand, were unable to consume the wealth they owned. They shut down their factories; their commodities rotted in the warehouses. Production stopped because without consumers there could be no profits.

I was down in Washington early in the depression and happened to be called into a conference with some Government officials. They were talking about ending the depression by borrowing $5,000,000,000. I asked them just how they would go about borrowing $5,000,000,000. They told me that it was a mere matter of signing a scrap of paper. They didn't tell me—I had to tell them—that this $5,000,000,000 scrap of paper was nothing other than a guaranty to capital of profits before production.

This promise of profits before production—pump-priming—started the wheels of industry moving again. But the same process by which wealth was drained away from the millions who produced it into the hands of the few who owned it continued at an even more accelerated pace.

Saturated with wealth, the owners of machines invested their money not in the expansion of production of consumers' goods, but in the expansion of capital goods—factories and means of production.

Between 1919 and 1929 there was an average net gain in employment of 535,000 people a year. The entire increase went into overhead services: Office workers, insurance, real estate, and so on. There was no gain whatsoever in the number of people producing consumers' goods on the farms and in the factories, nor of those in the power plants, in building construction, or in transport, taken as a whole.

The workers producing America's bread baskets—the consumers' goods—had to provide these additional 535,000 bread baskets each year. That meant that every year they had to take less for their share of the goods produced.

If this was true up to 1929, it is doubly true today. More and more man-hours are being withdrawn from the production of consumers' goods. Millions of man-hours are being given over to military drill, to the building of rifles and ships, and bombers. The men at work on war production have to be fed and clothed and sheltered by the lessening number of men who produce the bread baskets.

As the bread baskets decrease, as the shares diminish, the wealth in the hands of the owners of production accumulates. Profits increase. They increase not because there are more purchasers of their goods, but because they have received from the Government a "guaranty of profits before production." This is simultaneously a guaranty of a precipitous fall in the Nation's general standard of living.

Only a few days ago a large manufacturer in heavy industry remarked in private conversation that if it weren't for Government business, his plant would now be operating at less than 30 percent of capacity.

We have reached the paradox of expanding production, scientific technological advance on the one hand, and on the other a shrinking consumption of the wealth we have created.

All the genius of America's industrial engineers cannot alter the rigid fact that the entire system of production is facing collapse. We are forced to recognize that the problem of increased production—of "how much can America produce?"—is based not on industrial engineering at all but on the relative claims of capital and labor to the goods produced, on labor's ability to keep on living.

If tomorrow the owners of America's machines decided to exercise their purchasing power to the full they could buy up every last bit of consumers' goods in existence, leaving the rest of humanity to starve. That power is the power of life and death, the power to make war and the power to destroy that very machinery by which goods are produced.

These are not fantasies but realities. We have already seen in the last year whole cities—factories, mines, and men—wiped off the face of the earth. A century of building, the piled-up work of science and labor, has been destroyed in France, in Holland, in Belgium.

So long as labor cannot buy back the goods which it has itself produced, so long can we expect a continuance of the present division of production into its three present categories: Consumers' goods to feed the people; factories and capital goods; and war goods which periodically destroy the consumers' goods, the factories, and the people.

So long will technology and the machine be warped into an instrument of destruction.

Bail Him Back

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. PERCY PRIEST

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEEAN

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from The Nashville Tennesseean of May 19, 1941. This editorial has been reprinted in full by Lord Beaverbrook's London Daily Express.

[From The Nashville Tennesseean]

BAIL HIM BACK

More than a week has passed since Rudolf Hess started the world's greatest guessing game by bailing out of his airplane over Scotland.

Our advice to Winston Churchill, now that there has been plenty of time to pick the prisoner's mind to pieces, is:

Bail him back.

Bail him back out of an R. A. F. plane over the German capital with a message pinned to his coat tail—a message that there is no peace for Nazi aggressors and "here is your problem child." And then watch the fireworks.

Although Rudolf Hess is one of the major leaders in the totalitarian movement of mass murder and slavery, he has the status of a prisoner of war. Under such conditions, the British are not going to stand him against a wall or hang him by the neck, no matter how much he deserves it.

He may pose as one who sees the error of his ways, but that will always be a matter of grave doubt as long as he is in British custody.

Hand him back to Hitler and see if this party leader who went over to the enemy is greeted as a national hero, in which case we would know that Germany has a craving for peace.

Or wait for the news that he has been liquidated by Herr Himmler's efficient men who, according to the Nazi version, weren't smart enough to prevent him from stealing a plane right under their noses and against the orders of Hitler that would brand him a deserter.

Already there are reports from Sweden that hundreds of Germans, party members and others, are being arrested because of the Hess affair.

It is rumored, and denied, that Willy Messerschmitt, the famous airplane manufacturer, is being held as an accomplice of the alleged peacemaker.

If there is any element of truth in these stories, the situation would not be improved, from the ruling clique's standpoint, by the reappearance of the man who has been one of the biggest figures in the National Socialist organization.

Bail him back and let events speak for themselves.

If Hess were really Hitler's messenger of peace, despite fervid denials, his return would constitute an answer that the Feuhrer could not ignore. He would be a messenger of defeat.

If he went to England on his own volition, he would carry back the news that the British people are detemined to win this war with American backing and that all ideas that they were willing to "negotiate" a peace on Hitler's terms were mistaken ones

And if it should be true that Rudolf Hess really sought escape from the Gestapo after he had seen the writing on the wall, the world would not be long in finding it out. As one who has ordered the maiming and killing of thousands and has preached the doctrine of hate and destruction, he would be subjected to the terrors whose application to others he sadistically approved. That would not be an unexpected fate for a notorious gangster and beer-hall slugger of his type.

From the standpoint of military advantage, it is hardly probably that the man of mystery was in position to give valuable military information, because of the fact that his specialized field has always been party organization. But if he came to England claiming to bring information of value, that information already has been obtained. From that standpoint, his usefulness to Britain is ended.

Sportsmen that they are, the British owe no debt to the Deputy Fuehrer who came among them as an uninvited guest. Nor have they any surplus food with which to nourish him in indefinite confinement.

Having squeezed him dry, they can send him home in a manner equally as dramatic as that which marked his arrival.

And once that is done, Hitler's order to "forget Hess" will have no weight among the German people.

Bail him back!

Convoys

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER C. PLOESER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

LETTER FROM A CONSTITUENT

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, a very good friend of mine, one of Missouri's outstanding insurance men, and a man whose firm does much business in London, recently wrote me as follows:

MY DEAR WALTER: The following is an excerpt from a letter dated May 1, from one of the most prominent underwriters at Lloyd's London, it having only this moment arrived at my desk:

"Things move so fast that it is almost impossible to say what is going to happen next, except one does gather on this side that the United States' nonbelligerency is going to be of a pretty belligerent kind. I hope that the United States keeps out of actual war, as I feel that they can do more good as a nonbelligerent state than as a belligerent."

Being the father of an eligible young man for the draft and an only child, I have as adroitly as possible questioned many people who are strong for convoys and for war as to whether they have any eligible boys for fighting purposes. I presume I passed this question to 150 or 200 people, and only one answered in the affirmative.

I am willing to offer Great Britain all that she can take and that we can possibly spare, but I am unalterably opposed to convoys because "convoys lead to shooting, and shooting leads to war." We urge that you stand pat, and if our President cannot live up to his solemn word which was given before the election, that he was opposed to convoys for the reasons above quoted, then we must depend upon you honorable men in Congress to keep that word for him.

Sincerely yours.

Rhode Island Delivers the Goods

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. AIME J. FORAND

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

REPORT BY EDWARD F. WALKER

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a brief report by Edward F. Walker, secretary-treasurer of the Rhode Island Textile Association, on a survey just completed, which shows definitely that Rhode Island is delivering the goods. The report follows:

Due to the apparent willingness and ability of both management and employees to compose their differences on controversial matters, production of important defense items has gone along at an unprecedented rate, with one or two minor exceptions.

All the mills reporting are well up to schedule on deliveries and some, like the Guerin Mills, Inc., in Woonsocket, the American Silk Spinning Co., in Providence, and others, are making deliveries from a few weeks to 2 months ahead of schedule. This is particularly important in such plants as the Guerin Mills, who have probably the largest serge uniform cloth contracts in the State, with orders aggregating more than a million yards well on the way to completion.

This splendid record would not be possible without the wholehearted cooperation of management and employees in a sincere effort to meet the emergency.

Not all Rhode Island plants are operating on defense contracts. Not all are equipped to do so. It may safely be said, however, that practically all of them who are equipped to handle Government business, either directly or indirectly, have bid for some of the work and in most cases have received a share of the business.

As an indication of the tremendous diversity of materials required to equip the armed forces with clothing and accessories, it may be noted that Rhode Island mills are producing linings, elastic and nonelastic webbing, braids and laces, underwear yarn, woolen and worsted weaving yarn, uniform cloth, blankets for the Army, Navy, and the Red Cross, airplane fabric, target cloth, gas cell fabric, balloon cloth, cartridge cloth, lacing twine, sewing silk, cotton thread, silk yarn for powder bags, dyed yarns for narrow fabrics, gas-mask fabric, decorative braid for Navy uniforms, and a wide diversity of other essential textiles. In addition, much of this material being manufactured elsewhere is being dyed and finished here.

Management has done its job promptly and well, and at something of a sacrifice. Profits on Government work are considerably under those to be obtained from strictly civilian business, and, in some cases, great care is essential in order that any profit at all may be shown. Notwithstanding this, the mills have buckled down to their task and are establishing a record in keeping with the best American traditions.

The young men formerly employed in Rhode Island mills and now serving in the armed forces and their "buddies" will be taken care of as far as textile equipment is concerned, far better than they have ever been in any great American Army and Navy in the past, if real united effort on the part of the industry in Rhode Island from mill treasurer to mill sweeper can do it.

The Challenge of the Hour

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HALE BOGGS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

ADDRESS BY MOST REV. JOSEPH F. RUMMEL

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I present for the edification of the House of Representatives and the Nation a recent address by His Excellency, the Most Reverend Joseph F. Rummel, archbishop of New Orleans.

This is an admirable analysis of the international situation and attendant domestic problems in the United States, and I strongly commend its contents to the House for study.

The address follows:

Today a new administration is seizing the helm of authority in this noble organization of youthful progressive southern businessmen. Through years of earnest effort and consistent striving toward lofty ideals the Young Men's Business Club of New Orleans has carved out for itself a shrine in the life of this community which is a credit to its officers and members and an inspiration to the younger generation of our fellow citizens. To be chosen to guide the destinies of such an organization is indeed an honor, of which any staff of officers may be justly proud; a mark of confidence truly gratifying and stimulating.

Therefore, we take great pleasure in extending to the new staff of officers our warmest congratulations and wish them well as they enter upon their duties and responsibilities. May your administration be characterized with rare wisdom, clear vision, indomitable courage, and brave tenacity of purpose. Such qualities are destined to mark with success your generous efforts to lead to ever new heights of achievement this gallant band of young men who seek to promote the city's prosperity and welfare.

THE WORLD WE FACE

No one will question today the fact that we have fallen upon a critical period in the world's history. I am not now thinking of the horrible situation that prevails in the war-stricken countries of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Surely the sight of death-dealing instruments, which are destroying property on land and on sea at a pace never equaled in the history of the world, is calculated to make one wonder whether all civilizing instincts have run amuck. No one can read of the miserable fate of hundreds of thousands of human beings who are turned out of home and country, exposed to the ravages of an icy winter, disease, and vermin, without feeling a sense of wrath toward the authors of such barbarous cruelty. No one that feels within his breast the throbbings of a heart that instinctively yearns for liberty can witness the enslavement of nation after nation under the most hypocritical pretexts without a sense of just indignation, without wondering whether in the face of such despotism peace can ever again reign upon the earth.

And yet all these things and worse are but the external symptoms of the real evil which threatens with extinction that which we have cherished with pride as humanity's most priceless heritage, the civilization which for 2,000 years has progressively molded human life into a thing of beauty, dignity, and joy. The world has, after all, tasted war and experienced disaster in many forms often enough not to become totally paralyzed with fear or rendered entirely hopeless, when armies cross again the paths of the conquerors of old. Even in the present crisis we marvel at the courage of a Finland and a Greece, and we stand in admiration before those brave men, women, and children who today scarcely shudder when bombs crash through their homes out of the midnight skies.

The terrifying thing about the impending world cataclysm is the sinister threat of a new brand of world conquest, for which the violence of mechanized warfare is but a prelude, but the wedge to create the opening that will let in an entirely new order, an entirely new way of life.

In this new order freedom, as our forefathers dreamed it and as we have learned to know and cherish it, is doomed to die. Even today, where this new philosophy or way of life is in force, there is no freedom of speech, no freedom of the press, no freedom of the ballot, no freedom even of thought, for men may not even think, much less dare to utter opinions contrary to the dictates of the fanatical rulers. Freedom of worship has been either entirely abolished or so circumscribed that the genuine blessings and consolations of the free exercise of religion are practically made impossible. Certainly every effort is made to alienate youth from the old allegiances that gave to life the zest of honor, purity, honesty, and spiritual idealism.

With this new philosophy and order of life there is also promised a new order for industry and commerce, a new order of finance and business management. In every phase of human existence the rights and prerogatives of the individual must be submerged in the State, and even this in turn will be absorbed in the absolute authority of the dictator. By a strange paradox all individuality is doomed to extinction except the self-constituted supreme individuality of the dictator.

It is well that we should not allow ourselves to be deceived into believing that these characteristics are peculiar to any one brand of dictatorship. Nazi-ism, communism, and fascism are mere names; basically the philosophy of government and of life which each advocates is the same; their methods of operation are fundamentally identical; their ultimate aspirations are kindred. Whether the bond of brotherhood which their leaders profess can survive their individual ambitions is very questionable; this month is certain that they share a philosophy of government and life, which is a menace today to all that we prize as precious and sacred.

THE CHALLENGE

Confronted as we are by such a menace we cannot remain indifferent must less passive. Inasmuch as this menace is one of force, it must naturally be met with force. This we are doing as a Nation through the program of defense, which today is calling our young men to the training camps, setting the wheels of industry humming in the manufacture of armaments, stimulating to new levels of efficiency all the means of production on the farm, in the factory, and in commercial enterprise. In this patriotic effort all of us have a stake, all of us have an obligation to cooperate to the utmost of our ability, resources, and sacrifice. It is still the slogan of our Government to go the full limit, "short of war"; it is still the hope and prayer of more than 80 percent of our people that peace be maintained; it is still the conviction of many that we can render a better and more effective service to the nations which are bravely fighting for freedom and democracy by remaining out of the active conflict. And yet no thinking American will question the wisdom of protecting with all the resources at our command our hearths and our altars, our cherished institutions and the precious principles and rights that sparkle like jewels in our Constitution, the diadem that crowns the brow of fair America.

But in this hour we must not forget that the challenge which the totalitarian dictators have flung out into the world must be met by sound philosophic thought and conviction even more than by the weight of armaments and the skill of leadership on the battlefield, in the air, and on the billows of the sea. Not infrequently have we heard in recent years the demand for a spiritual revival throughout our Nation. This spiritual revival must indeed envision a new emphasis upon the spiritual values of religion, but it must not confine itself strictly to the religious domain.

This spiritual revival must include a rededication to the fundamental principles that underlie a true philosophy of life. No one has stated these fundamental principles better than Pope Pius XII, who has proven himself throughout this entire crisis the true friend of all humanity. In his Christmas message as far back as 1939, shortly after the beginning of the new World War, he enunciated his famous five points for the reestablishment of peace and order in the world.

"The right to life and independence" of all nations, is his first condition, a condition which is flagrantly violated by the would-be conquerors of the world. Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Finland, Norway, Holland, Belgium, France, and latterly the Balkan states cry out to the world for the recognition of this "right to life and independence," of which they have been cruelly deprived.

"Disarmament and liberation from the rule of force" is another condition for peace and civilized order, which the Holy Father proclaims. The totalitarian state revives the ruthless principle of might makes right, and by its application it would rule the universe.

"International organization," stripped of the errors of the past, restoring the sacredness of treaty obligations, is the third condition for a real new order among the nations.

"Fulfillment of the needs and just demands of peoples," is a fourth stipulation, which should bring satisfaction and contentment especially to smaller nations, struggling not for a place in the sun but for existence in decency and honor.

But perhaps the most significant and far-reaching stipulation that the Pontiff makes is "The observance of principles of justice and charity by statesmen and peoples." In this lies the very heart of the solution of the world problem. Selfishness, avarice, greed for power, lust for wealth have dominated the acts of too many so-called statesmen and even fired the ambitions of too many peoples, with the result that justice is rarely found and charity almost despised in the councils of statesmen, deliberating over the destinies of the nations.

The challenge that I sense is that we as individuals and certainly you as an influential civic organization should cultivate these principles even now.

Neither national nor international justice or charity can be realized unless these virtues be professed and practically applied in the personal and social relationships of individual citizens and organizations. Before we can claim or hope for a recognition of "the right to life and independence" among nations, we must recognize those same rights among ourselves; before we can think of satisfying "the needs and just demands of peoples," we should fulfill similar needs and demands in our relations to the individuals and groups with whom we live and work; "principles of justice and charity" must first be realized in the intimacy of our social, economic, and civic relations before they can become a vital and vitalizing force in the adjustment of world affairs.

JUSTICE AND CHARITY AT HOME

Your mission as a civic and business organization may seem far removed from the international or even the national arena, and yet you have it within your power to lay here certain definite foundations, whose relationship to the larger structure will be most important and effective. Against the totalitarian philosophy of government and life you must preach and practice respect for the dignity and rights of the individual. This will express itself in the wages and salaries you pay, in the treatment of those who are in your employ, in the fairness of your attitude toward your clients and customers, and even toward your competitors. Over against the philosophy of "might makes right" you must set principles of humane and considerate conduct toward every individual and group with whom you deal. Injustice and cruelty must be fought by justice toward all without exception and by charity especially toward the underprivileged and oppressed. Totalitarian irreverence and irreligion must be fought by your sense of respect, consistency, and tolerance toward your religion and the religion of your fellow citizens.

You have a great mission to build up in this fair city of ours—a better economic, civic, and social structure. It has been stated statistically that practically two-thirds of the families in New Orleans earn less than $1,000 per year, which is actually only about 70 percent of what is considered necessary for a proper standard of living. Some 30,000 New Orleans families have average incomes less than one-half of what has been fixed as the emergency level, namely, half of $883. These are families on relief and on W. P. A. projects. Estimating the average family at four persons, this means that about 120,000 of our population subsists on a family income of less than $450 per year. This situation should claim your thought, your study, and your effort to increase not only the opportunities for work but also the rate of compensation.

Failure to recognize this responsibility and to even anticipate the demands of the underpaid and sometimes overworked employees will sooner or later drive desperate souls into the ranks of malcontents, who become easy prey for leftist propaganda. In your organization there should be provided a committee whose function it should be to study the economic and social conditions of your city, a committee that will look at facts squarely and strive intelligently and sympathetically to lift the entire community to a higher level of life. Carnivals and fiestas give zest to life, but they will never suffice to build up a substantial economic and social structure, which will make New Orleans in reality a better and happier place to live in. Your mission is to attract and create more and better opportunities of employment, to apply sound principles and policies to business management, to put forth sincere efforts to promote social justice in the relations between workers and employers.

Your mission is to use your influence to promote honesty and efficiency in government, to urge the proper authorities to purge the city of the moral cankers that contradict our claims for preeminence among the cities for charm and beauty. The real charm of a city lies not only in the fairness of its boulevards and in the quaintness of its architecture but also and chiefly in the virtue of its citizens, in the safety of its highways and byways, and in its freedom from the dangers of moral as well as physical contamination. These ideals take on a greater weight of importance at the present time, when tens of thousands of young men, the very flower of the Nation, will be relayed to us week after week in search of relief from the monotonous grind of military discipline and camp life. Let it not be said that through lack of vigilance, much less through criminal connivance, we have been responsible for the contamination of their morals any more than we would wish to jeopardize their physical welfare.

This fair city of ours is but a little corner of our country and a still smaller microcosm of the universe, but for us it is the little world for which we are responsible and in which we have the opportunity to exercise our God-given faculties. Here we can bring into full play our civic pride, our patriotism, our personal virtues, our religious reverence, not in the spirit of narrow-mindedness, but with the consciousness that our zeal will result in a contribution of national and even international proportions. New Orleans is one of the gateways of the North American Continent, gateway to the luxuriant Southwest of our own beloved country, gateway to the teeming industrious valley of the Mississippi, gateway to the Gulf area of the Southland, gateway even to that land of promise which more persistently than ever it is our duty to woo in these critical times, namely, Latin America. To make this gateway a noble expression of genuine American democracy, free, progressive, and beautiful in its civic integrity and individual righteousness is indeed a challenge worthy of the mettle and idealism of the Young Men's Business Club.

May God prosper its endeavors under the new leadership of its staff of worthy executives. Thus we may realize another hope of the great White Shepherd in the Vatican. In his last Christmas message he said, "We express our heartfelt wish that humanity and those who show it the way along which it is to move forward will be sufficiently matured intellectually and capable in action to prepare the ground of the future for the new order that will be solid, true, and just."

Nondefense Economy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN A. MEYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

Mr. MEYER of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, last week when the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4590) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and other purposes, I felt constrained to support a number of amendments offered, even though I found myself to be the sole majority Member voting with the minority side of the House. This was, to me, a new and not altogether pleasant experience, but since then I have heard from many majority Members who feel that my reasons for so doing were sound. A teller vote was called for on two of the amendments offered which were designed to effect economies in the routine departments of Government, and, although rejected, the teller vote in one stood—yeas 66, nays 79, and in the other—yeas 73, nays 79, indicating that there is a strong sentiment for retrenchment. After the defeat of each amendment designed to reduce expenditures I voted again with the minority party to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with the recommendation that the committee reduce the bill $21,469,245.61 from the various items, with the exception of those items specified in hearings as national defense.

My reason for taking this position is based on the certain knowledge that all expenditures not directly connected with defense should be curtailed as much as possible in order that the entire resources of the Nation may be concentrated on the job at hand. I believe we are united as to the policy of building a strong defense against any possible aggression and that we are united in the belief that we should finance this program as far as is practicable on a pay-as-you-go basis. I believe that every individual and every business in the country is willing to pay a fair share of the additional tax burden that will be necessary. However, it must be remembered that our peacetime budget and tax load over the last 10 years has been the largest in the history of the country, and it is essential that this staggering cost be apportioned in an equitable manner and the burden on our citizens eased as much as possible so that it will not of itself hamper the program of defense; and it is imperative, to my mind, that spending for nondefense needs be reduced in an effort to make it possible to meet this stupendous obligation. It must also be kept in mind that mere designation as a defense measure does not make it such. This is the case with the St. Lawrence seaway project, which was defeated on its merits, but is now being urged upon us as a necessity to national defense.

It occurred to me that there was no better place to begin economizing than with this appropriation bill which provided for an increase of approximately $21,500,000 over the previous year for the use of the Department of the Interior, and while the effort was entirely unsuccessful I do feel from present indications that drastic moves for economy are forthcoming, and urge that we face in a very real and active way the necessity for rigid economy in unessential nondefense activities as a vital part of the national-defense program.

It has been my policy, during the emergency to lend my support to those measures which tend to strengthen our country economically and build up its defenses and to oppose any reckless pouring out of money on nondefense measures.

That this subject of unessential, nondefense economy is very much alive is evidenced by recent editorials in many leading newspapers and periodicals.

Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an editorial from the Baltimore Evening Sun of May 16, 1941, which I am now filing, and I hope it will have the attention of the membership:

[From the Baltimore Evening Sun of May 16, 1941]

A SHAKE-UP IS NEEDED IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

"It would be a tragic error to assume that we can expand our defense production on a colossal scale and still go our usual ways, whether as a government or as individuals. It would be folly to assume that we can continue to spend now for nondefense needs as we did in normal times."—Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau.

On Wednesday the House of Representatives, asked to institute economies, voted to separate Dr. Ruth Gruber, alleged Communist, from the pay roll of the Department of the Interior. This would be a $5,000 saving. At the same time, however, the House approved and sent to the Senate a bill to appropriate $177,027,078 for the use of the Department of the Interior, which would be $21,477,345 more than the current year's appropriation.

This is fantastic. The Department of the Interior provides, in its vast, amorphous, catch-all roominess, a convenient location for countless unessential, nondefense groups and projects. The Department is a congeries of divisions, bureaus, boards, administrations, services, branches, subbranches, commissions, and committees. Merely to list them in close, fine print requires page after page of the Congressional Directory. Nobody, not even Mr. Ickes himself, knows everything that goes on in this grab-bag Department, but everyone knows that here is an opportunity to avoid the tragic error of which Mr. Morgenthau spoke when he warned against spending for unessential nondefense purposes.

The Nation faces a probable public debt of $90,000,000,000. It faces a future darker and more uncertain than at any time since Washington first took the oath of office. Yet, with national safety at stake, the House of Representatives goes its usual way and votes to add $21,000,000 more to the taxpayers' burden. And for a department full of unessential, nondefense projects.

Scapegoats

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. NOAH M. MASON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, a scapegoat, according to Webster, is "a person made to bear the blame or burden of another's sin." "A person punished for the sins of another." The term "scapegoat" originated with the custom, supposed to have been common in Jewish antiquity, whereby a goat, upon which the sins of the people were symbolically laid, was sent away into the wilderness carrying the sins of the people away with it. Civilized people today still feel the need of scapegoats and make use of them. The pages of modern history are replete with illustrations of scapegoats, groups of people, religious sects, certain races, upon which from time to time have been placed the blame for the sins and shortcomings of society, and then the ever-ready winds of hate have been loosed upon the chosen victims. Excellent examples of "scapegoats" are to be found in the early history of Christianity, the Catholic Church, the Protestant Church, the Jewish people, each of them having at one time or another been blamed for the sins and shortcomings of other groups, and made to suffer without cause.

Communism is a political program based entirely upon the twin scapegoats class hatred and religious hatred. It operates by fanning these twin hatreds until they become a fanatic, all consuming, intolerant conflagration that threatens to destroy all the decencies of present-day civilization with which it comes in contact.

Hitlerism, or national socialism as exemplified in Germany today, is based upon the triple scapegoats, race hatred, class hatred, religious hatred. Hitlerism operates by fanning these triple hatreds until they become a fanatical, all consuming, intolerant conflagration that threatens to destroy all the decencies of present-day civilization with which it comes in contact. The whole of continental Europe has come under the influence of Hitlerism. Even France, democratic France; tolerant, liberal France; the France that has in past years exalted fraternity, liberty, equality, has now come under the damnable influence of Hitlerism and has decided to pile its many sins upon a scapegoat, the Jewish people, and fall in line with the Jew-hating Hitler program.

We have no room in America for either communism or Hitlerism. We have no place in our scheme of things for race hatred and prejudice, religious hatred and prejudice, or class hatred and prejudice. These things have no place on American soil. Because I feel so deeply about this matter, I give my hearty approval to the article One Man's Opinion, written by Hugh S. Johnson, and appearing in the Washington Daily News of Monday, May 19, 1941, in which Johnson denounces the recent action of the Vichy government in its policy in regard to its Jewish citizenry. I feel sure that Hugh Johnson expresses the opinion of the great majority of real Americans in the following quoted excerpts from his article:

"The French they are a funny race." Now they are going to get tough with their Jews because of the "degeneracy" of "their racial and religious community" * * *. The announcement says the subservient Vichy government is not going to persecute Jews—only to "restrict" them. For example, they can't have anything to do with "banks, industry, commerce, press, radio, cinema, and the theater." I am also advised they can't practice law or medicine. This is a hideous rescript. It is no French concept, I happened to have lived for a short time in France, and been frequently received, which is a privilege in that country, in rather populous families of French Jews. These, just also happened to be prominent in banking, medicine, and art. Among children, I have never seen such discipline, culture or respectful, affectionate, and ideal family relations in any country. There is not a Frenchman of independent patriotic opinion who will not receive this news with a snort of indignation.

It is nice to know these restrictions are not to be applied to Jews who have served France in her wars or those who were converted to Christianity before June 25, 1940. I can't see how Hitler can stand for this. He ordered erased from battle monuments the many names of Jews who died for Germany in the World War. Wouldn't it be a hell of a note if Germany's Unknown Soldier was a Jew? As for being converted to Christianity as a passport to a right to live, that is a sardonic concept of liberty and freedom of conscience and religion. It takes on added luster when you remember that the founder of Christianity and its very greatest apostle, St. Paul, were both Jews. And what magic is there in the day of June 25, 1940? I don't know, except that it was about the time when the French Army went yellow and curled up. Perhaps the Vichy Government needs a goat, or goats, but it is a disgrace to the glorious record of France to try to pin that abjection on a minority of persecuted people.

In this humble opinion, the fate of this fine race is one of the greatest of history's tragedies. Wherever Nazi conquest rolls, the malignity of a single half-crazed man overtakes them, and if now, as seems possible, he is to move into Palestine, there will be few places left on earth to which they can turn for refuge. Britain is not wholly blameless. After the World War a place in white man's country could have been made for them in Africa. It was suggested but disapproved. With a perfect understanding of the terrible distress of American Jewry, I hope it will not put them in any area of possible accusation of pressing us into this war. I do not believe it has done so. I trust it never will. It seems to me that rather than spend billions to fight another nation's battles in Africa, Asia, and Asia Minor, it would be wiser and more humane to spend an equal amount in transporting and repatriating this harassed and harried people in some area that we can protect from the mad-dog Nemesis that is now pursuing them from one end of the world to another.

Antiwar Drive

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD H. REES

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL BY WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a timely editorial from the Emporia (Kans.) Daily Gazette of May 15 by the distinguished and nationally known editor and writer, William Allen White. It is entitled "Antiwar Drive" and reads as follows:

[From the Emporia (Kans.) Gazette of May 15, 1941]

ANTIWAR DRIVE

Dr. E. Stanley Jones, one of the noblest Christians on this planet, is organizing a drive "to keep the United States out of war." Which is a fine thing. He believes that the way to keep the United States out of war is to stop arming Great Britain.

There are two groups of honest patriotic Americans who are resolved to keep this country out of war. One group, represented by the America First Committee, agrees with Dr. E. Stanley Jones. Another group, equally high-minded and equally patriotic, disagrees with Dr. Jones and his friends, the America First group. The other proponents of peace believe that so long as the whole aim and single object of arming this country is to defend us against the totalitarian powers, we can best defend ourselves and keep out of war by lending whatever aid is necessary to keep Great Britain afloat and fighting so that the totalitarian powers will hesitate before attacking us while we arm. Both sides agree on a huge defense program.

Each crowd is doing all it can for its own objectives. The emotionalized sector of each crowd is making faces and calling names. The America First crowd refers to the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies as warmongers, and those members of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies whose emotional content is rather heavily charged and fizzing, refer to the American First crowd as appeasers.

Appeasers and warmongers are good as epithets. They release something inside the hearts of the moron fringe of each of the committees. But, after all, each group is composed largely of men and women who have an honest desire to keep this country at peace.

War is always futile. A war now would settle nothing in the end. But wars come to nations whether they will or not, and when they come they must be fought. And, alas, no nation ever went to war that it did not go crying, "Peace, peace!" And as Patrick Henry said, "There is no peace."

So, in this crisis, it will be well for those who believe in either side to support their convictions but with the understanding that their opponents are equally honest, equally patriotic, and equally intelligent. To be absolutely cocksure that you are dead right in any argument or difference among honest men is a sign of emotional unbalance. And this goes for the issue of these days.

Stop the War Propagandists

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEWIS D. THILL

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE MILWAUKEE SENTINEL

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, Congress should pass legislation which will stop the war propagandists. Many aliens, of Nazi, Fascist, Communist, and imperialist leanings enjoy the privileges accorded to them as visitors to our shores. These foreigners should not be permitted to warp the minds of fellow Americans by disseminating base and false war propaganda. With the vast majority of Americans definitely opposed to our entry into another European conflagration, it is offensive to our people to have a foreign ambassador tell them what to do—whether such ambassador be German, French, Russian, Italian, British, or any other nationality.

The following editorial from the Milwaukee Sentinel of May 14, 1941, discusses the problem created by Lord Halifax:

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel of May 14, 1941]

A MEDDLING AMBASSADOR

Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador to the United States, is making a most offensive attempt to involve the United States in war in behalf of England.

In the guise of learning what the American people are thinking about the war, he is making a tour of the country frankly urging help for Britain.

In all his speeches, he says Great Britain will win the war, providing American help is prompt and adequate.

To be sure, he very grudgingly says that the amount of help we give and how we give it is strictly our own business.

Why, then, does he go about the country making our business his business?

Why does not the American Government call to account this British Ambassador who is trying to make up our minds for us on the issue of peace or war and is otherwise meddling undiplomatically and unethically in strictly American affairs?

Why does not President Roosevelt emulate the example of his great democratic predecessor, President Cleveland, and insist that the diplomatic decencies be observed by foreign ambassadors, on penalty of being expelled from the country for failing to do so?

President Cleveland made an historic example of a meddling British Ambassador in the famous case of the "Murchison letter." When Cleveland was a candidate for reelection in 1888, Lord Sackville, Britain's Ambassador in Washington, thought it would be desirable from the British viewpoint for the American people to keep Mr. Cleveland in office.

He therefore caused a communication to be prepared, known as the Murchison letter, asking the ambassador to give his views on the general attitude of the Cleveland administration toward England.

He replied that it would be considered advantageous to British interests to have Mr. Cleveland reelected.

It was generally believed, and was perhaps true, that Lord Sackville was the real author of both the inquiry and the reply.

At any rate, President Cleveland instead of being pleased by this British intercession in his behalf was most annoyed by it, and bluntly called it foreign meddling in American affairs and caused Lord Sackville to be recalled.

It was, of course, an unpardonable offense for a representative of a foreign government to try to influence an American presidential election.

But is it not a much more unpardonable offense for a representative of a foreign government to try to influence the American people to enter a war they do not want and are not prepared for, especially when they had no part in starting the war and were not even consulted or considered by those who did start it?

Lord Halifax's activities on the rostrum endeavoring to project America into England's war are not only undiplomatic—they are a violation of all international codes of ethics.

They are an abuse of the courtesy of the American people, a challenge to their right of independent thought and action.

Lord Halifax, like Lord Sackville, should be recalled or expelled, and would be if the country had the same kind of self-respecting American Government that it had in Cleveland's time.

Perhaps it is true, as Senator WHEELER, of Montana, says that:

"The more speeches Halifax and the royal refugees make the more determined the people are to keep out of war."

Perhaps it is true, as Senator WHEELER further says, that:

"The American people are getting resentful of the fact that foreigners are trying to involve this country in a war and giving us offensive advice on how to run our country when they have made such a miserable failure at home, and with other European countries with whom they have come in contact."

But the American people should not be compelled to rely entirely on their own endeavors to combat foreign propagandists. They are entitled now to zealous watchfulness over American interests on the part of their Government, as much as they were during the strictly independent and American administration of President Cleveland.

Some Information About Automobiles

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

STATEMENT BY THE NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE DEALERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I want to bring to your attention some information in regard to automobiles and their part in national defense, which has been prepared by the National Automobile Dealers' Association.

Records for the 10-year period from 1930 to 1939 showed that the average number of vehicles scrapped annually was 2,366,000. Replacements, even during the depression years of this period, averaged 85 percent of retail sales. Registrations were also considerably below the present high registrations.

Based on the number of cars 10 years or older that are still in use, the annual rate of cars scrapped is perhaps more nearly 3,500,000. Over 6,000,000 vehicles 10 years or older were registered last year, divided as follows: models prior to 1927, 441,333; 1927 models, 902,555; 1928 models, 778,170; 1929 models, 1,674,351; 1930 models, 1,483,787; 1931 models, 1,438,197.

Since these cars are reaching their last mile of service, they will be junked at a time when replacement is more vital than ever.

The need of industry under the pressures of the defense program indicates that an increasing supply of automobile transportation will be essential as more plants get into war production and hundreds of thousands of additional workers are required to operate them.

Automobile dealers are rendering a real contribution to the national-defense program. It is their responsibility and obligation to see to it that adequate manpower and facilities are available at all times to keep in steady operation the 31,950,000 cars and trucks now in use.

The Sugar Industry in Pennsylvania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEON SACKS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

RESOLUTION INTRODUCED IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a resolution introduced by State Representative John P. Corrigan in the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with reference to the sugar industry in Pennsylvania:

Resolution 77

Whereas Pennsylvania consumers for years have paid a large part of the heavy subsidy going to the beet-sugar industry; and

Whereas it is necessary to preserve the cane-sugar refining industry in the State of Pennsylvania and to protect the consumers in the State of Pennsylvania from exorbitantly high prices and an artificial sugar scarcity; and

Whereas an abundant sugar supply is available both here and in the nearby tropical islands to meet any demand the consuming public may make; and

Whereas if the existing law were changed to permit additional millions of dollars to be paid to the already highly subsidized beet-sugar industry, it would put an additional burden on American consumers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress is hereby memorialized to oppose any change in the existing law that would place additional burdens on the already overburdened consumer, cause more unemployment in the State of Pennsylvania, or interfere in any way with our good-neighbor policy with Central and South America; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the present Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, and that they be urged to put forth their best efforts to accomplish the purpose of this resolution.

American Citizenship

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS ROLPH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE SAN FRANCISCO CALL-BULLETIN

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I include therein an editorial under the heading "American Citizenship," which appeared in the San Francisco Call-Bulletin of May 12, 1941:

[From the San Francisco Call-Bulletin of May 12, 1941]

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP

WEEK'S OBSERVANCE TO EMPHASIZE DUTIES WE OWE AND PRIVILEGES WE ENJOY

American Citizenship Week is being celebrated in San Francisco, with appropriate programs in the schools and other meeting places of the people.

Each day's events throughout the week will emphasize a specific phase of the responsibilities and privileges which accrue from citizenship in the United States.

For instance, today's program is dedicated to study of the history and significance of democratic government.

Tomorrow, the emphasis will be on two of the basic rights conferred on Americans by the Constitution, freedom of speech and freedom of public assembly.

Wednesday's theme will evaluate the fundamental American principle of trial by jury, the very bedrock of the American system of justice.

Thursday's events will stress the benefits of universal suffrage, while the equally vital advantages of universal education will be discussed Friday.

Saturday will be Freedom of the Press Day, when the people will be reminded of the manner in which their own liberties are inseparable from independent agencies of information, news, and opinion.

GRAND CLIMAX

On Sunday the blessings of religious freedom and tolerance will be recounted in all the churches of the community, irrespective of creed.

And on Sunday also, climaxing all the activities of Citizenship Week, will be observance of the annual "I Am an American" Day, when naturalized citizens and young people newly arrived at the age of active citizenship will be specially honored by the entire community.

This is a most ambitious series of public events and programs, and of course a typical American enterprise.

It is, moreover, a typical and characteristic San Francisco enterprise, for this community has always had exceptional aptitude and capacities for patriotic observances.

In fact, the national observance of American Citizenship Week and "I Am an American" Day came pretty close to having its beginning here, San Francisco being among the first few communities of the Nation to see the merits and possibilities of organized emphasis on the significance of citizenship.

BETTER AMERICANS

This year's citizenship programs are well conceived, and cover the vital subjects of patriotic duty and democratic blessings comprehensively.

They have been planned by organizations and individuals thoroughly imbued with the idealistic and appreciative spirit of our national life, and inspired by the high example and devotion and sacrifice of the Americans of earlier days who made our present manner of life possible.

Let the people of San Francisco participate in and enjoy these patriotic programs to the fullest possible limit of their time and opportunities.

They will be better Americans and better informed and better equipped to inspire new and young citizens with faith and love for their country.

The Church Militant

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH R. BRYSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS AND A RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include an editorial from the Birmingham (Ala.) News; also a resolution adopted by the Southern Baptist Convention at Birmingham, Ala.:

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) News]

THE CHURCH MILITANT

When one considers what has happened to free religion in Germany under Nazi rule, there need be no surprise that the Southern Baptist Convention adopted a militant resolution of aid to the democracies fighting Hitler.

The fight that Great Britain is now heading against the totalitarian Axis is really a fight in behalf of Christianity. The resolution adopted by the Baptists said "some things were worth fighting for." One of those things is the right to worship as one pleases.

Baptists have a history of being willing to run great risks for their faith. Many of the denomination helped in founding this country as a place of freedom in worship. One Baptist church in Wales moved as a group to the new land. That Baptists also suffered persecution in this country from the Pilgrims only intensified their devotion to the cause of religious freedom.

And now, 305 years after Roger Williams founded Rhode Island, the Baptists again are opposing the power of a few leaders to impose their anti-Christian, antisocial, and antihuman wills upon the world. It is a brave stand, and one not inconsistent with the history of the church and of Christianity.

The resolution, adopted by acclamation in precedence over all other order of business, reads in full, as follows:

"Whereas Southern Baptists constitute one of the largest democratic and evangelical bodies of Christians in the United States; and whereas they have over 25,000 churches with more than 5,000,000 bona fide members; and whereas some 10,000 members and 'messengers' (or delegates) from these churches are meeting in annual convention in Birmingham, Ala., May 14–18, 1941, they feel it incumbent upon them and altogether appropriate for them to declare publicly certain of their clear convictions at this time of world crisis, in order that our burdened President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and our National Government may be apprised of the sentiments and convictions of the great majority of this body of patriotic and liberty-loving citizens. While they thus record and publish their sentiments and convictions by majority vote in convention assembled, they fully recognize and respect the inalienable right of conscientious objectors to hold and to vote contrary sentiments and convictions if they deem it wise to do so.

"Therefore, be it resolved by the convention:

"1. That we declare our abhorrence of war and all its insanity and brutality. We are a peace-loving people, and we know of no issues, national or international, which could not be settled in fairness and equity by the orderly processes of civilized society if only the leaders of the nations were willing to practice the principles of justice, truth, and righteousness. We sincerely believe that the rank and file of our denomination, even as the rank and file of our Nation and the other nations as well, much prefer that all international disputes and conflicting interests be composed by the processes of peace rather than by the arbitrament of war. But unfortunately, men of evil mind and ungodly heart sometimes gain control within a nation or nations, and with cruel and deadly intent thrust war upon the world in order to gratify their lust for glory and power and fancied gains for themselves and their associates. Such men at the present time have criminally conspired to impose their antisocial, anti-Christian, and antihuman wills upon much of the world. With fiendish force and diabolical scheming they have overrun Europe and threaten to gain the mastery over Asia and Africa. Human rights, freedoms, and liberties have promptly gone into eclipse wherever the power of these ruthless men has been established. They hold nothing as sacred, and they regard with scorn many of the treasured achievements of mankind. They deny the physical, intellectual, moral, social, economic, and spiritual rights and liberties of all who in any way oppose them. In other words, their principles and their practices are the absolute antithesis of everything we have been taught to believe is in line with the will of God, the mind of Christ, and the kingdom of God on earth. If these men are allowed to attain their announced world-wide aims and goals, then many of the values which we esteem as more precious than life itself will be lost, and the world will be immeasurably impoverished socially, politically, culturally, and spiritually. We know not what course others may pursue, but as for us, we hold it were better to be dead than to live in a world dominated by the ideals of these modern dictators.

"2. We declare our belief that some things are worth dying for; and if they are worth dying for, they are worth living for; and if they are worth living for, they are worth defending even unto the death. Among these are liberty under law, that sacred shrine called home, wives and children, the honor of one's country, and, last but not least, freedom of worship. 'Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery' forged by some cruel and godless tyrant? 'Forbid it, Almighty God.' Thus was it prayed in other days when a tyrant sought to enslave our colonial fathers. We believe that Almighty God made answer to that prayer through the deeds of those fathers from Lexington to Yorktown. Our Baptist fathers opposed that tyrant, and we, their spiritual descendants, are ready to oppose any other tyrant who impiously aspires to deprive us of any of our God-given and inalienable rights. Shall we have a vision of eternal values less clear than had those early American fathers? Shall we in our strength forfeit those priceless values which they purchased with their blood and in their weakness? May Almighty God forbid that also.

"3. Baptists are a democratic people—none more so. Therefore it is nothing but natural that our deepest sympathies should go out to those democracies of the world which have been crushed for the time being, or now are sorely beset by ruthless powers which are committed to the overthrow of all democracies. We are convinced that England's heroic resistance to the Axis Powers is one of the great sagas of the human spirit. We, like the great majority of people in the United States, are in thorough sympathy with the efforts being made by our Nation to reinforce England in many ways as she fights, not only for her own life but also and incidentally fights a terrible battle for the other democratic nations of the world. It will be most gratifying to us if these efforts of the United States to reinforce England can be multiplied and be made increasingly effective. We trust our Government to work out the wisest and most effective means to aid England, our natural ally, in this titanic strugle.

"NO AID TO JAPAN

"We desire to register with our Government our clear conviction that the United States and her citizens should promptly cease supplying Japan with materials which enable her to continue her war of conquest against China.

"We also urge our Government to quicken rather than slacken all measures needed to strengthen the defenses of the Western Hemisphere against all kinds of aggression from any and all powers which seek to undermine and to overthrow our peaceful and democratic ways of life.

"4. We pledge ourselves as Christian patriots to pray earnestly unto our God and Saviour that a righteous peace may soon be granted unto all the warring nations; that our own Nation may be spared the horrors of war, if that be the divine will, and that our Nation may be used as a mighty instrument of peace and truth and righteousness and brotherhood; that Almighty God will, in the power of His might, take charge of the nations and overrule their folly and sin to the praise of His great and holy name."

The Tax Problem

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WARD JOHNSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

LETTER OF LAWRENCE B. WESTON, OF LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to include a letter I have received from Mr. Lawrence B. Weston, of Long Beach, Calif., concerning the tax problem.

The letter follows:

LONG BEACH, CALIF., May 10, 1941.

Hon. WARD JOHNSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: No matter where you place the tax burden, payment thereof will ultimately fall on the man in the middle-class range, of which I am one. The very poor don't pay. The very rich merely pass it on.

We all wanted the defense program, and I think it is high time we started paying for it, along with our terrific national debt, though I question much of the spending which incurred the latter. The banks are bursting with money, so much so that they take the small depositors' money with reluctance. Why, then, should we put our savings in the bank and get practically nothing for them when we have a debt upon which a king's ransom in interest will be paid? I think the whole thing should be handled on as nearly a cash basis as possible—pay as you go.

Yes; I am asking for it. Pour it on heavy while we have something with which to pay. When this thing is over and we fall into the inevitable slump that is sure to follow, Congress may find it difficult to raise funds.

Almost everyone I talk with feels as I do, that while they hate to part with modest earnings, they are eager to pay much higher taxes in order that we might reduce our mounting debt and its ever-present interest. Paying will be a bitter pill, but let's take it and get it over with or at least seriously bite into it.

I believe that all Americans worthy of the name will be proud to knuckle down under a heavy tax load. This will be one way to bring each of us to the realization that he has a stake in the program, and I think he will enjoy it, even though he might grumble traditionally. Many totally escape any direct Federal taxation.

It will only be by hard work and sacrifice that we will be able to make this country strong. There is no easy way, although Americans have come to look for an easy way out of every situation. Germans were forced to sacrifice for their country. We ask for it.

Very truly yours,

LAWRENCE B. WESTON.

W. L. Gregory, Vice President of Large Midwestern Bank, Discusses Monetary Principles

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JERRY VOORHIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

STATEMENT BY W. L. GREGORY, OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, those who are deeply concerned about the future of our country have got to consider her central economic problem. That problem is, in my firm opinion, basically a financial one.

A short time ago the House Conference on Unemployment at one of its meetings had the benefit of the advice and counsel of Mr. W. L. Gregory, a banker of outstanding competence and large experience and presently vice president of the Plaza Bank of St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Gregory's observations, coming as they did out of his experience in the banking business itself, seemed to us of the conference sufficiently worthwhile to warrant inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I submit herewith, therefore, for the attention of the House and of the Nation the highlights of Mr. Gregory's remarks:

The industrial capitalistic nations grew and developed by means of a process of permitting a considerable share of their national income to be drawn off into the higher income brackets and employed for the building of a huge industrial plant. So long as only a few nations were industrialized in this fashion, there were investment and commercial outlets for these nations and their goods in the so-called undeveloped areas of the world. Today the situation is entirely changed. Most of the nations of the world have become in considerable degree industrialized themselves. The plant has been largely completed and there are comparatively few opportunities for the reinvestment of large sums of income or savings by people in the higher income brackets. There are only two possible answers to the problem. Either the approximately 20 percent of the national income that was formerly used for investment has got to be sharply reduced and a major portion of it distributed among the masses of people in the form of consumer buying power so as to enable the home market to absorb substantially all the goods produced at full employment of our people and our plant: or else we must be prepared to operate on a world-wide basis and to go in for a program of competing with other nations in the sale of our goods throughout the world and in substantially raising the standards of living of a large portion of the people of the world so as to dispose of our goods.

Whichever method is used, it is absolutely essential that a managed monetary system as nearly perfect as possible be devised and put into effect.

If we had a perfect monetary system, it would not solve all our problems but no problems can be solved unless the monetary problem is solved.

The original creation of money or credit should be a function of a government agency.

The power to originally create the Nation's money and to control the monetary system must be in a group responsible to the Congress and to it alone.

But there must be a sufficient delegation of power to enable the monetary agent to do its job which at best is an intricate and complex one and will require the exercise of judgment from time to time.

The objective of monetary policy should be to maintain the economy of the Nation at a balanced level of production at which there will be full employment of all productive facilities, including, of course, the labor force.

The productive capacity of the Nation has increased in the past at the rate of about 4 percent each year.

One of our main troubles today is that we have too much decentralization of monetary control. Each of the 12 Federal Reserve banks is too independent of the system as a whole. We must have a controlled monetary system, and the controls must be more effective than they are now.

The proposal to establish and thereafter require a 100-percent reserve-behind-demand deposits is fundamentally sound.

At a matter of fact, the self-liquidating short-term commercial loan is largely a thing of the past so far as banking is concerned today. Seasonal loans are seldom made any more. This is due in large part to changes in business practices, such for example, as the tendency of many companies to carry their own reserves and meet their own financial and credit needs in this manner.

Eighty-five percent of the banks' assets today are capital loans.

To develop an effective monetary system, however, there must be a central body similar to the Federal Reserve Board. It must operate under a mandate from Congress set forth in the form of objectives to be accomplished, but such a central body must be given sufficient power to accomplish those objectives. Among other things, it must be given the responsibility to recommend action in the field of taxation which is one of the most essential elements in monetary control.

The Proposed Increased Gas Tax—The Farmer and the Worker Will Pay the Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. PLUMLEY
OF VERMONT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is entirely unnecessary for me to point out that the citizens of Vermont have established an incomparable record for individuality. To all, it now is obvious that the citizens of Vermont think for themselves. Their convictions are deep and their actions based thereon. Often, they may not see eye to eye with the citizens of other States on matters of common interest, for they are not easily influenced.

But there is one matter of public policy in which the citizens of Vermont find themselves in complete accord with the rest of the Nation. Vermont, industrial and agricultural community and vacation center that it is, therefore, desires to place herself on record, along with numerous other States, as viewing with alarm current attempts further to penalize automotive transportation by increasing the Federal gasoline tax.

We of Vermont feel particularly strongly about this matter, because the economic history of the State literally has been molded by transportation. Let me call attention to the fact that the evolutionary progress of Vermont agriculture during the past 150 years has been a history of heartaches and recoveries brought about by transportation changes. The first early change from a self-sufficient to a commercial agriculture occurred with the development of roads and the availability of markets for surplus crops. General livestock farming became common, wool was the main product, and the famous Morgan breed of horses was developed in our State for sale in eastern markets. Hogs and cattle were driven in large numbers to Boston, Montreal, and New York.

The extension of the railroads to the West brought an end to all this. Commercial agriculture in Vermont declined sharply under the pressure of western competition. Vermont farmers turned to the dairy cow. Again, increased railroad efficiency brought an end to this prosperity, by handing the eastern butter markets to western producers. Once again, agricultural emphasis changed, and, today, Vermont is the principal source of milk supply to metropolitan centers. This later development was brought about by the development of the motortruck, which made it possible to truck milk daily from farm to milk plant, and to ship fresh milk directly and daily from dairy to market by tank trucks. Efficient highway transportation now is the key to our agricultural prosperity.

It therefore is obvious that efforts to discourage the use of the motortruck by increasing its costs of operation threaten the prosperity of the entire State. As Dr. H. R. Varney pointed out in a study which he made for Cornell University of the transportation of milk to the New York market:

The costs and methods of transporting milk from the country plant to the city are * * * of vital interest to the dairy farmer.

During 1939 the farmer received only 40 cents out of every dollar spent by the consuming public for food. It would appear to be contrary to sound public policy to take any step which arbitrarily would increase the costs of transportation and decrease by still more the amount which farmers receive from the consumers' dollar.

THE FARMER AND THE MOTOR VEHICLE

The farmer's interest in the gasoline tax extends quite beyond the transportation-cost problem of the dairy industry. Of the total vehicles registered in Vermont, it is estimated that 36 percent of all passenger cars and 61 percent of all trucks are found on farms.

Actually, the automobile has revolutionized Vermont country life. And, again, this goes beyond the fact that the motor vehicle has simplified the farmer's marketing problems. It has made available to rural children an equal opportunity to obtain an education. It has brought competent medical aid to the door of the farm. It has relieved the semi-isolation which long was accepted as the unfortunate but inescapable lot of the rural people.

Vermont farmers are paying a sizable penalty for these advantages. They must use a large proportion of the pitifully small cash income which they enjoy in order to meet the tax demands now being made on the person who owns a motor vehicle in Vermont. It is said, for example, that special motor-vehicle taxes on Vermont highway users are nearly a third greater than such taxes paid by the average highway user in other States. The average motor-vehicle owner in Vermont pays an annual special-tax bill of nearly $70. Since his vehicle is worth no more than about $200, the Vermont farmer therefore buys his truck or car in taxes every third year.

Highway users now contribute to the State of Vermont nearly half of all the taxes collected by the State. Since farmers own most of the trucks and a large proportion of the passenger cars, these motorists' taxes impose the greatest burden on the farmer.

FARMER CANNOT ESCAPE BURDEN

It is useless to suggest that the farmer could escape this burden by foregoing the use of his motor vehicle. It is obvious, after all, that the automobile has become so intimate a part of agricultural life that the farmer prefers to make whatever tax sacrifice is necessary in order to keep his truck or car. The simple statement of the fact is that the farmer today simply cannot get along without them.

So, in all probability, the farmer will continue to buy gasoline even though the Federal gasoline tax is increased. His use of the vehicle may be curtailed somewhat, and he may decide that it is too expensive to use his car for anything other than absolutely necessary pursuits.

The inequity in the situation really arises because the farmer has no alternative to paying the taxes. In the last analysis, the question of what is in the best interests for the Nation's citizens is involved in any tax bill—whether under normal or emergency conditions. It is the belief of the citizens of Vermont, as evidenced by letters I have received from my constituents, all of whom to some extent are dependent upon the continued prosperity of agriculture, that a further increase in the Federal gasoline tax unduly would penalize this one group of taxpayers. They believe and so do I that the burden which would be imposed by this tax would be so great as to offset the value of the tax as a revenue producer. The greatest good to the citizens of the Nation could not and will not be accomplished by its imposition.

Graduation Address at United States Naval Academy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS D'ALESANDRO, JR.

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR O'CONOR, OF MARYLAND, AND AN EDITORIAL FROM THE BALTIMORE SUN

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Governor O'Conor at the Naval Academy, and also a short editorial:

[From the Baltimore Sun of May 17, 1941]

GOVERNOR O'CONOR MAKES A GRADUATION SPEECH

Prominent men chosen to make graduation speeches are not ordinarily among the most fortunate of mortals. The occasion to which they address themselves is an annual one; hundreds of millions of American youth have been addressed by hundreds of thousands of prominent citizens in much the same circumstances. Small wonder that the average of such speeches is a bore to the speaker and to the audience.

Governor O'Conor made a graduation speech on Thursday to the Naval Academy's first graduating class of Reserve midshipmen. It was by way of being a rather special occasion. There was something stimulating in it, and it was to be expected that the Governor would rise to the occasion. But he did more than rise to the occasion. He made a truly eloquent and moving address, as felicitous in phrase as it was cogent in argument. It was a fine presentation of the American cause in the present emergency and an impressive restatement of the American ideal.

A public man capable of realizing the special opportunity for ringing words which the occasion presented and of finding these words and using them to such good effect ought to have special praise for his accomplishment. For its part, the Sun thanks Governor O'Conor for his speech to the young midshipmen.

ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR HERBERT R. O'CONOR TO RESERVE ENSIGNS, UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY, ANNAPOLIS, MAY 15, 1941

This is not an ordinary occasion. The circumstances under which these exercises are held are indicative of its exceptional nature. Extraordinary conditions justify, and indeed require, that recourse be had to extraordinary measures.

For obvious reasons, it should be a source of pride to be a member of this class. Establishing precedent, as you do at this famed institution, you are the envy of countless numbers of fellow-Americans who glory in your success today. Congratulations are in order and are heartily extended. But those congratulations might well be offered to a Nation, which can invite such a group of young patriots to offer their services, at great sacrifice, and can receive such a response.

It is no exaggeration to say that yours has been an exceptionally difficult call. Collegiate or business careers have been interrupted, if not left permanently, to secure through intensive application the requisite training for a commission in the naval forces of our country, and commissions from the United States Naval Academy are never given except upon requisite scholarship and demonstrated fitness.

The American Navy has ever been the pride of our people. As a peace-loving Nation, the very idea of a huge standing Army has been inconsistent with our nonmilitary attitude. On the other hand, a realistic view of world affairs over the past century caused the Federal Government to maintain a highly efficient naval service, which more than made up in quality what it may sometimes have lacked in quantity. Our far-flung possessions and moral obligations in respect to hemisphere defense called for such a policy. The admittedly high regard in which our people have always held the Navy is proof positive of the efficiency and competency of its personnel

If I may be permitted to add a word, as expressive of the view of Maryland citizens, it would be confirmatory of this appraisal. Maryland has been fortunate in seeing at close range the operations of the Naval Establishment, by reason of the location of the United States Naval Academy. No State could glory more heartily, or could find greater justification for praise than we, as next-door neighbors, who have been grateful that the officials of our country saw fit to locate this great institution on the banks of the Severn.

It is into such a Naval Establishment that you are being admitted. But even more significant is the time at which you are called for the employment of your abilities. In view of the volcanic state of world affairs, it is timely for us to face facts realistically and to state conclusions frankly. Never before—at least during the modern centuries—has the world been confronted by such a threat as it is now called upon to face. Not since the days when the hordes of Islam sought to over-run Europe has there appeared a challenge of such widespread significance as that with which the Dictators now threaten the world.

So defiant and rapid has been the onslaught of these modern Tamerlanes, that the anxiety of virtually the entir. universe has been forced to give way to the realization of a sense of immediate danger. In their mad, but, up to now, triumphant march, the laws, practices, and decencies maintained among nations have been despised and violated. The uses and rights of private property have been disregarded or destroyed. The guaranties of political and individual liberty have been cast aside. Freedom of religious worship has been either infringed upon or denied. The very foundations of western culture and civilization have been uprooted.

When, climaxing all this, the dictator has gloated that his aim is at world conquest, it is high time that our Nation spared no effort for national defense. Let us face the realities, though they be as hard as gun-steel, and as bitter as sacrifice can be. What are some of the realities?

One is that America is only one step away from war. Anyone who tells you otherwise is dodging the truth. Anyone who tries to minimize, to evade or to escape this grim fact, even though well-intentioned, does not square with things as they are.

Yes; America is only one step from war—the most destructive, all-encompassing war that this planet has ever known. All the instruments of man's genius are being engined for the purpose of spreading death and extinction. There is no one who is safe. There is nowhere to be safe—if we allow the enemy to come to us. And it is as certain as the rising of tomorrow's sun that come to us he will, unless he is crushed and smitten before he makes his lunge.

Why is America so close to war? There are physical causes and there are moral causes. Let us consider the latter first. By our very nature, by the consecrated blood of our forefathers, by our creeds and covenants, we are the moral enemy of all tyranny. We are the moral opponents of any nation or any government which sets itself up as master of mankind. For it is our national faith that men shall be free, and not be slaves; that they shall be equal before one another as they are equal in the sight of God, and not be subservient to false godheads of military might or political overbearance. We are the spiritual antagonists of racial hatreds and religious intolerance; of promise breakers, of all who would trample and annihilate the dignity of man the wide world over.

Nor are these moral issues by any means one-sided. Our dislike for dictators is as nothing compared with their blood-hungry loathing of us. For as long as America stands, she is a beacon in the sky, a promise in the heavens to all the downtrodden peoples of the earth. As long as the torch of liberty burns in our land, there is light upon the earth, there is hope, and there is incentive to rise against the oppressor. How bitterly then must all tyrants hate us? How wishfully must they connive and conspire to have us fall? How artfully in secret council and how savagely by hidden daggers are they forever trying to deal a disabling wound?

No; there is no denying these moral enmities. There is no dodging the responsibilities. Even if we wish it, America could not help being the symbol of world-wide hope. We have been just that for 300 years. It was to the New World that the victims of old oppressions began to look, back in the seventeenth century. It was to the North American Colonies that the experimenters in workable democracy first came and set up constitutional, responsive governments. It was on this continent that the first great and enduring Union of free peoples was instituted. And it was to this country that the fugitives from aggressors migrated in search of what they could not obtain at home. Small wonder, indeed, if the eyes of Europe still turn west—some with longing; some with jealousy. And well may it be said of America—that she is loved for the enemies she has made.

But there are physical reasons, too, for our nearness to war. It has become trite, but remains important, to stress the shrinkage of space in modern times. Whereas the width of oceans once guaranteed us against surprise attack, these waters are almost as obsolete a defense as a moat around a medieval castle. Our watch towers can no longer be set up along the shores. They must be mobile and they must be far-flung to spot an oncoming armada. The old ramparts of Fort McHenry can no longer turn back an invader who now takes to the skies. The old command "Don't fire 'till you see the whites of their eyes" would be a suicide order on a modern Bunker Hill.

And just as space has dwindled, so our line of outpost has been extended. It is not enough to make sure that no enemy approaches the coast line from Maine to Florida. Experience has shown that a peace-loving nation cannot idly await his coming and expect to resist his approach when he appears on the borders of the country. The United States cannot submit to backdoor penetration, and you know, and every well-informed person knows, that we have an Achilles' heel in Panama that must be protected from the east as well as the west.

For even if the American democracy were not a moral menace to dictatorship, the American continents would be a temptation. When the warlords have trampled down the harvests and gutted the mines and demolished the factories of Europe and Asia, where else can they turn for new materials of war and peace? Our land as well as our liberty must be defended; our food as well as our freedom.

Having gathered into their hands such almost indescribable power, the enemies of civilization now confront us with defiant confidence, while they predict the destruction of our liberties and our way of life. It is in the face of such dire contingencies that our people watch and wait, speeding with all their energies further preparations for defense while they wait. For defense, let us repeat, because our Nation has never been, and is not now, the aggressor. There is no land or possession of another country of which we are envious. There is no prized possession of any world power which would cause the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy to send American boys to risk their lives to seize. We have desired to remain at peace, which desire can only be extinguished by unfriendly tactics of hostile nations.

Having roused ourselves to the need, the preparation for defense is now proceeding on a scale consistent with our position, our genius, and our capacity. In an unusually valuable connection in that defense, you gentlemen will be a part. Under the shadow of such a world peril, you are being called to one of the highest services of our defense. Each of the services necessarily is of vital importance. The circumstances of today, however, indicate that the sea service will, at this time, be of the first importance. It will be the function of that service, of which members of this class will be a part, to patrol the oceans, as well as to cover with the utmost care all the water approaches to our soil.

Responding to the urge of self-preservation, our governmental leaders have sensibly chosen the course of supplying munitions and means of defense to the heroic peoples of Britain, who are standing valiantly in our defense, as well as in their own, in withstanding the progress of the dictators. And in giving such help, our President and other national leaders are backed by the overwhelming majority of American people. But when we say that for purposes of self-preservation, if for none other, Britain must be supplied with the tools, it is obvious that she must be supplied with them and not merely offered them. To be effective, those tools must be in hand where the invaders' fury is now centered; that is, in the British Isles. It will serve no useful purpose, and least of all the outnumbered defenders of democracy in England, to have American industries produce the implements of defense, only to have them sent to the bottom of the ocean while en route to the place where their use is essential.

America, as I said, has ever been proud of her Navy. During the past 12 months, however, this feeling of pride has given way to an even more satisfying feeling of confidence—supreme confidence—on the part of all of us that the American Navy is ready to face, and turn back, any onslaught that might be directed against our shores, by sea or through the air.

This confidence has been generated not alone by the addition of the giant battleships North Carolina and Washington to our fleet; not alone by the fact that in cruisers and in destroyers, in airplanes and in submarines, we have added reassuring numbers of the most modern fighting craft. The prime source of this supreme confidence in our Navy is the realization on all sides that its personnel, the gallant sailors who man our fighting ships, measure up fully to the exacting standards that have always prevailed in our sea forces. In intelligence, in training, in courage, and morale the United States Navy is the equal, or superior, of any Navy in the world today. And you men can be proud to claim membership in its ranks. You enter a service which has never known defeat.

What, then, does one say to young men commissioned in the service of their country? Certainly you can be given no easy promises, no empty phrases, none of the usual graduation pat-on-the-back advice. Nevertheless, it would be just as wrong to hand down the doctrine of despair. History has shown that there never was a time within the life of our Nation when the principles on which it was founded have not been challenged. And those challenges, those threats, have been met by young men remarkably like you. If you are sons worthy of your forefathers, why, then let the enemy beware. If your feet stand as firmly on the decks as American feet have stood before, then the world may truly believe that there shall be no night.

How shall I charge you with your duties? I shall charge you in the names of Perry and Farragut and Dewey; of John Paul Jones and Joshua Barney; of the Monitor and the Merrimac and Old Ironsides. I shall remind you of the traditions of the service you are entering; of the men before you who went "down to the sea" in American battleships and swept the enemy from our waters.

For let us remember that the future still belongs to the youth of the world. It is going to be whatever you make of it. The flame of liberty burns inside the human heart, and it will not die in hearts that are ardent with courage and determination. Yours is the heritage of brave hearts and bright souls. Yours is the legacy of freedom and of glory. Be it yours, too, to keep that which our forefathers won and bequeathed us.

Optimism and confidence, based upon determination and resolute action, should be the watchwords of the day. America will say, "Yes" when the question is asked whether we can organize and discipline ourselves to meet the efficiency and brute force of the dictator nations without impairing our system of government or losing our essential rights.

Whatever sacrifices are necessary will be made. Whatever cost is required will be met. Whatever temporary adjustments are essential will be arranged.

We of this generation will keep faith with our forefathers. We will preserve the Nation they founded, and we will pass on to our descendants the same democratic form of government and the same individual liberty and freedom which always have been and, God willing, always will be the heritage of the American people.

The Course America Should Follow in the Present European Conflict

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 14, 1941

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Congress charged with the responsibility of cooperating with my colleagues in formulating the legislative policies of our Government, many communications are being received from eminent and thoughtful citizens expressing their views on the international situation and advising the Members of Congress as to the course our Government should follow in dealing with belligerent nations.

In this critical time with so many things of vital importance to our Government, and our people pressing for attention, it is difficult to find time or an opportunity to make a detailed reply in response to each of these communications which are deeply appreciated and most helpful in determining the course to be followed in maintaining our international relations.

For the information of my colleagues and the RECORD, there is inserted a letter I have written in reply to one of the communications referred to:

Now, coming to the consideration of the course to be followed by our Government in dealing with the belligerents in the present conflict, and I am sure you and I are in agreement on one point concerning the war—WE WANT TO STOP IT; we want to save civilization and preserve the homes, facilities, and edifices reared by the labor of centuries; but, more important, and here we seem to differ—still, to my mind, we must insure the rights of the masses to enjoy the fruits of their labor and the equality of opportunity to enjoy liberty and justice and safeguard the general welfare of the human family in general to achieve and maintain the objective of our Constitution to "establish justice and insure domestic tranquillity, to provide for the common defense, and promote the general welfare, and secure (preserve) the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." To maintain these ideals of government you and I must envision the future beyond the limitations of the present conflict, and here it seems that we differ in the course that our Government should follow.

Realizing the horror and futility of war, I was in full accord with the ideals of President Wilson in his effort to devise and put into operation a plan to settle international disputes and prevent war, stopping at nothing short of establishing and implementing this authority. In that great hour of opportunity, world conditions and international influences prevented this achievement when domination of the seas, financial and business control proved more important, according to the ideals of victorious European countries, than the adoption of these great humanitarian principles. Confronted with these conditions, our country was forced to abandon our conception of international cooperation and turn its attention to conserve and advance the welfare of its own people, and in furthering this constructive program we adopted the good-neighbor policy in maintaining our international relations.

I must admit that after all our efforts and sacrifices in support of a humanitarian program "to outlaw war and make the world safe for democracy" embodied in the 14 principles announced by President Wilson and subscribed to by the belligerent European government, it made my heart burn to witness the misery and destruction inflicted on the people of Greece by the aggression of the Turks and invasion of Manchuria by Japan, to be followed by the aggression of the Italians in Abbyssinia; England, with her domination of the seas, international financial control, and her world Empire working in accord with the Government of France and the French Empire, has, by financial, military, and political mismanagement, involved themselves and all their neighbors in this disastrous war. No one, not I at least, will accept the proposition that when England and France declared war on Germany they were in fact declaring war for us.

I stand on the principles that when this country has a cause for war against another country, it is time then, and not until then, for us to take up hostilities and declare war. We have the resources, we have the men, and we have the technical skill to arm ourselves and to protect and defend our country from invasion from any quarter or by any coalition of foreign powers. We should continue to stand by the principles of fair dealings as announced by President Wilson.

Since England and her British Empire were allowed to maintain its position as mistress of the seas and financial world domination, and has contrived to hold in suppression the people of other countries, and England and France have failed to join the family of nations in adopting some acceptable plan by relinquishing some of their powers to establish a tribunal with policing powers to maintain and enforce international peace, then England and the rest of the nations will have to take the consequences just as the people of any community would have to do if they refused to establish police and courts to maintain law and order. You may say this is "indulging in fine-spun philosophy." George Washington may have indulged in rugged philosophy when he refused to let this country be drawn into the conflict between England, our recent enemy, and France, our former ally, in the days of the intrigues of "Citizen Genet" when Washington resisted the popular clamor of our citizens for support of France and rigidly maintained our neutrality. Fine-spun theories or not, it is my philosophy that we have no business interfering in the struggle between Germany and England, and if our Government is to undertake the role of an international policeman, then we must have a voice and participate in the consideration of international controversies which may lead to war, and as we have taken no part in such deliberations and have had no say in the course adopted by the belligerents, then we have no business meddling in the affairs of the warring countries or taking part in their hostilities.

The issue involved in the present struggle transcends any personal control or the personal ambition of any dictator, and we can best serve our own people and humanity by keeping out of this war and keeping war from our shores so that we may remain strong and impartial and be willing to assist humanity to restore peace and rebuild its shattered governments on the broad and firm foundation to be constructed on the concepts of our imperishable Constitution.

Conscientious Objection—A Point of View

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MELVIN J. MAAS

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 7, 1941

ARTICLE BY REV. DR. JOHN K. RYAN

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Rev. Dr. John K. Ryan, associate professor of philosophy, Catholic University of America:

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION—A POINT OF VIEW

(By Rev. Dr. John K. Ryan, Associate Professor of Philosophy, Catholic University of America)

Recognizing that the question of conscientious objection to military service would arise with the enactment of the Selective Service Act, the American Government has attempted to solve the problem in terms of democratic principles and traditions. It has seen that no good purpose will be served by trying to force into military service a man who is intellectually and emotionally unequipped for such service. If a registrant can show that he is unable, according to the dictates of his conscience, to serve in his country's military forces, he may be placed in class IV–E, in which he may do work of national importance under civilian direction.

As a result of this just and liberal policy, about 2,000 conscientious objectors will begin on May 15 a year of civilian service in work camps provided by the Government for that purpose. Seven unused C. C. C. camps are now ready for the conscientious objectors, and 14 additional camps have been selected for the total that is expected by next July. The conscientious objectors will, of course, receive no pay for their year of service. While in camp they must either support themselves, at an estimated rate of $35 per month, or receive their support from the religious sect to which they belong, or from some other sponsoring body. A National Service Board for Religious Objectors has been formed and the camps have been provided as a result of its cooperation with Government officials. The camps are experimental and may be discontinued after 6 months if the plan is not successful.

A large number of the conscientious objectors are Quakers, Mennonites, and United Brethren, but over 60 religious denominations in all are represented. A few of the objectors profess no religious belief. Although comparatively few in number, Catholic conscientious objectors have yet been numerous enough to project a separate camp of their own. In view of the Catholic Church's historic attitude toward war and its insistence on the clear duties of citizenship, and in view of the admitted need for national defense, Catholic conscientious objectors are expectedly few. It is in reference to the present American situation that this article is written.

Statements explaining the position that they have taken have been made public by a number of Catholic conscientious objectors. These have been upon a high plane and show evident and great sincerity throughout. In a number of them emphasis has been placed upon the right and calling of Christian perfection. This is an important and interesting way of thought and one that should be completely developed in all its implications in discussion. Aside from the matter of whether perfection of life and active military service are incompatible and apart from questions related to this matter, it is well to make certain distinctions that are necessary for discussion centering around the questions of war and participation in it. These are principally the distinction between justifiable and unjustifiable use of force and the distinction between defensive and aggressive war. These are traditional among Catholic writers upon the subject of war and must be borne in mind if fundamental errors are to be avoided.

With regard to the moral character of war, there have long been two fundamental errors. One of these is extreme pacifism: The condemnation of all war as something intrinsically and essentially evil, together with the consequent refusal to take part in any war, since war as such is held to be wrong. This extreme pacifism is a false and immoral doctrine. It is as false and immoral as the opposing doctrine of the extreme militarists, such as those of Germany, Italy, Russia, and Japan, who exalt war as something good and desirable in itself. The extreme militarist claims that war is always justifiable, no matter what the ends or circumstances. In the last analysis, these two pernicious errors amount to the same thing. Both are denials of the existence of right in any genuine sense of the word. The ruthless aggressor, attempting to impose his will by force upon another state, says that might alone makes right. In effect, the extreme pacifist agrees with him, for the pacifist repudiates the right and duty of self-defense before physical assault. It is important to note that Catholic thinkers from the first centuries of the church down to our own day have been as opposed to the pacifistic error as to the other.

Any tenable doctrine must not only oppose these two errors; it must also make careful distinction between two kinds of war, defensive and aggressive. Defensive war has never presented any moral problem. The Nation, just as the individual, has the right of using force in self-defense against unjust aggression. Furthermore, a nation, to be worthy of the name, has the duty of building up its defenses against possible or probable attack. Hence the problem of the morality of war arises only when it is a matter of aggressive war; of an attack deliberately begun and carried out by one nation in order to impose its will by force upon another. Clear cases of aggressive war are the attack of Germany upon Poland, of Russia upon Finland, of Japan upon China, and of Italy upon Greece, to mention only a few instances from recent history. The traditional Catholic doctrine on war has attempted to lay down norms by which we can judge the moral character of aggression. In general it may be said that these norms are such that they demonstrate the folly as well as the malice of the typical aggressor, especially in the modern world.

It must be noted that physical force can be used against the unjust aggressor in defense of another's life and goods as well as in defense of one's own. So, too, in the case of nations. A nation can exercise force in defense of another victim of unjust aggression as well as of itself. Sometimes men and nations have the duty of going to the rescue of others as well as the right to do so. However, whether this right becomes a duty depends upon circumstances that vary from one case to another. But when a nation goes to the rescue of another fighting in just self-defense, it is itself to be considered as fighting a defensive war. This is especially the case where the original aggression has been such as to endanger the peace of the entire world and to constitute a threat to nations that would themselves prefer to remain neutral and at peace. Finally, it is obvious that a nation may be fighting a defensive war in the moral sense while it is fighting an aggressive war in the military or strategic sense. Thus the armies of Greece were for many months attacking those of Italy, but the Greeks were nevertheless defending their country against an aggressor.

These are basic distinctions that must be made. In view of them, no careful or consistent thinker can be guilty of the absurdity of saying that because the unjust aggressor is wrong in waging war his victim must likewise be condemned for waging war. Yet that is the pacifist's error. He denies the existence of the right and duty of self-defense. More precisely, he denies that he as an individual citizen has the right or duty of serving in his country's military forces. This position is both false in theory and disastrous in practice. It is explicit in the Oxford oath, taken a few years ago by so many young Englishmen, with its pledge never under any circumstances to fight for king or country. It is implicit in the statement of some American conscientious objectors that they cannot rightly take part in a "war effort." Actually, to take part in a "war effort" may be the strictest sort of moral duty for those who are called upon to render military service to the nation in time of danger.

It is particularly difficult to accept the conscientious objector's argument with regard to peacetime military service. Here, again, is the familiar failure to make essential distinctions. There is a clear distinction between military defense undertaken in times of peace and the actual waging of war. In the case of a right-minded government, such peacetime military measures are designed to prevent actual war and to forestall attack. If the citizen has the duty of serving in his country's army when it is actually at war, he has the right a fortiori of serving in the army for peacetime defense. Yet the conscientious objector, in an appeal to some asserted duty of nonresistance, denies that he has either right or duty of serving under arms in national defense.

The refusal to accept military service on the ground that such service is wrong involves other errors. The pacifistic objector takes the position that he has the right and duty of passing upon the Nation's policy of defense and of deciding whether that policy is just or unjust. It is certainly not within the moral or mental competence of every citizen to decide upon the wisdom and morality of the most momentous questions of national policy. Especially when the state makes decisions upon war, possible or actual, must its decisions and ends be put above the private citizen's opinions and preferences. The presumption certainly must be that the Government has fuller knowledge and can pass a better judgment upon the Nation's danger and needs than can the private citizen. The fact certainly is that the responsibility for the good and safety of the whole Nation and all its citizens rests upon the Government. Obedience can hardly be said to be here a mere matter of choice. Nevertheless, the supremacy of conscience, recognized by American law, still remains. Hence, if after deliberation with competent authorities, the decision is reached that the war is unjust, then a man has the duty of following the sincere and enlightened dictates of his conscience.

If the conduct of the conscientious objector were followed upon any large scale, there would be chaos within the Nation at a time when national unity of mind and effort is of the utmost importance. If large numbers of citizens claimed the pacifist's exemption from military service, they would make national security impossible and render the country an easy prey for the attacker. It is certain that the duty of serving in the ranks and upon fighting ships must fall upon some citizens in time of national danger.

Duty and right are correlative; each involves the other. In the matter of wartime service, it is necessary to remember that the citizen has duties as well as rights, and that these duties fall on all, although in varying degrees and ways. It is evident that if one man fails in his duty of serving his country in the way that is required of him, others must bear an added burden. Most men and most nations do not want to bear the heavy burden of armaments and extended military service. Certainy America has turned to them as a last resort and after long delay in order to maintain its power and freedom in a warring world. It is only if all Americans unite to do their proper share in the task of national defense that the rights of the Nation and the individual citizen can be safeguarded and extended. Whether for defensive measures in times of peace or for the actual conduct of war, moral realism requires a complete account of duties as well as of rights.

We live in a real world in which powerful nations have proclaimed by word and deed their determination to change the existing order by the sword. Against this ruthless and brutal appeal to the sword, modern Popes, Leo XIII, Pius X, Benedict XV, Pius XI, and the present supreme pontiff, Pius XII, have uttered repeated warnings. Voicing the moral aspirations of the great mass of mankind, they have again and again pointed out to what doom the path of aggression leads. Pope Pius XI a decade ago said that he could not believe in the existence of a state "so monstrously murderous and almost certainly suicidal" as to plunge the world into a new war. Yet such states have appeared, and ruthless aggression, deliberately planned and savagely executed, has been the record of the past 2 years. Small nations have fallen victims to the aggressor, some of them even without a struggle. Great nations, assaulted one after another, lie crushed and dismembered. In the face of these realities, every nation, and America above all, has the duty of keeping itself strong and alert. In the face of these realities, American men and women, possessed of liberties and goods beyond all other peoples, have the clear duty of serving their Nation in the defense of its just rights and dignities.

Our Farm Laborer Deserves Draft Consideration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE DEPOSIT (N. Y.) COURIER

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Deposit (N. Y.) Courier of May 15, 1941.

[From the Deposit (N. Y.) Courier of May 15, 1941]

OUR FARM LABORER DESERVES DRAFT CONSIDERATION

It is becoming increasingly apparent that draft boards serving rural areas have just as great a responsibility not to aggravate shortages of skilled farm labor as do other boards not to drain the supply of skilled industrial labor.

Agriculture is listed among the Nation's chief defense industries and our leaders should well realize it would endanger the health and safety of the country if the farms were to be deprived of irreplaceable workers, of whom there already is a growing shortage because of a drift of farm labor to the higher-paid industries.

Registrants who are inducted from the farms are entitled to the same job protection as any other employees. When a farm worker has satisfactorily completed his Army training, or when he has been rejected at any Army induction station, he should be allowed to resume his employment without loss of any rights or privileges and at wages at least as good as he had before selection. No registrant ordered to report for induction should resign from his job, but should be granted a leave of absence until his return—whether that return is to be within a few days or after a prolonged period of military training.

The Strike at Trona

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY R. SHEPPARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE INYO (CALIF.) INDEPENDENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Inyo Independent of May 2, 1941, or the Trona strike that has existed in California:

[From the Inyo (Calif.) Independent of May 2, 1941]

THE STRIKE AT TRONA—A CHALLENGE TO TRUE AMERICANS

Yesterday was the forty-ninth day of the Trona strike in which the C. I. O. has tied up the American Potash & Chemical plant. In the meantime Robert Lamson, leader of C. I. O. strikers, and A. A. Hoffman, manager of the Trona plant, are sitting around the Federal Mediation Board table in Washington, D. C., where a solution for the labor trouble is being sought.

We are interested in the development of this strike, its progress, and in its solution, because the strike has definite influences upon this area, for the following reasons:

First. To freeze the economic welfare of a community of more than 1,200 persons in our desert region works a hardship, not only upon the workers and the company but also upon outlying trade territory.

Second. Because we have been advised that from Trona its labor agitators plan to extend their operations into the mines and other labor fields of the Owens Valley. We know that certain of the Trona strike leaders have been in the Owens Valley recently, casting their eyes on developments at Reward Mine, which is operated by the Golden Queen Co., near Lone Pine; and also the tungsten mines in northern Inyo. In fact, we understand that Messrs. Fred E. Balch, Othello H Smith, and Lou Snyder already are working in this valley.

We hold no brief against workers organizing into unions, or against unions themselves, but we doubt if the type of leadership being offered at Trona is the type of American leadership that our labor here should follow.

The probable intention of these men in visiting our valley is to place from one to two or three of their members from Trona on pay rolls of local mines, so that organizing can get underway in the best accepted manner, as known to radical leaders such as we have at Trona.

Now about the Trona strike itself.

It seems to us that what is needed at Trona is a little more plain, everyday American guts.

We know that most of the workers at Trona are American citizens, patriotic in their desire to see this Nation go forward to the solution of its internal and external problems.

Isn't it about time for them to band together and remove the present bargaining committee and bring this strike to a happy settlement?

The company has agreed to many things. It has offered minimum wages of 75 cents an hour, scaling up to $1.15 per hour, which is said to be higher than any other like scale in the United States. The company has offered an apprenticeship program which the union wanted. It has agreed to union recognition; straight seniority in promotions, demotions, and rehiring; certain company benefits to employees called into military service; 3 days vacation after 6 months' service, 8 working days' vacation after 1 year's service, 10 working days' vacation after 2 years' service; full grievance procedure; joint management of company retail activities; and an additional housing program amounting this year to $370,000.

The company will not agree to one thing, and that is the closed shop and preferential hiring clause insisted upon by the C. I. O.

Now the laborers themselves have been given almost everything they demanded. They should be satisfied. But the organized, radical leaders of Trona C. I. O. want to inflict their own hiring procedure upon a company which has many technical employment problems, is located far from the usual labor market and must be selective in its hiring.

We believe that 90 percent of the men now on strike at Trona want to return to work.

The other day we talked with another Trona man, a member of the C. I. O. now on strike at the American Potash & Chemical Corporation.

In the course of our conversation, he said: "I'm ready to go to work, if Robert Lamson will let me."

In case you may not know it, Mr. Lamson is the man who is the leader of the strike at Trona.

He is the chap who is said to be a Communist. At least his leanings allegedly are radical and hardly compatible with a real desire to see labor and capital (or management) prosper side by side.

Some time ago we had several talks with Lamson.

He comes from an interesting background. Reports say his father was killed in a strike. Lamson, the son, was formerly in the Northwest where he got his early training in hating things pertaining to capitalism and in serving as a labor leader. When the C. I. O. came into being he very naturally found his niche as a labor baiter, an agitator and a man who seems to avidly enjoy working in behalf of labor friction and trouble rather than labor peace and happiness.

After all, why should Mr. Lamson be the dictator of whether a man should or should not work? Is Lamson the little tin god of Trona, which is a part of this democracy we call the United States? Who is Lamson to say whether men should be gainfully employed or not?

We frankly question whether Mr. Lamson and his close associates really have the best interests of their own C. I. O. members at heart. Perhaps revenge against capital in general is their theme song.

Mr. Lamson appeals to us as a person who is doing exactly what Mr. Hitler likes to have done. We recall that Hitler wrote and declared that he will capture America from within.

How?

By encouraging strikes, by developing class hatreds. By arousing agitation against law and order.

It seems to us as if Mr. Lamson and some of his cohorts are now helping the cause of the swastika.

Now an amusing situation has developed at Trona among the strike leaders. In their booklet entitled "The Story of Trona—An American Fight for Independence," they made much of the fact that the American Potash & Chemical Corporation is a British concern.

Then a few days ago in their publication, The Trona Striker, they discovered that British capital no longer controls Trona. That is right, and has been known to some people for some time. Just before the opening of the war, British capital sold its interest in Trona to a couple of Holland capitalists. Then Hitler and his legions struck Holland and since that time no one knows who has the stock. The Dutchmen may have it, or Hitler may have seized it.

So now the C. I. O. leaders have turned tail from condemning the company as British, and infer that it is ridden with the controlling tenacles of Hitlerism. In their publication they say: "Most of us were stunned when we learned that the Third Reich had its fingers deep in Lake Searles brine. A. P. & C. C.'s stock is owned by German capital, has been since 1929, through holding companies of Netherlands capital."

Hitler may control the Netherlands but no one knows who controls A. P. & C. C. However, its stock was sold to Holland, and not Germany; not in 1929 but in 1939, and since Hitler took Holland, the United States Government really controls the stock now, because all assets of Holland have been frozen in this country by action of President Roosevelt.

Such is typical of the reasoning of C. I. O. leaders at Trona and of their utter disregard for truth as it is commonly known and appreciated by Mr. Average Man.

Which reminds us of the C. I. O. statements in their booklet, in which they called attention to defense materials furnished by Trona.

Then when the Federal Mediation Board was asked to take over strike discussion the C. I. O. leaders immediately turned tail and said that Trona doesn't produce important defense needs.

The facts, however, are otherwise, in spite of the C. I. O.'s so-called research department.

Trona's products are used in defense. Among these are borax and boric acid. Immediate clearance was asked some time ago by Sidney Hillman, of Washington Office of Production Management, for 10 tons of boric acid for Owens Corning Fibreglass Corporation, and 40 tons of chemical boric acid for the Corning Glass Works.

Mr. Lamson evidently fears the true light of Federal mediation.

It is time that people realized that the leadership of Trona's strike is communistic. It is not American.

Robert Lamson, according to American Federation of Labor records, is a Communist. At least he was a Communist, and we doubt if he has changed his red underwear. Lamson in 1937 and 1938 lived in Long Beach. He was assigned by the Communist Party to unit E-10 to carry out special work of that branch of the red organization. Communist files also disclose that in 1938 he was married to Connie Pickett, who was at the time of the ceremony harbor section dues secretary for the Communist Party of America.

William Gately, another Trona C. I. O. leader, according to Communist records, joined the party in 1937. He was sent to the Communist Party county school in Los Angeles in 1937 and 1938. There he received instruction and was an apt pupil of Grover Johnson, C. I. O. attorney, so reports the A. F. of L.

Eddie Pulsifer is reported to be listed in the Communist Party book as No. 1912. He was assigned to the industrial section of the red party.

These statements were published late in 1940 by the A. F. of L. To date they have not been refuted, we are told.

In addition, Harry Bridges, who is now on trial for his Communist affiliations, after investigation by the F. B. I., took an active interest in the Trona C. I. O. program. He visited Trona and talked to the men there.

After all, what kind of company is this for loyal, patriotic Americans to be in?

And C. I. O. leaders seem to stop at nothing.

We have just seen a recent copy of a mimeographed sheet known as "The Trona Striker." In it is a statement addressed to C. I. O. members who purchased autos, and so forth, on time and who evidently cannot make their payments. Among other things, the sheet recommends the following:

"Automobiles are the major problem, and they (the credit organizations) cannot repossess a car if they cannot find the car; you may have loaned the car to a friend to take a trip to Oshkosh, or some other place."

In other words, C. I. O. leaders blandly advise their members to hide their cars away from collectors. Such practice is criminal in the eyes of the law.

We print this only to ask the question: "Is the C. I. O. at Trona, and its methods, above the law?"

On May 2, Friday magazine came out with six pages devoted to Trona and the strike. Its publication was filled with misrepresentation. Its pictures, for the most part, were posed for C. I. O. effect. Friday magazine, incidentally, is a red radical publication.

A father of one of the boys at Trona, now on strike and who would rather be working, saw a copy of Friday magazine and wrote his son to return home. He was worried to have him live in "such conditions."

This was the son's reply to his father, which we think is worth printing:

"DEAR FOLKS: Received your letter about Friday magazine, and can readily notify you that it is based on deliberate lies. The union is trying to do everything to degrade the company and are using Hitler methods of propaganda.

"I not only like it here but I actually love it. I live like a king. This is the best camp of its kind in the United States. If you were here you could see for yourself and you could talk to anyone and find out that the article is not representative. Just a bunch of dirty lies. Everybody here complained and wanted the truth in a retraction.

"The men at the head of it are professional union organizers and got us into the strike. They tell us that they use propaganda to make the company come around and settle the strike. The article is a standing joke. Froest is a union organizer and really lives in a beautiful room with all the facilities you could possibly get if you paid $4 per night in the best hotel. Learn never to believe what you read or hear unless you see for yourself and talk to the people. There isn't a vestige of truth in any one of the pictures in Friday magazine.

"Life magazine is going to tell the complete truth very soon and expose the Communist magazine. The union organizers sell the Friday magazine here. I sincerely wish you could see for yourself or have somebody see this place. Wish that ——— could have seen this place and I can assure you she wouldn't want to leave. It's so absurd that it is all a standing joke around here. I showed your letter to everybody around here. Pa, this really is a paradise. Although the Mexicans live on the other side, their houses have all the facilities one could want. I went over there and saw for myself. The family picture depicted by Friday showing them all in one room is a gross fabrication as I know the house and how many rooms and where they all live. The union uses just such methods in order to arouse public opinion against the company, and also to get donations to fight the company. They have used the same tactics in the Allis-Chalmers and Ford strikes, if you have observed.

"Some day when you see this place you will say, 'I can see now why you've stayed here close to 5 years.' I could get all the jobs in the world but there would never be a better place than this one. The pay has always been higher than anywhere in the country. Excessive heat in the summer is about the only draw-back, but when one is acclimated it isn't bad at all. I could go on writing for hours but I'm getting tired.

"Love,

"——— ———."

All of the above has been printed because we know that many men at Trona are wishing for an end to this strike.

It is time that America awakens to its needs.

Labor strife must stop. Management must cooperate, and radicals who would destroy our democracy must be removed from power.

Labor is gaining nothing at Trona by continuing the strike.

Management at Trona has offered the men practically everything they desire, and more.

It is now up to men at Trona to decide if such men as Lamson have the men's best interests and the interests of this Nation at heart.

Again, we reiterate, that we believe in the rights of workers to organize. We believe in their right to bargain under the N. L. R. B.

But, we believe also, that American labor will lose all of the advantages it has gained unless it realizes the present situation of America in its defense program, and unless it takes control away from radical, un-American labor leaders who are selfish in their motives, and owe allegiance to organizations and creeds that are un-American.

It is a challenge for workers to be Americans first.

Why America Should Stay Out of the European War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. SMITH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. PHILIP A. BENNETT, OF MISSOURI

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an address delivered by the Hon. PHILIP A. BENNETT, of Missouri, at a meeting of the Women's Republican Club, Sixth Congressional District, Warrensburg, Mo., on May 16, 1941.

Every American should read this speech. The sentiment it expresses comes straight from the heart. Forthrightly and courageously the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENNETT] states his reasons why America should stay out of the European war. Best of all, this is not a mere political speech but a true expression of his conduct and votes in Congress.

The address follows:

Greetings, my friends of the Sixth District. This is one time a man is to speak and women have no opportunity to talk back. Sorry that I cannot be with you today. But it is a great privilege to be able, by means of the inventive genius of our people, to greet the many fine Republican women of the Sixth District. Your Congressman, our party, and our country are indebted to you for your loyal, unselfish service. I trust that all are happy and may your meeting be a great success.

As your Congressman, I am faced by many problems, but there is one question constantly before me that I want you to think about because I need your moral support and help. The question to which I refer is, "Shall America offer her finest young men as a sacrifice to the god of war?"

During the campaign of 1940 I realized that powerful forces were at work to involve the United States in the age-old quarrels of Europe. I promised then that, if elected to Congress, I would do all in my power to keep America at peace and that I would never vote to send an American boy across the ocean to help fight some other nation's battles. I have felt that such pledge had much to do with the great majority of votes given me. That promise was not campaign oratory but came from one who believes with all his heart that Uncle Sam should build strong national defense and keep his nose out of the other fellow's business. If we will do this, there is no nation, nor combination of nations, capable of doing us serious harm. Just as in the days immediately preceding the first World War, we are being told that if England goes down we will be the next to feel the might of Germany. A vital question of the day is, therefore, "Can Hitler invade America?" For one, I am not convinced. First of all, remember that the countries he has so far conquered are much smaller, all put toether, than the United States. Their total populations equal 110,000,000 people. Ours is 132,000,000. They were 7 different countries, each small compared with Germany; each (except Norway) right on Germany's land frontiers. Hitler attacked each one separately. All he had to do was to roll across their borders with his vast mechanical equipment.

Germany has 80,000,000 population, a tremendous army and an air force three times the size of Britain's. England has only 50,000,000 people. But when Hitler turned on England, there was the English Channel, once crossed by a woman swimmer. Eleven months after France fell he has not even attempted to cross that narrow strip of water with soldiers or tanks. If he should attempt to invade the United States he would have to face the problem of crossing with his armies and equipment 3,000 miles of ocean and not 50,000,000 people on a small island, but a great nation of 132,000,000 people and resources far greater than his own. Friends, all statements to the effect that Hitler could invade our country, even if we would build strong defenses, is pure propaganda for the purpose of leading you to advocate war now.

With the invasion threat refuted by facts the war dancers next raise the threat of economic warfare as an excuse to involve us in foreign wars. They say we would lose our export business. This I deny. But for argument's sake grant it is true. Well, how many years would it require for our exports to equal in value the cost of our participation in the war to say nothing of the lives of millions of our finest young men?

We must provide our country with defenses that will make an invasion by force, however great, impossible. However, I do not favor creating a force capable of invading Europe, Africa, or Asia and carrying on an aggressive war there. I plead with you to stop, look, listen. Remember there is no military authority in this country who believes that an invasion of America by Germany—with or without the British Fleet—is possible.

Two powerful groups favor war. First, the international bankers who desire to preserve with the blood of our boys the financial investments they have made in Europe, Africa, and Asia. They are not interested in preserving democracy. I pause to observe that the chaos resulting from this war will, as before, in all participating countries, speed up the trend toward socialized government, restricting the four freedoms for which it is urged that we fight.

The second group working for war is the inner group of brain trusters. These alien-minded gentlemen who set out to change our form of government have made considerable progress, but are not satisfied. If they can get America into a shooting war, they will doubtless be able to accomplish their purpose in the turmoil, and under the name of another "emergency."

No; it is not our war nor of our making.

Recently I had occasion to make a trip into the South. I was surprised to learn that in some sections of the South there is still considerable hatred of the North. Why? Because of a war 75 years ago. If, in this Nation where we are of one blood, speak the same language, worship the same God, and prosper or suffer together, ill feelings will exist after three-quarters of a century and even when the vanquished admit that it is better that the North won, can't we understand why there is mistrust, hatred, and fear among the nations of Europe?

There are 20 races living there, speaking a score of different languages and having divergent interests. Their last war was not 75 years ago. They have fought every few years since before the Christian era. They have a set of primary interests entirely foreign to our own. Mistrust is rampant. We sympathize with the oppressed, but we cannot, through force of arms, bring and preserve free representative government to them. We cannot, by force, establish lasting peace where the teachings of the Prince of Peace after 2,000 years have failed to bring it about.

Believing that the lease-lend bill was the first step nearer another blood bath for American youth, one step nearer totalitarianism for the United States, I was unwilling to add my vote to help in any way a course of action which I am convinced can end only in the same bitter disillusionment and futile disasters of the first World War. Advocates of that bill claimed that it was a peace measure. Later, when the second step toward war in the form of $7,000,000,000 appropriation for England and her allies was offered, I spoke and voted against it. I then felt that the third step toward war would be convoys; that proponents of the measure would soon be saying that it is foolish to manufacture implements of war for England and permit them to be sunk.

When the subject of convoys was first mentioned to the President, he claimed to oppose their use and said, "Convoys mean shooting and shooting means war."

Another definition for convoy is "a funeral train." That is just what it will be for the United States if we permit our Navy to convoy supply ships to Britain. It will be a funeral train for millions of our boys killed in an unnecessary war and a funeral train for a great Republic murdered in a foolhardy adventure.

In spite of the truthful definition given by the President, members of his Cabinet and administration leaders in Congress are now urging the use of convoys. Again, I am in opposition. I sympathize deeply with the victims of the aggressors but my first duty is to my native land.

If we are to have a war, it will be a war of our own making. It will be a war thrust upon the American people by foreign agents and propagandists now operating almost uncurbed and unmolested in this country. Why, by the use of deceptive publicity and an appeal to the gullible, thrust our country already to the brink of war, actually into the combat as a full-fledged belligerent in a second attempt to preserve democracy where democracy in the main has already perished.

In this foolhardy attempt to save democracy for countries that manifested a gross inability to protect and preserve it for their own nationals, the war mongers in the United States would sacrifice and destroy the last remnant of democracy and personal liberty that remain in our own Republic.

No Member of the present Congress can dispute the fact that the law-making branch of our Government has practically surrendered its powers to the Executive.

Napoleon once said, "Give me the power over the purse strings of Europe and I will control its destiny." Today the President of the United States has everything that Napoleon wished for and more. God grant that he may use that power wisely and for the best interests of our country. But, alas, we have good grounds for fear. It has long been understood that Cabinet members submit their speeches to the Executive for approval before delivery. I need not remind you that all members of the Cabinet, save one, have recently delivered addresses or gone on record in favor of all-out aid to England.

We cannot look out of the window on these wonderful May days without feeling that it is a beautiful spring. Proof of God's love for the grand and beautiful in nature and for His children surrounds us wherever we go. Various peoples of the earth seem to have overlooked the fact that "The nation that forgets God shall perish." Men must be controlled by God or they will be governed by dictators. Alas, that guns should be so dear and flesh so cheap. The cry of the oppressed and starving is so great that all the waters of the oceans are unable to stifle it.

But, by subtle subterfuge and well-organized propaganda, this great Republic, blessed by Almighty God and favored by geographic location, is being forced step by step into another bloody conflict 3,000 miles away. If those who cause war, if those who vote for war had to fight the wars, there would be much less war in the world. I repeat that I sympathize deeply with the people of England, but I also sympathized with the people of Poland, Finland, France, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Belgium, Denmark, Holland, and China. I voted to turn $2,000,000,000 over to the President to use for the relief of victims of the dictators, but the administration would accept nothing short of the peace-end bill. The British Empire still has tremendous resources of men and materials and ships, and they declared war themselves when they got into this conflict. It is their war, in my opinion, and it is not our war. If I felt, as some profess to feel, that England was fighting our war, I would favor a declaration of war. We should not be hypocritical. We should point out the war mongers for what they are. We should prove true to the trust imposed by American sacrifice on every American. If the people will act, they can yet prevent this Nation's involvement in a shooting war. Public opinion is a mighty force. The people are opposed to war, but the propaganda is all on the side of the war mongers. If you want to protect your boys or those of your neighbors; if you want to preserve peace for your Nation, give voice to your desire by writing or telegraphing the President. He will listen if the number of your messages is sufficiently great. Speak while you still have free speech. Remember, the only voice of the oppressed is the cry of woe. "You cannot preserve democracy where it isn't by crucifying it where it is."

The Federal Goverment Should Leave the Field of Taxation on Gasoline to State and Local Governments

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER D. ANGELL

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the problem of tax raising in support of national defense is one of the major problems facing the Congress today. We who must determine where this tax burden will be placed are confronted with appeals from many groups of our citizens urging that the taxes be not increased on their particular activities. In fact it is difficult to propose additional taxes in any field without meeting with this objection. We must all be prepared to sacrifice and to realize that in order to carry forward a defense program involving the expenditure of $19,000,000,000 at least in the next fiscal year we must face the necessity of added tax burden upon every activity. However, in meeting this problem we should, insofar as possible, endeavor to spread the burden equitably without increasing the weight of new taxes disproportionately on any group of our citizens. We should place the heaviest burden upon new profit arising out of the national-defense program itself. We should not permit a new crop of war millionaires to come out of our defense program.

There is a proposal to place an additional Federal tax on gasoline which, in the views of many of us, would be a serious mistake. It must be kept in mind that at the same time the Federal Government is seeking to find new sources of taxation and raise immense sums of new taxes, the State and local governments must carry on and provide sufficient revenues through taxation to meet not only their continuing expenses, but to take care of bonded indebtedness heretofore contracted. The tax on gasoline originated in my own State of Oregon. It has proven to be an ideal tax for the State and local communities with which to finance and maintain their roads and highways, and many of the States, like my own, are using this source of income exclusively for that purpose. Many of the States have incurred indebtedness and issued bonds relying upon these revenues to meet their maturing obligations. If the Federal Government now preempts this field of taxation, it will tend to dry up this source of revenue to the States and leave them without adequate sources of taxation to meet their commitments.

The Federal Government already has laid a tax of 1.5 cents per gallon on gasoline. State taxation on gasoline now averages 4.4 cents per gallon which, with the Federal tax, brings the total to 5.9 cents. If 1 additional cent were added by the Federal Government, it would bring the total tax on gasoline to 6.9 cents. In this connection, it should be recalled that many of the States have a tax in excess of the 4.4 cents average. This added burden would impose a sales tax of more than 50 percent on this one essential product. Gasoline has come to be a necessity to the farmer as well as to many of our industrial activities. As shown by the statement of Mr. Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, which I will ask leave to include as part of my remarks, from 27 to 68 percent of many agricultural products are now moved from the farms to the markets through the use of gasoline-driven trucks.

While it is true that the Federal Government has contributed to some extent to road construction throughout the States, this contribution is small in comparison for the total expenditures for this purpose. From 1917 to 1939 the State, county, and local governments expended for roads $29,675,397,000. The Federal Government expended during this time, through the Bureau of Public Roads, $3,225,026,166, which included money spent for grade crossings, forest roads and trails, and national-park highways. The Federal Government, from July 1935 to June 1940, through the Works Progress Administration, spent an additional sum of $2,931,738,000 on the highways, roads, and streets, and the Public Works Administration also expended $641,133,429. The total of these Federal expenditures aggregated $6,797,897,595, of which approximately four and three-quarter billions was for relief. It is thus seen that the Federal expenditure for roads is a very small part of the total expenditures made by State and local governments. Furthermore, the Federal expenditures are for original construction, with the exception of maintenance in its own publicly owned areas, and the States and local governments have the burden of maintenance and upkeep.

No other commodity so essential to the farming industry and the general welfare of the American citizen is taxed as heavily as gasoline, and it would seem the part of wisdom for the Congress to refrain from adding this additional burden upon the farmer by levying an increased tax upon gasoline, now bearing a sales tax of more than 50 percent.

As a part of my remarks, I include the statement of Mr. Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, made before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives on May 16, 1941, during a hearing by this committee on revenue revision for the year 1941. The statement follows:

The National Grange recognizes the fact that our national-defense program calls for heavy increases in taxation. Such new taxes as may be imposed in this connection should be levied as fairly and equitably as possible. These levies should be of such a character as not to destroy our system of private enterprise, upon which the security and well-being of the Nation so greatly depends in the emergency with which we are now confronted. On the other hand, no person should be allowed to make any inordinate profits, nor should taxes be levied for purely punitive purposes.

The Grange has long been opposed to a general sales tax on the ground that it is a tax on the necessities of the people and violates the principle of ability to pay. However, we believe that excise taxes upon a carefully selected list of commodities are justified under prevailing conditions.

We do not believe that the existing Federal tax of 1½ cents per gallon on gasoline should be increased. The highway users of the country are already paying their full and proportionate share of all general taxes. In addition to that, they are contributing, in round figures, about $2,000,000,000 a year in special highway taxes of various kinds—Federal, State, and local. This sum is approximately equal to 14 percent of the total revenues accruing to all the units of government in the United States. Roughly speaking, State and local taxes on highway transportation amount to $1,500,000,000, while the Federal Government is collecting about $500,000,000 a year from this source.

State taxes imposed on gasoline now average 4.4 cents per gallon. The existing Federal levy of 1.5 cents per gallon brings the total to 5.9 cents. Adding another cent per gallon for Federal purposes would bring the average total to 6.9 cents per gallon. At the present retail price of gasoline, this would represent a sales tax of more than 50 percent.

So far as agriculture is concerned, motor transportation under modern conditions is not a luxury but an absolute necessity. More than 1,000,000 motortrucks, or about one-fourth of the country's total, are owned and operated by farmers. A recent survey discloses the fact that with the abandonment of many branch lines of railroads that are no longer profitable there are about 48,000 communities throughout the United States that are entirely dependent upon highway transportation.

The farmer must have his motor-vehicle facilities, and he does not feel that his use of the highways is a proper and adequate measure by which to determine his contribution toward the cost of national defense.

Some idea of the importance of the motor vehicle to the American farmer may be gained from the records of the United States Department of Agriculture, which shows that approximately 27 percent of the butter, 39 percent of the eggs, 65 percent of the poultry, 40 percent of the fruit and vegetables, 62 percent of the cattle, 61 percent of the calves, 68 percent of the hogs, 29 percent of the sheep and lambs, and 50 percent of the mules and horses are now moved from farm to market by truck.

When the revenues derived from gasoline taxes are expended in improving and maintaining the highways, there can be no legitimate criticism. However, it must be kept in mind that much of the gasoline purchased by farmers is used for plowing, harrowing, threshing, filling silos, pumping water, operating spraying machinery, sawing wood, grinding feed, and for other purposes that do not involve any use of the highways. Many States properly refund the tax to farmers on gasoline used in such ways as have been enumerated. Other States do not make these refunds. So far as the Federal tax on gasoline is concerned, no refunds whatsoever are made. To increase the Federal gasoline tax would, therefore, result in increasing the farmer's cost of production.

The cost of transportation constitutes the biggest single service charge that agriculture has to pay. The imposition of an additional Federal tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline would make present excessive transportation costs on farm commodities just that much higher. This would be true of the more than 1,000,000 trucks operated by farmers themselves. It would likewise be true of common and contract carrier trucks that transport the products of the farm, and which haul supplies consumed on the farm.

The owners of common and contract carrier trucks will naturally speak for themselves But it is only fair to say with respect to them that they are engaged in a highly competitive business. The exhaustive study made by former Federal Coordinator of Transportation Joseph B. Eastman shows that highway users are paying their fair share of highway costs and more. The Eastman report, made public about 2 years ago, indicates that trucks as distinguished from passenger cars are paying more than their share of the cost of improving and maintaining our highways. Assuming the correctness of these findings, it would be just as logical to place a special tax for defense purposes on the coal consumed by the railroads as it would be to place a special tax for defense purposes on gasoline.

The intrusion of the Federal Government into the gasoline-tax field cannot be regarded as legitimate. Such appropriations as the Federal Government has made for highways can all be justified from the standpoint of national defense, to facilitate the transportation of the mails, and for other purposes benefiting all the people alike.

By far the major portion of the funds that have been expended for the improvement of our highways has come from State, county, and local sources. From 1917, when the Federal-Aid Highway Act took effect, until 1939, the States expended $16,695,397,000 for roads. During the same period, county and local expenditures for roads amounted to $12,980,000,000, making a total of $29,675,297,000.

During the years in question, Federal expenditures on highways, which were supervised by the Bureau of Public Roads, now the Public Roads Administration, amounted to $3,225,026,166. It should be noted that this includes the money spent for the elimination of grade crossings, forest roads and trails, and national-park highways.

In addition to this, from July 1935 to June 1940 the Works Progress Administration spent $2,931,738,000 on highways, roads, and streets.

Public Works Administration grants for streets and highways from July 1933 to June 1940 amounted to $641,133,429.

The total of all these Federal expenditures aggregated $6,797,897,595, of which $4,757,046,318 was for relief.

The primary purpose of the relief expenditures was to supply work for the unemployed. In fact, in appropriating emergency relief funds for roads, Congress expressly stipulated in awarding contracts in this connection that as much hand labor as possible should be employed.

In support of the proposition that the gasoline tax properly belongs to the States, it should be kept in mind that under the Federal-Aid Highway Act, the funds appropriated by Congress all go for construction. The cost of maintaining these roads devolves upon the States.

Further than that, the States and their minor subdivisions have issued highway bonds in large amounts, and they are depending principally upon the revenues derived from the gasoline tax to pay off these bonds as they mature. As of January 1, 1938, the latest reliable figures available show that the total outstanding highway bonds of the States amounted to $1,931,370,000. Of this total, bonds valued at $466,387,000 were issued to reimburse counties for roads that were originally built from the proceeds of county bonds. County and local highway bonds outstanding as of January 1, 1940, have been roughly estimated at $1,000,000,000.

These figures prove conclusively that the gasoline tax belongs to the States. While everybody recognizes that the revenues of the Federal Government must be greatly increased to meet the costs of national defense, we cannot lose sight of the fact that our State and local governments must likewise be supported and maintained. That the tax policies pursued by the Federal Government during recent years constitute nothing less than a threat to the sovereignty and independence of the States, drying up the sources of revenue upon which they must depend to finance their activities, cannot be denied. The best hope of preserving our democracy lies in preserving the independence and sovereignty of the States, and this cannot be done by pursuing policies of taxation that will gradually reduce the States to impotency and bankruptcy.

The legislatures of half the States, fearing that the intrusion of the Federal Government into a sphere of taxation developed by the States to provide funds for road improvement may have serious consequences on State financing, have memorialized Congress to withdraw from the field of motor-fuel taxation. Congress should certainly heed the voice of the elected representatives of the States in this matter, because they speak for the majority of the people of the Nation.

In considering ways and means of raising by current taxation as large a proportion as possible of the funds needed to defray the cost of national defense it appears to be necessary to broaden the tax base and to fairly and judiciously lower the exemption on incomes. As we have already indicated, no one should be allowed to make any undue profits, whether from defense contracts or in the regular line of business. We do not want another crop of millionaires such as was spawned by the first World War. Congress can take care of this situation by properly graduating the tax on personal incomes, the corporation income tax, and the excess-profits tax.

In view of the situation with which we are faced the nondefense expenditures of the Government should be held to the lowest possible minimum, without sacrificing any really essential public service. It would be grossly improper and unfair to impose back-breaking taxes upon the people, with the Government squandering public funds to maintain supernumerary employees on the pay roll, or in promoting projects that are nonessential, and which do not contribute in any way whatsoever to the cause of national defense.

Importations of Foreign-Produced Pears

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER D. ANGELL

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

RESOLUTION OF THE OREGON-WASHINGTON-CALIFORNIA PEAR LEAGUE, INC.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include copies of two resolutions adopted by the Oregon - Washington - California Pear League, Inc., on April 25, 1941, protesting against the importation of pears. The resolutions follow:

Whereas this organization heretofore has found that importations into the United States of large quantities of foreign-produced pears, which compete directly in the largest markets with pears produced on the Pacific coast, necessarily interfere with and tend to defeat the purpose of the Federal diversion program for west coast fall and winter pears which is in operation under section 32 of the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended; but no effective relief from such excessive importations has resulted to date from the efforts of the Pacific coast pear industry and of Members of the Congress from the Pacific Coast States: Now therefore

Resolved, That after due investigation and consideration, it is the finding and judgment of the members of this, the Oregon-Washington-California Pear League, Inc., the organization charged with administration of the west coast fall and winter pear-diversion program in effect under section 32 of the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act, that (1) limitation of the quantities of foreign-produced pears which may be imported into the United States during any season should be determined and made effective early in the season, so that the pear industry of the United States properly may adjust and arrange its marketing program accordingly; and that (2) in the event the Federal Government fails to restrict the importations of foreign-produced pears, the Government should take some action which will prevent an excessive quantity of such foreign-produced pears from coming into competition with the pears produced within the United States, the marketable quantities of which are being limited under a Federal marketing-agreement program, and the diversion of which from normal channels of trade and commerce is being carried on with Federal funds under the provisions of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act; and

Resolved, That we hereby respectfully do request the members of the Congressional delegation of each of the Pacific coast States to continue their efforts to obtain for the Pacific coast pear industry some protection against excessive importation into the United States of pears produced in foreign countries, to the end that ultimately there will be made effective, either under the authority of section 22 of the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, or under such other or additional legislative authority as may be necessary for that purpose, a reasonable and effective limitation upon or restriction of the quantities of foreign-produced pears which may be imported into the United States; and

Resolved, That the officers of this organization hereby are authorized for and on behalf of this organization to take all proper steps to induce and hasten effective governmental action to stem the growing tide of pear importations; and the Secretary of this organization shall forward a copy of this resolution to each of the Members of Congress from the States of Oregon, Washington, and California, and to such other Government officials or other interested persons as the Secretary may deem advisable.

Whereas this, the Control Committee, established by and engaged in administering the Federal marketing agreement No. 89 and order No. 39, regulating the handling of certain varieties of west coast fall and winter pears grown in the States of Oregon, Washington, and California heretofore has found that importations into the United States of large quantities of foreign-produced pears, which compete directly in the largest markets with the fall and winter pears produced on the Pacific coast and the marketing of which is regulated and limited by the aforesaid marketing agreement and order, necessarily tend to render ineffective and materially to interfere with the marketing control program undertaken under said marketing order and marketing agreement; and

Whereas this committee heretofore, by resolution adopted December 27, 1940, requested the President of the United States, acting pursuant to the authority conferred upon him by section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended and reenacted, to cause an investigation to be made under said statutory provisions by the United States Tariff Commission and such limitation thereafter imposed upon the quantity of foreign-produced pears which may be imported into the United States as such investigation may show to be proper, but no such investigation by the United States Tariff Commission has as yet been undertaken and no action has been taken under the aforesaid section 22 to limit importations of foreign-produced pears: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this control committee hereby does request the members of the congressional delegation of each of the Pacific Coast States to continue their efforts to obtain for the Pacific coast pear industry some protection against the excessive importation of pears produced in foreign countries, to the end that the purposes and beneficial effects of the current west coast fall and winter pear program whereby the growers and shippers of west coast fall and winter pears withhold from market each year a large portion of the total production, will not be defeated and offset by the importation into this country of large quantities of foreign-produced pears; and

Resolved, That in the event it appears to be impossible to obtain, or unlikely that there will be obtained, any effective action under the aforesaid section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended and reenacted, efforts be made to obtain the enactment by the Congress of such other legislation as will afford the Pacific coast pear industry reasonable and effective protection against such excessive imports; and

Resolved, That after due investigation and consideration, this control committee finds and determines that limitation of the quantities of foreign-produced pears which may be imported into the United States during each season should be determined upon and made effective early in the season so that the pear industry may gage and adjust accordingly its marketing program for that season; and

Resolved, That the Secretary of this committee hereby is directed for and on behalf of this committee to forward a copy of this resolution to each of the Members of Congress from the States of Oregon, Washington, and California, and the officers of this committee are authorized to take all proper action for and on behalf of this committee in accordance or consistent with this resolution.

The Road to the Ruhr of America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BERNARD J. GEHRMANN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, the Ruhr of America surrounds her great inland seas. Almost all of the important industrial States of this Nation border the Great Lakes. More marine traffic in tonnage is borne on the fresh water of the five lakes than in all our foreign trade.

No sound reason can be advanced for refusing to build a road for cheap transportation to the industrial heart of America. One by one the specious arguments against the seaway have been disproved. The last attempt was an unfounded recital of legal jargon repeated in an effort to raise the question of whether or not we were surrendering the sovereignty of Lake Michigan. I secured indisputable proof that the treaty as presently drawn would not affect our control of the Lakes from the Solicitor of the State Department and the Attorney General, which made an end to that nonsense.

When the Panama Canal was proposed, the scorching opposition raised the same objections that we hear today about the waterway. Now the Canal is universally praised. The St. Lawrence seaway is more important because of the greater need. The shipping tonnage which passes through the locks at Saulte St. Marie is twice that which utilizes the Panama Canal and the Suez Canal combined. The only consideration that is germane in studying this project—does the need exist for a new route from Superior to the sea? The affirmative answer is obvious.

The President, after much study, has said that the construction of the seaway is vital to our continued national defense. Some people have shouted that the present plans call for the completion of the seaway in 4 years and that the present war will be over then. Since when, may I ask, can anyone foolishly presume that the end of the present war will mean the cessation of efforts for national defense? Such drivel! It is more likely that the end of this conflict will mark the beginning of greater defense plans. Who knows how long this war will last and can say with smug certainty that in 4 years this project will be too late to assist us?

It has become increasingly apparent that we will have to use the shipyards of the Great Lakes to turn out not only merchant but fighting ships. It takes 4 years to finish a capital fighting ship and construction could begin immediately to insure delivery as soon as the waterway was completed. Wisconsin yards are building submarines for the Navy and must send them to the ocean piecemeal where they are assembled. In the last war the shipyards of the Lakes sustained our merchant marine through a feverish and extensive building program. The same procedure was adopted at that time.

The reason for the President urging the construction of this route from the Atlantic to the Lakes is to tap the resources of these yards. The shipbuilding centers on the Lakes are far removed from the dangers of coastal attacks and bombings. They are close to the sources of building supplies. Our yards on the coasts are overloaded with work, and we need very desperately the added construction capacity of the lake yards to supply our needs and those of Great Britain. The fall or victory of the British Empire, for which we are making huge sacrifices, depends on the replacement of her shipping. Every thinking Member of both Houses should be urging the approval of this project.

When the vested interests alone are the proponents of a project, I usually question its public benefit. The people who are urging the congressional approval of this great trade route are the breadwinners of this country, the practical people who are motivated only by the desire for progress and the common sense administration of this Government. To support this contention, I quote from a resolution adopted by the Superior Federation of Labor:

SUPERIOR FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Superior, Wis.

Whereas the project commonly known as the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway has been advocated for a great many years; and

Whereas the completion of such a project is of tremendous importance in the light of our national-defense program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Superior Federation of Labor, of Superior, Wis., the central labor organization of Superior, representing 41 labor unions, hereby goes on record as wholeheartedly favoring and urging the immediate commencement and the completion of, as soon as possible, the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway project; be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the United States Senators and Congressmen from the State of Wisconsin.

Dated this 2d day of April 1941.

CLARENCE C. REHL,
President.

CHARLES FELL,
Secretary, Legislative Committee.

This represents the views of from 8,000 to 10,000 laborers. The man with the dinner pail, who is the solid foundation of this industrial democracy—the one who pays and feels the burden of heavy taxes—is not urging the expenditure of huge sums of money for something from which no benefit commensurate with the spending will be derived. He usually arrives at an independent conclusion after some hard-headed thought.

The issue of defeatism is being bruited about a great deal lately in connection with our international problems. The isolationists are called appeasers—and worse. I propose that we employ the same terms to those who fail to see, or who refuse to recognize because of questionable motives, the need for an aggressive national outlook.

Bartley Atcheson, editor of Reader's Digest, once rightly said:

I have no patience with sniveling defeatism.

I have none with those who refuse to assist in making this a dynamic and industrially great America.

This project is sorely needed by the entire Nation. The inland agricultural regions and the mighty industrial sections should no longer be isolated from foreign trade. This project is needed so that in our well-sheltered shipyards we can build mighty battleships and merchantmen. We need this project to open new industries and jobs in that great belt of the unemployed. No one can say that we do not have as great danger to this Government and system of living from within as from without. I propose that national-defense efforts like charity shall begin at home. When the resolution for the construction of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway comes before Congress I suggest that we rise with a unified purpose, transcending sectionalism, and vote for the good of the Nation—for the seaway.

The issue is placed before us with understanding and foresight in a resolution passed by the Common Council of the City of Racine, Wis.:

Whereas the Midwest is vitally concerned in a deep-water outlet to the high seas, the State of Wisconsin, having 22 lake harbors entering the inland oceans, known as the Great Lakes, has championed such a project for many years. The city of Racine, having a harbor in point of water-borne commerce on Lake Michigan, has never ceased its efforts to secure the improvement of the St. Lawrence River as an efficient connecting link between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean.

Whereas the people of the Midwest are conscious of the fact that a bottleneck of approximately 48 miles in the St. Lawrence River deprives them of an economical, expeditious, and free outlet for their factory and farm products to the markets of the world, the deepening of the St. Lawrence channel, as advocated by successive Presidents of the United States, will prove an economic advantage to the Nation as a whole. It will bring the Midwest a thousand miles nearer the high seas and that much nearer to the markets of the world.

Whereas, while the project must be regarded as one of the highest importance under normal conditions, it assumes a special significance at a time when the Nation is deeply concerned in the same as a defense measure. While the eastern section of the country is seeking more power service, the Midwest must have greater navigation freedom.

Whereas there can be no doubt that the great inland industrial, mineral, and agricultural region forms a vital part of an entire Nation, and, therefore, should not be hampered or hindered in rendering a maximum service, the shipbuilding industry in the Great Lakes region deserves encouragement. Such industries not only have their advantage in being centrally located, but at a time when the Nation is dealing with the matter of defense they are more secure if located in the mid-country; and

Whereas thus the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway project does not only possess power potentialities and navigation advantage, but also forms an important factor as a defense measure: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Common Council of the City of Racine herewith formally and respectfully requests the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation enabling the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway project as outlined by the President of the United States, and thus remove the economic barriers which now afflict the Midwest country and the Nation as a whole; and be it further

Resolved, That a formally attested copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States of America, to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the Senators and Representatives of the National Congress, and to the mayors and common councils of the important sister cities throughout the United States.

Adopted.

Hull's Peace Aims

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES M. BARNES
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Washington Daily News:

[From the Washington Daily News]

HULL'S PEACE AIMS

Secretary Hull's outline of peace aims is statesmanship at its best. It takes the public into the administration's confidence—which is the only way a democratic nation can achieve national unity. And it reveals that the administration is thinking in basic economic terms.

Realism inspires the post-war reconstruction program suggested by the Secretary of State:

"1. Extreme nationalism must not be permitted to express itself in excessive trade restrictions.

"2. Nondiscrimination in international commercial relations must be the rule, so that international trade may grow and prosper.

"3. Raw material supplies must be available to all nations without discrimination.

"4. International agreements regulating the supply of commodities must be so handled as to protect fully the interests of the consuming countries and their people.

"5. The institutions and arrangements of international finance must be so set up that they lend aid to the essential enterprises and the continuous development of all countries and permit the payment through processes of trade consonant with the welfare of all countries."

That is a far cry from the economic monstrosities of the Versailles peace, which left Germany an easy prey for Hitler and his promises of revenge and conquest.

But it is even a farther cry from the Nazi economic dictatorship which Hitler has imposed upon Europe, and which the Axis would impose upon the world.

Such world economic cooperation cannot be achieved, as Mr. Hull explains, until we have a world free of imminent military danger, and clear of malign political intrigue.

The military and the political cannot be separated from the economic. If Germany and Japan are denied equality of access to world raw materials, resources, and markets, no peace treaties or disarmament pacts will make the world safe from their warring aggression—that was the costly experience of the 20-year truce, 1919–39. And it works both ways: Britain and the United States will not submit to Axis economic domination of the world.

Not only military peace is involved in rational economic reconstruction, but also the political and individual freedoms which are the conditions of democracy. Hungry people are suckers for the demagog and the dictator.

So Secretary Hull is a constructive realist when he talks peace in economic terms. The world has a right to assume that the United States—which controls a disproportionate share of the world's natural resources and gold, and which has been one of the worst offenders in tariffs and trade barriers—will cooperate in fact, as he suggests.

It would be very salutary, we think, if Prime Minister Churchill, who has been so heroically frank in military matters, would now state that Britain agrees with Mr. Hull's peace aims.

Radio Control

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LELAND M. FORD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE HOLLYWOOD (CALIF.) NEWS-CITIZEN

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Hollywood News-Citizen of May 8, 1941:

[From the Hollywood (Calif.) Citizen-News of May 8, 1941]

CONTROL

While the Nation prepares to defend against external dictatorship, bureaucratic dictatorship within our own Government continues to usurp powers and deny private rights that once were deemed to be incidental to the liberties of democracy.

The recent order of the Federal Communications Commission to the Nation's radio stations and chain broadcasting systems startles the Nation into a keener realization of the dictatorship at home which the New Dealers are plotting.

The Commission, by a 5-to-2 vote, tells the broadcasters that hereafter there is to be no such a thing as the right of contract which all once thought was guaranteed by the Constitution. Advertisers cannot make contracts with the stations they desire to use for the broadcasting of a chain program, says the Commission, and if they see fit to arrange a program for broadcast they must allow any station to broadcast it that so desires.

Under such an arrangement radio listeners would never know from day to day on what stations they might expect their favorite programs. Under such an arrangement an advertiser wouldn't know in advance what a Nation-wide broadcast would cost him or what stations would be broadcasting it.

Under such an arrangement the radio business would be thrown into a turmoil, business goodwill would be destroyed, and enormous financial losses would be suffered by the widespread stockholders in the radio companies.

Throwing the radio business into a turmoil may be a part of the purpose in the minds of the Commissioners. With the effectiveness of radio service destroyed, it would be easy for the New Dealers to step in and take possession of the radio business. With the New Dealers in control of the radio business radio would become the tool of one political faction to control the information received by the public and to develop and maintain a complete political dictatorship in this country.

If Republicans were in power and took any such move as that just taken by the New Dealers on the Commission, the country would not know there was a European war because of the noise the New Dealers would make in protesting a move to place dictatorial powers in the hands of one political group.

Two members of the Commission dissented from the order of the majority. Some of their comment is particularly interesting:

"On the whole, radio broadcasting has an excellent record of public service. * * * Radio is so constituted that it is sensitive to public criticism and responds promptly to changing public tastes. For this Commission or any agency of Government to attempt to substitute its judgment for that of the public involves an arrogant presumption which should be avoided at all costs. * * *

"It can be argued with logic that invasion of this economic field by the licensing authority in the absence of clear legal mandate would constitute an inevitable prelude to the second step of assuming the role of arbiter of public tastes.

"Circumstances may require the Federal Government to exercise broad powers in many fields of our economic life; but it is imperative that broadcasting be maintained as a free American institution."

The great American public will come to a realization of what dictatorship in their own country will mean if the Commission's order is permitted to stand.

Normally one would think that successful resort could be made in the matter to the Supreme Court which has heretofore ruled that the Federal Communications Commission had no authority to go beyond the allocation of mechanical facilities in the licensing of radio. But the Supreme Court is now controlled by new dealers who can write new edicts with startling ease.

If the people do not want their radio entertainment despoiled the people will probably have to look to Congress for protection against a dictatorship that is unquestionably scheming for complete political power.

If radio falls to the dictators, newspapers are next. If newspapers fall, the pulpits are next. If the pulpits fall, Hitler will envy our dictators.

Campaign Promises

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BERNARD J. GEHRMANN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, having received consent to extend my remarks by including therein quotations on the front page of the La Follette magazine now called the Progressive, reminding the President and the Republican standard bearer of their campaign promises made during the last campaign.

The more than 6,000 individuals who have written to me that they are opposed to becoming involved in this war are expecting that these sacred promises be kept. I still believe that the President is doing his best to keep his promise not to involve us in a foreign war in spite of the tremendous pressure exerted on him by his own Cabinet. I hope he keeps steadfast.

The article follows:

[From The Progressive, Madison, Wis., of May 17, 1941]

A MEMORANDUM

From: The people of the United States of America.

To: Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and Wendell L. Willkie, self-designated leader of the "loyal opposition."

Subject: The promises you made to the people of the United States when pleading for their votes last fall.

REMEMBER, MR. PRESIDENT?

"We are arming ourselves not for any purpose of conflict or intervention in foreign disputes. I repeat again that I stand on the platform of our party; we will not participate in foreign wars and will not send our Army, Naval, or Air Forces to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas except in case of attack."

"It is for peace that I have labored; and it is for peace that I shall labor all the days of my life" (Philadelphia, October 23, 1940).

"In 1935, in the face of growing dangers throughout the world, your Government undertook to eliminate the hazards which in the past had led to war. We made it clear that ships flying the American flag could not carry munitions to a belligerent; and that they must stay out of war zones" (New York City, October 28, 1940).

"We know that we are determined to defend our country, and with our neighbors to defend this hemisphere. We are strong in our defense. * * *

"The first purpose of our foreign policy is to keep our country out of war" (Cleveland, November 2, 1940).

"And while I am talking to you, fathers and mothers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before, but I shall say it again, and again, and again. Your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars.

"They are going into training to form a force so strong that, by its very existence, it will keep the threat of war far away from our shores. Yes, the purpose of our defense is defense" (Boston, October 30, 1940).

AND YOU, MR. WILLKIE?

"In protecting America, the maintenance of peace in the Western Hemisphere will be my objective. * * *

"The interests of the United States would have been better served if the third-term candidate had been outspokenly for peace and nonparticipation [earlier] instead of waiting to pledge it in an election" (Cumberland (Md.) October 30, 1940).

"One difference (between my foreign policy and that of the New Deal) is my determination to stay out of war. I have a real fear that this administration is heading for war, and I am against our going to war and will do all I can to avoid it" (Chicago, October 22, 1940).

"We do not want to send our boys over there again. * * * We cannot and we must not undertake to maintain by force of arms the peace of Europe" (St. Louis, October 17, 1940).

"I favor aid to Britain 'short of war' * * * and I mean 'short of war'" (Buffalo (N. Y.) October 15, 1940).

"We can have peace, but we must begin to preserve it. To begin with we shall not undertake to fight anybody else's wars. Our boys shall stay out of Europe. * * * None of us is so simple as to think that Hitler is planning this moment to send an expeditionary force across the Atlantic. * * * He is aware that if we make democracy strong here, his own system of blood and tyranny cannot survive forever" (Cambridge, Mass., October 11, 1940).

The American people expect you to keep faith.

Everyone Must Have His Part in Our Defense Effort

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

PETITION OF LOS ANGELES CHAPTER OF FORTY PLUS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, every person and group in America should have his place and his part in the economic life of America today. Otherwise our defense effort cannot be as strong or effective as it needs to be.

One group that concerns me particularly is the group 40 years of age and over. For years I have had a bill before the House to remove age restrictions as to Government employment. It has seemed to me the least we could do would be to set a good example for industry.

I am glad to include in the RECORD with my remarks the following petition in support of my bill:

FORTY PLUS OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
Los Angeles, April 15, 1941.

We, the undersigned members of the Los Angeles Chapter of Forty Plus, do hereby ask your support for H. R. 165.

We believe that a man's fitness for work, other than manual, cannot be reasonably measured by his age. For his experience is cumulative and as such is better at 50 or even 60 than at 30.

We therefore ask your earnest support in helping to enact this deserving legislation.

L. L. Moore, 12 South Granada Avenue, Alhambra, Calif.; I. G. Betz, 10980 Ohio Avenue, West Los Angeles; W. C. Jones, 1850 West Seventy-ninth Street, Los Angeles, Calif.; William L. Goff, 822 West Sixth, Los Angeles; Smedley Smith, 529 West Second, Los Angeles; T. H. Dukelow, 2225 Bellevue Avenue, Los Angeles; J. B. M. Wilcox, 1059 South Manhattan Place, Los Angeles; Russell Huffman, 939 South Figueroa Street, Los Angeles; G. W. Hoppe 831 East Hermosa Drive, San Gabriel; L. J. Benson, 1041 West Orange Grove Avenue; Louis B. Franc, 139 North Lapeer Drive, Beverly Hills; John L. Hunter, 924½ South Berendo, Los Angeles, Calif.; Fred H. Koch, 1516 North Hobart Boulevard, Los Angeles; J. M. Yeelding, 1672 South Ardmore Avenue, Los Angeles; G. E. Bacon, 317 North Avenue 50, Los Angeles; W. H Piggott, 839 South St. Andrews Place, Los Angeles; A. S. Wilcox, 1709 Hill Drive, Los Angeles; Ben H. Woodcock, 3835 West Eighth Street, Los Angeles; John G. Guffill, 454 West California, Pasadena; Milton C. Robinson, 916 West Olympic Boulevard, Los Angeles, Calif.; C. L. Johnson, 1740 North Gramercy Place, Los Angeles, Calif; H. Dyock, 916 South Lake, Los Angeles, Calif.; A. E. Herman, 2221 Duane Street, Los Angeles, Calif.; M. L. Henney, 1122 Pointview Street, Los Angeles, Calif.; R. E. Tuttle, 806 West Fortieth Place, Los Angeles, Calif.; F. F. Downs, 2880 San Rafael Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif.; H. M. Kurtzworth, 810 South Lucerne Boulevard, Los Angeles, Calif.; V. E. Nelson, 270 South Bonnie Brae Street; John Bridges, 317 South Olive, Los Angeles; Calif.; H. C. McVeigh, 1349 Linden Avenue, Glendale, Calif.; Lester Bernstein, 6253 Commodore Float Drive, Los Angeles, Calif.; L. A. Rosenfield, 813 South Stanley Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif.; G. R. Johnston, 4522 South Budlong Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif.; W. E. Hart, 630 West Fourth Street, Los Angeles, Calif.; C. S. Turner, 321 Rosemont Boulevard, San Gabriel, Calif.; Basil E. Fennanstruther, 1202 Roxbury Drive, Los Angeles, Calif.; Manley S. Ross, 4533½ Ambrose Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif.; Carl B. Dunster, 8518 Saturn Street, Los Angeles, Calif.; Reuben C. Davis, 243 South Manhattan Place; C. E. Cunningham, 6508 Seville, Huntington Park, Calif.; Charles S. Webb, 1421 Ocean Front, Santa Monica, Calif.; M. D. Woolery, 222 South Orange Drive, Los Angeles, Calif.; H. H. Harwood, 1119 South Doheny Drive, Los Angeles, Calif.

W. P. A. Appropriations for Next Fiscal Year

REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM A. PITTENGER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations is starting hearings today on the relief bill that has to do with W. P. A. appropriations. I think these hearings are tremendously important to those sections of our country that have not benefited by national-defense contracts.

In the district I represent there is still an acute unemployment situation. Some people have been taken off the W. P. A. rolls and other people who have been certified by the welfare agencies have taken their places. The W. P. A. is still continuing to do a worth-while work in my section.

I note in today's newspapers that the President has submitted a recommendation for what I consider a rather excessive cut in W. P. A. appropriations. The more you cut them the more people are going to be forced on relief when they are taken off W. P. A. projects.

Mr. Speaker, I want to urge ample appropriation of funds for continuance of the W. P. A. program. There is a lot of loose talk to the effect that jobs have been created under the national-defense program and, therefore, the unemployment problem is taking care of itself. Such is not the case. In Minnesota, for example, where no national-defense industries have been located, we still have an unemployment situation which is just as acute as ever. I recently conferred with State Administrator S. L. Stolte, who advised me that while some W. P. A. workers have been taken from the rolls and have found jobs elsewhere, their places have promptly been taken by people on relief who have been certified by the local county agencies. In other words, there has been a waiting list, and where there have been people who have left W. P. A. employment, others on relief have promptly taken their places.

Northern Minnesota, for example, and this includes the city of Duluth, Minn., has shown no industrial recovery because, as I have pointed out, no national-defense industries have been located in our section. I understand that the same situation prevails in other parts of Minnesota. The need for W. P. A. projects in that section of my district known as the Iron Range will become all the more necessary because the State legislature recently reduced the amount of taxes which local municipalities may levy. This will prevent these municipalities from carrying out their present policy of furnishing employment to many people in the various places affected.

I realize that in some sections of the country where national-defense industries have been located, there is less demand for work for the unemployed, because these industries are furnishing jobs to people in their particular localities. I respectfully suggest that the W. P. A. authorities should be given discretion in connection with these matters so that they may discontinue projects in sections of the country where they are not needed and, if necessary, increase projects in other sections which are not sharing in the location of national-defense industries.

Today's newspapers carry a story which indicates a substantial cut has been recommended by President Roosevelt. In my opinion, this cut will work a hardship. If a reduction in W. P. A. employees in the State of Minnesota is required, these people who are taken off the list will be forced back on county relief.

I also suggest to your committee that the requirement that the sponsor furnish a portion of the funds required for the project be discontinued. In some communities, the sponsor is not financially able to furnish funds.

I am glad to note that President Roosevelt has changed his attitude on the law which requires people on W. P. A. rolls to be laid off after they have worked 18 months. This requirement should be discontinued.

The newspaper article also indicates that there should be a suspension of the present restrictions which prohibit aliens the right of employment on relief projects. I hope this recommendation will be adopted, because if law-abiding aliens who are not able to find work are barred from W. P. A. projects, they and their families will be forced on relief and will increase the burdens and the problems of the various local communities.

In my conference with Mr. Stolte the other day, he pointed out that a large number of people employed on W. P. A. projects in Minnesota are people whose age seems to bar them from securing employment in private industry. In other words, the employers today do not want middle-aged persons or aged persons and a reduction in the number of persons permitted to be employed on W. P. A. works a great hardship on a class of people who are absolutely not able to go out and secure jobs. The same remarks are in point in connection with many disabled World War veterans who have a slight disability which may disqualify them for private employment. I have a letter on my desk from a man 64 years of age and he points out that unless he can continue on W. P. A., on account of his age, he will be forced back on relief. Many communities find it difficult, if not impossible, to carry these relief loads.

I feel very strongly that a relief program should carry with it an appropriation sufficient to enable the various State administrators, under direction of Washington officials, to function efficiently and to carry out the purposes for which this program is enacted.

Let me repeat that the officials in charge should be permitted to use their best judgment in the matter of decreasing projects where national-defense industries are located and, if necessary, furnish more funds to those localities and those communities which are suffering because they have been overlooked in the location of war industries in their areas.

Mr. Speaker, during past sessions of Congress, there has been a great deal of talk about inefficiency and waste of public funds in connection with W. P. A. projects. I am just as violently opposed to those things as any Member of Congress. I have repeatedly said that I believed that public funds should be expended so that the taxpayers get a dollar's worth of value for every dollar that is paid out.

I have consistently taken the position that so long as the Federal Government was going to continue its relief policy, and I refer now to the Work Projects Administration, that the Government should do this until such time as private industry can furnish employment for those men and women who want to work, and who are unable to find jobs.

I have become familiar with the Work Projects Administration program in northern Minnesota. There was a time when I felt that political considerations and other developments shaped the policy in that section. I want to say to the committee, however, that since the appointment of A. T. Gilbertson about 3 years ago in 1937, as district manager, conditions have steadily improved, and I can say without any qualifications whatever that the work carried on in my section is worth while, and that Mr. Gilbertson handles the situation free from politics and with only one object, namely, to provide jobs for people who have been referred to his office as being eligible for certification for work.

I am not giving any second-hand information, because I personally inspected many of these projects and know that high standards of work prevail, and that the projects have been worth while to the various communities affected.

Northeastern Minnesota has had a very acute unemployment problem, and through the agency of the Work Projects Administration, people unable to find any employment anywhere, have been given work. Many factors have contributed to the unemployment situation in my locality. Labor-saving machinery has replaced hundreds of men in the iron-range section where a major portion of the iron ore is dug out of the earth and then shipped down the Lakes to the eastern steel plants. In the past, lumbering was a major industry in my locality. It furnished employment for thousands of people. We no longer have that industry because the timber has been cut and we now have what is known as the cut-over areas which are nonproductive.

I know that an immense amount of good has been done by the W. P. A. in helping the communities solve these problems. Without enumerating all of the localities, I have in mind Gilbert, Minn.; Biwabik, Minn.; Aurora, Minn.; Keewatin, Minn.; Nashwauk, Minn.; Buhl, Minn.; Mountain Iron, Minn.; Kinney, Minn.; McKinley, Minn.; Chisholm, Minn.; together with other Iron Range cities. But for the program carried on by Mr. Gilbertson in these localities, there would have been very little work for the large number of unemployed persons. The records will show that I have supported the appropriation bills which provided funds for numerous projects, not only in these communities, but all over the northeastern section of our State.

In connection with this program, it may be of interest to the committee to know that many World War veterans are being employed in the various types of W. P. A. activities. In my particular district, approximately 800 such veterans are on the W. P. A. rolls, of which 600 are in St. Louis County. Many of these veterans have a disability, and the records show that veterans' needs are increasing, and on account of their age and disability, are not being absorbed by private industry. As of April 1, 1941, in the district, approximately 6,000 W. P. A. workers are being employed in all types of W. P. A. work, St. Louis County, the largest county in my district, carrying a work load of approximately 4,500. Included in the 4,500 W. P. A. workers of St. Louis County are approximately 1,000 white collar workers, given employment in the professional and service programs, which consist of sewing projects, school lunch, housekeeping aids, health and hospital service, recreation, library service, music, art, writers' projects, research and records. National defense is foremost in our minds. We should not forget the plight of these unfortunate people as our second line of defense in the preservation of our way of life with the moral and physical fitness and the social well-being of all the people, army personnel and civilians alike. These needs must be met for a strong line of defense until such time as private industry absorbs this long list of professional workers.

Time will not permit me to discuss all of the accomplishments of the type of program that is being carried on in the district. I would briefly outline the program of the professional-service division in St. Louis County as follows:

First, there is the sewing project, employing some 300 women, producing some 9,000 garments monthly. The county welfare board distributes this clothing to needy families.

Then there are the nursery schools, employing 26 teachers and cooks. These schools have an attendance of 3,000 children, and these children are furnished with hot lunches at noon. They come from relief families that are in straitened circumstances and are nearly all families who are on county relief. I might also refer to the part of this project which furnishes school lunches and which employs 54 persons and which served an average of 36,000 meals per month. This project is handled in such a way that the school authorities determine what children should be covered by the program. My information is that these school lunches are a valuable factor in the problem of proper nourishment for many children.

Another feature of the Work Projects Administration program in northern Minnesota has to do with the research workers. These employees are the so-called white-collar workers, people who have held office positions and due to reorganization and curtailment by industry, after many years of service have found themselves in the unemployed list.

We could discuss with you a great many more projects, but the ones I have pointed out are typical.

I am, of course, greatly concerned about the policy with reference to the next fiscal year, which begins July 1, 1941, and runs until July 1, 1942. Unless the Work Projects Administration is furnished with sufficient funds, all of these worth-while projects will have to be curtailed or discontinued and the unemployment situation will correspondingly become more acute. Many localities are already finding it difficult, if not impossible, to furnish the 25-percent sponsor's share and, in my opinion, this requirement should be eliminated in the next bill. It is my opinion that the officials of the Work Projects Administration should be left with discretion to determine what projects should furnish a sponsor's share of the funds and in what amount. As I have indicated, some sponsors will be unable to contribute anything at all and yet they may have a great need for W. P. A. work.

The question of reforestation—namely, the planting of trees in cut-over areas—is an important one and is a program which could furnish employment for an unlimited number of unemployed men. I mention this in order to show that W. P. A. funds, if expended in this direction, would not only not be wasted but would be contributing something of lasting value to the communities.

There is also another phase of W. P. A. work which becomes increasingly important in connection with the national-defense program. I refer now to the fact that the W. P. A. officials are conducting trade-school courses for mechanics and others with mechanical aptitude. All of these persons will be needed in national-defense industries just as fast as they can be trained. This part of the program should be expanded, and I mention it to show the need for adequate appropriations at this time. Let me say to the committee that the making of war materials and the building of plants has, of course, absorbed some W. P. A. workers, but there is still a large number who are dependent on a work-relief program. As I have indicated, in northern Minnesota alone, there are some 6,000 people employed on W. P. A. who have not been used on any national-defense work. Unless this relief program is continued, these people will be unemployed and we will face the same old problem of creating jobs until such times as private industry can take care of the situation.

I am sure that the members of the committee want to do the proper thing by the unemployed, and for that reason will not force curtailments which will result in hardship in the various communities affected.

I want to conclude my statement by saying that in Minnesota we have an efficient management, free from politics, and that if there are any other States in a different category it is my opinion that the W. P. A. officials will not tolerate any program of waste or favoritism.

Address to Graduating Class, Austin Peay Normal College, Clarksville, Tenn., May 16, 1941

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFFORD DAVIS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. WIRT COURTNEY, OF TENNESSEE

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address made by my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COURTNEY], at Clarksville, Tenn.:

I greatly appreciate the opportunity of speaking to this splendid class, graduating from this great school that has done and is doing so much for this section of our State, a school that proudly bears the name of one of our greatest Tennesseans, who wrought so well for his State even to a sacrifice of his own health and life.

When I realize the influence you 90 young men and women will wield in your communities in your day and generation, an influence that through others that you reach and others that they reach in turn, will go on through endless years, I feel that I am totally unworthy of addressing you on this occasion.

At the risk of sacrificing unity and coherence in the few words that I intend to say, I thought I might first discuss the national and international situation existing today and the troublous times into which you are moving with your graduation, and then perhaps make a few suggestions, if I am worthy of doing so, that might be of some benefit in your own personal lives.

America is shocked and horrow-stricken at the brutal, total war now raging over half the world, taking the toll of thousands of lives and untold wealth in property every day. But would it be treason for me to say that in my opinion the American people, or rather the isolationists and partisans among us in the two most critical periods in our Nation's history cannot escape considerable responsibility for the conflagration raging today?

The seeds of this World War were sown in the peace terms of the last, and in the failure of the nations involved to listen to Wilson, our inspired leader of that era. As an overseas soldier in the last war I was on detached service in Paris during the last peace conference as Wilson urged other leaders to agree to a just and generous peace term and to the organization of a strong, effective League of Nations with America lending her great weight and prestige thereto. I saw him from the street from time to time as he moved from group to group assembled there, his face shining with the high ideals and noble purpose of writing the sacrifice of the dead into a just peace and an effective covenant that would bring a new era in world history.

And then I saw him a few months later in Washington after the world leaders had selfishly refused to heed his advice on peace terms and after the repudiation of his league plan by the isolationists and partisans of his day. And what a pitiable spectacle of a man he was in those last days, broken with the realization that his dead had died in vain, walking with shuffling step and drooling mouth toward his grave.

I remember seeing a cartoon by Carey Orr the day after Wilson died. It was called The Chief Joins His Legions, and it represented Wilson entering the spirit world, and there drawn up in review to meet him, were all the hosts of American dead, their poor skeletons of bodies standing erect and at attention. One spectral figure blew upon the bugle, another raised the colors for the dead commander in chief whose dream had come to naught, who was taking over command of his legion of dead whose deaths had come to naught. It was in the repudiation of Wilson and his ideals by Europe and the American Senate that the seeds of the present war were sown and began that moment to bulge and burst toward future fruition.

The second indictment that I level at our isolationists and partisans is at those of this day and generation in their refusal to permit the repeal of our Arms Embargo Act before Hitler started upon his mad drive toward world domination by actual armed force. Up until the time of Hitler's move on Poland and a little later, we had upon our statute books a law that prohibited our selling any war materials to any belligerent nations. An effort was made to repeal that law at the first session of the seventy-sixth Congress. The partisan isolationists defeated that attempt. Their argument was that it was inhuman in time of war to sell to any nation arms for the destruction of human lives. The idea advanced was unsound. Sometimes it is the humane thing to do, especially when arms and munitions have been acquired by one nation in great quantities in preparation for war against another as it went its peaceful way. As someone said at the time, is it humane to sharpen the fangs of the wolf before the attack and then deny succor to the lamb in which it sinks its teeth? Hitler had been preparing for war for 10 years or more. He had purchased some munitions from us. He had taken over the entire armed establishments of what had been Austria and Czechoslovakia and with our failure at that session to repeal the arms embargo, he knew that England and France, largely unprepared in their pursuit of peace and happiness in the years past, could not under the law then existing purchase from us a single defensive gun, a single round of ammunition, a single plane or tank; and so he struck. I may be wrong but I believe that had we been permitted at that session of the Congress to repeal the arms embargo, Hitler would not have sent his mechanized units into action and Poland would be free today along with the other dozen or more countries upon which he has set the iron boot of oppression and we would never have been called on to make the tremendous sacrifices that we now are making in an effort to save the democracies of the world as they make their last stand for freedom.

Finally, however, after Hitler's conquest started, the arms embargo was repealed, and in the present session the lend-lease bill and companion legislation have come into law and we are now coming to the rescue of the oppressed countries with every aid short of war and have recently voted $7,000,000,000 to that end. That amount seems by usual estimate to be a staggering sum of money, but when measured by results to be obtained, objectives to be reached, and ideals to be preserved, it may be trifling, almost insignificant. Is it too much to expend that democracies may survive in the world? Is it too much to offer that men everywhere may worship as their hearts and consciences dictate and demand? Is it too much to set apart to guarantee that in saving England, war shall be kept from our shores?

As we speak here today China, ill-clad, starving, its Government poor and impoverished in arms and munitions, is in its fourth year of heroic resistance to the cruelty and despotism of Japan, mighty in all materials of war.

Greece, without preparation and with little material, imposed the naked breasts and hearts of her soldiers to the modern war machines of Italy and Germany, with a stoic bravery that is worthy of the traditions of Thermopylae, and retains all her honor and glory even in her defeat.

Great Britain, our motherland, the ancient seat of democracy and the mother of parliaments, stands firm, undaunted, and unafraid amidst hail of bombs and sheets of raging fires, and as her people clean the debris of shattered homes, churches, and hospitals, bury their dead women and children, all of them from the highest lord to the humblest menial, have their wills and purposes only strengthened to carry on to a day of victory and peace when dictatorship will be dead forever and their leaders brought to bar for their unspeakable crimes.

As we think of these suffering people, our common stake with them and the defense they are waging for us as well, I say that $7,000,000,000 and twice $7,000,000,000, if necessary, is not too much to wager on their success. One of England's young poets who lost his life in the last war left this epitaph:

"If I should die, think only this of me;
That there's some corner of a foreign field
That is forever England. There shall be
In that rich earth a richer dust concealed;
A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware,
Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam,
A body of England's, breathing English air,
Washed by the rivers, blest by suns of home.

"And think, this heart, all evil shed away,
A pulse in the eternal mind, no less
Gives somewhere back the thoughts by England given;
Her sights and sounds; dreams happy as her day;
And laughter, learnt of friends; and gentleness,
In hearts at peace, under an English heaven."

Such a country, inspiring such sentiments, must not be destroyed. There must always be an England and that is why the vast supplies that we are turning out today in England's aid must be made available in ever-growing quantities and their delivery insured if necessary by convoy.

But now let us forego further discussion of world problems. This is your graduation day and one of the big days of your life and you will long remember what is said on this occasion. I would like to make some suggestions that may be helpful to each of you personally as you leave your beloved campus and go out into these bitter and desperate days now confronting all of us. I am not going to stand on a pedestal and talk down to you because I have never accomplished anything in life that would warrant it. God knows and I know how far I have missed the mark that I set for myself so many years ago when I sat on a graduation platform as you do today. I well remember the dreams and visions I had that day of my future and I know how far these dreams and visions have failed me or how far I have failed them—dreams and visions that like snow upon the desert's dusty face, lighted a little hour or so and were gone. But in my half century or more of life I have known some great men and women, great in their homes, great in their communities and great in their State and Nation. I have sought to analyze the reason for this greatness and I think I have found it. The essential feature of the character of all these great men and women that I have known is expressed by what I think is the simplest and most beautiful word in our language and that word is "faith." I do not use it in its restricted sense but rather in a fourfold sense implying first: Faith in God; second, faith in self; third, faith in one's fellow man, and fourth, faith in country.

You know as we leave college we are smarter than we ever will be again. I know I was and about that time in my life I had been reading a lot of Bob Ingersoll, Paine, and Elbert Hubbard, who was something of a rage in my young days. I was halfway beginning to say that Christianity was a myth and that the religion I had been brought up in was for children and old folks. One day while in that frame of mind I dropped into a second-hand bookstore in Nashville and was browsing about as was my custom. I ran across a little volume of some 30 pages. I do not remember the name of the author. I purchased the book but it has long since been misplaced. I do not need it for every word of that little book is as much a part of me as my senses. It was called My Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. The author recounted among other things that his subject had spent his whole life except for a few weeks in Egypt in infancy, in the little country of Palestine, much smaller than the State of Tennessee.

His father was only a carpenter at Nazareth. He had no training nor education. He went mostly among the common people, ate with the publicans and sinners, and dwelt among the humble. In material possessions He was poorer than the birds and foxes, for they had nests and holes, but He had no place to lay His head. When He died His sole possession was a single, seamless garment and yet while time in its inexorable processes has piled 2,000 years between His day and this and covered with the dust of oblivion others who have lived during these years, His name has only been emblazoned: His cause has only been glorified.

He was not a physician and had no knowledge of disease and medicine, yet He cured the sick, made the maimed whole, the halt to leap, the blind to see, and the dead to rise and walk, and while physically absent he no longer performs these miracles among us, to those of His faith come the memory of Gethsemane and Golgotha of that mysterious struggle beneath the olive trees with its sweat of blood, with its final consecration and death agony on Calvary and as His followers remember He still miraculously gives them the strength to endure the pain and bear the toil until life's measures shall be filled.

He was not an author, for He wrote, so far as we know, no word in all His life other than a single line, and that was written in the dust of the ground and disappeared in the hour of its writing. Yet the successful author of this day and time, if his work is of unusual merit, may reach a circulation of half a million copies and have a translation into two or three languages beside his own. Yet the Gospel telling of this man who wrote no line himself had been translated into more than 500 tongues, languages, and dialects. It has reached more editions than can be numbered, increasing its circulation year by year to more than 25,000,000 copies last year.

He was not an artist; He never painted a picture nor carved a statue in all His life, but the fairest images of the human brain ever thrown upon canvas or transformed into enduring marble had Him for their subject.

He was not an architect, not even a builder; only a Galilean carpenter, the maker of wooden plows. Yet the world has been filled in these years with the stateliest buildings, temples, cathedrals, and churches all devoted to His worship. Though not an architect, He has become, in fact, the Master Builder of all ages.

He was not a poet and not a musician. But since His death He has inspired the world's greatest poetry and music. But for Him the genius of Mozart, Schubert, and Mendelssohn would have remained dumb and Milton, Pope, Dante, and Browning would have found no voice. Inspired by Him, there have been woven into the warp and woof of our lives such great Christian hymns as Nearer My God To Thee, Nearer To Thee; Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me, Let Me Hide Myself in Thee; Jesus, Lover of My Soul, Let Me To Thy Bosom Fly.

To this music inspired by Him we bury our dead and, leaving them, are satisfied. When one contemplates these marvelous things he can but fall upon his knees, all callow doubts disappearing forever, and say, "My Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, Thou art my Shepherd, I shall not want."

But faith in God is not enough. Many a beggar that you see upon the streets, catching his alms from the passerby, has faith in God perhaps. Many whining, spineless creatures, miserable failures waiting for the tide returning hoarse to sweep them from our sight, have faith in God perhaps. One must have faith, too, in himself.

Many of you read in the papers recently of the death of a dishwasher in New York City. For 2 years or more he had plied his menial trade in the kitchen of a Broadway restaurant. If he had ever eaten of the choice food served beyond the swinging doors or had ever been charmed by such soft music as those who sat and listened, he gave no sign, but continued at his menial trade. One night as he climbed the rickety stairs to his humble room his landlady thought that his step faltered a bit. When he did not come down the next morning at his accustomed time his landlady went to investigate and found him dead in bed. When the coroner came and examined his effects, to the astonishment of all, this dishwasher proved to be a former great surgeon of one of our Middle Western States. What had happened, one day a friend had brought to his clinic his little child for an operation. Just that one time his strong fingers failed and some artery was severed or some vital spot was touched beyond repair and he could only stand by and see this little child die before his eyes. That, coupled, perhaps, with the strain of many years, made something snap inside and he lost all faith in himself. He closed his office and disappeared into the flotsam and jetsam of New York City, because he had lost that necessary quality for success.

Had I the time, innumerable examples of just this type could be quoted.

And then there is the third kind of faith that is essential to a happy and successful life and that is faith in one's fellow man. Christ Himself is our authority for that. You remember back there just before the time of the crucifixion when the Pharisees and Sadducees and the Herodians were seeking to confound Him, one of the scribes, thinking to perplex Him, said, "Master, what is the greatest commandment in the law?" He quickly answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, and with all thy soul. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

A great novelist tells the story utterly true to life of a man so steeped in crime of every description that any redemption seemed impossible. He even broke into a church, stealing the holy vessels. The old priest happened to see him, but instead of calling the gendarmes he came up to him, put his arm about him, gave him another piece of silver that the thief had overlooked, and said: "Take this, too, my son; you perhaps need them more than we do, but remember this, wherever you go and whatever you do you have my love, and you leave here with my abiding faith in you." The criminal went his way and sought from time to time to ply his old trade. But in each instance there came to him the kind face of the old priest and his love for and faith in him. With that before him he could commit no crime and under that influence he became one of the noblest characters in fiction.

While this is a story, as I said, it is true to life and if time permitted, innumerable examples could be set out, but this suffices to paint the picture.

Finally, all the great men and women that I have known had in their hearts a burning faith in and love for their country and that is more necessary now than ever before. We must view afresh its jewels of free speech, free press, freedom of assembly, and freedom of religion, which we have had these 150 years but which are fast disappearing from the rest of the earth. In these critical times it is more necessary than ever to hold with faith and determination to the American way of life and to the ideals of government that we have followed through all these years.

And so, in conclusion, as you leave here today, if I could write in the new, clean Book of Life that opens for each of you, on the first page I would set down the admonition to hold fast to religion and your faith in God. And under that I would write the lines of the Psalm, beginning: "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want."

On the next page I would write down an admonition to have faith in yourself, and under that I would write such lines as these:

"Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever Gods there be
For my unconquerable soul.

"It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul."

And to that I would add:

"If I had youth I'd bid the world to try me,
I'd answer every challenge to my skill;
Though mountains stood in silence to defy me,
I'd try to make them subject to my will."

And on the next page I would write an admonition to have faith in your fellow man and under that I would add some such lines as these:

"I would not sit in the scorner's seat
Nor hurl the cynic's ban
Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

"I know there are brook gladdened meadows ahead
And mountains of wearisome height
That the road stretches on through the long afternoon
And passes away to the night.

"But still I rejoice when the strangers rejoice
And weep with the strangers that mourn
Nor live in my house by the side of the road
As one who lives alone.

"I would not sit in the scorner's seat
Nor hurl the cynic's ban
Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man."

And lastly I would write on the next page the admonition to retain always a burning faith in your country and her way of life, and under that I would write—

"Breathes there the man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burn'd
As home his footsteps he hath turned
From wandering on a foreign strand?
If such there breathe, go, mark him well!
For him no minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim—
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch, concentred all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust from whence he sprung
Unwept, unhonor'd, and unsung."

And so with the sincere hope that each of you will in the years to come find the sunkist heights on which your ambitious eyes are fixed today and with my sincere congratulations upon your successful completion of your hard labors in this institution, I say to you this morning: Hail, farewell, and Godspeed.

Award of Medal to Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt

REMARKS

OF

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, last Friday evening at the White House, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt presented a gold medal, an achievement-award medal, to Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, the much beloved and outstanding champion of peace and woman's rights. Mrs. Catt is so well known to you all that I do not have to identify her or speak of her long, brave fight for the cause of women, of her arduous, unselfish toil in the interests of universal peace. Her record and achievements speak louder and clearer than any words I might utter. It is eminently fitting that the words Mrs. Catt spoke in accepting the medal should become a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Every one of us who heard them was impressed with the extreme modesty, the clear reasoning, and the interesting manner in which she presented the history of woman's fight for equality. The remarks follow:

To receive a gold medal, be it deserved or undeserved, is a happy, outstanding incident in any life. When it happens in a world where every outlook is dark and forbidding, but is presented by the First Lady of all the First Ladies of the land for 150 years, it becomes an outburst of blue sky with a big, bright star of hope sparkling in it.

Should one paint a picture, write a book, or produce an invention of superlative quality, it might be an achievement worthy of a gold medal, but I have achieved nothing personally. I have been only a single unit in an army which numbered over 2,000,000 at the end and was a mere handful at the beginning. That army marched ceaselessly, tirelessly onward without an armistice or a vacation for five straight generations of 33 years each. Those of us who witnessed the final victory never saw any of those who proposed the program and carried it forward in the first 2 generations and only a few of those in the third. I accept this medal, therefore, not for myself, but for the woman movement, which, altogether, won the achievement of the liberties and privileges that women enjoy in our land today.

I thank you, Mrs. Roosevelt, for your friendly presentation, for the hospitality of the White House, but more than all else for having been a loyal member of our army. I thank the achievement award committee for its great kindness and the generous gift, and I thank the sympathetic friends for having gathered here tonight. I especially thank Prof. T. V. Smith, advocate of logic and liberty, for having honored this occasion by his presence and helped us all by his stimulating words.

The woman movement never began; it always existed. Every race has claimed superiority over all others, every nation has boasted its right of supremacy over others, and centuries before Blackstone men set up the rule that "husband and wife are one and that one is me." More, each upholder of supremacy, be it race, nation, or sex, based its claim upon divine authority. Thousands of years ago women rebelled against the denial of rights, privileges, and freedoms to half the human race by the other half.

Before Christ, Cato, the Elder, made an immortal speech to women who came to plead for liberty so similar to some I have heard upon the Hill that I have been tempted to think of plagiarism. Through the centuries the protests of women every now and then burst forth into group action which became noticeable woman movements. The most momentous of these took place in the Middle Ages, and was drawing to a close when Isabella financed the discovery of America. There were women professors in the faculties of universities in Italy, France, and Spain. There were medical schools where women studied and women doctors practiced in all of these countries. Modern science is scornful of European medicine at this date, but, at least, it is reported that women doctors lost no more patients than did men. Women lawyers appeared also. Schools for girls became common in connection with convents built and supported by women, and many led by Mother Superiors of rare gifts.

Alas, while all was going well, the faculty of the University of Bologna issued a decree in 1377, beginning with: "Whereas woman is the foundation of sin, the weapon of the devil, the cause of man's banishment from Paradise * * * the university shall be closed to them." In a short time every university in the world had shut women out and from that time, 1377 to 1833, 456 years later, when the new College of Oberlin admitted women, not a university in the wide, wide world was open to women students. Even Oberlin was not particularly liberal, for when Lucy Stone graduated there in 1847 it was explained to her that a professor would read her essay, as it was unseemly for a young woman to appear upon the platform and read before men. With a chip on her shoulder from the Middle Ages, this young girl, with a voice like a golden flute, quietly replied, "Very well, sir. I will not write it."

Nor was the movement in Italy ever entirely suppressed, for on the great door of the University of Bologna is still inscribed, I am assured, the epitaph of Clotilde Tambroni, the most renowned Greek scholar in Italy at the time and a professor at that university. At Padua, too, the statue of Elena Cornario, professor of six languages in that university, stands upon the great stairway.

The woman movement moved from Italy to southern France and Spain and then to northern France and England.

After the American and French Revolutions, which had generated much discussion upon the rights of man, and, incidentally, the rights of woman, the last lap of the woman movement we know best began. It was preceded by much talk and considerable writing, but very properly it may be said to have actually begun with Mary Wollstonecraft's Vindication of the Rights of Woman, published in 1792. It was a highly moral and well-reasoned book, which all would pronounce conservative today. It was printed and reprinted again and again in England and America and translated into many foreign languages. Mary Wollstonecraft died at the age of 36, but her book became the primer of the woman movement the world around. Henry Walpole, noted writer, pronounced Mary Wollstonecraft a "she-hyena." There were no hyenas in England or America, but that title followed the movement and few women who supported the new program escaped that appellation. Its last use took place in 1894 and was applied by a Kansas newspaper to Anna Howard Shaw, the greatest orator the woman movement ever produced. It served the purpose of vilification for 102 years.

The second generation began in 1825 without a college or a high school, so far as we know, open to girls. By way of illustration, in most churches men sat on one side and women on the other in order, so an observer still living assures me, that men (I quote): "Might not be contaminated by the sinful presence of Eve's daughters." By law, no married woman, anywhere, could collect or use her wages or control her property. Yet things were happening. You all know the story of the First World's Anti-Slavery Convention in London which refused admission to 8 American woman delegates, duly elected, and condemned them to a gallery to sit behind a curtain. Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton made a resolution, supported by most if not all of the 8 disappointed delegates that when they returned to the United States they would hold the First Woman's Convention and determine a policy concerning the proper status of women. This they did at Seneca Falls, N. Y., in June 1848. They presented a declaration of 18 grievances which was adopted with a resolution to demand a repeal. This declaration became, in principle, the platform of the modern movement the world around. English women followed at once with organization and program.

Civil and social rights and education were the chief aims in the third generation beginning in 1858. Property rights for married women were granted in 8 States in the fifties, 10 States in the sixties, and 16 States in the seventies.

The most difficult law to change was the right of the married woman to collect her own wages. Five States granted it in the sixties, 15 States granted it in the seventies, and 12 States granted it in the eighties, and the left-behinds in the nineties. Yet there are places in the United States where, even now, this right is denied.

The Negro question plunged the Nation into a civil war and emerged in a reconstruction period which closed with the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments that enfranchised the Negro and were ratified in 1868 and 1870. For the first time, these amendments put the word "male" into the Constitution. The movement, called the Woman's Rights Movement, up to that date, promptly changed its name to Woman Suffrage Association and the remainder of the campaign emphasized, above all else, the winning of the vote.

I once, by request, wrote a paragraph and it consumed a week to find the facts. I have, on that account, regarded it as very precious, so I quote it now. "To get the effect of the word 'male' out of the Constitution cost the women of the country 52 years of ceaseless campaigning. During that time, they were forced to conduct 56 campaigns of referenda to male voters, 480 campaigns to persuade legislatures to submit suffrage amendments to voters, 47 campaigns to persuade State constitutional conventions to write "woman suffrage" into State constitutions, 277 campaigns to get State party conventions to include woman suffrage planks, 30 campaigns to get Presidential party conventions to adopt woman suffrage planks in party platforms, and 19 campaigns with 19 successive Congresses. In each of these campaigns, from 5 to 100 women were employed and thousands in all referenda campaigns. Hundreds of women gave the accumulated possibilities of an entire lifetime, thousands gave years of their lives, hundreds of thousands gave constant interest and such aid as they could. It was a continuous, seemingly endless chain of activity." Nor did any one of us receive a salary or an expense account. We did what we could and the rest went undone. What a waste of time and effort does senseless resistance to good causes drive us?

In the 72 years in which women devoted themselves to winning the vote, there were six crises, after each one of which the movement increased its speed onward.

In 1869, 21 years after the beginning, the Territory of Wyoming gave the vote to women and stood ever after like the Rock of Gibralter. That was crisis No. 1. It would have been clear to any observer that the time would come when a State, by referendum, would grant the vote to women. It would necessarily be a Western State and one of small population. Forty-five years after that observation might have been made, it happened. The State was Colorado and the year 1893. One brave soul of that campaign committee is here tonight. Allow me to present her, Mrs. Ellis Meredith. [Mrs. Meredith, 3 minutes.]

Colorado was in a state of continuous warfare ever after. The opposition concluded that proof of success in Wyoming and Colorado would be the strongest possible argument for woman suffrage in the Nation, and it determined to prove the experiment a failure. The number of books, pamphlets, and editorials that were poured out from Colorado in answer to the charges made was amazing; and the struggle, beyond any other in the entire movement went on continuously for 14 years before another State granted the vote by referendum and crisis No. 2 was passed.

In 1893, a lawyer gave evidence that women might gain the right to vote for President by legislative enactment of the States. Twenty years thereafter, the women lawyers of Chicago planned a new kind of bill which included Presidential suffrage, municipal suffrage, and all kinds not mentioned in the Constitution, which would have meant a referendum. Then they searched far and wide for the best-equipped woman to take charge of the bill. May I introduce that woman, Mrs. Sherman Booth. [Mrs. Booth, 3 minutes.]

The next year an election in Chicago brought out upward of 200,000 women voters, and the newspapers said that the suffrage sentiment in the Nation had suddenly increased by 100 percent. The third crisis was passed with a boom.

We had hoped for a State of large population which would grant the vote by referendum. After a continuous campaign of 4 years and two elections, New York presented the vote to its women by a majority of 102,000. Six thousand three hundred women served on duty at the election booths on election day. About $1,000,000 had been spent in the long campaign. Women had asked the voters to give them a vote by a petition signed by 1,030,000 women. It was the largest, the liveliest, and the most varied campaign for woman suffrage ever had in any land. Mrs. Whitehouse was the able chairman. May I present her to you? [Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, 3 minutes.]

Thus the fourth crisis was passed and the New York delegation went to Washington to vote almost solidly for the Federal amendment.

Fifteen States had enfranchised women by State action and 15 other States had granted Presidential suffrage, following the Illinois law or a primary suffrage amendment with the same effect, before 1919. Thus two-thirds of the total electoral vote now contained women voters and Congress promptly surrendered and submitted the Federal amendment. It would not have done this had there not been a wise guide at the helm. That guide was Mrs. Maud Wood Park who would have been with us tonight had not a slight illness overtaken her. Her wisdom, devotion, and never failing intelligence to seize every opportunity to advance her cause led to the final triumph. Thus the fifth crisis had passed, but it came with the risk of what might happen to ratification.

The thirty-sixth State to ratify was Tennessee, and all the hopes of the suffragists and all the indecencies of the opposition centered on that State. If Tennessee should fail us some women in the Nation would not be able to vote for President in 1920, but in the constituency of two-thirds of the electoral vote women could vote for President whatever happened. This was the situation which made political parties nervous and anxious. For 72 years the political parties had humiliated women and now the tease was reversed. One of the efficient leaders in the Tennessee campaign is a member of the board of the National American Woman Suffrage Association. May I present her to you—Mrs. Guilford Dudley. [Mrs. Guilford Dudley, 3 minutes.] Thus the sixth crisis was passed and the vote was won.

For 150 years women had given the best that was in them to secure for themselves education, opportunity, liberty, and the vote. While odds and ends, here and there, still need attention before it can be said that every wrong has been righted, there is no longer need for a great woman's movement in which practically most of the women of the Nation devote themselves to further improvements in their own status.

The real question before women now is: Since we possess education and the vote, what shall we do with them? Is it enough to expend our energy in deciding whether Smith or Brown should hold a political office or shall we devote the highest and best in us to speeding the coming destiny of the human race?

A problem has been lying on the work table of the world for thousands of years—perhaps it has been waiting for women to come to the aid of men. We call it war. Man alone, apparently, cannot solve this problem. I wish to avoid the discussion of the present world wars. They are only incidents in a world of continual war. During the woman's century, 1840–1940, there were 128 wars, many of them world wars.

I call your attention to the institution of war, the time schedule which began before human history and has never stopped. Problems, many and grave, appeal to us, but this is certainly the most serious in the entire world. It is the plague of every nation, the worry of every governmental financier, the anxiety of parents of all lands, it is the giant producer of poverty, the insidious wrecker of morality, the spreader of malignant diseases, a certain stimulant to unrest, a destroyer and never a builder of civilization. The primary crime of the world is acknowledged to be murder, but war is organized murder and no one can deny it. War has been based upon looting, stealing, cheating, and organized lying and deceit. Its first preparation is to forget the Ten Commandments. Pearl Buck said a few days ago that the Chinese were not prepared for the present war, because they had believed "war to be an occupation of fools." I never heard that expression before, but I have wondered what would happen if all the women in the world should suddenly change the title of this institution from "War" to the "Occupation of Fools."

Let no one misunderstand me. I support defense. I am for convoys and for more vigor in our preparedness than is on display at the moment. I am aware that no one nation can end war. Together the human race must unite and act. If there is to be army, navy air force, etc., it should be international and its sole business should be to maintain the security from war of every nation in the world. To bring war to an end may require a thousand years; then we must make a 1,000-year plan and waste no second of time.

Let us mobilize our education and our common sense to end this nefarious business and to build a saner world.

Effects of Suggested Billion-Dollar Cut in Nondefense Expenditures

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

LETTER OF HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, OF COLORADO, TO THE EDITOR OF THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN NEWS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter which I have written to the editor of the Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo., in response to an inquiry from him as to my position toward the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury that a billion dollars should be cut from nondefense expenditures.

The letter follows:

MAY 20, 1941.

Mr. JACK FOSTER,
Editor, Rocky Mountain News,
Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. FOSTER: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of May 14 propounding to me in substance the query: "Do you agree with Secretary Morgenthau who says that the Government's nondefense expenditures can and should be cut $1,000,000,000"?

If I understand the Secretary's position correctly he did not state specifically what items should be eliminated or how much certain specific services should be reduced. I am informed he did outline in a general way certain activities which he termed nondefense and to which he thought cuts might be applied such as the National Youth Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, Public Works (which would include Federal-aid roads, flood control, reclamation projects, etc.), agricultural assistance (which would include soil-conservation payments, parity payments, and sugar-crop payments to farmers), and others which he did not list.

Let me say at the outset that I favor making reductions wherever it is possible to cut expenditures intelligently on the basis of the known facts and circumstances surrounding each case and after considering the relationship of those expenditures to our entire governmental program. I would not commit myself in advance to any arbitrary cut of a billion dollars in expenditures without knowing what items are to be eliminated and reduced or without weighing the effect of those proposed eliminations and reductions.

When people casually refer to nondefense activities in Government, they are generally thinking of everything except the Army and Navy. A large part of the Government's civil expenditures are in some manner related to national defense. There is a defense angle to almost everything the Secretary specifically mentioned and in some a very substantial defense aspect.

Modern warfare is economic, industrial, agricultural, and financial as well as military. Getting a nation on a national defense basis consists as much of gearing the entire population and the entire economic, industrial, agricultural and financial fabric to that level as it does of training soldiers, building naval vessels, and procuring munitions. If agriculture is depressed, there is a weak spot in the national economic armor. If education is neglected and not sufficient trained workers are available for industry, there is a failure to produce the necessary implements of war and peace. If unemployment, no matter how small, is not relieved, some citizens go hungry. Every phase of any Government activity must be examined to determine the appropriate relationship to the national effort before one can definitely throw that activity aside and say "this is nondefense, it has no place in the picture now." I sometimes hear the question, "What is the use of building these huge dams on some of our rivers, they are not national defense?" Yet if it had not been for the dams at T. V. A., Bonneville, Grand Coulee, and others, there would have been at this moment a serious power shortage for the production of vital war materials. So it becomes necessary to examine each activity on the basis of its own merits and its relationship to the entire national effort.

I have been on the Committee on Appropriations for 20 years. I would not knowingly vote for an appropriation that I believed was not important for the development of welfare of our country. A great many people do not pay much attention to the details of the Federal Budget and think that it is susceptible of being cut arbitrarily anytime without harm to our national life. Every item in that Budget is gone over carefully by the President and the Bureau of the Budget before it is recommended to Congress. The Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House go through the Budget item by item and eliminate and reduce many. So far this session the House Committee on Appropriations has taken approximately $70,000,000 from the Budget estimates and there are still five more bills to be considered and undoubtedly there will be further cuts.

In the next fiscal year our total for other than defense expenses will be about $7,000,000,000 and will probably constitute one-third of the total estimated expenditures of the year. Of this $7,000,000,000, about one-half is for so-called fixed charges such as interest on the public debt, grants to States (such as social security and vocational education) etc., and the other half, where the cut of a billion dollars would have to fall, comprises all the rest of the Government activities. To take a billion dollars out of this half would mean a drastic cut of about 30 percent on the whole one-half or a greater percentage on the general classes which have been suggested for a cut.

Many of the appropriations the Secretary mentioned are yet to come before Congress for action this session. Those for the N. Y. A., the C. C. C., and some others he mentioned generally have not been acted upon by the committee or the House. The agricultural appropriations are still in conference between the two Houses. When these come before the committee and the House I will vote upon them in the light of the information we then have and their relationship to the entire national welfare. If the facts show they can be cut, I will act accordingly.

It is a noteworthy fact that whenever cuts in expenditures are suggested, the proponents usually offer a general suggestion of an arbitrary amount, they do not go into detail. Perhaps an anecdote of history will be illustrative. One of my predecessors as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, before the days of the Budget, took a copy of the old book of estimates under his arm. He was getting ready for the committee work of the session. He wanted to know where to make some cuts. He visited every member of the Cabinet in turn. He displayed to each the book of estimates and asked him privately where some reductions could be made. Each turned to pages in the book and specifically pointed out general items, which, in that Cabinet officer's opinion, were of dubious national value and should be cut. When the chairman got back to his office and summed these visits all up he found to his dismay that each Cabinet member had pointed out cuts in other departments, but not one of them had suggested a reduction in his own bailiwick.

Everyone is in favor of cutting generally; when we get down to specific cases it is a horse of another color. It is incumbent on those who want to make these arbitrary general reductions to point out in detail, item by item, where they are and what amounts should be eliminated and why they can be taken out. Then we will know what cuts can be made and why they should be made.

This is my fifth year as chairman of the Appropriations Committee. It has long been the practice of the chairman on the committee to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the end of each session a summary of the Government's finances. Because of the extent of our present expenditures and the great interest taken in the subject, I have been placing in the RECORD month by month at this session a summary of receipts and expenditures which the Treasury Department furnishes me. It is absolutely accurate and as complete as can possibly be made. Those who have been following this data have found it informative and useful in watching the course of our finances. It prevents an enormous amount of guesswork, speculation, and misunderstanding of all current appropriations.

I trust this information will be of interest to the people of Colorado.

Very cordially yours,

EDWARD T. TAYLOR.

Real Defeatism

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH E. CASEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE WORCESTER (MASS.) DAILY TELEGRAM

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Worcester Daily Telegram of May 20, 1941:

[From the Worcester (Mass.) Daily Telegram of May 20, 1941]

SENATOR TAFT ON "REAL DEFEATISM"

Secretary of War Stimson and Secretary of the Navy Knox are the chief targets of the isolationist offensive these days. Their outspoken analyses of the plight of the democratic cause in the current world conflict have made them momentarily the most conspicuous figures among those who urge immediate all-out aid for Britain.

Senator ROBERT A. TAFT refers to them, in a gentlemanly way, as "the real defeatists in this country." Former Gov. Philip F. La Follette is a bit more hardboiled. He calls them "the two Republican jokers running wild in the New Deal," and demands that the President eliminate them from the Cabinet.

Senator TAFT is of the generation which ought now to be predominant in the leadership of the Republican Party. It is a sad commentary on the kind of leadership which the Senator and so many of his equally high-placed contemporaries offered to the party that the party has had to turn for a representative expression of its views, on the most momentous issue of the time, to two older statesmen, Secretaries Stimson and Knox, and to a recently converted Democrat, Wendell L. Willkie.

The phenomenon seems inexplicable. How Mr. TAFT and the others, who share his opinions, can be so blind to the realities in the world situation is a puzzle, particularly when the vast majority of rank-and-file Republicans have so clear an understanding of the significance of the Old World struggle.

Senator TAFT explains that the reason why Secretaries Stimson and Knox are "the real defeatists" is that they both insist that this country depends upon the British Navy for safety. The Senator goes on to enumerate the magnificent resources of this country, and implies that the enumeration of these resources is enough to insure our safety, no matter what may happen abroad.

The Senator's remarks remind one of William Jennings Bryan's "million men springing to arms overnight." Mr. Bryan forgot that before any men can spring to arms, the arms must be there within springable distance; and before there can be any effective springing to arms, the springers must be trained in the use of those arms. Senator TAFT appears to forget that before our magnificent resources can be used effectively in our defense, they must first be mobilized in the proper form and then employed in dynamic fashion.

In belittling the role played by the British Navy in the peaceful development of America, Senator TAFT is denying the evidence of history. Since before the promulgation of the Monroe Doctrine, the British Navy has kept Americans free from fear of invasion from Europe. Indeed it was this contribution by the British Navy which has made possible the enforcement of the doctrine.

To be sure, the British Navy was not always acting thus out of deliberate benevolence; but whatever British intent may have been, the result has always been beneficial to America. In this connection it is worth noting that only a little more than a year ago our highest naval authorities—still relying on British sea power—vehemently opposed a two-ocean American Navy. They want it now, however, with the British Navy in peril.

"Defense of What?"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THAD F. WASIELEWSKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE MILWAUKEE JOURNAL

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Milwaukee Journal of May 17, 1941:

[From the Milwaukee Journal of May 17, 1941]

DEFENSE OF WHAT?

Talking on the subject Defense of What? at the University of Wisconsin's national-defense institute, Chief Justice Rosenberry cut through a great deal of the confusion which attends most discussion of the hour to speak of America's stake in the world crisis. "We defend," he said, "the right of a free people to possess its own soul and to live its life in liberty under law in the making of which it has a voice."

This is as good a sentence as anyone has devised. But it must be clothed in flesh-and-blood reality, and this Judge Rosenberry proceeds to do. For many will ask, "Who threatens us or with our guardian oceans can threaten us?" "We need to realize," the chief justice says, that "our way of life can be destroyed or at least greatly impaired, even if no foreign soldier steps foot on our soil, no foreign fleet approaches our shores, and no hostile airplane drops its destructive bombs upon our defenseless cities."

This needs explanation. If an enemy—any enemy—cannot get at us, how can we be so hurt that the gains of 300 years can be destroyed? Yet in these days we are making sacrifices of wealth and of what we regard as inalienable rights for defense. We call it an "emergency," with the confidence that it will presently be over, as the World War was, and that we shall then return to normal, gathering once more the kindly fruits of the earth in ever-increasing proportion—repaying the present waste. But where is our assurance that this is how it will be?

"If, when this war is over, England and the dominions—the only democracies besides our own now in the world—are destroyed, and the world hereafter is to be ruled by force and not by reason," says Judge Rosenberry, "then it seems to me clear that the organization we set up and the sacrifices of liberties and immunities that we make will not be merely for the emergency but for the long future."

In such a world, he continues, we would have to organize our whole economy for war, for the production of great armies, navies, and air fleets continuously. "Twenty years of living under such conditions would reduce our standards of living to a level which no American now living has ever experienced," Justice Rosenberry says.

Is there anything wrong or overdrawn in this picture? It is simple arithmetic that the more of our energy we put into producing gunpowder, the less there is for producing the things we eat and wear and enjoy. The totalitarian idea will not exist in the world with the democratic idea except on the basis of armed neutrality. If we are measurably secure on our "island," our immunity is only temporary. It can last only until other parts of the world are subdued, their resources appropriated, their people enslaved.

Then would come our turn. True, we would have built great defenses. But we would have to keep on building. The borrowing to pay for it would become confiscation, first of wealth, then of labor, the only remaining wealth.

Justice Rosenberry has not exaggerated. If some still insist that "if they can't get over here they can't hurt us," they may be asked how, with all our increased productiveness after the World War, with the labor of man producing more than ever before in history, until men as calm as Mr. Hoover declared we had "abolished poverty"—how did the Old World depression get over here? Yet it did, and we on our "island," threatened by no foreign aggression, did not know after 10 years what to do about it.

We are grateful to Chief Justice Rosenberry for recognizing the chief task of Americans in positions of leadership—informing the American people on the facts of our situation and the real issue that faces us.

America's Rendezvous With Destiny: Let It Be Something Less Than Total War and Something More Than Just Our Private Peace

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. KARL E. MUNDT, OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am including herewith the transcript of a radio address which I delivered over the Columbia Broadcasting System the evening of May 20, 1941. It is entitled "America's Rendezvous With Destiny: Let It Be Something Less Than Total War and Something More Than Just Our Private Peace," and is based on conclusions reached from data coming to me as a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee:

Fellow Americans, three choices confront America today as she determines what will be her rendezvous with destiny. As America faces a world at war and considers her relationship to it, we find a strange combination of unity and disunity among our people. In our sympathies and ideals we are most happily united, but in the mapping of a course of action we are most unhappily disunited. In spite of this, however, I believe the urge toward unity is so strong and our points of agreement are so general that we can develop a united national policy if we keep government in tune with the heartbeat of the people for whom this Government exists.

Let us summarize the points of agreement upon which Americans are today united. They want America to stay out of the shooting and the slaughter of the war; they want England and her associates to succeed in their gallant fight against aggression; they want to see the restoration of a completely independent Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France, Greece, and other foreign States capable of stable self-government; they want more freedom and less human misery to follow this war as the result of a peace which will promote cooperation rather than once again paving the way for another conflict. I want all of these things to come about—and I believe you do. I think this is the almost universal American desire today. On this we stand united.

Having reached such general agreement upon the goal we seek it should not be impossible to project our unity to include support of a sound program to attain that goal.

AMERICA MUST CHOOSE

Let us in this light consider our three choices. One possible choice is to go to war within the next 30, 60, or 90 days either by the un-American and public-deceiving method of using convoys and our fleet in belligerent waters or by the American method of openly and honestly voting a declaration of war.

Over 80 percent of the people of America oppose this choice, and their opposition seems to be growing in strength and gaining in significance each day despite the greatest program of well-organized and highly financed war propaganda this country has ever witnessed.

It is a sterling tribute to the stability and integrity of American public opinion to realize that it has stood up against this barrage of war propaganda for over 18 months and refused to be tricked or taunted or tempted into another foreign war. I salute the common people of America, whose common sense has thus far kept America out of the war. If we choose war as our selection from the possibilities confronting us, it seems likely that those who would again send our men across the seas to die will seek to evade honest congressional consideration. They are now trying to force the President to usurp the war-making power of this free Republic and to plunge the country into war by the route of convoy patrols or naval escorts, knowing full well that another expeditionary force will quickly follow. No man need longer deceive himself as to the true meaning of convoys. The President himself has solemnly warned, "Convoys mean shooting and shooting means war." And the President's personal warning that "shooting means war" holds just as true whether that shooting starts from ships or planes operating as a convoy, as a patrol, or as an escort.

BY DOING MORE WE MIGHT AID BRITAIN LESS

Nor are we at all sure that this choice would be the best in order to give aid to Britain. Ex-President Hoover pointed out clearly in his broadcast on Mother's Day, which every American should read in full for a frank and fair analysis of this country's mission in this war, that our entrance into war would mean the immediate drastic curtailment of our flow of aid to Britain. If we put ourselves squarely into a shooting war, perhaps we shall actually aid Britain less than if we remain at peace. If we decide to go to war against the Axis, we must fight Germany and Italy—and perhaps France and Russia, too—in Europe and Africa. But we must also prepare to fight Japan in the Pacific. We shall need men and ships on both fronts; we shall need planes and tanks. We dare not enter a war simply to inherit an American Dunkerque in Singapore, in Shanghai, in Dakar, in Iraq, or in France. If we enter a war, we must fight it through to success if it takes 10 years and twice 10,000,000 men.

America must never end its rendezvous with destiny by a tryst with tragedy.

Surely not even the most sadistic interventionist who calls upon the President for war now would propose that once in the war we continue to give priority in arms to Britain and subsequently send our own flesh and blood to die in foreign fighting without the training and protection of modern munitions and complete equipment of the newest kind. So, if we go to war now, in our serious state of unpreparedness, as some of our emotionalists are urging, our first sorry dividend would be to lose the two objectives on which America stands most united: We would forfeit our peace, and we would be compelled to curtail most drastically our flow of arms to Britain.

CHOICE NUMBER TWO

The second choice America can make is to stay out of the war. This choice is supported by the solemn promises of both major political party platforms. It would fulfill the promise of every sitting Member of the House and Senate, who, without exception, accepted support of this party which pledged the people it would keep them out of war. This choice today is supported by 80 percent of our people—or well over 100,000,000 of the 130,000,000 people of America. And, let us remember, ladies and gentlemen that these 100,000,000 are not ignorant, illinformed citizens. They are not unpatriotic defeatists. They are neither "fifth columnists," copperheads, nor appeasers. They represent the backbone of America—to denounce the 100,000,000 Americans who oppose our entrance into war as defeatists or appeasers is to denounce the very Americanism we would all defend. It is a strange argument the one-fifth uses in this controversy in denouncing the four-fifths for lack of unity. For the less than 1 in 5 to call for unity their way or not at all is like trying to wag a 4-foot dog with a 1-foot tail.

It the one-fifth who call for war would join the four-fifths who would defend our peace, this country would have unity tomorrow in the American way and we could concentrate our efforts in defending ourselves and in supplying the tools of war to Britain.

The choice of staying out of war is the choice to which President Roosevelt has pledged America. In Philadelphia on October 23 of last year, he said, "We will not send our Army, Navy, or air forces to fight outside of the Americas except in case of attack."

THE PRESIDENT ASKED FOR NATIONAL UNITY FOR PEACE

In saying that he called for national unity for peace, he gave his personal promise to keep this country out of war. Both America and Britain have the right to believe he meant what he said and said what he meant.

On October 30, 1940, President Roosevelt repeated this promise in Boston, saying, "And while I am talking to you fathers and mothers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before and I shall say it again and again and again. Your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars." Was the President simply deceiving the people on these occasions to win votes so he could become America's first third-term President? Were these the false and fickle promises of an ambitious man or the faithful pledges of your President and mine? Time will write its own verdict. But until it offers evidence to prove the President has betrayed this public trust, I choose to believe that he will keep these solemn promises.

YOU CAN HELP THE PRESIDENT KEEP HIS PROMISES

You can help him to redeem these pledges. If you who hear me now will write or wire the President before another sunset urging him to keep his trust with you and promising to support him in building an America strong enough to defend its peace—and if you will have others write and wire him the same—it will strengthen the President to resist the war makers who are pushing him relentlessly toward war. Send similar letters to your Senators and Representatives to strengthen them in the overwhelming determination which they now have not to put this country into war.

You can win this fight for peace, if you will work for it one-hundredth as hard as we must all strive for victory if the war crowd has its way and we start overseas to war.

A THIRD CHOICE CHALLENGES AMERICA

And still a third choice now confronts America. If we reject war and select peace as our guiding policy, we can also move forward with a program to lend our great influence on the side of a just and permanent peace for the belligerents. Thus, with something less than total war and something more than just our private peace, we can help restore order to a war-torn world. Not by a peace of appeasement or defeat. Not a peace between a bloody victor and a bleeding victim. Not a peace of mutual exhaustion and despair, nor a peace based on the fickle promises of any man or set of men. We can, however, help to set in motion the machinery for a planned and permanent peace based on reason and justice, on common sense and sound economy.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S UNPRECEDENTED OPPORTUNITY

President Roosevelt has an opportunity unprecedented in history to set in motion such a move toward peace. The world today needs a mighty mediator much more than it needs another gladiator. We have heard more peace talk in Washington the past few weeks than during the preceding year. Wars are ended by victory, by defeat, or by assistance from a neutral group. The time may be nearer than we know when honest striving for a just and ordered peace might bring success. It can never be any earlier to try.

I hope that the people of this Christian country and all of our religious leaders will help revive the teachings of the Prince of Peace by supporting every worth-while effort to bring an early and equitable end to the destruction now sapping the strength of so much of the world.

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD CALL A MEDIATION CONFERENCE OF NEUTRALS

I suggest, therefore, that the President issue a call for a mediation conference of neutrals to meet at some point selected by him. The world's crop of neutrals is tragically short this year, but President Roosevelt could send invitations to such a conference; for example, to such leaders as Pope Pius, of Rome; President Wetter, of traditionally neutral Switzerland; King Gusta:, of Sweden; President Inonu, of Turkey; and a South American representative of the Pan American Conference. These five men, or personal representatives appointed by them, could meet with our representative appointed by President Roosevelt to devote their collective intelligence to the problems of preparing the outlines of a lasting peace. This list is merely suggestive; other names might be added. If the war spreads, some of these might have to be dropped, but the conference should start with nations none of whom have profited directly or indirectly from the war. If preliminary discussion warranted it, invitations could later be extended by the conference to Britain and Germany to discover whether some basis might be found for the reestablishment of justice and order in the world. The same treatment could be accorded the Japanese-Chinese situation.

PEACE SHOULD BE CONSIDERED ON ITS MERITS

This neutral mediation conference would consider all peace programs on their respective merits. Among others could be studied proposals to set up spheres of influence in the world with some sort of common clearing-house to settle controversial differences among these areas; suggestions for revitalizing and revising the League of Nations to profit from its past experiences; the expansion of the Union Now idea to include all nations, without prejudice, which desire to participate in a working world federation, and the five peace proposals suggested by Secretary of State Hull in his broadcast of May 18. The conference could request the war aims of the belligerents or not, at any time, as it deemed advisable. It would work out the principles and policies for a permanent peace. It would be a mediation conference of neutrals with no axes to grind. It is, of course, true that such a conference might not succeed but who can say it could not work if it is never tried?

NOT A NEGOTIATED PEACE BETWEEN BELLIGERENTS

Such a conference would not impair the war efforts of any belligerent. But its very meeting would strengthen the resistance to war of people in belligerent States whose leaders made dreams of world conquest or personal power the basis of their fighting. The peace it would propose would not be one on Hitler's terms. Nor would it be on Churchill's terms. Neither would it be on such low levels of revenge that Stalin and his Communists would emerge the real victors of the war by projecting their concepts as solace to all the vanquished people. Such a peace would be proposed for once in the world's history on humanity's terms with only war the victim and only humanity the victor. It would not be a negotiated peace comprised between belligerents but an orderly peace conceived by neutrals.

A PEACE FOR ALL WHICH WOULD BE BETTER THAN A VICTORY FOR EITHER

A peace planned this time by a Neutral Mediation Conference instead of at a post-war peace conference between embittered rivals will be better than victory for either side—is surely better than war fought to exhaustion by both sides, is vastly better than our own participation in a war whose objectives we ourselves are unable to define specifically.

I have called my proposal to the attention of President Roosevelt. If you feel it may have merit an expression of your support of it to him and to your Senators and Representatives, and to Secretary of State Hull, might be most helpful. If we keep out of this war, as we can if you demand it, America and the Western Hemisphere may yet point a path to the Old World which will bring an end to tyranny and establish permanent order on a basis which we shall gladly help preserve by methods that have proved themselves so long effective here at home.

AMERICA IS GOD'S LAST CHANCE TO MAKE A WORLD

Someone has said, "America is God's last chance to make a world." Somehow it seems to me that God can do a better job with America if we will do our best to help restore a just peace by our inspiration rather than again to try the futile course of reaching that goal by just our intervention.

This I believe to be America's real rendezvous with destiny.

More Light, Please

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM R. THOM

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 21, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE SPRINGFIELD (MASS.) REPUBLICAN

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am reproducing an editorial from the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, one of the great newspapers of the country, whose editors are not swept off their feet with an insistent demand for war, but who are analyzing intelligently and calmly our relations to the World War:

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican]

It would promote clarity of thought and perhaps more unity of thinking if the leaders of the more ardent interventionsists would define with more precision their objectives. When we are asked simply to turn back "the tide of darkness" from "the Atlantic world," the orator leaves too much to the imagination.

A nation, it has been wisely said, rarely achieves in war precisely what it had in mind to achieve when the appeal to arms was made. The issue of battles often imposes unforeseen burdens on the victor no less than on the vanquished. Our own history proves the truth of those observations.

Mr. Willkie addressed a great mass meeting at Madison Square Garden, in New York City, Wednesday evening. He was inevitably interesting. Yet no feature of the meeting was more thought-provoking than the utterances and aspirations of those speakers who represented small European states like Poland, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Holland, and Serbia, which the Nazi armies have occupied. One and all, they championed the restoration of the independence of their home lands, within their former national boundaries. The British Government encourages the "governments in exile," most of which maintain headquarters in London, to cherish the hope of complete restoration.

Assuming an integral victory, may not we Americans be allowed to ask whether the United States would be committed, in case of its full entry into the war, to the program of the restoration of the status quo ante in Europe when the time should come to draft a peace settlement? For many of us cannot forget that the "Balkanization of Europe" by the Treaty of Versailles, especially through the destruction of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire and the creation of the "cordon sanitaire" in eastern Europe, was certainly one of the main causes of the tremendous explosion that the continent suffered 20 years later.

Another aspect of interventionist potentiality that is disturbing to many is the wide-open talk to the effect that this war will make either Germany or the United States the master of the world. Mr. Willkie forecasts Washington as "the capital of the world." If not Washington, Berlin will be; and Mr. Willkie prefers Washington. Analyze so grandiose a conception and an astronomical imperialism confronts you. The America first agitation cannot fail to be strengthened by these symptoms of a new American megalomania outrunning in scope our dream of manifest destiny in the nineteenth century and our world-power complex which was sired by the Spanish-American War.

There is a strong case for undertaking the specific objective of saving Britain and the British Commonwealth of Nations. Our national interest seems to require, when Britain comes to make peace with Hitler, that Britain shall not be brought so low in bargaining power that Hitler can take over the whole British Navy and air force and, quite as important, dictate that Britain shall build up no new sea or air forces in the future except what the Berlin government may permit. The Versailles Treaty placed precisely such restrictions on German land, sea, and air power. Hitler will act in reprisal in exactly the same way, if he has the strength to impose his will. If Hitler is able to do that Britain goes under and the Commonwealth of Nations disintegrates, except insofar as the United States can take them into a genuine protective custody.

But, why should the United States go beyond the specific objective of saving Britain from collapse, at the same time conserving the political unity and territorial integrity of the Commonwealth of Nations?

In view of the recent development of military aviation as a major factor in war, Americans may tend instinctively to reorient their conception of their relations with Europe—that is to say, as the British have for 300 years or more, Americans may now begin to fear as a grave menace to their own security the rise to a position of political and military mastery in Europe of any single European power. Hitler is not the first continental dictator Britain has fought.

That fear has controlled British foreign policy for many generations. While under the new conditions of this age Americans may be developing the same fear, however, it does not necessarily follow that we must take over the traditional British foreign policy and make it our own by attempting to dictate what the future political organization of Europe shall be even as the consequence of a successful war.

Wars of limited liability are notoriously hard to keep within the bounds originally assigned to them. Yet is it not clear that the last thing the American people want is a war of unlimited liability?

Crosses in Flanders

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN L. SWEENEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

POEM BY MERRELL DOUGHERTY

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a poem entitled "Crosses in Flanders," composed by Merrell Dougherty, an employee of the House Office Building. Because of its uniqueness and the sentiments expressed, I submit this contribution to the Members of Congress and the Nation who may be interested.

CROSSES IN FLANDERS

White sentinels stand erect and still and their eternal shadows by sun and moon shroud the last sanctuary where every wrong and wronged repose, and the world's immortal foemen have come to find the same reward. Their silent vigil o'er the vanquished dead bespeaks a more decorous declamation of the diabolical orgy and wanton desecration upon defenseless humankind than all the surreptitious ideology of Magi, Muse, and Saint. No faith or hope illumines nor transcends their ominous and inspiring awe, for man, the image of an idol he adores, yet practices his vainglories on man and can naught gain from this but iniquitous respite. This salient legion decries with obstreperous and unmistakable vehemence, evil, age-old mockery and the sad and woeful heritage is the ultimate dream of mortal man. Venerated and consecrated by the infamies of centuries of wrong thinking, of worse living and more sordid ideals of false hopes, man, the idolator, lover of craven gods, bestial passion and meaningless mortality, must at last succumb to that impious fiend of death, destruction and despair. Fool! Bow low to war!

The St. Lawrence Seaway Offers Real Transportation Relief to the Farmers of the West and Middle West—All Disinterested Authorities on Transportation, Including the United States Army Engineers, Are for It—Shall the Lobbies Control?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANCIS D. CULKIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 19, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS OF FRANCIS D. CULKIN, OF NEW YORK

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a radio address made by me over the stations of the National Broadcasting Co., on the Grange hour, from Washington, D. C., on May 17, 1941:

Good afternoon, friends. The high cost of transportation is the chief economic disease that afflicts the grain farmer of the Middle West. The National Grange, the oldest and soundest of our national farm organizations, has from its birth been a vigorous battler for the correction of this injustice. Despite the valiant efforts of the Grange, rail charges have been increased year by year until the American farmers are actually getting a lower percentage of the consumer's dollar than the transportation agencies. It is true that trucks have helped somewhat, but carriage by water is the principal agency upon which the farmer must rely for relief. It costs four times as much to transport grain across Montana and Kansas by rail as it does to carry grain by rail where improved channels are present.

GRAIN FARMERS HELPED

The construction of the St. Lawrence seaway reaching the heart of the continent will enable the western farmers to transport their grain to the eastern seaboard and overseas with a saving of approximately 8 cents a bushel. This saving will be reflected back to him and will add hundreds of millions of dollars to the value of his crop without increasing the price the consumer pays.

When peace does come and for many years thereafter America will have the duty of feeding the world. I am confident that we will be able to regain and to hold much of the export grain business which was formerly ours if we avail ourselves of the low-cost transportation which the St. Lawrence seaway will provide.

AN EFFICIENT YARDSTICK

I desire to emphasize that the St. Lawrence route running over 1,200 miles inland will serve as an efficient yardstick on rail rates, particularly in the field of bulk commodities, which include petroleum, coal, grain, and other imports and exports. The classic example of this is in the field of gasoline and petroleum products. Recent investigations show that except for the intervention of water transportation a gallon of gasoline would cost the consumer 20 cents more a gallon at the pump. It is fair to estimate that water transportation beginning at the oil wells saves the American citizen at least $2,000,000,000 a year. These savings can be largely duplicated for the western farmer on his farm products by the yardstick influence and operation of the St. Lawrence seaway. Let us illustrate this yardstick influence. In 1933 a shallow-draft Norwegian steamboat capable of navigating the present St. Lawrence Canal began carrying lard direct from Great Lake ports to Europe at 40 cents per hundred pounds from Chicago, 50 cents lower than the rail-ocean combination rate. The railroads, to meet this competition, and with the usual concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, lowered their rates to 62 cents per hundred pounds. In the winter, when the Lakes were ice-bound, the combination rate was put back to 96 cents. Under this fluctuating competition, the Norwegian service was discontinued. With the St. Lawrence seaway in operation with much larger boats, the rates would undoubtedly go as low as 30 cents per hundred, and there would be continuous service during the season of open navigation.

The overwhelming weight of competent, disinterested authority is for the construction of this seaway. It has been one of the planks in the National Grange platform for many years.

HIGHEST AUTHORITY FOR IT

President Hoover, who was an economist of the orthodox school, and had no illusions about the work a dollar should do, stated on July 18, 1932, at the time the St. Lawrence Treaty was signed by him:

"The St. Lawrence Treaty marks another step forward in the greatest internal improvement yet undertaken on the North American Continent. * * * The treaty provides for the construction of a 27-foot waterway from the sea to all ports on the Great Lakes. Its influence in cheapening transportation of overseas goods will spread widely into the interior. * * * Its completion will have a profoundly favorable effect upon the development of agriculture and industry throughout the Midwest."

President Roosevelt became intimately acquainted with this picture while Governor of New York State. On December 5, 1940, he stated:

"The St. Lawrence seaway is now a vital necessity. It means a more secure nation. It means a continent protected and served by the additional shipping built in inland shipyards. It means more industries, both defense and domestic, thriving on the cheapest power in history. It means more comforts in the homes of many cities and rural areas. It means more work for the ordinary citizen in shipyards, factories, and other transportation services connecting the center of this continent with this great highway to and from our national and international markets. This project will cost the United States less than three battleships, and the power project will be entirely self-liquidating."

President Coolidge, a genuine realist, and President Harding were also ardently for the seaway. The United States Army engineers, the world's leading experts on the economics of water transportation, have twice recommended this great project. The American people complain that the last frontier is gone. The fact is the St. Lawrence seaway and power project will open up a new frontier in the Northeast and Middle West which will be of tremendous economic value to all of our people.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF

That history repeats itself is proven by the fact that the same arguments that were used against the construction of the Panama Canal are now being used against the St. Lawrence seaway. A new generation of lobbyists representing the same interests who fought the Panama Canal bitterly are now fighting the St. Lawrence seaway. It required all the vigor of Theodore Roosevelt to bring about the construction of the Panama Canal, and public opinion was then divided by the lobbying influences. No one now doubts the advisability and national-defense value of the Panama Canal. The fact is that the St. Lawrence seaway will be of greater economic benefit to all the people of the United States than the Panama Canal. It will correct any inequality that was caused by the construction of the Panama Canal. Make no mistake about it, the hue and cry against the St. Lawrence seaway project is based on the attempt of the railroads to make the Great Lakes area an inland sea without free ingress or egress. This is essential in carrying out the railroads' obvious policy of making certain a monopoly of transportation in America.

POWER DEVELOPMENT

The power development will bring into the United States 1,100,000 horsepower of electric energy. Without doing violence to the existing investment, this great volume of energy produced at an extremely low cost will electrify the farms of the Northeast. This power, which can be carried 300 miles from the site of the dam, will substantially reduce the cost of lighting for the households in New York and New England. Through the medium of this electricity, our share of the cost, $182,726,250, can be amortized and paid off in 20 years.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Recent world events have greatly strengthened the demand for the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence navigation and power project. Happenings in Europe and Asia emphasize the necessity for closer understanding and better defense cooperation between the United States and Canada. No matter what may come in the way of dictatorships, no matter what their powers and strength may be, the completion of this project, giving us as it does 3,576 miles of additional seaboard in the interior of the continent, makes all other schemes of national defense pale in comparison.

This undertaking, needed for continental as well as national defense, offers the United States and Canada a new, secure, and landlocked coast line, every foot of which is potentially defensible and provides a safe haven for airplane bases, submarines, destroyers, and other war craft. The St. Lawrence seaway is a national betterment which will tie together the industrial and agricultural areas of the country to the seven seas. It will make the entire continent more compact, efficient, and productive. The farmers and consumers of America will be the main beneficiaries of the Great Lakes seaway.

THE LOBBY v. THE PEOPLE

My hearers should remember that favorable action by Congress is necessary to accomplish this great national undertaking. With their eyes on the tragedy going on overseas the American people seem to be passive as to this great opportunity for national betterment that is within their grasp. On the other hand, the railroads and their affiliated lobbies are already on the battle line here in Washington. The old guard and the black horse cavalry of special interests are already riding to the kill both by day and night. The mail of every Member of Congress is filled with fantastic appeals to vote against the seaway. Many of them are adroitly addressed to the selfishness of localities, ever the bane of popular government. Today the corridors of the Capitol and the House Office buildings are already crowded with lobbyists endeavoring to work their will on the people's representatives. I confidently predict that when the seaway is up for consideration there will be a thousand lobbyists here in the Capitol with entertainment for all comers.

What is the answer to this situation and how can it be cured? It is up to you, the people, whose economic liberties are at stake on this issue. It is up to the States and localities whose growth and material interests are jeopardized by this ancient and indecent procedure. If you, the people, will but rouse yourselves to the needs of the hour and flood the Members of the House and Senate with requests for favorable action on this seaway, Congress, always properly responsive to popular demand, will in turn rouse itself to favorable action. I urge my hearers to do this today and to carry this story to their friends and neighbors asking them to do likewise. I ask you to do this in the interest of a better America. I thank you for listening.

The Situation in Palestine and the Middle East

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN J. KENNEDY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

LETTER AND STATEMENT FROM THE EMERGENCY COMMITTEE FOR ZIONIST AFFAIRS DATED MAY 15, 1941, TO HON. MARTIN J. KENNEDY, OF NEW YORK, AND SIGNED BY MR. EMANUEL NEUMANN

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter and statement from the Emergency Committee for Zionist Affairs.

I respectfully recommend to the membership of the House a reading of the following letter and statement. After having carefully read the statement and verified the facts, I cannot help but give my unqualified endorsement to the conclusions expressed therein. I feel that the Members would agree with me that everything possible should be done to enable the Jews of Palestine to defend their frontiers, their homes, and their honor.

EMERGENCY COMMITTEE FOR ZIONIST AFFAIRS,
New York City, May 15, 1941.

Hon. MARTIN J. KENNEDY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN KENNEDY: The steady course of events in the middle east, which is bringing the war closer to Palestine, has resulted in the spreading of rumors and reports, which have been inaccurate and confusing.

In order to provide our friends with correct background material, the Emergency Committee for Zionist Affairs has prepared a statement on the position of Palestine and the middle east, and takes the liberty of sending you a copy of it, herewith, for your information.

We hope that you will find it of interest.

Very sincerely yours,
EMANUEL NEUMANN.

[Statement]

THE SITUATION IN PALESTINE AND THE MIDDLE EAST

The threat to the security of Palestine which has been developing during the past days naturally causes serious concern to Zionists and to all friends of Palestine in this country. It has become obvious, first, that maximum efforts must be made for the defense of the country, and secondly, that the Jews in Palestine who would be exposed to special danger in certain eventualities should be given every possibility to defend themselves, the country, and their honor.

2. For many months past the leaders of the Zionist movement and of the Jewish community in Palestine have sought to secure from the British authorities the right to organize a Jewish military force to participate in the Near East in the war against the Axis. These efforts have received the full support of the Emergency Committee for Zionist Affairs in America, and of the Zionist leadership generally.

3. The temporary withdrawal at a given moment of any substantial part of the British forces in Palestine for service elsewhere might be the occasion for subversive elements there, acting in concert with the Nazis to create disorder, riots, or possibly worse. It is therefore of the utmost importance to the stability of the country that, apart from the question of the organization of a specific Jewish military force, the loyal population, of which the Jews constitute the core, be given the means of maintaining order and defending themselves. A cablegram has recently been dispatched to Prime Minister Winston Churchill urging the organization and arming, in this critical moment, of a Jewish home guard in Palestine. To date, however, there is no information at hand as to whether such action has been undertaken.

4. It is important at this juncture of events to see the Palestine situation in proper perspective and to understand the forces that are at work. Without such a perception the whole picture becomes distorted.

It may be noted in the first place that the events now transpiring, whatever their ultimate consequences, have proved to the hilt one aspect of the Zionist case. Not only Zionists but many far-sighted Englishmen have maintained ever since the first World War that a strong Jewish Palestine is vitally important for strengthening and stabilizing the position in the middle east and affording maximum protection to the Suez Canal. As long as the whole region continued weak, semidesert, underpopulated, and undeveloped, it could oppose little resistance to enemy forces and would, on the contrary, attract them as easy prey to predatory design. The influx and settlement of millions of Jews in Palestine would, it was contended, introduce a virile element passionately attached to the land and the cause of freedom and democracy. The introduction by them of science, technical equipment, and industrial development would vastly strengthen not only Palestine but the whole middle east. That the development of the Jewish National Home in Palestine was not fostered by the mandatory power with greater vigor and determination is one of the major tragedies of our time, not merely from the point of view of the Jewish people but of the democratic world order as well.

5. The oppression of the Jews in Europe over increasingly wide areas offered an exceptional opportunity to carry out this promising program—an opportunity which was utilized to only a limited extent. Unfortunately, the policy of appeasement in vogue before the war also led to an attempt drastically to curtail this process. Instead of accelerating the development of Palestine and thereby strengthening its powers of resistance, it was sought to secure Arab loyalty by sacrificing the natural expansion of the Jewish National Home. Zionism as an issue was first exaggerated beyond its natural importance by the pre-Churchill government, and then the liquidation of the Jewish National Home was dangled before the Arabs, not only of Palestine but of neighboring countries, as a bait to attract their support. In this way the most important pro-British factor in the Middle East was let down while dubious elements who had been in continuous flirtation with the Axis Powers were rewarded and "appeased."

6. Despite the bitter disappointment caused in Jewish circles by this policy as promulgated in the MacDonald White Paper of 1939, the war found the Jews nevertheless resolved to stand by Great Britain unconditionally and to do their utmost to strengthen her position in the Middle East. The Jews of Palestine as well as Europe are not only violently anti-Nazi; affirmatively, they are fanatically devoted to the democratic cause. This is more particularly the case in Palestine, where the core of the Jewish community and its dominating influence is the Federation of Labor, strongly progressive and democratic in spirit.

A brief rehearsal of Jewish efforts to play their part in the struggle is in place.

7. Before the outbreak of the war a proposal was put forward on the part of Jews to bring to Palestine from eastern Europe a selected group of 100,000 young men of military age, on condition that they enter military training immediately on arrival, in order to have available a sizable army of the best human material and of high morale for the defense of the middle east. In view of the policy of the MacDonald White Paper, this proposal had no prospect of being accepted by the British authorities.

8. Immediately upon the outbreak of the war, the responsible Jewish authorities in Palestine called on the Jewish community to register voluntarily for national service. The call was promptly answered by 136,000 men and women. The Palestine Government expressed appreciation of this action, but availed itself of this offer only to a very limited extent.

9. As the war advanced and the problem of shipping arose, Jewish leaders put forward a proposal that, in order to relieve the scarcity of tonnage, a supply base for military purposes be created in Palestine and that all of the resources available in the country, including experienced management, manufacturing plants and equipment, technicians of all kinds, be mobilized for these purposes, that new factories be built if necessary, and that substantial stocks of raw materials and finished goods be accumulated and stored in the country. This proposal met with but a limited response.

10. For many months past the Jewish community of Palestine and the leaders of the Zionist movement in England have pressed for the creation of a Jewish military force to aid in the prosecution of war against the Axis and for the defense of Palestine. This request has been given consideration but the program has not been implemented to the present day. Political reasons, inherited from the era of appeasement, have played their part in the failure to create this force. Only a limited number of Palestinian Jews, whose strength had nevertheless grown to about 10,000, have been accepted and incorporated into the British service. They have participated in the military operations in Libya, East Africa, Greece, and elsewhere, and have given an admirable account of themselves. The gallantry and fighting value of the Palestine troops have been cited by General Wavell in Egypt and General Ball in Eritrea.

It will be recalled that Mr. Churchill has stated that only two Allied divisions were available at any one time for active service in the operations which brought about the Italian defeat in Egypt and Libya. One may be permitted to speculate whether subsequent reverses might not have been avoided had that army been reinforced by the addition of a further two or three divisions of Palestinian Jews.

11. While the Jews were doing their utmost—under existing limitations—to make a maximum contribution to the war effort, the situation in the various countries of the middle east has been steadily deteriorating. Egypt failed to declare war even after its territory was invaded. Syria came under the administration of the Vichy Government with its policy of supine "collaboration" with Germany. In Iraq the growth of pro-Nazi sentiment kept pace with successive German victories and culminated in rebellion. Saudi Arabia has maintained an attitude of neutrality and reserve. Significantly Palestine is the only country in the middle east which has been on the whole actively pro-British. It has been the only country in the middle east which has gone so far as to supply volunteers to the British forces. It is the place in which King Peter of Yugoslavia and his Prime Minister and the Regent of Iraq have taken sanctuary and to which English women and children have been evacuated from Baghdad. If Palestine occupies this unique position and represents a spot which the Allies can regard as terra firma, it is due largely to the presence of a strong, organized Jewish community of 550,000 of unquestioned reliability, whose loyalty is not merely formal and passive, but intense and dynamic. They represent a force which, if utilized to the full, can still play a vital part in that exceedingly important corner of the world.

12. From the point of view of wider strategy, the significance which attaches to the proximity of Palestine to the Suez Canal is obvious. Not merely is the canal one of the world's great trade arteries but its control is of vital interest to Great Britain in the policing of the seven seas. But it can also become a channel through which aggressor powers may send their warships, surface raiders, and submarines to make their way to the South Seas, the Far East, and the Western Hemisphere. Current developments emphasize what has been understood in the past by only a few far-visioned men. Now it can clearly be seen that it is in the interests of a stable and peaceful world order that this waterway linking East and West be flanked by nations that are strong, progressive, and devoted to the principles which underlie our democratic civilization.

13. The assumption that antagonism to the Jews or Zionism is an important factor in the disaffection of parts of the Arab world is fallacious. Neither the people of Egypt, nor of Iraq, nor of other Arab-speaking countries have any deep or sustained interest in the Palestine situation. They are on the whole engrossed in their own problems. Their attitude toward Britain and other western democracies is determined by their local interests, by the degree of effectiveness of Nazi agents, and by their own general outlook. The democratic tradition in these countries is young and weak, the people rather primitive, and the popular attitude one of admiration for force. Among some Arab groups the seed of Axis propaganda has therefore fallen on fruitful soil. Their attitude toward the western democracies is bound to fluctuate with the fortunes of war. Democratic victories will insure their loyalty, while Axis successes will tend to produce the opposite effect.

14. That opposition to Jewish immigration into Palestine could not entail serious consequences in the Arab countries is borne out by the fact that events of far graver importance from the Arab point of view failed to produce serious repercussions. By way of illustration, a few years ago an important province of Syria, the Sanjak of Alexandretta, including the important seaport of that name, was annexed to Turkey with the consent of the French Government. So momentous a step which was susceptible of interpretation as the beginning of the partition of Syria passed off with some local demonstrations in Syria, but without protest on the part of neighboring Arab countries. Iraq, which appears so turbulent today, even refrained from sending a diplomatic note to Ankara or Paris. To assume therefore that the anti-British revolution in Iraq is motivated by resentment over the influx of Jewish refugees in Palestine is fantastic. Such an interpretation can only be characterized as anti-Zionist propaganda.

It is a fact, however, that the former Mufti of Jerusalem, who was responsible for repeated riots and massacres in Palestine and who for years has been a tool of the Axis Powers, encouraged and financed by them, has been living in Baghdad for some time, where he has continued to plot and intrigue against the British. The English press now recognizes him for what he has always been—an Arab Quisling in league with the enemy of democracy, imitating and emulating his master.

15. It is, of course, too late as far as the present war is concerned to change the situation radically in the Middle East and to stabilize it by the creation of a strong Jewish Palestine at this moment. It is not too late, however, to make full use of the patriotism, determination, and fighting qualities of the Palestine Jews. The least that can be done is to place weapons in their hands so that, in certain eventualities, they may defend their frontiers, their homes, and their honor. It would be a great injustice to them to let them meet possible attacks with their bare hands, or to compel them to an attiude of nonresistance and abject submission. If the worst comes to the worst they have the right to go down fighting, if need be, like the Poles or the Greeks.

16. Our information is to the effect that large British and Empire forces are being concentrated in Egypt and other points in the middle east. We have complete confidence in the heroism and capacity of these armies and their commanders and see no ground for panic. But assuming the worst, even a temporary withdrawal from the eastern Mediterranean does not spell the end of Zionism. The future of Zionism is bound up with the future of the democracies in whose ultimate triumph we have the deepest and most unshakable faith. Even if Palestine should be invaded and part of what has been created be destroyed, we shall, when the war is over, begin where we left off. The events of the past years in Europe have established beyond a doubt that the creation of the national home is a desperate necessity, a matter of life and death for the Jewish people. The events of the war have also proved that a strong Jewish Palestine is an essential link in the chain of democratic defenses.

Above all, the Jews have demonstrated their capacities to build in Palestine a modern commonwealth dedicated to the cause of freedom. Upon these foundations we shall continue to build.

War Advocates

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY SAUTHOFF

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to read, now and then, the pugnacious pronouncements of some of our over-age citizens. Very frequently these are men in high places—Cabinet officers, Members of Congress, and even men of the cloth. These warlike utterances of men who preach the gospel make one wonder sometimes just how deeply inculcated are their teachings of the Prince of Peace. Some of them are good collectors, other are builders of huge edifices, but, thank God, the vast majority of them are men of faith, whose greatest care still is the welfare, both material and spiritual, of their people. To that vast group—Jew or gentile, Catholic or Protestant, Christian or non-Christian—I give reverence.

Of course, there are many not of the cloth who are great warriors. They believe in war—for the other fellow. They rattle the saber, beat the drums, and raise their voices in a call to arms.

Hell-Roarin' Harry and Fierce Fighter Frank
Are chafing for war with prestige of high rank;
But while the convoys are braving the deep,
Safely and soundly they'll snore in their sleep.

How true it is that old men make wars which young men have to fight. The following extract is from the Washington Times-Herald:

(By Helen Essary)

I know I should be in a state of rage about something. Columnists should be always. But it's hard to feel mad about anything when the only sounds you hear are the gentle baa-ings of some sheep over on the hillside (oratory again), and the soothing rustle of the wind in the apple orchard beyond the old stone fence.

There isn't even a traffic problem to get upset about in this corner of Virginia, Hot Springs. I haven't seen a stop or go light for days and days.

Still, the knack of getting a mad on hasn't quite left me. A report of the speech of the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning in which that holy old centenarian demanded that the United States go to war with Germany and "take a full and open part in the conflict" has set me to wondering how the church manages so often to let humanity down when spiritual help is most needed.

It would be easier to have faith in orthodox religion if so many of its interpreters were not stupid, inadequate. It isn't surprising that one-half of the world is engaged in murder and the other half is wallowing in vicious hate when you consider the example of the clergy.

Certainly the clergy of the Bishop Manning type. The bishop and the 700 delegates to the one hundred and fifty-eighth annual convention of the Episcopal Diocese of New York who applauded his demand for armed intervention, know that warfare means the breaking of every commandment on which Christianity is founded.

And yet these lofty gentlemen ask that we, the people of the United States, plunge into such filth. The worthy fellows supposedly anointed by God for the purpose of helping poor human beings to be kind, honest, and decent, urge that men go out to kill and steal.

If the clergy were worth the cost of its Sunday go-to-meeting suits, it would have so influenced men and women that there would be no wars. Being a parson when there's only doctrine to preach and a little handshaking to do is no test of a man's fitness as a leader of the Christian faith.

Nor is the building of a cathedral any test of spirituality.

I suppose no really spiritual parson ever got a cathedral built anyhow, and only a smart businessman and a complete pagan ever becomes a bishop. The simple, good pastor seldom has handsome vestments or the velvet-cushioned pews in his tabernacle. It takes a practical man to get anywhere in religion. A practical man who doesn't worry when he fails his people in such times of need as now.

I see by the papers that after Bishop Manning delivered his sweet call to arms, for other people, that a giant halo was made by a sky writer in his honor in the heavens above the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York, where the doughty bishop spoke.

In the synod house some dear soul remarked later that "the bishop had an invisible halo but now has a visible one." However, the identity of the "inspiration" for the sky writing was not revealed. It was assumed that "the smoke formation had been paid for by an anonymous admirer of the bishop."

Probably some fellow who owns munitions stock. Today, I'll skip the advice of Bishop Manning in formulating my creed. * * * I'll take my religion from a source closer to God—find my "sermons in stones," my beliefs "in the running brooks"—and as much good in everything as possible.

What an insane world we make for ourselves. We are such fools. All of us.

The Poll Tax and American Democracy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEE E. GEYER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

ADDRESS OF HON. RUDOLPH G. TENEROWICZ, OF MICHIGAN

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to insert an address by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan, Representative RUDOLPH G. TENEROWICZ, on The Poll Tax and American Democracy. The address was delivered under the auspices of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, the Maryland Building, Washington, D. C., on the blue network of the National Broadcasting Co., on Sunday, May 18, at 6:45 p. m.

The address follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, today the people of the United States are celebrating I Am An American Day. It is well and fitting that such a day should be observed, for it implies all of the historic liberties for which the American people have fought. It means that you and I, as Americans, have the right of freedom of speech, of religion, and assembly. And it stands for those rights guaranteed by a democracy, such as the right to vote, the right to choose in free and honest elections our Presidents, our governors, and our legislators.

But for 10,000,000 Americans today's celebration has a hollow ring. They are Americans, citizens of the United States, but they are denied the right to vote. They have no power to choose their representatives in Congress or in their State legislatures. They are unable to elect any officials, from the President of the United States down to the county sheriff.

This is due to the fact that eight States in the United States retain an antiquated and un-American restriction on suffrage. I refer to the poll tax. Eight States in the South require that before a citizen may go to the polls to choose the officers of his Government he must pay for the right to vote. The poll-tax fee ranges from $1 to $2. In some States the voter is required to pay the poll tax for only the current year. In other States he must pay all past-due poll taxes for the privilege of voting in any election.

The story behind the poll tax is a black page in American life. The history of the American people has been the history of a struggle for an increasing voice in the Government by the people. In 1689 the first rebellion in America was fought by Virginia farmers against a tory English aristocracy which denied them the right to vote. The American Revolution itself was a contest for a government, in the words of the Declaration of Independence, based on the consent of the governed. In the years following the Revolution nearly every American statesman sought to extend the right of suffrage. Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson fought against the landowners and the town merchants who would not trust the people with the right to vote. But the people won and gradually the right to vote was extended regardless of the ownership of property or the payment of taxes.

The modern poll tax was first made a requirement for voting in the South during the heydey of the Populist movement. The first State to adopt it was Mississippi in 1890, and the other Southern States followed in rapid order. By 1908 every State below Mason and Dixon's line required a voter to pay a poll tax.

The purpose of this tax was not to raise revenue or to measure the interest of the citizen in his government. Nor was it levied, as is so often asserted, primarily to keep the Negro from voting. The real reason was stated bluntly by a delegate to the Virginia Constitutional Convention in 1901. I quote: "There is a mass of vicious and incapable whites which must be debarred from suffrage before it will be possible for a better state of things to exist."

Vicious and incapable whites? Who were they? They were the poor tobacco farmers who were protesting against the crushing monopoly of the Tobacco Trust. They were the cotton farmers who were overburdened with mortgages. They were the workers in the towns who wanted relief from a 10- and 12-hour workday. They were the fathers and mothers who wanted a decent education for their children. And these poor people were disfranchised with the result that the officers of their government paid them no heed.

People in all parts of the United States are vitally concerned about this device which keeps the southern people from voting. The effect of the disfranchisement of the common people within the poll-tax States is a matter of self-interest to the people in every State in the Union. The Fourth National Conference on Labor Legislation, held several years ago at the Department of Labor in Washington, reported that the Southern poll-tax States rank lowest in legislation protecting labor, women, and children. Only 1 Southern poll-tax State has a minimum-wage law for women, while 25 of the other States have such legislation, and in that one State, government officials admit that the law is not enforced. Virginia is the only poll-tax State which makes it illegal for women to work more than 48 hours a week. There are twice as many child laborers in the South as there are in the rest of the country. The need for legislation to protect the children is great, yet only one Southern State outlaws child labor for children under 16 years of age. There are only 2 States in the entire country which do not have workmen's compensation laws to protect employees when they are injured. Both of them are poll-tax States.

I mention all of this because it has a meaning for the people not only in the South, but in the rest of the Nation. When working conditions are below the normal standard in the poll-tax States, the workers in the rest of the country are endangered. The cotton mills of New England will move to the South, as they have been moving, to take advantage of a people who have no legislative safeguards. The coal operators of the Nation will try, as they have tried, to force the miners in Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and in the other great coal-producing areas to take lower wages because the miners in Virginia, Tennessee, and Alabama work at a cheaper wage. If their fellow workers in the South must take lower wages and longer hours, then it will not be long before the same working conditions will be foisted upon them. So it is imperative for the welfare of every person throughout the United States to see that the southern people are given the opportunity to subject their Government officials to the test of popular approval.

The poll tax has another effect on the life of the Nation. The 8 poll-tax States send 78 Congressmen and 16 Senators to Washington to help pass our laws. These legislators from the poll-tax States have a great deal to say in determinating what legislation Congress shall pass. And we, in other parts of the Nation, have the right to demand that the legislators from the South listen to the people in their States as we expect our Representatives and Senators to listen to us.

The fact is that the Senators and Congressmen from the poll-tax States are elected by only a fraction of their constituencies. In the 1940 elections, for example, the average vote cast in the poll-tax districts was barely 22,000. But in the other States, where there was no poll tax to disfranchise the people, 128,000 people voted. More votes were cast for two Congressmen in the small State of Rhode Island with a population of 713,000 than were cast in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina with a population of more than 11,000,000 people. Nor were the election figures in the decisive Democratic primaries much larger. In 42 of the poll-tax districts there were no contests, and therefore no primary elections. In the remaining districts the number of voters was still less than one-third the national average.

The past few years have shown that the Legislators from the poll-tax States are not responsive to the 75 percent of the people in their districts who are not able to vote. While Congressmen from other parts of the country, with similar constituencies, have voted for social legislation to protect the rights of labor, to give aid to the unemployed, to promote public-works projects, and slum-clearance programs, the Legislators from the poll-tax States have almost uniformly opposed such legislation.

And they wield a tremendous power. Though they constitute only one-sixth of the Membership of the House and the Senate, they control more than one-third of the major committee chairmanships. Any legislation concerning agriculture, appropriations, banking, foreign relations, the judiciary, naval affairs, or veterans must go through the hands of these gentlemen. They have the power to delay and to prevent the consideration of any legislation which they do not want. And too often the records of these gentlemen indicate that they do not want legislation which is demanded either by many of the people in their own districts or by the people throughout the United States.

So the campaign to abolish the poll tax has become a major national issue. It is not only that we must establish a 100-percent democracy in every part of the United States, but we must protect the interests of the people both inside and outside of the South by making their Congressmen and Senators true representatives of all of the people. The people of the South want the poll tax abolished. They in common with all Americans do not believe that the ability to pay taxes should be a criterion for man's ability to govern himself. We, in the rest of the Nation, should help the southern people to eliminate this blight on democracy.

There is pending in Congress a bill, introduced in the House by Representative LEE E. GEYER of California and in the Senate by Senator CLAUDE PEPPER, of Florida, which would outlaw the collection of poll taxes in Federal elections.

It is very fitting that the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties has joined with a number of southern organizations to sponsor a national anti-poll-tax week to press the campaign to pass this legislation. For the campaign to abolish the poll tax has become a symbol of the struggle to maintain a democracy in the world. If democracy means anything it means the right of the people to govern themselves.

Every believer in democracy should support this bill to restore the right to vote to the southern people. I suggest that you write to your Representatives and urge that they support the Geyer and Pepper anti-poll-tax bills.

Thank you.

Title to Certain Streets in the City of Hot Springs, Ark.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. F. NORRELL

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, on May 14, 1941, when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration H. R. 4590, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, I offered an amendment providing an amount not to exceed $7,000 be appropriated to pay the Federal Government's share of resurfacing and reconstructing Reserve Avenue from its intersection with Cottage Street at the entrance of the Army and Navy Hospital northeasterly to its intersection with Palm Street and that portion of Spring and Laurel Streets immediately adjacent to and surrounding the grounds on which the Government free bathhouses are located. The amendment was to cover the cost of resurfacing that portion of said streets ceded by the Federal Government to the city of Hot Springs, in 1880 for public use.

A point of order against the amendment was made and in the course of discussion some question was injected with reference to the fee simple title. I stated at the time that it was my information that fee simple title was vested in the Government covering one-half of said streets adjacent to the hospital and bathhouses and that the only title vested in the city of Hot Springs was that of public use and supervision, taking the position that the fee simple title was and is now vested in the Federal Government.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] stated that he had been advised that "the title is in the city." This is based upon his information. This colloquy can be found by referring to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of May 14, 1941, pages 4057 to 4059.

On May 15, I requested Hon. Hillory A. Tolson, Acting Associate Director, National Park Service, United States Department of the Interior, to give me a legal opinion with reference to the title to the streets in question, and I received this opinion on May 17, 1941, and herewith I quote same:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, May 17, 1941.

Hon. W. F. NORRELL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. NORRELL: This refers to your recent telephonic conversations concerning the title to certain city streets in the city of Hot Springs, Ark., namely, Reserve Avenue from its intersection with Cottage Street to its intersection with Palm Street, and that portion of Spring Street and Laurel Street immediately adjacent to block 82.

In order to identify the properties under discussion, there is enclosed a plat of a portion of the Hot Springs National Park and vicinity showing the streets involved colored in red and the Government-owned lands bordering the streets colored in blue. The privately owned lands bordering the streets on the south are not colored.

Section 6 of the act of Congress approved on June 18, 1880 (21 Stat. 288), provides in part, as follows:

"That the streets, courts, and alleys and other thoroughfares of the town of Hot Springs, as surveyed, opened, or established by the commissioners and represented on the map of said town, and not included in the permanent reservation, be, and the same are hereby, ceded to the corporation of the town of Hot Springs for public use."

The obvious intent of this provision in the statute was to cede an easement in the streets affected thereby to the town of Hot Springs to be held in trust for the public. It is our view, therefore, that the United States retained title to the underlying fee in the bed of the streets in question, at least to the center thereof, as an abutting owner, and it holds title thereto subject only to the easements for use as public streets granted to the town of Hot Springs by the said statute.

Accordingly, if the streets are hereafter abandoned by the town (now city) of Hot Springs, pursuant to the procedure provided by sections 10028 to 10030, inclusive, of Polk's Digest of Arkansas Statutes, 1937, the public easements in and over the streets held by the city will thereupon merge with the underlying fee, resulting in the vesting of absolute ownership of the streets in the owners of the abutting property.

As long as the public easements in the streets are held by the city and are not vacated in accordance with the above-mentioned statutes, the city has, of course, control over the streets and is charged with the duty of maintaining them in proper condition for public travel. However, we believe that the Federal Government, as an abutting owner and the direct recipient of the usual benefits derived from improved streets, should contribute an equitable amount toward the costs of improving the streets, even though such costs could not legally be assessed against the Government as in the case of private owners.

If we can be of any further assistance in the matter, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Sincerely yours,

HILLORY A. TOLSON,
Acting Associate Director.

Mr. Speaker, I am merely inserting this opinion in order that there may be no question as to where the fee simple title is with reference to the property ceded under this act, because I shall at some future time make additional efforts to secure the desired appropriation for the paving of these streets.

License Fee for School Busses in District Is Unnecessary and Unfair

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a decision handed down Monday in the United States Court of Appeals reinstating the prosecution of the Monumental Motor Tours, Inc., of Baltimore, and Martin J. Graff, a driver, brings to the fore a serious situation that has arisen in connection with the transportation of school children and other sight-seeing groups from the many States into the city of Washington. The action of the Court of Appeals makes it necessary for motorbus operators from other cities to pay a special license fee of $100 if they transport school children and other sightseers from one point of interest to another in the Nation's Capital.

According to the newspaper account of the Court of Appeals' decision, Graff was arrested May 1, 1940, when he brought some tourists to Washington from Baltimore by way of Annapolis. After reaching Washington he delivered his tourists at various hotels and points of interest here and was arrested while waiting at a hotel for them to return to his bus. The police court dismissed charge and the district officials appealed the decision. The decision will affect hundreds of busses which bring parties to Washington each spring and summer from as far away as the west coast, according to the newspaper article.

Mr. Speaker, hundreds of busloads of school children come to Washington every June. Their expenses must be kept at the lowest possible figure. In most cases their expense money has been obtained through various entertainments staged during the year. Because of the lack of finances the transportation problem after reaching Washington has been solved by the operators of busses taking these groups from one point to another within the city. In exacting a $100 fee for the operation of school busses within the District, the District officials are placing a burden which cannot be borne by students and, no doubt, will result in preventing many of these groups from visiting the Nation's Capital.

It is apparent that the sightseeing companies located within the city of Washington are opposed to companies located outside of the District operating their vehicles here and through their insistence, the $100 license fee is to be enforced. It is, no doubt, entirely proper that no outside company should come into Washington and undertake a sightseeing business without proper authority and without paying a reasonable fee but in my opinion, it is equally proper that where an operator engaged in interstate commerce brings in a group from outside, especially where he gets no additional fee for doing so, he should be permitted to carry his own group between all points of interest within the city. This, of course, he cannot do if he is required to pay a $100 license fee unless the fee is included in his contract with church and school groups. It is an unreasonable and unfair tax against such groups.

According to the information which I have been able to gather the only people supporting the $100 license fee on school busses are the sightseeing companies within the city of Washington. I have communications which show that the Washington Board of Trade is opposed to such a tax and I am sure that the majority of the members of Congress are opposed to such an unreasonable license fee. Legislation to correct this unfair situation has been introduced by Representative JESSE WOLCOTT, of Michigan (H. R. 4077), and is now pending in the Committee on the District of Columbia. I take this occasion personally to urge every Member of Congress who believes that the children from his congressional district should be permitted to use their own sightseeing busses while visiting in Washington to appoint himself a committee of one to see that this legislation is immediately reported to Congress and enacted into law.

Action Needed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN JARRETT
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE OIL CITY (PA.) DERRICK

Mr. JARRETT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Oil City Derrick of May 20, 1941:

[From the Oil City (Pa.) Derrick of May 20, 1941]

ACTION NEEDED

President Roosevelt last January conceded that because of the urgency for defense appropriations, nondefense spending should be cut to the bone. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau last month asserted that $1,000,000,000 should be cut out of nondefense costs. Speaker RAYBURN a few days later announced he would urge the White House to initiate a reduction of that amount in the nondefense budget for the coming fiscal year. Of course, the Republicans in Congress and most of the country, day in and day out, for the last few years have called for reduction in the rapidly growing nondefense costs of the Federal Government.

But nobody does anything about it except talk. Everybody, it appears, wants someone else to take the initiative—in other words, wants to pass the buck. Mr. Roosevelt seemingly cannot bring himself to wield the paring knife. Mr. Morgenthau says the job belongs to Congress. Members of that august body retort that they are not going to be left holding the bag—or words to that effect. So nothing is being done, despite unanimous agreement that these appropriations should be cut.

Meanwhile most of us have had an opportunity to do a little figuring on the basis of the proposed higher tax increases. We find—we middle-class folk—that Federal taxes on our incomes this year will be two, three, four—yes—even five times what they were on last year's income. So we have told the good wife we must get along on less. We have cut down some of our luxury spending in order to be able to pay these taxes. In other words, we are pulling in our belts a few notches—that is, all of us are doing so except the Federal Government. There, it is "business as usual."

St. Lawrence Logroll

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER C. PLOESER
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

EDITORIALS FROM THE ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH AND ST. LOUIS GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I extend into the RECORD two editorials, one from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and another from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Both of these editorials sense the administration's intentions on procedure to logroll the St. Lawrence seaway project through the Congress. Such tactics are condemned by both papers.

The editorials follow:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of May 14, 1941]

NO TIME FOR LOGROLLING

It is reported from Washington that advocates of the St. Lawrence seaway may attempt to organize an omnibus bill which would provide not only for the seaway, but also for the Florida ship canal, Passamaquoddy, the Tombigbee development, the Arkansas Valley Authority, and the Columbia River development.

If such a bill were drawn it could be resorted to for only one reason. This would be because groups of special pleaders hope to accomplish through legislative logrolling ends which they had despaired of accomplishing as individual groups.

The logrolling device, however frequently employed, is unworthy of democratic representatives. To use it to put over nondefense projects when the Nation is engaged in a mighty effort to build up its defenses would be little short of criminal.

The St. Lawrence seaway idea has its commendable points, enough of them that its backers could only make a colossal mistake in grouping it with such ill-starred projects as Passamaquoddy and the Florida ship canal. The latter have proved themselves to be nothing more than financial rat holes of the worst sort. They had no useful place even when the motive of many Federal projects was merely to put money in circulation. If the administration revived them now, it would be guilty of sabotaging the defense program.

Canada is decidedly cool to the St. Lawrence project and for the sufficient reason that construction of the seaway would divert energy and money which should go into winning the war. The wise course for both countries is to table this controversial issue until public works are needed to offset the let-down which will inevitably follow the war. That will be time enough to pass on this $270,000,000 water power and navigation project.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of May 18, 1941]

STATUS OF THE SEAWAY

The violent tempo of developments in Europe has so occupied the attention of the President and Congress that nothing has been said recently about the proposed American-Canadian agreement on the St. Lawrence waterways. Presumably both are content to forget about it for the moment, as they concentrate on the problems attending aid to Britain. But a timely warning is hereby uttered, a warning to Congress not to be taken unawares.

It will be recalled that the status of the St. Lawrence project is that of an agreement signed last month by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Mackenzie King. As such it requires for adoption merely the majority vote of any quorum in both Houses of Congress. A treaty requires a two-thirds vote of approval by the Senate. A St. Lawrence treaty was emphatically voted down in 1934. So, although the agreement appears somnolent and unlikely to be called up at this session, it is quite possible for it to be presented at any time when friends of the administration believe the opposition is napping.

This may not be Mr. Roosevelt's intention, but it conceivably could be, and as he classes the waterways project as an emergency enterprise he might press it for passage on that basis, despite the fact that it has nothing to do with immediate defense and requires for completion large sums badly needed for more pertinent defense items.

We didn't need the St. Lawrence waterways project in 1934, and we don't need it now. It is an ill-advised piece of legislation in which the States of the Mississippi Valley are vitally interested, for reasons stated many times. Only recently a new objection to the proposal has been raised, which has direct relation to national defense. Plans are well along for extensive shipbuilding on the Great Lakes. The vessels are of such draught that they can reach the open sea via Lake Michigan, the Illinois and the Mississippi Rivers. But this route cannot be followed if, under the terms of the agreement, Canada controls water levels in Lake Michigan and restricts the flow into the Illinois River at Chicago. In view of the pressing immediate need for ships, common sense alone demands that the inland channel be maintained at present level, or higher. Even granting that the St. Lawrence seaway is needed for defense, which we do not, it could not possibly be completed before 1946, a date too remote to figure in any immediate program.

The Senate disposed of the treaty with finality 7 years ago, but the President has not accepted the verdict. He offers it now under the guise of a defense measure and there are reports in Washington that he has a plan to include the seaway, the Florida ship canal, Passamaquoddy, and several similar projects in an omnibus bill, which he will present to Congress on what has been described as an "all-for-one and one-for-all" basis.

Such maneuvering might get the results he wants. But not if Congress is on its toes. En garde!

Constructive Action and Leadership

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JERRY VOORHIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

ARTICLE BY THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING CO.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, because it shows so clearly how a progressive company can maintain continuous operation without any change being made in our wage-hour legislation, and because I believe the Timken Roller Bearing Co. is entitled to a word of commendation from the Congress for what it has done, I am pleased to include with my remarks the following material on how that company has solved the problem of what has been called "the week end" without any considerable amount of overtime and without a word of complaint against constructive legislation:

HOW THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING CO. SOLVED THE WEEK-END BLACK-OUT

Back in August of 1939 the Timken Roller Bearing Co. foresaw the huge amounts of Timken steel, Timken tubing, and Timken bearings that would be required as the defense program gained headway. Steps were taken at that time—20 months ago—to inaugurate a system that would enable us to keep our equipment running 168 hours a week (24 hours a day for 7 days) and thus eliminate week-end black-outs while still complying with the 40-hour workweek. Keeping step with the expansion of defense needs during this 20-month period, one department after another has been put on this schedule.

In brief, this anti-black-out schedule calls for three 8-hour shifts per day up to 40 hours per week. By having four crews (instead of three) to handle these three shifts, we are able to rotate the working time for each crew so that it works 40 hours a week (the four crews thus keeping the equipment running 160 hours a week).

By an ingenious scheduling arrangement of shifts and crews, each crew works five extra shifts over each period of 20 weeks (for which overtime is paid). These five extra shifts for each of the four crews are all that is necessary to bring the equipment workweek up to the 168-hour total.

This schedule has been so carefully worked out that every man works 5 days in a row and then is off at least 48 hours, after which he changes shifts. And over each period of 20 weeks, each man has five Sundays off. The shift schedule runs 20 weeks and then repeats without change.

The inside pages of this pamphlet reproduce a copy of the schedule chart which shows in detail exactly how the plan works. You will note that the three shifts are listed in the left-hand column; and that the four crews are designated by the letters A, B, C, and D. If John Doe is a member of crew A, the hours designated by the letter A on this chart show exactly the hours and shifts he will work during the entire 20-week period.

Elucidation of Philippine Export-Control Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRED L. CRAWFORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, May 19, the Philippine export-control law—Senate Joint Resolution 76—passed the House. Its sponsor was the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, which held hearings on the subject.

Through a misunderstanding I was not able to ask him when the bill was under discussion a question to which he had previously agreed to answer in the affirmative and which was discussed in the Villamin memorandum inserted by me in the RECORD of May 15. That question was this: Does the law include the authorization to the Federal Government to procure the Philippine products rendered unexportable by the operation of the export-control law to form reserves and stock piles of them? I wish to ask him this question now. His affirmative answer would remove the question of whether it includes, or not, that authorization from the twilight zone. I wish to anticipate his affirmative reply. And I wish to thank him for the legislative speed with which he pushed through the legislation, which I have favored from the beginning.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, it does authorize the American Government to commandeer these vital materials just as it now has the right in the States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make this colloquy and a pertinent memorandum by Mr. Villamin, a Filipino economist, who has made a study of the subject of export control, to go with the discussion of the measure on May 19.

UNITED STATES STOCK PILES OF ESSENTIAL MATERIALS AND PHILIPPINE PRODUCTS

(By Vicente Villamin, May 19, 1941)

This memorandum sets forth what the Federal Government is doing in the matter of procuring and building reserves or stock piles of strategic and essential materials covering their statistical position as of 3 months ago.

Products to be procured as the result of the operation of the export-control law in the Philippines will add new materials to the stock piles. Among them are chrome, manganese and iron ore, hemp fiber and rope, logs and lumber, and copra and coconut oil. Substantial amounts of these commodities now go to China, Japan, and Russia.

The American Government has from the beginning of the World War realized the vital importance of having reserves of materials essential to the health, needs, and defense of the American people.

As far back as 1938 the Treasury Department started obtaining essential products, among them certain kinds of drugs, and stored them away for future use.

In the same year, in a barter agreement with the British Government, the Commodity Credit Corporation acquired 85,000 tons of rubber. At that time it was reported that the United States had only from 6 to 10 months' supply of that staple.

Under an arrangement with the same government, there are being accumulated in the United States some 250,000,000 pounds of British-owned wool. The supply of this commodity has, it is believed, increased greatly.

Since June 1940 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation through its subsidiaries has placed orders for the following articles:

(a) Defense Supplies Corporation—300,000 tons of Chilean nitrates.

(b) Rubber Reserves Co.—430,000 tons of crude rubber.

(c) Metals Reserves Co.—200,000 tons of chrome, of which 100,000 tons will come from the Philippines; 235,000 tons of copper from South America; 75,000 tons of tin from the Far East; and 2,000,000 tons of manganese ore.

The Office of Production Management is encouraging the production in continental United States of strategic and essential products to meet the irreducible minimum of the Nation's requirements when ocean bottoms become short and overseas transportation becomes too perilous. Its program embraces the promotion of the manufacture of synthetics, the increase of supplies under private ownership, and the economical and controlled utilization of strategic and essential materials.

Finally, the Department of Agriculture is working on long-range projects to produce in certain Latin-American countries rubber, quinine, manila fiber, and other tropical and subtropical agricultural staples which are now imported into the United States from without the Western Hemisphere.

I wish to mention here that in a conversation with Representative ANDREW J. MAY, the sponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 76 and chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs which handled the measure, and Representative FRED L. CRAWFORD, the former, answering my query and that of Representative CRAWFORD, stated that the measure included the authorization to the Federal Government to procure the products that would be rendered unexportable on account of the export-control law. On account of a slight legislative misadventure Representative CRAWFORD was not able to ask the question, to which Mr. MAY was ready to answer affirmatively, whether that authorization was within the intent and purport of the measure, but he is doing it belatedly so Mr. MAY's statement would become a part of the elucidation of the law.

Although that statement is not legally binding, it is nevertheless expressive of the legislator's intent, and is therefore of persuasive authority in the interpretation of the extent and full meaning of the law. Without that statement the question whether the Federal Government is authorized to procure unexported Philippine products might be left in the twilight zone. It is therefore basically important to have this point clear beyond peradventure of doubt.

The procurement by the Federal Government of Philippine products to be affected by the export-control law would serve to stabilize the Philippine economic position, and that in itself would promote the cause of Philippine-American national defense by strengthening the economic sinews of the Filipino people and stiffening their morale.

The present case is another proof of the generosity of the United States in her relations with the Philippines. It is also demonstrative of the fact that loyal cooperation by the Philippines with the United States is a mighty good policy for the Filipino people to follow.

It would stand reiteration to say that the Filipino people are at one with the United States in any action, effort, or plan that would redound to the security and defense of the domain over which the American flag waves in sovereignty.

A Native at Large

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

ARTICLE BY JONATHAN DANIELS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, because it discusses a very real problem faced by most Americans, and because it is written by one of the really great figures of our time, I ask unanimous consent that the following article by Jonathan Daniels be printed in the RECORD with my remarks:

[From the Nation of April 12, 1941]

A NATIVE AT LARGE

(By Jonathan Daniels)

"THE GREATEST OF THESE—"

The multiplicity of British and other war charities has the home folks confused in the home towns, where there is a real and increasing desire to give. Britain's people in their tragedy seem neighbors now. Main Street ladies are ready to strip kitchens of mail-order aluminum pots and pans to provide the parts for British bombers. But in the enthusiastic confusion there is a real possibility that both the home folks and the essential foreign war charities may suffer together.

Sometimes it is hard to tell whether the multiplicity of the good-intentioned or the ubiquitousness of the racketeers does the more harm. I suspect that the racketeers are less dangerous than the men of good will. Also, I know from the small towns that the highly organized good will coming from the great cities under big names often fails to reach hearts. The reason for this is the almost rank growth of local individualism in good deeds which has flourished among people who see no reason why they should not go right ahead where they are, collecting for Britain on their own initiative and according to their own plans.

By now a certain able young businessman I know in a small American city must have become a somewhat puzzled national figure. He had plenty of work of his own to do—and little time of his own to spare. But he decided it was his duty to assume the local leadership of one of the largest and best of the organizations seeking gifts for the relief of the people of Britain. He had hardly taken on the job, however, before he discovered that he was not alone. The town seemed full of collectors, each certain of his—or generally her—cause. With great good sense he called a meeting of every type and kind of the friends of the British.

Not all the collectors came. A good many did. There was a preacher who decided he would rather collect funds from school children for British children than work with a national organization of the same kind working in the same way. There was a lady restricting herself to work among the D. A. R. There was a Baptist lady ready to lead her Baptist sisters into any good relief work, and in a hurry to be off. A man who had been collecting pledges of a dollar a head from firemen and policemen, with which to purchase a bomber, was not present. Others were, and enthusiastically, but all with a growing consciousness of confusion. The young businessman wanted a central local committee for charity drives for the suffering in England and elsewhere, similar to the community chest for local drives. He may get it. The confusion is incentive to sense.

But beyond the scope of any such local body is the mail, which comes pleading persuasively from far away. Much of its pleading is for excellent causes. In my own mail one morning were the cry that "there must be no black-out of the Bible" and some deeply appealing save-the-children facts. Both appeals were from highly reputable organizations which are trying to do excellent work and need money to do it with. There are many more such. My only feeling is that the diverse drives of the diverse good causes may do all of them harm.

Of course, there are the racketeers. The world will never bleed so badly that they will not be with us. In the last great war a board named by Secretary of War Baker reported that out of 3,000 money-raising appeals, involving upward of a billion dollars, only 300 were worthy. The State Department by its license requirements has already made some effort to reduce the percentage of racketeering in this war. It has been reduced, undoubtedly. A national agency has been set up to help divide the good from the wicked; it has found organizations about which it urges serious inquiry before any contributions are made—and some of them have heart-touching names.

I am not sure there is any certain way to protect the people in the home towns from either foolish organizations or essentially wicked ones. But of one thing I am sure: a great deal of energy—much of it straight from the heart—is reaching from great centers to little towns, to distant States, for gifts. And in those little towns it begins to look as if not only money but horse sense is needed. The small towns, I think, would like to send back to the organizations in the big cities an appeal of their own—that they get the people of good will together, reduce the number of their organizations, budget their businesses, and cut down the costs of duplicating postage and telephone bills.

If the good organizations will get together, we people in the country will have less trouble in spotting the racketeers. Today the confusion of good works is a rank-growing jungle in which racketeers with only a cash interest in our hearts get beyond them to our pocketbooks. Honest directors of war charity must thin this forest if they hope to get rid of the weeds.

Tribute to a National Leader

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

POEM BY HORACE C. CARLISLE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit a poem entitled "The Lion of Idaho," which was written by Horace C. Carlisle in tribute to the late Senator, Hon. William E. Borah:

THE LION OF IDAHO

The Lion of Idaho sleeps in his lair,
His roar in the Senate no longer is heard—
When Borah arose every Senator there,
In worshipful silence, imbibed every word.
Those memorable speeches of his, all designed
To help make the Nation what it ought to be,
Are in the archives of the past now enshrined,
A heritage there for the brave and the free.

The Lion of Idaho sleeps in his lair;
But long may the echoes of his words resound
With increasing eloquence, sweet as a prayer,
That right, sacred honor, and truth may abound.
Today our best statesmen in Congress revert
To Borah's great speeches, enshrined in the past;
For fearlessly he, ever on the alert,
Fought wrong, in the open on down to the last.

The Lion of Idaho sleeps in his lair,
Watched over by spirits dispatched from above,
As guardian angels in answer to prayer
From thousands of hearts to the Father of Love.
The throngs who revered him pass silently by—
The life that he lived has made sacred the sod—
Where his peaceful ashes will hopefully lie
Till called into action anew by his God.

—Horace C. Carlisle.

Too Costly a Luxury

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN JARRETT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE OIL CITY (PA.) DERRICK

Mr. JARRETT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Oil City Derrick of May 20, 1941:

[From the Oil City (Pa.) Derrick of May 20, 1941]

TOO COSTLY A LUXURY

Says a commentator, on the proposed St. Lawrence waterway and power project:

"To examine the proposal from a national-defense standpoint," he writes, "it is proposed to complete the project in 5 years. Are the American people to understand that the United States is going to be in the war for the next 5 years? Most diplomats and military authorities believe the war will reach a climax this year—certainly not later than 1942—because of sheer economic exhaustion and moral break-down. Why should the United States be laying out a 5-year program, involving expenditures of billions of dollars, when it is a reasonable hope the war will be over in a year or two?

"Let's examine this proposed St. Lawrence waterway further as an economic venture. Certainly its benefits would be local and limited. Congress could take the same money and build four concrete highways 30 feet wide from New York to California, and have enough money left to build four concrete highways 30 feet wide north and south across the country from Canada to Mexico. Would anyone deny that such benefits as this would not have a higher economic value as a permanent improvement to the country and extend its benefits more broadly to the people?"

More than the money is involved in the St. Lawrence project. It would divert tremendous quantities of men and materials from genuinely necessary defense and aid-to-Britain undertakings. In normal times, the project, at best, should be regarded as being of highly dubious value. In these times, when the country is being asked to rally behind the cause of total defense, it should be regarded for what it is—a nonessential luxury we cannot possibly afford.

Education as a Means of National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

ADDRESS OF HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH OF WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege last evening to attend the graduation exercises of the Homestead Junior High School at Dailey, W. Va. I include at this point the following commencement address which I delivered:

I deeply appreciate the opportunity to return to my county and State and speak briefly on education as a means of national defense. I ask you to think about what we mean by the term "education"; what education has been; what it is today, and how it can be used as an instrument to help preserve this America of ours as the priceless possession of many generations to come.

It is pleasant to begin this talk by pointing out to you that the United States is still the home of education which is free, that we have our American way of education, democratically controlled. One hundred years' public education has stood here, helping men to climb to greater heights. Our educational system has stood the shock of years—it has its imperfections, to be sure, but today it has come through trying years—years that have rocked the world and that have filled it with wars, hates, and tears. Now the question is what can it do, what is it doing to defend this great Nation?

Once the whole emphasis in education was on the mastery of the "three R's." They were taught as unrelated drill with little reference to the life interests of the needs of the pupil or the community.

A transition has taken place, with shift of emphasis on the "three R's" in terms of growth, learning, and skills. The public schools today teach not only academic subjects but they also teach trades and occupations. Schools today fit more nearly into the fabric of the Nation. They set up conditions that will provide the best possible growth of citizenship in various skills and techniques. Our schools are, indeed, far different from schools of Europe, where learning is displaced by fallacious ideologies, where truth and tolerance and respect for men as human beings have long since been discarded by dictators.

Our educational system has evolved into one of our chief means of character building, and I think our educational institutions will be bulwarks against the tides of intolerance, as United States Commissioner of Education John W. Studebaker, pointed out the other day.

He said, "Our country is characterized by many differences in its social and cultural origins and its political and religious persuasions." So we must build even stronger our educational institutions if we would live together in peace and in harmony and if we would continue to be a nation united in defense of our freedoms.

I asked the Commissioner's office to give me some facts concerning the program of education in relation to national defense. I can assure you that it was very gratifying to learn that the schools of the Nation, including those of West Virginia, are carrying out splendidly the task that was assigned to them last year by the President and the Congress. That task involves training of two types in order that the Nation would have enough skilled workers and technicians to adequately man defense industries for the battle for production.

Primarily, the national-defense training program is predicated on the existence of a public vocational education movement which had its beginning during the World War. Mr. L. S. Hawkins, of the old Federal Board for Vocational Education, has been designated as director of the national-defense training program for skilled workers.

In order to illustrate how vocational education is serving as a means of national defense, I quote some facts from a recent article by Mr. Hawkins.

I find public vocational schools—1,050 of them—in every State are training an army of skilled workers. This training is along democratic lines, in the hands of the States and counties, thus preserving the accepted traditional method of American education.

These vocational schools have trained many thousands of men who belonged to the army of the unemployed during the world-wide depression. Thousands of these workers are at work in airplane plants, shipyards, and other defense industries. They are living proof that American education can be and is a vital democratic means of helping to make this Nation safe from foreign aggression.

Other thousands of workers are receiving "upgrading" for more responsible jobs in defense industries.

This program of training has established literally thousands of classes for out-of-school rural and city youths. Many of them were caught in the maw of economic depression. Today they are being given a chance to learn skills and become apprentices or one-occupation workers in defense industries. In tomorrow's world many of these youths are likely to be key figures of American industry.

There are 52 boys in the eighth and ninth grades who are taking industrial arts in this homestead school.

So, in addition to forming a first-line industrial defense of the Nation, vocational education, harnessed to the needs of the Nation, is opening new doors of opportunity.

West Virginia is receiving the benefits of this expanding program of training.

In several training centers, men are being trained as welders, foundrymen, machine-shop workers, or aircraft mechanics. Around 1,000 of these trainees have been placed in West Virginia defense industries. W. W. Trent, State superintendent of schools, reveals there are defense-training classes for out-of-school youth in 32 of the State's 55 counties, with a total of 3,900 young men enrolled. Several new shops for this training program have been built with Federal funds—at Charles Town, Bell, Parkersburg, Huntington, and Wheeling. The doors of the University of West Virginia have been thrown open to men to learn the necessary skills of defense industries.

It is good to learn that the influence of this training program reaches not only the trainees. Management and labor are brought together in a State advisory committee, representing organized industry and organized labor. In West Virginia the highest representatives of both industry and organized labor help to plan the training programs based on the needs of defense industries.

Along with the defense training program goes the philosophy—a lesson perhaps we have needed to learn—that education for skilled jobs in overalls is just as essential as other forms of education.

What else can education do to help make certain the defense of our shores? There are perhaps several rather important things, but one seems especially important. I believe every State can promote defense to a degree undreamed of if programs of adult civic education, aided by the Federal Government as in the case of vocational defense training, are adopted. Because I believe such programs are vital to the Nation's security, I introduced a bill, H. R. 1070, in the House on January 3. This bill provides for an attack on illiteracy, provides for naturalization education, establishes public-affairs forums.

I believe that this program is essential to reinforce education as a means of national defense. It would place in the hands of the States means of teaching adults over 18 years old the exercise of their citizenship responsibilities. It would make for better citizenship by teaching illiterates to write and read and understand current news and articles on public affairs by teaching the background of American history, government, economics, and sociology. Teaching the democratic approach to our local, State, and National problems through discussion by citizens themselves, I conceive of as being as important to national defense as building battleships. I believe that educating men and women to the responsibilities of democratic life is the surest means of attacking the "fifth column" problem.

When men and women understand what America stands for—and civic education means teaching them to understand—this Nation need fear no borer from within or Trojan horse of any color. Fascism, nazism, or communism of any brand can only grow in the fertile soil of ignorance, oppression, and intolerance.

In education we have long realized that just as Hitlerism has made a mockery of German education and science by exercising ruthless political and racial control, so has Stalinism purged teachers and textbooks, classrooms and laboratories, until no free thought can exist in any totalitarian country.

Thus, as a defense measure, we must guard education itself in order to assure ourselves that our traditional freedoms will live. We must not allow native or foreign totalitarians to confuse us in defense of our gains. Democracy cannot be saved by totalitarian methods—it can be saved by expansion of the democratic process. America will be defended by education that does not use its instrumentalities for indoctrination — education that is based on sound theory and practice, that implores clear thinking and action when the Nation is on the march. Education which practices democracy can be perhaps the greatest means of all in defense of democracy.

A vital need today is that kind of education which will cause all the citizens to understand the relation of the battle of production to our related civic problems.

I am sure all of you know that if we have education to defend America against invasion, against poverty, disease, and injustice, plus education to plan for the well-being in the post-defense period, no powers on earth can conquer us. The hope of democracy is the achievement of goals through education for all its families, for all men, women, and children. They are America—whose destiny will be shaped by the ponderable and imponderable forces of learning.

In closing I want to say I believe it is necessary to permeate the plain people of America with democratic direction. We can't face our fundamental tasks with careless thinking; if we do, we evade them. It is our task in this country to realize the ideals of human life—the true task of Americanism.

Westbrook Pegler Lynches a Community

REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT L. F. SIKES

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, in Florida a man has been murdered—perhaps lynched. I say perhaps lynched because four men seized and killed him. There was no mass activity. It is a tragic thing. A fine city and a great State feel it deeply. I believe that justice will be done. I do not condone lynching.

One Westbrook Pegler writes about that unhappy incident. But he does not direct his statements primarily against lynching. He directs them against Florida. He condemns. He slanders. Figuratively, he burns at the stake an old, cultured, patriotic city and a State whose outstanding contributions place her in the front rank of American progress.

I doubt that Pegler has ever seen northwest Florida. Many Members of this House have been there. I believe my colleagues hope, with me, that Pegler will not again presume to write about my State until his knowledge of Florida and of American history improves. Name calling is neither literature nor public service.

Following is an article from the Tallahassee (Fla.) Daily Democrat:

[From the Tallahassee (Fla.) Daily Democrat of May 20, 1941]

WESTBROOK PEGLER LYNCHES A COMMUNITY

The only excuse we can think of for Westbrook Pegler is that he is ignorant. But ignorance is said to be no excuse under the law, and it is certainly no excuse for a writer who offers his opinions to a nation.

The Pegler column for May 19 leads a verbal lynching bee directed at the beautiful, orderly, cultured community of Quincy.

Because a crime was committed near Quincy a short time ago, Westbrook Pegler attacks the community and this section of Florida with a degree of brutality seldom encountered in the press of a civilized nation. This convicts Pegler himself of the charges he hurls with abandon at the community, the section, and the State.

The crime which aroused Pegler's ire was murder. A man was accused of attacking a 12-year-old girl. He was shot to death by four men who have not been identified. This has all the outward aspects of a private vengeance slaying. It was not a lynching.

A lynching is an informal, extra-legal, and often misdirected attempt to apprehend and punish criminals, carried out by a large section of a community. A private vengeance slaying is what the French call a crime of passion, and results from the anger of one or a small group of relatives, neighbors, or friends against a person who has harmed someone close and dear to them. There is no similarity whatever between a community effort at extra-legal justice and a private vengeance slaying.

It makes not the slightest difference whether the victim is white or black. What is a vengeance slaying, if directed against a white person, does not become a lynching simply because the victim is a Negro. It is murder in either case, but the community is more responsible for the action of a large section of its population than for the private crimes committed by one or a few individuals.

In this case, the community of Quincy can be held no more responsible for the crime than for a robbery committed there. The residents of Quincy had no more foreknowledge that the crime would be committed and no greater opportunity to prevent it than the residents of Chicago.

It is, therefore, an uncivilized act to smear a fine community with the faults of some persons who may live nearby. Pegler says the episode "in a little town in northwest Florida * * * could be matched only in cultural exercises of the superrace of Adolf Hitler." To which we reply: "Pegler's unfair attack upon Quincy could be matched only by the beastial excesses of the smear propaganda of Herr Goebbels."

So much for the murder and for Pegler's attempt to lynch Quincy without a hearing and without knowledge of the facts.

The rest of the article is even less truthful. On general grounds Pegler attacks Quincy without mercy and without shadow of truth.

He says, "The section of the country in which this horror occurred is in the social and intellectual slum which, according to the hearsay historians of Florida, was populated by low whites who fled from the other Southern States, notably Georgia and Alabama, to escape service in the Civil War * * *."

It is difficult to imagine a sentence with a greater number of errors. To refute them all fully would require columns of space. It may suffice here to point out that Quincy, though it has no college, is much like a college town, with its clean, shaded, paved streets, its well-kept homes and gardens, its air of culture and gentle living, its interest in the general welfare and in community progress, its ample income without noisy and dirty factories. If Quincy is in a social and intellectual slum, so is Cambridge, Mass.

And what is this about Quincy's population fleeing from service in the Civil War? How absurd that is. If Westbrook Pegler would read written history instead of listening to "hearsay historians," who evidently never heard any facts, he would discover that Florida was one of the first Southern States to secede, that Quincy had been settled and was a thriving, cultured community for half a century before that time, and that anyone fleeing to that city would have run right into the heart of Confederate activity in Florida. Far from providing a haven for cowards, Quincy and these communities along the Alabama-Georgia line put their tottering old men and their beardless boys into the battles of Olustee and Natural Bridge.

In his general attacks on Florida, Pegler follows his usual line of singling out the worst isolated conditions and presenting them in such a way as to give the reader the impression that they are typical.

No one can deny that there are poverty-stricken families in Florida just as there are in New York's slums. No one can deny that there is crime in our State and a fair share of official corruption. But poverty, squalor, crime, and corruption are no more typical of Florida than of any other section or any other State. It is still feasible for any observer to find flowers or weeds anywhere, and Pegler searches for and finds only weeds.

It is a sad thing for a man to become a weed seeker. It may be that we should censor him less than we pity him for a form of mental illness. Perhaps, after all, it is those who are unsure of their own culture and refinement who go about frantically seeking out and pointing to the shortcomings of the most depraved individuals in order that they may reassure themselves that they have some claim to superiority over at least the dregs of humanity.

Pegler suggests, perhaps with a flash of insight into his own personality, that the white men who persecute Negroes do so because they lack other means to demonstrate their superiority. It is even sadder to find a man who must go one step lower to find someone to feel superior to and to persecute.

Britain Delivers the Goods Without Convoys

REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have in my possession a copy of an advertisement inserted in Monday's newspapers by a large Washington department store announcing the sale of 59,671 pieces of fine British-made china, earthenware, and porcelain at one-fourth the prices ordinarily charged. The advertisement includes a large drawing of crates, barrels, and boxes of British-made merchandise, being unloaded from a ship on an American wharf. The caption of the advertisement reads:

Britain delivers the goods.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that here is a potent argument against the use of convoys. If Great Britain is in a position to flood American department stores with British-made merchandise, such as is being done, why should it be necessary for the United States to convoy American-made arms and munitions to Great Britain? In other words, it seems to me that if Great Britain can bring them, she can take them, without convoys.

The Washington department store responsible for this advertisement now has four large show windows filled with displays of British-made merchandise and large signs conveying the message that—

Britain delivers the goods.

Flooding of the American markets with British-made merchandise substantiates statements made on the floor of the House during the debate on the lease-lend bill to the effect that Great Britain is doing business as usual despite the war, while American factories are in wartime production and the American manufacture of competitive products is being curtailed. In other words, Mr. Speaker, while a minority in America is crying for more and more aid to Britain, Great Britain is doing business as usual and is, apparently, embarking upon a trade-war program that may eventually crush the United States economically.

I do not believe that the advertisements of sales of British-made merchandise in American stores will cause the American manufacturer to become very optimistic and gleeful. In fact, I rather imagine he grows more pessimistic as he strolls through American department stores and sees great stocks of British-made merchandise on sale, while at the same time he is worrying about where and how he will raise the money to meet his increased tax bills next year—increased tax bills necessitated by the New Deal's decision to fight and pay for Great Britain's war.

British soaps, china, earthenware, clothing materials, tobaccos, and other articles of British make are growing more conspicuous in American department stores each week. To me this proves that Great Britain has every intention of holding her world trade to the detriment of the American farmer, worker, and manufacturer, whose money is being used by the administration in power to pay the bill.

All of this, Mr. Speaker, recalls to mind that not so many years ago Great Britain boycotted American-made merchandise, and during that boycott the countrysides of England were plastered with signs reading "Buy only British-made goods."

How much longer, may I ask, are the people of the United States expected to play the role of "Uncle Sap"?

A Problem To Be Met

REMARKS

OF

HON. REID F. MURRAY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, when prices rise there is always a consumer resistance. This is the fact even if the selling price of the commodity is far below cost of production to the producer.

We should have a Federal agency that represents the producer, the consumer, and the distributor of foodstuffs to meet this situation.

The following article is from the Washington Times-Herald of today:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of May 22, 1941]

CANADIAN FOOD PRICES LOWER THAN UNITED STATES LEVEL—BRITISH-AID BUYING SENDS DAIRY COSTS UP IN STORES HERE

(By Walter Kiernan)

NEW YORK, May 21.—Extension of Government all-out aid to Britain into the field of dairy purchasing led to a paradoxical situation today in which Canada was putting butter, eggs, and cheese on the consumer's table at prices considerably lower than they were obtainable in the United States.

Prices reported for New York City and Toronto by one grocery chain which operates coast-to-coast in both countries put butter at 39 cents in New York and 30 in Toronto; grade-A eggs at 39 in New York, 25 in Toronto, and store cheese at 23 in New York and 19 in Toronto.

CANADIAN PRICES LOWER

In March, butter in New York was 34 cents; eggs 29, and cheese was 19.

Except for coffee, Canada's consumer prices for other food staples also were considerably below those of the United States in the stores of the chain. Comparative prices were:

Chuck roast:
New York		$0.18
Toronto		.17
Round roast:
New York		.29
Toronto		.25
Prime ribs:
New York		.25
Toronto		.23
Meat loaf:
New York		.25
Toronto		.19
Porterhouse:
New York		.35
Toronto		.29
Bread:
New York	36 oz.	.15
Toronto	48 oz.	.15
New potatoes:
New York	5 lbs.	.15
Toronto	5 lbs.	.15
Coffee:
New York	2 lbs.	.39
Toronto	1 lb.	.39
Tea:
New York	½ lb.	.27
Toronto	½ lb.	.30
Cabbage:
New York	1 lb.	.04
Toronto	1 lb.	.04

In New York the difference in prices of dairy products between the United States and Canada was charged by the antiprofiteering council to the Federal buying program for Britain.

CHEAPER TO IMPORT

The purchase of evaporated milk and cheese has driven up the cost of butter, the council asserted, and huge carload purchases of eggs has sent up the price of that commodity.

Dairymen are suggesting that if the butter price climbs appreciably higher, it will be cheaper to import from Canada.

That would create another strange situation in which American dairy products would go to Britain while Canadian products were bought for the United States.

HENDERSON STUDIES RISING PEPPER PRICES

The rising prices of pepper, subject to speculation because of an acute shortage of shipping from the East Indies, will receive the special attention of the Government today.

Price Control Administrator Leon Henderson met with a committee from the New York Produce Exchange to discuss "undesirable speculative activity" on the pepper market.

The following article is from the Foley (Ala.) Onlooker of May 15, 1941:

[From the Foley (Ala.) Onlooker of May 15, 1941]

BOTTOM DROPS FROM BENEATH LOCAL MARKET—ONE-FOURTH OF LOCAL DEAL ON MARKET AS PRICES CONTINUE TO DROP

The bottom dropped out of the 2-week-old Baldwin potato deal here with only one-fourth of the crop being dug.

The same potatoes quoted here last Wednesday at $1.20 and 60 cents are being sold today for 80 cents and 10 cents, while White Rose variety is quoted at $1 and 20 cents for No. 2's.

Shipment continues to pick up throughout the county as Foley led with the largest day with 119 cars moving on Tuesday.

Shipments over the county by cars are—Foley, 623; Loxley, 369; Robertsdale, 361; Summerdale, 362; Bay Minette, 13, making a total of 1,728 cars shipped by rail from the the county to northern markets.

Mr. Speaker, from these you will note that new potatoes are sold by the farmers in Alabama at 80 cents per hundredweight, or 48 cents per bushel, and retailed in New York at $3 per hundredweight, or $1.80 per bushel.

In old CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS I find where a New York Congressman was fighting the high cost of living in New York City when at the same time it cost more to transport a carload of poultry two blocks from the terminal to the killing pens than the cost of transportation from the midwestern State to New York City. This was due to the city racketeers of that time.

What is surprising about the fact that Canadian food prices are lower than the United States level? This is also shown in the fact that we imported 140,604 pounds of butter from New Zealand and 5,766 pounds from Canada the first 3 months of 1941. Further, it is well known that Canada is largely an agricultural country and has millions of bushels of surplus wheat to be shipped when a favorable market can be found for it.

The sooner President Roosevelt can get this price-control situation in hand, the better the consumer, producer, and distributor will be in a position to handle his business. We cannot continue to have price juggling by one small group of people to whom the power may or may not have been legally delegated.

Temperance Essential in Modern Mechanized Armies

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

ARTICLE BY COL. GEORGE E. SKINNER, RETIRED, UNITED STATES ARMY MEDICAL CORPS

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have received many letters from people throughout the Nation expressing concern over reports of the alleged excessive use of intoxicating liquors by our soldiers. I am convinced these reports are greatly exaggerated. Commanding officers of our military posts have advised me that only a very small minority of the soldiers today are using alcohol. They say most of the men seek to advance in their training and are fully aware that modern mechanized armies must be sober armies.

Col. George E. Skinner, M. D., Medical Corps, United States Army, has written an interesting and informative article on this subject for the magazine Signs of the Times. I include Colonel Skinner's article:

[From the Signs of Times]

(By Col. George E. Skinner, Medical Corps, United States Army, retired)

In past days soldiers, in general, have had an unhappy reputation relative to the use of intoxicants. But, as in many other lines of endeavor, a bad name is often fastened on a group by a very small minority of that group, for one drunken soldier will attract much more attention than the rest of a company who are quietly carrying out their appointed duties.

In the early history of our Army, when the soldier's pay reached the magnificent sum of $3 a month, and $1 of that was deducted for medical and other expenses, it is obvious that he could not go to many excesses. And in recent years there is no record of such extravagance in the matter of his pay that he could "splurge" very often. On pay day, if a few did indulge, it was always a very small percentage of the group, and these as a rule were soon disposed of.

Today our development is so largely mechanical and our equipment moves at such speed that even the most ordinary routine of daily life requires the clearest brain and most accurate and rapid muscular action possible. This is demonstrated daily by the number of traffic injuries, and as traffic is now mostly automobile, the injuries and deaths from this cause are appalling. A large percentage of them are the direct result of the use of alcoholic drinks. Why? We have just mentioned that life now depends largely upon the quick action of the mind and a rapid response of the muscles to the needs of the body. The first action of alcohol is to break up the connection between the mind and body, to confuse the mind, and to slow muscular action. Hence even if the mind notes that the body is in danger and orders the muscles to act, the order is badly mixed up in reaching the muscles, and the response may be directly opposite from what it should be. The worst of it is that the owner of the mind does not realize the difficulty and proceeds serenely on his destructive way until he is either killed, injured, or taken out of circulation in some other way.

These reactions to alcohol operate as surely in the Army as in civil life. In our present defense needs, the protective armament is very largely mechanical and often exceedingly complicated, requiring the finest training and muscular response (coordination) possible. As a man's life—and the lives of others—in an airplane depends upon the accurate judgment and coordination of the pilot—and both judgment and coordination are badly disturbed by alcohol—it stands to reason that a man who indulges in alcohol is not going to be trusted with such an important assignment.

TEMPERANCE ESSENTIAL

The same is true in practically every other part of the modern army, and if our country is to survive in a crisis depending upon defense, we must have a trained defense force that is relatively free from the disturbances of alcohol. By this I do not mean that no one will ever touch beer or wine, though that would be highly desirable, but that the amount will be greatly lessened and the time in which they are used very much restricted.

An air pilot who has alcoholic inclinations is not going to last long on his job, for not only is there danger to the lives of others besides himself but he is in charge of a very expensive machine, which takes months to replace if damaged or destroyed, and one on which the safety of our country may largely depend. He would promptly be grounded, and if his course were not immediately and radically altered, he would be removed entirely from his assignment. Not only does he not have to drink to be a soldier, but if he does drink he cannot occupy any responsible position.

Even in the olden days when everyone in the Army was supposed to be drunk on pay day, it was comparatively few who caused this idea to spread. I have seen the Army at a time when morale was very low, when most of us were in small frontier garrisons, with little to do except wait for something to happen, with slow promotion and small pay, and yet the number who resorted to alcoholic forgetfulness was small. Some of the men did use moderate amounts of beer and wines. Some of us never touched any alcoholic drink, and there were many more of the latter class than we have ever been credited with. As time has gone on and our duties have become more complex, the number using alcoholic drinks and the amount used has greatly lessened.

Industry has done much to limit the use of alcoholics, for accuracy of eye and hand is of the utmost importance, and industry cannot afford to have men injured and machines damaged by alcoholic incoordination. In many industries if a man is even seen or known to visit places where liquor is dispensed, he is summarily dismissed. In others he is warned, and a repetition is not tolerated. These stern measures have been found necessary to protect industry from destruction, for industry is now responsible for injuries to its employees, and injuries are greatly multiplied when men drink any form of booze. It does not matter in what form alcohol enters the body. Its action is always the same, though the conveyors may differ in amount and taste. But, however disguised, it is still alcohol, and alcohol is always destructive to human bodies.

STRENGTH FOR LEADERSHIP

The days when soldiers were regarded as merely something in human form that had little or no brain (or if they had it, it was not necessary to use it) have gone for good. It is truer than ever that soldiers need to work together, and for team play, whether on a university football squad, or in an army drill squad, discipline is necessary. Discipline is only another name for good team play, for in teamwork it is the work of the mass, rather than of the individual, that counts. And for that reason it is necessary for the mass to act as one. This requires leadership, and at the same time subordination of the individual to the group. This need not imply loss of initiative, but rather the reverse, for good team play develops leadership, and in practically any well-trained team any one of the men can immediately assume leadership if necessary. This form of training is precisely what is developed in the army, and it was effectively demonstrated on many occasions in the World War by the leadership of junior officers, sergeants, corporals, and privates. If the regular leaders were incapacitated, the next man in rank took over the command, and there were many instances where very young lads, through this training, showed surprising and very effective leadership. But leadership of this character is not found in the man who is trying to forget his troubles in drinking liquor. Moral and physical stamina do not result from the use of alcohol.

In the Army, as in industry, the man at the top is constantly looking for young men that are worthy of promotion to better jobs. It is absolutely necessary in every organization to provide for understudies, that is, someone to take over responsibility in case the leader is disabled or sick. This means a constant training of new material in higher duties. Any man at the head of an organization that can keep up this supply is doing one of the biggest things possible for the organization. It means constant observation of the possible candidates. Any man that demonstrates unusual ability, stamina, or character is at once spotted, and often given a tryout to determine whether he is worth training. And it is not among the boozers that this promising material is sought or found. My biggest task when heading a large hospital center in France was picking suitable men for special tasks, and I assure you that the young men are most carefully observed for possible advancement.

In our present Army you not only do not have to drink to be a soldier, but if you do drink, your chances for advancement are greatly lessened. Moreover, you are opening the way for rapid physical and mental deterioration, and reducing the opportunities for reaching the highest capabilities for which your physical, mental, and spiritual endowments intended you.

An Answer to Anne Lindbergh

REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER M. PIERCE

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been written for and against Charles Lindbergh. I have read much of it. I believe the best answer I have seen to his philosophy and the philosophy expressed in the Wave of the Future, written by his wife, Anne Lindbergh, was written by a trial judge in Oregon, out on the west coast, who has just been promoted to the supreme bench by the Governor of Oregon. I congratulate the Governor for appointing so able and brilliant a man to the supreme bench of Oregon.

Mr. Speaker, the article by Judge Brand is as follows:

AN OREGON JURIST, APPRAISING "THE WAVE OF THE FUTURE," HEREWITH SUGGESTS AN ANSWER TO ANNE LINDBERGH—A CONTRIBUTOR INVESTIGATES THE LOGIC OF AN APPEALING THESIS THAT HAS ENGAGED THE ATTENTION OF MILLIONS OF AMERICANS

(By James T. Brand)

(James T. Brand is circuit judge, second judicial district at Marshfield, Oreg. Mr. Brand took his law degree at Harvard, later became city attorney at Marshfield. He is a past president of the Oregon State Bar Association and is a leader in efforts to improve judicial procedure in this State.)

Anne Lindbergh would have you believe that her Wave of the Future, condensed in the Readers Digest, is a permanent wave. I would not.

Her essay is so full of faith and idealism, so subtly and appealingly written, that anyone who criticizes it must feel like a bad boy plucking the wings from a butterfly. One must regret to destroy the flowing magic of her theme by analysis and dissection, but after all, belief in magic is not at the moment the crying need of America.

"The old world we loved is going," she writes, "somehow the leaders of Germany, Italy, and Russia have discovered how to use new social and economic forces. They have sensed the changes and they have exploited them. They have felt the wave of the future and they have leaped upon it."

AUTHORESS SEES POTENTIAL GOOD IN NEW MOVEMENTS

It is with sympathetic sadness that she announces the decadence and doom of our present civilization and the uselessness of resistance to change. But the announcement is clear: "We still have our eyes, our minds, our hearts on the dream that is dying—how beautiful it was, tinting the whole sky crimson as it fades into the west. But there is another on its way in the gray dawn. * * * The wave of the future is coming and there is no fighting it."

Her emphasis, I think, is upon the fading, not the beauty, of the "dream that is dying." And this wave, the wave that Hitler and Mussolini have leaped upon, she believes is essentially good.

Recognizing that "many of the things we love are going down," she inquires if that which is pushing behind communism, fascism, nazi-ism, may not be some "new and perhaps ultimately good conception of humanity trying to come to birth," and she answers, "Something one feels is pushing up through the crust of custom—I believe that it is in its essence good, but because we are blind we cannot see it." By analogy she refers to the French Revolution, where good ultimately came out of violence and atrocity.

VISION—FORESEES PASSING OF CHERISHED THINGS

What is the old order that is passing like a dream, and what is her new conception of humanity which is to "displace the things we loved"? The things that are passing away are clearly identified in the mind of Anne Lindbergh.

She writes: "For who does not feel today the world I love is going down and all things in it that I cherish? Most of us prefer the old world of England, France, and the United States to the new world of Fascist Europe. I feel that way myself."

So it is the way of life of America that is going down. But she is more specific. It is the "formulas and creeds" that we were brought up to trust implicitly. It is "the sacredness of property, the infallibility of the democratic way of life, the efficiency of the capitalistic system—which seem to be threatened or dislodged from their sacrosanct niches." Thus she indites her morituri te salutamus of the American way of life.

Her idea of the new order which is to displace our "dying civilization" is either less definite or much less definitely expressed. Plainly she would have us swim with the wave of the future. But she has already got Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin astride that wave—the one they leaped upon. So at least we know the company we must keep as we ride.

Again, and most definitely, the new order is linked in her mind with the Nazi discovery "how to use new social and economic forces" and how to exploit them. The death by assassination of European democracy attests the Nazi discovery of the new force technique. So this at least is a part of Anne Lindbergh's dream "that is on its way in the gray dawn."

CLUE TO ANNE LINDBERGH'S OUTLOOK DISCERNED

Now, before I analyze her argument, let me speculate for a moment about Anne Lindbergh herself. A psychiatrist would find in this charming authoress a study of profound interest. She recalls to my mind the theories expounded by Jerome Frank.

The infant, says Frank, is born into a sense of effortless security, but as childhood passes he becomes aware of his incapacity for controlling "the crushing, heedless, reluctant, and uncertain facts of the outer world."

He looks first to his parents for security, but soon realizes their helplessness and fallibility, too. "Then," says Frank, "panic fear" attacks him and in his flight from uncertainty and insecurity he sublimates his fears and, since hope and faith spring eternal in the human breast, he grasps at religion or law or some other great conception, lifts up his face from the world of reality and finds peace and a sense of security at the price of blindness.

And this, I think, is the story of Anne Lindbergh. The key to the riddle of her personality appears in the first lines of her essay. She tells of Boethius contemplating a changing world "witha troubled and uneasy mind. How can this truth be reconciled to that truth, this right to that right." Then she quotes him:

> "And therefore whoso seeks the truth > Shall find in no wise peace of heart."

As she read those lines, Anne Lindbergh had the "supreme thrill across the centuries." She understood.

TRAGEDY CAUSED HER TO SEEK REFUGE OVERSEAS

She had grown up a delicate flower in a beautiful and protected garden of wealth and culture. Security was hers as a birthright. She married a hero, she bore a son, and then without warning she was engulfed in a black maelstrom of horror and despair. After she had been dragged through the courts half blinded by the pitiless glare of publicity, she walled herself in for security, finally fled to England for security, then went on to Germany and Russia.

Now she sees the whole world whirling in the same maelstrom of black death that engulfed her. And in her Wave of the Future she cries out, "Why has this come?" Bowed down by her shattered faith and lost security, she has done what many a distressed and saintly and sensitive soul has done before her.

There were but two roads to follow, one to face the cruel realities of our day and fight on, seeking an answer that may never be found. That way for her led to madness. The other road she followed. She looked up from the bogs of uncertainty. She saw the things she loved destroyed by apparently invincible brute force. She saw the triumph of despotism in Europe. She lifted her eyes to the heavens and away from the earth, sublimated her fears and uncertainty, and resolved that "all things work together for good," though she forgot the rest of the quotation. It was not her mind that conquered, it was her emotions.

Then she wrote the Wave of the Future, and in it she said: "I offer then not a solution but a record of my attempt to reconcile the many conflicting points of view which have assailed me—perhaps it would be better called a confession of faith. A faith * * * is not seen but felt, not proved but believed, not a program but a dream."

This is Anne Lindbergh, preaching the fall of democracy, the rise of dictatorship, and the destruction of liberty, teaching it because in the presence of disaster and overwhelming force a dreamer must have faith in something or go mad.

CHANGE: SOME TO THE GOOD, SOME TO THE BAD

First of all, we must note that she neglects to tell us why the new dream of Hitler and Mussolini is better than the American way of life. She makes a quantitative, not a qualitative, analysis of the new wave. It is overwhelming, therefore resistance is futile. Nay, more; with a gentle firmness she teaches the duty of submission. Again I quote: "There is no sin punished more implacably than the sin of resistance to change. For change is the very essence of living matter. To resist change is to sin against life itself."

But do we not find changes of death as well as changes of growth in living matter? Rot and decay are forms of change. Lust and crime imprint changes like the mark of Cain on the faces of men and nations.

The wave that was Napoleon was a wave of change, but men built a bulwark against that wave, and it broke and fell back. The wave that was Attila the Hun, the wave that was Genghis Khan, the wave that was Kaiser Wilhelm, the wave that was our War of the Rebellion—all these and many more were waves of change, but men built human bulwarks against them, and because they were waves of destruction, not growth, they broke and fell back. Men were not ostriches then, with their heads buried in the sand, chanting to themselves that the world we love is gone, but all is for the best in the best of worlds.

The very essence of error is in the assertion of Anne Lindbergh that resistance to change is sin. The history of man's rise from savagery is the story of his triumphant battle against change wrought by corruption, destruction, reckless ambition, and death. Such resistance marks the difference between the beasts who resist not and perish and the race of man which fights on and persists. The unforgivable sin is to resist that change which is growth, not the change which is destruction.

MORE THAN FAITH OR DREAMS WORLD'S NEED TODAY

In this hard world, she who would sanctify carnage and conquest by naming it The Wave of the Future, must have more than a faith or a dream. She must face reality and its problems, whether she can solve those problems or not. She must seek truth, though with Boethius she may "find in no wise peace of heart." She must seek the inner meaning of war and conquest, testing it by the great touchstone of our eternal ideal of liberty and justice.

What does Hitler's war mean for the future of education, of peaceful home life, of freedom and initiative and opportunity—of the very right of the yet unborn to dream dreams as she does now.

To support her faith that today's wave is in its essence good, Anne Lindbergh cites the French Revolution and says, "Consider the leaders of the French Revolution. * * * No one today defends the atrocities of the French Revolution, but few seriously question the fundamental necessity or rightness of the movement." Here is a perfect example of illogical reasoning.

The horrors of the French Revolution did introduce a happier and better world. It was a wave of the future. Today there arises a greater horror, so she infers that it too is for the best and must be a wave of the future.

That revolution was a great uprising of the common people against despotism. It led to liberty, equality, and fraternity of a free people. The Hitler regime is an uprising of despotism against the liberty and equality of free people. If the rise of the French people against a despot was good, does that prove that the rise of a despot against the people is also good? Anne Lindbergh would have you believe that it is. I would not.

SOLUTION SHOULD HAVE AMERICAN FLAVOR

Finally, the beauty and tragedy of her dream is shown in words of such loveliness that I must quote them first unmarred by criticism. Foretelling the future of America after the flood, she writes:

"This change will not take the form of a German, an Italian, or a Russian revolution. Our answer should be a solution peculiarly and saltily our own. It should be as American as the white steeples of New England or the skyscrapers of New York; as American as a boy's slang, as backyard life in small towns, as baseball and blue jeans. As American as our red-brick schools, standing like stanch citadels along our country roads; as white clapboard houses with green blinds; as unhedged gardens and open fields; as our stratoliners and streamlined trains; as our air beacons, necklacing a continent at night with their golden beams. As American as October—crisp, clear, tart, sunny, and crimson—like an American apple."

WORDS PAINT VERY AMERICA DICTATORS IMPERIL

Such beauty of expression is seldom found. She paints America almost as it is—and as it may be if we hold to the fine ideals of the past and mold them into a richer, a juster, and a happier future. She paints the very future America that Hitler would destroy, that Stalin would corrupt, that Mussolini would scorn.

Can the white steeples of New England stand when priests and preachers are herded like felons in concentration camps? Can the American red-brick schoolhouse stand like a "stanch citadel" when history and literature are rewritten at the command of a fanatical house painter and the burning of the books is a patriotic rite?

We must save America the beautiful, of which Anne Lindbergh dreams, whether by peace or war I do not know; but this I do know—we must save it from the siren song of poets and dreamers who love America but who speak like mourners at America's funeral of the "good of a dying civilization."

PRESENT SHOWS A WAVE, BUT NOT A TIDE

The flood that engulfs Europe is the mightiest wave of the present that the world has seen. But that wave is not the tide. We, too, have a faith—a faith based on knowledge, knowledge of the riches of American life, knowledge that ours is not a dying civilization but young, vigorous, and strong; knowledge based on the life of the world, which proves that when aroused, freemen are more efficient, more heroic, more triumphant than slaves. Let the wages roll. Our tide "taken at the flood will lead on to fortune."

R. F. C. Accomplishments

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EVERETT M. DIRKSEN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, on May 7, 1941, the Federal Loan Agency made a report to the President and the Congress which is worthy of close scrutiny and examination by every Member.

It deals more particularly with the R. F. C. and its subsidiary corporations and indicates the accomplishments to date in the field of national defense.

The Rubber Reserve Corporation, which is an R. F. C. subsidiary, embarked on a purchase program for 430,000 tons of rubber, to cost $190,000,000. Of this amount, 98,000 tons have been delivered; 13,700 tons were in transit; 37,500 tons are awaiting shipment.

The Metals Reserve Corporation has made commitments of $609,000,000 for the procurement of tin, zinc, antimony, tungsten, manganese, and other critical and strategic materials which are indispensable to the defense establishment.

The Defense Supplies Corporation is concerned with the acquisition of basic defense supplies and has already made commitments for the procurement of high-octane aviation gasoline and other commodities.

The Defense Plants Corporation has made commitments of $511,000,000 on plants which are owned by the Government and leased to manufacturers. There have also been $194,000,000 in private loans committed. This embraces 288 loans to 217 manufacturers. It includes such commitments as $26,000,000 to Bendix Corporation for the manufacture of aviation supplies; $3,000,000 to Baldwin Locomotive for tanks; $4,750,000 to American Brass, $16,000,000 to Chase Brass, $11,500,000 to Bridgeport Brass for brass cartridges and supplies; $6,500,000 to Colt Co. for machine guns; $60,000,000 to Curtis for aviation; $9,500,000 to Continental Motors for airplane engines; $36,000,000 to General Motors; $8,000,000 to North American Aviation; and $50,000,000 to Studebaker for planes, parts, and accessories; $5,500,000 to General Motors for guns; $6,000,000 to General Electric for superchargers; $26,000,000 to Tennessee Powder for the manufacture of powder.

This is a gigantic program, and the R. F. C. has handled it with dispatch at a minimum of red tape.

On the agenda are other proposals for the manufacture of synthetic rubber, the development of aluminum, and other products which are so essential to the defense establishment and a lack of which creates a critical and dangerous bottleneck.

Legislation is now pending to broaden R. F. C. powers for the purpose of coping quickly and expeditiously with a number of problems which have arisen recently, and this legislation deserves the best attention of the Congress. The R. F. C.'s record is one of accomplishment.

The Cloakroom

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. LAMBERTSON

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, Lindy flew to France 14 years ago Tuesday and now France flies at us.

Convoys lost steam on the sea of public opinion. Will the White House dare to fire the boilers?

Let the Decoration Day orators recite In Flanders Field and the people resolve—never again.

We do not know LaGuardia's plans as head of civilian defense, but we venture they are expensive ones.

The docks about New York are as deserted as a summer cabin on the lake in December. The Normandie looks lonesome.

Consternation reigned at the State Department when all the Americans on the Zamzam finally turned up safe—in Nazi hands.

If the British had done as well at Dunkirk and Thermopylae as they did last June at Philadelphia it would have been different.

Miss Columbia is conducting a dangerour flirtation with a fickle gentleman named John Bull, but Uncle Sam is still tops with the young lady.

The only failure the President admits in 8 long years is his effort to move up Thanksgiving Day. It is the only time he has been up against a higher power.

The 700,000 persons, mostly contrymen of those whom Hitler has either run out or run over in Europe jammed Central Park in New York for I Am an American Day. Kate Smith and Eddie Cantor entertained.

"Roosevelt bids Americans unite to save our trade"—New York Times headline last Sunday. Now they have disclosed the great moral issue. Leave the trade to Cordell Hull—he will bring them in if our cash holds out.

The big boys in the Quaker City who denied Lindbergh a hall and the radio must be descendants of the 400 who wined and dined the officers of the British Army while Washington and his shoeless soldiers were wintering at Valley Forge.

Convoys and the War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE E. GEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

LETTER FROM A CONSTITUENT

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, much has been said about public opinion on the subject of convoys. Every day I receive many letters from my district that leave no doubt in my mind that my people are overwhelmingly opposed to their use.

I insert in the RECORD a letter from one of our fine citizens on this subject. It shows, in a typical way, just how the people in the Seventeenth California District feel on the subject.

I believe that it is the fine work of such people as this lady that is keeping this Nation at peace.

The letter follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., May 20, 1941.

Hon. LEE E. GEYER,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GEYER: The past few days I have taken it upon myself to find out how my neighbors feel about convoys and the war.

I have a little four-line letter sent out by the Mothers of America, to be signed and sent in to Congress. The letter states that the signer is opposed to the use of American armed forces to deliver goods to belligerents and against expeditionary forces outside the Western Hemisphere.

I took this little letter and plenty of paper and a pencil and started ringing my neighbors' doorbells.

I was overwhelmed at the response. Over 90 percent of the people on whom I called signed and promised to write to the President.

Last Monday I got 97 signatures.

Last Tuesday I got 57 signatures.

Last Wednesday and Thursday I got 91 signatures.

Last Saturday I got 110 signatures.

Last Sunday I got 27 signatures.

Last Monday I got 50 signatures. For a total of 432 signatures.

I realize that 432 signatures would not turn the tide, but it indicates, to me at least, how my neighbors feel about convoys.

I did this entirely unsolicited, working just around here in the afternoons, after I finished my housework and before time to cook dinner.

Two of my friends have worked some and have a few more signers among their friends and family.

Sincerely and earnestly,

ESTELLE GRAY.

Aviation Abroad—A Rather Remarkable Story

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL HINSHAW

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

AN ARTICLE FROM THE MAGAZINE AVIATION FOR MAY 1941

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, on page A253 of the Appendix of the RECORD I placed an article which appeared in Foreign Affairs, an American quarterly review, entitled "Wings for the Trojan Horse," written by Messrs. Melvin Hall and Walter Peck, both of whom are connected with the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

In the magazine Aviation, for May 1941, I have found on page 104 certain remarks under the heading "Aviation abroad," which will be of interest to those who realize the importance of expanding our aviation facilities abroad, meanwhile watching the Trojan horse.

In the second of the following three paragraphs you will note a reference to the apparent intense interest of Germany in maintaining her aviation interests in South America evidenced by her recent delivery of two airliners—modern transports—plus spare parts.

AVIATION ABROAD

LATIN AMERICA SUPPRESSES AXIS AIR LINES

The past weeks have not been very happy for German and Italian interests in Latin America; not only did the South American Republics follow the United States' example in seizing Axis freighters, but Peru went one step further and took over the whole establishment of the German Lufthansa Peru, which included at least two air liners, and all ground equipment.

In addition, Pan American Grace Airways took one of the first concrete steps to combat further expansion of Axis owned or controlled air lines in South America, by starting a semi-weekly air service in Ecuador between two important inland cities, in direct competition with the German "Sedta." On the other hand, the expansion by German air lines in this hemisphere is made easier by ships slipping through the blockade with new equipment; in this way they have received at least two modern transports, new personnel, and a considerable amount of spare equipment.

The Italian "Lati" will be given one more chance by Brazil, an official announcement said. The air line, which maintains the last air connection between the Axis and Latin America, paid a large fine for unneutral actions on Brazilian territory and was informed that the next case would result in immediate cancelation of all existing contracts and agreements.

The following three paragraphs are also of great interest, showing that in spite of great war efforts being made, Great Britain is maintaining flight schedules abroad in 95 percent of pre-war route mileage, and passenger-transport planes are evidently still being turned out in British factories as well as in the German.

ON SCHEDULE

(By "Vista")

"Britain carries on" is the slogan that is heard so often in the present days, and as far as England's far-flung air routes are concerned, they are carried on. Little has been published about the British Empire's air lines since the war began, and it is not generally known that more than 95 percent of all prewar mileage is being flown on regular schedules by British Overseas Airways. This company, originated from the rival Imperial Airways and British Airways in a Government reorganization plan, now is the prime representative of England in Africa, Asia, and Australia, and is doing an excellent job in these difficult times.

About 30,000 miles per day are flown by British Overseas Airways Co.'s airliners, with passengers, mail, and freight, and though there are Government requirements for space because of the many official personages and cargoes that have to be carried, a respectable number of passengers are brought to their destinations with the same old efficiency that was so noteworthy before the war. Actually, there have been no accidents during wartime operations, though of course the Clyde was lost in the hurricane in Portugal last year, and the Corsair made an unscheduled landing in the African jungle, but it was repaired on the spot and flown out by Captain Rogers, one of England's ace transport pilots.

On the whole, all routes are flown with the well-known Short boats, but British Overseas Airways Co.'s equipment is notably international, and consists of Lockheed 14's and Lodestars, Junkers, and Focke-Wulfs, besides English types such as the Ensign landplanes, Short boats, and De Havilland Flamingoes.

During the summer months of the past years and continuing through the winter season, a route to Bermuda was shared by Imperial Airways and Pan American Airways. With the seasonal stoppage in 1939 there were plans to send over a newer and better boat to reopen this service as Airways Bermuda, Ltd., but the war changed all this, and in due time most of the flying boats that could be spared were taken over by the British Government, thereby eliminating British flight schedules, and Pan American was left to continue the service on its own. This summer, however, the Atlantic will again be crossed by English planes, operated by Airways Atlantic, a B. O. A. C. subsidiary, using a new type Empire boat, the short S-30 C class, with a gross weight of 53,000 pounds, thereby continuing the service which was maintained last summer. In addition, the three Boeing 314-A's obtained from Pan American by the British may be turned over to B. O. A. C. and used on the Empire routes, thereby making more planes available for the other services, especially the bottleneck between England and Lisbon, at present served by Douglas DC-3's and Short boats.

In the following paragraph is, indeed, a rather remarkable story. I submit it without comment:

A RATHER REMARKABLE STORY

A rather remarkable story came to New York from Buenos Aires, which would indicate that some sort of an interchange of courtesy exists between the Axis and Britain, at least as far as commercial air lines are concerned. It has always been more or less striking that none of the transports still flying in Europe, or from Africa to South America, have ever been shot at, and except for the mistake of a rookie Nazi, who took pot shots at a KLM DC-3 earlier in the war, killing one passenger and riddling the plane, no attempts have been made to bring an air liner down. There have been many stories about enemy airplanes escorting transports with notable passengers on board, but no one has even given a lucid explanation of these facts. The story now goes that as long as the Axis leaves Britain's last link to Lisbon open, England will not interfere with the Italian LATI airline from Portugal to Latin America. This somewhat curious tacit understanding enables the Axis to keep its war-valuable line to Brazil open, and on the other hand does not force Britain to maintain a North Atlantic air line in winter, impossible with present equipment due to the frozen-over harbors at Botwood and Montreal.

Protests Against Involvement of the United States in War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KNUTE HILL

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

QUOTATIONS FROM WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS AND A SPEECH OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND LETTERS FROM WASHINGTON STATE RESIDENTS

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following quotations from Washington's Farewell Address and President Roosevelt's speech at Boston on October 30, 1940, and letters received by me from residents of the State of Washington:

George Washington said: "Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other" (from the Farewell Address).

PRELUDE TO WAR

"And while I am talking to you, fathers and mothers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before, but I shall say it again, and again, and again, your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars" (President Roosevelt in speech at Boston, October 30, 1940).

TACOMA, WASH., April 28, 1941.

Hon. KNUTE HILL,
United States Representative,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Words alone are inadequate to fully express my appreciation of your noble stand in behalf of America, our youth, and our future welfare. You are eternally right.

I am but one of the many thousands of those boys who fought and shed their blood upon the battlefields of France in 1918. It seems incomprehensible how any one man or group of men could condemn our boys to the gory caldron of European wars today. Furthermore, how can anyone give America away—lock, stock, and barrel—and still call himself an American?

To our "armchair warriors" war must seem like a picnic. They do not know war and they will never fill the trenches or the graves in foreign lands. The committee of "defending the Allies by robbing America," believes that our active participation in this war will be the height of their achievement. They do not know how sadly they fool not only themselves but their dupes. It will be the beginning of their own destruction.

We still remember the post-war period with its many thousands of jobless veterans. In order to reconquer all Europe, perhaps even Russia and Japan, we must have an army of at least 10,000,000 of combat troops. What will happen when the war is over and millions of these men are hungry? Nature may take its course, but "armchair warriors" will have to fight then.

Enclosed please find a poem, expressing my experience and my observation.

Very respectfully,

J. H. ZEGENDER,
Served with One Hundred and Forty-fifth Infantry, A. E. F.

TO THE CROSS ON FIELDS OF BATTLE

(By J. H. Zegender)

Inch by inch, we once were creeping,
Step by step, we're marching now—
Soon, no doubt, we shall be rushing
Till the sweat pours from our brow.
Wave by wave, we'll soon be sailing,
Mile by mile, across the sea—
To the distant shores of Europe
And perhaps, eternity!

To the cross on fields of battle,
Crucified by shot and shell—
And by lethal fumes there spouting
From the depths of Satan's hell.
In entanglements of wire
And entwined in barbs of steel—
Hanging limply, arms asunder,
Just like Christ in His ordeal!

When this war has finally ended
And we awaken from our trance—
When the millions jobless veterans
Roam our land and seek a chance—
When the shell-shocked, maimed, and wounded
Fill the wards behind barred doors,
We then perceive our vain delusion
Of waging wars on foreign shores.

BELLINGHAM FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS, INC.,
Bellingham, Wash., May 3, 1941.

Representative KNUTE HILL,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We employ 184 people, and a survey that we have made would show that they are practically unanimous, along with myself, in emphatically protesting against the convoying of American ships, as we firmly believe such action would embroil this country in a European war.

While we are also practically unanimous in our belief that all possible aid should be given the democracies we are against any aid which may cause the loss of a single American life.

The writer was an officer in the Army, in five battles, during the last war, so do not believe that the matter of patriotism can be questioned. We do not consider this a matter of patriotism, but a matter of good common sense.

Can definitely say that we are unanimous in the opinion that the defenses of this country should be built up, but we do not believe any foreign power, for a great number of reasons, will attempt to attack this country.

This letter is being written, as due to the great many times we hear the statement "we are already in the war," we want you to know that it is our firm opinion we are far enough in the war and do not wish to go any further.

Yours truly,

A. R. DEBURGH, President.

SPOKANE, WASH., May 9, 1941.

Hon. KNUTE HILL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have just read with extreme satisfaction a report of your address given the students of Columbia University, wherein you state your views upon the convoy question.

Would to God there were more like you, and may your position be one that will in some way cause many more Members of Congress to express a like view.

Where I am employed I heard much praise given you today, and many expressed themselves as wishing they could vote for you.

My sincere wish is that Great Britain will win this war, but fail to see why we as a nation again become the victims of their propaganda, as we did in the other war. It is my belief that they have many resources upon which to draw to furnish much of what they ask of us, and therefore I cannot understand why we should burden ourselves and posterity with a debt that will make slaves of our coming generations and yet leave ourselves unprotected.

Their thanks and appreciation for our sacrifices in the last war still linger in my memory, as well as their desires to interfere with our world trade, in which as traders they are hard to beat.

May God give us a united country and it is my belief this can be done by making it safe for those who love it and will be ready to defend it with their blood and wealth.

Again extending to you my heartfelt thanks for your courage and wishing you health and prosperity.

I am,

Yours very truly,

W. S. TRAPP.

Miracles Performed by Automobile Industry in Nation's Defense Effort

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

ARTICLE FROM AUTOMOBILE FACTS

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the automobile industry is ahead of schedule in our national-defense effort. Miracles are being performed as the industry speeds forward, day and night, to provide our fighting forces and those of Great Britain with essential weapons and matériel.

One of the new and difficult tasks being accomplished in record time by the automobile industry is in the production of machine guns. Two machine-gun plants have been placed in operation and actual production is 8 months ahead of schedule. It is an interesting story, and, under permission to extend my remarks, I herewith include an article appearing in this month's issue of Automobile Facts, under the title "Never Saw One Before."

[From Automobile Facts]

NEVER SAW ONE BEFORE

One day in September 1940, United States Army ordnance officers asked representatives of four automobile accessory plants if they could undertake mass production of machine guns for delivery by January 1942. The manufacturers offered to try.

One day in April 1941, the first consignment of machine guns to be manufactured in automotive factories was placed aboard an Army airplane for delivery to ar arsenal—8 months ahead of schedule.

The accomplishment was the first fruit of a remarkable example of cooperation by Government officials and automotive engineers. To achieve the result, jungles of red tape had to be slashed, hundreds of antiquated machines had to be moved from arsenal storerooms and reconditioned, scores of automotive machine tools had to be adapted to new tasks, dozens of new machines invented, and thousands of workers taught new crafts.

Though the men responsible for it would be the last to admit that the achievement is miraculous, they do maintain that it shows how the determination and ingenuity of free people in a democratic society are capable of matching the concerted effort which an autocratic state imposes on a regimented people.

Here is a measure of the accomplishment:

When the question was first asked of them, most of the manufacturers had never previously seen a machine gun of any of the types needed. After studying the ordnance exhibit, they asked:

"Do you want guns as beautifully finished as those hand-made products?"

"No," was the reply. "We want efficient guns and a lot of them—a hundred a day if possible."

The next question concerned machines for making the guns. Did the arsenals possess such machines?

They did.

But when the machines were moved out of the storerooms and divested of their protective coatings there was general consternation among the motor technicians. The machines, whose ages ranged from 21 to 73 years, were mainly belt-driven, antiquated devices.

"They're the best we have," said the officers.

"We'll try to recondition them," said the manufacturers.

Moved into the automotive plants, the machines were cleaned, painted, reconditioned, retooled, and motorized. Their ranks were bolstered by the addition of machines borrowed from automobile production lines.

While this work was in progress some of the arsenals' machines were loaned to schools for the training of operators and supervisory personnel, of which more than 10,000 will be required in the 4 plants for peak production. Hence, by the time operations were ready to begin the nucleus of the personnel was ready. Machines were set up in accordance with accepted assembly-line practice, so that individual gun parts would move in steady streams via overhead conveyors through successive operations toward the final assembly point, the firing test range, and the shipping room.

Working together, Army officers and production engineers vied with each other in instituting daring innovations in ordnance manufacturing techniques—and had a good time upsetting traditions.

Tumbling machines were designed and installed to eliminate almost 90 percent of the time-wasting hand filing formerly deemed necessary to put the final finish on the 285 parts of the average gun. For the drilling of bores—formerly a slow and laborious operation with a horizontal drill—a special machine was built which drills six barrels at once, with the force of gravity and oil under pressure assisting the vertical drills.

For the cutting of some parts of the guns' mechanisms, gunsmiths traditionally used high-speed steel cutting tools, which had to be sharpened between each operation.

"How about using cemented carbide tools?" the auto engineers asked.

"Let's try," the Army officers replied.

Result: Tremendous savings of time.

For the finishing of some very small parts the innovators borrowed machinery formerly used in the manufacture of sewing machine parts.

Techniques developed in the manufacture of valve stems were brought to bear on the job of turning out firing pins. Trunnion blocks and side holding plates, formerly drilled separately and subsequently fitted together in assembly, were drilled together so that no laborious fitting operations would be necessary. Rivets, formerly turned out one at a time by turning down bar stock with screw machines, are now being knocked out at the rate of 180 a minute by a header machine handling rod stock. Side plates, formerly milled singly, are now ground out six at a time. Airholes in the barrel jacket were traditionally elliptical, requiring three operations for each hole.

"Why not round holes?" the auto engineers asked.

"Why not, indeed?" the Army officers replied.

So, round they became, and 3 operations per hole became 1 per 10 holes. Then, to give the trick an additional fillip, they tried punching instead of drilling. It was faster and better. At the moment of this writing the tradition busters are playing with the idea of punching all the holes at once in a flat steel sheet and then rolling it into a tube.

The delicate task of rifling the barrels baffled the experimenters for a time. It called for 15 trips of the chiseling tool through each of the 4 spiral channels in a barrel. When the Army officers said there was to be no check-reining of imagination on this job, the production engineers invented a machine which reduced the operations to 2. Rifling is now done in one-thirtieth of the former time.

As done by gunsmiths, production of shell chambers was a precision job from start to finish. As revised by these novice ordnance engineers, the emphasis on precision is placed where it belongs—toward the end of a series of simplified operations, where a few highly skilled men can refine the rough cuts that unskilled operators make in early stages of manufacture.

In cleaning gun barrels after test firing, the saving of time is phenomenal. "Miracle" is the only fitting word for the trick which, employed here, telescoped 48 hours into less than a minute.

Protest Curtailment of Sugar-Beet Production

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 19, 1941

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY MICHIGAN RETAIL GROCERS AND MEAT DEALERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks, I include a resolution passed May 13 by the Michigan Retail Grocers and Meat Dealers Association in convention at Bay City, Mich.:

Whereas the stability of thousands of Michigan farmers whose livelihood is largely dependent upon the cash returns from the production of sugar beets; and

Whereas it is impossible for Michigan sugar-beet growers to compete in the labor market with foreign sugar: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Michigan Members of the National Congress, the President of the United States, and others in authority in National Government be called upon to permit Michigan sugar growers to plant acreage consistent with their customs, and not to curtail the production of this industry, which is so vital to the welfare of Michigan people.

Adoption attested to.

HERMAN HANSON,
Recording Secretary.

Utility Fined For Bribery

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

Mr. RANKIN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is said that young Cato never made a speech in the Roman Senate without uttering the expression "Carthage must be destroyed."

For years I have demanded the breaking up of the vast, useless holding companies that are being used to rob unsuspecting investors and to plunder the helpless consumers of electric light and power. I repeat what I have said time and time again and that is that the consumers of electricity, the people who pay the bills, can never get justice in light and power rates in any area in which the electric industry is dominated by one of these vast holding companies that tries to run everything by bribery, corruption, and remote control.

Some time ago I pointed out the Union Electric Co. as one of the worst offenders. I was taken to task by Power Trust propagandists immediately. Well here is the answer. I will let the press tell the story. The following news item appeared in Labor recently. Read it carefully

[From Labor of May 20, 1941]

UTILITY FINED FOR COLOSSAL BRIBERY—CONCERN LOSES CHARTER UNTIL IT PAYS $175,000; CORRUPTED POLITICIANS AND PRESS

ST. CHARLES, Mo., May 15.—For subsidizing politicians and public officials to the tune of at least $580,000, the Union Electric Co. was fined $175,000 and had its corporation charter taken away here this week by Circuit Judge E. B. Woolford. These drastic penalties are a stern warning to other utility companies which have been spending "slush funds" for political purposes.

Such expenditures are forbidden both by the Wheeler-Rayburn Utility Holding Company Act and the Missouri State Corrupt Practices Act, under which Union Electric was prosecuted.

The facts which led to the conviction and heavy fine were disclosed by a Securities and Exchange Commission probe.

RAISED HUGE SLUSH FUND

It revealed that Union Electric raised a huge secret fund by means of "kick-backs" from lawyers, supply companies, and other individuals and concerns doing business with the utility corporation.

A large part of the money was paid to politicians and newspapermen who fought public-owned electric-plant projects opposed by Union Electric.

Judge Woolford said he will give the corporation charter back and allow Union Electric to continue doing business in Missouri if the company pays its fine within 120 days.

Now read the following brilliant editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of May 15, 1941:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of May 15 1941]

TRAIL'S END

The Union Electric Co. has reaped the full harvest of its corruption of government in Missouri. It stands today under a fine of $175,000, with its charter declared forfeited in court and its right to do business in the State revoked.

The terms of the decree of Circuit Judge Woolfolk at St. Charles do not require the company to go out of business. Liquidation, as the court said, would inflict heavy losses on the company's innocent stockholders. If the company pays its fine within 120 days, the charter forfeiture will be stayed, the stay to continue so long as the company does not violate the law.

Found guilty to the extent that banishment from the State is justified; penalized with one of the heaviest fines ever imposed on a corporation in Missouri; placed on strictest probation, with the court retaining its jurisdiction to enforce its order—that is the Union Electric Co. today.

What a fall from the high-handed, bribing rule of Missouri political life of only a few years ago.

What an ignominious end for the long invisible supergovernment of this State.

The story of Union Electric's intrigues in municipal elections, such as those in the St. Charles case, in the legislature and elsewhere, is long and sordid. There is no need to retell it now. Missourians know it backward as well as forward.

And it is not the devious tale of slush funds, lobbying, costly entertainment, and generous presents which is important anyway. The important thing is that the whole crooked business has been exposed and the perpetrators are paying for their misdeeds.

Louis H. Egan, president of the utility in the days when it pulled the strings and called the plays at Jefferson City, is under Federal indictment for perjury. Frank J. Boehm, executive vice president during the golden era, is out on bond after conviction. Albert C. Laun, ace lobbyist, who kept a book of bribe rates on legislators, has served his time behind the bars. So has Fred J. Martin, once rural sales engineer.

But the house cleaning which the S. E. C. instituted has not been confined to a Missouri company alone, big though that company is. The trails were followed to higher places; and one way to measure the magnitude of the accomplishment is by the reorganization in the North American Co., extensive utility holding company controlling Union Electric.

As a direct consequence of the exposé in Missouri of the corruption in North America's largest operating unit, the executive control of the large holding company was changed. James F. Fogarty, North American president during much of the period when Union Electric was buying what it wanted at Jefferson City and elsewhere, was shifted from the presidency. For its new president, North American chose a virtual outsider, Edward L. Shea, who was in no way tarred with Union Electric's scandalous misuse of its customers' and stockholders' money.

Judge and prosecutor are entitled to the public's appreciation for their handling of the St. Charles election corruption case. David A. Dyer, young prosecuting attorney of St. Charles County, had to overcome many obstacles, including office funds insufficient to conduct the case properly. Judge Woolfolk wisely devised a stern penalty which saves the company from ouster and liquidation, but also makes further punishment immediately possible if the company again stoops to illegal practices.

The invisible government of Missouri has been dragged into the open and purged. We wish we could say as much for the visible government, the legislature, now sitting where the Union Electric's whisper was once the law.

Mr. Speaker, when you realize that in 1940 the electric-light and power consumers of Missouri were overcharged $24,396,095 for their electricity, according to the T. V. A. yardstick rates; $27,424,318, according to the Tacoma, Wash., rates; $23,483,471, according to the Bonneville yardstick rates; or $28,353,673, according to the Ontario rates—when you realize what a cross the people of Missouri are bearing, then you can appreciate this editorial.

Now, read it again, and again, and again, and you can understand why I am urging the S. E. C. to break up these vast holding companies now.

London Calls for American Blood To Defend the British Empire

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

NEWS DISPATCH FROM THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE NEWS BUREAU IN LONDON

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following news dispatch from the Herald Tribune Bureau in London under date of May 21, 1941:

[From the New York Herald Tribune]

LONDON PAPER CALLS ON UNITED STATES TO ENTER WAR NOW—NEWS CHRONICLE APPEALS TO AMERICA TO FIGHT NAZIS, BAR COLLAPSE OF EUROPE

LONDON, May 21 (Wednesday).—In an editorial taking up almost one-half of its editorial page, the News Chronicle, influential London newspaper, appealed today to the United States to enter the war now as an active combatant.

The flat and outspoken plea for American entry into the conflict against Germany as Great Britain's ally, mirroring the growing feeling of the desperate urgency of the British cause, was believed to be the first such statement by any major British organ of opinion. Whether or not the editorial had been seen by Prime Minister Winston Churchill or any other responsible official was unknown. Gerald Barry is the editor of the paper, which has a listed circulation of 1,300,000 daily.

"We, the British people, want you, the American people to be in this war on our side—fighting," the editorial declares. "Not to save us from defeat but to help us to victory—quickly."

The document headed "We appeal to America," opened with the words: "May this newspaper try to speak on behalf of the British people to the American people? For many months now we, the British people, have refrained from speaking what was in our minds to the American people. We felt that it would not be right for us to speak. We felt that what America and Americans did in the war was their business. We felt that we, the people, must make no appeal either of sentiment or necessity to the American people. We felt that the American people should have to make up their own minds freely."

For 20 months the British people abided by that decision, the paper continued. Britain asked America to sell her planes, tanks, and guns.

"You sold them to us, and we were grateful for them," the editorial said.

When Britain's money began to run out, America made a "characteristically great and generous gesture," lending arms, it went on. Meanwhile, many British children were taken into American homes. The Red Cross and other organizations sent relief aid. Harry Hopkins, Wendell L. Willkie, and others came on inspection visits. "We can only say, 'Thank you,'" it added.

"But now," the editorial continued, "we feel the time has come for us to speak frankly to you, to tell you that now we want more from you than arms, more than knitted comforts and bandages, more than words of sympathy."

American Potash & Chemical Corporation of Trona, Calif.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY R. SHEPPARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, there appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 9, 1941, on pages 3820, 3821, and the first column of page 3822 a lengthy address attacking the American Potash & Chemical Corporation, of Trona, Calif. In the address were severe statements of criticism of the corporation's method of doing business and the manner in which it was purportedly treating its employees. Apparently the entire address referred to was based upon a story furnished by a reporter for the Friday magazine and not upon personal investigation of actual conditions existing, because no one could address themselves on the subject in such an all inclusive and erroneous manner based upon fact, as many of the criticisms against the American Potash & Chemical Corporation made in this address were far from being factual. Without intent of placing responsibility, I feel that from my personal knowledge, based upon many visits to the property of the American Potash & Chemical Corporation, which is in my congressional district, that it is only just to all concerned that erroneous statements pertaining to this company's method of doing business and treatment of its employees should be factually presented upon the basis of personal observation and knowledge, and not upon hearsay.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, there is no mystery regarding the stockholder ownership of this corporation. The company is at all times willing to disclose the ownership of its stock to proper authorities upon request. There has been supplied to the Department of Commerce a tabulation showing the names and addresses of the shareholders who own a controlling interest in the corporation and the number of shares owned by each individual. This stock is listed on the curb exchange, and a large number of shares are outstanding and in the hands of the American public. A majority of the shares of this stock are foreign held, the same as many other American corporations. In the first instance, the control of the company was held by the Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa, Ltd., but a few years ago a majority of that company's holdings was sold to a group of investment trusts in the Netherlands, where they are still held.

Investors of Netherlands nationality own securities in many other American enterprises, including large American oil interests and American railroads. It might also be noted at this point, Mr. Speaker, that American corporations own control of many important properties in the Netherlands territory, with specific reference to the prolific oil fields of the Netherland Indies. In the address referred to, the statement was made that the American Potash & Chemical Corporation was a foreign-directed plant; while, in fact, this plant for many of the past years of its existence has been managed, and is still managed, by citizens of the United States of America, who have full authority and responsibility for its operation. What was meant by the charge, "a foreign colonial outpost," in the address that appeared in the RECORD is problematical. No one who is acquainted with the management of the corporation has ever questioned their loyalty to the American form of government. All of these gentlemen who are connected with the management of this corporation are considered outstanding citizens of high integrity and splendid people. This plant, located at Trona, Calif., furnishes employment for approximately 1,200 men, most of whom I believe to be American citizens.

Relative to the statement alleging shipments of this company's products to Japan, I find upon minute investigation that the American Potash & Chemical Co. has never made shipments of bromine to Japan, either before or after the beginning of this war; in fact, the company has never exported any bromine. The only products ever shipped to Japan have been potash and borax. While Japan was a customer of this corporation for several years, at the beginning of the present war even the shipments of potash and borax were discontinued, although very profitable contracts were held for Japanese consumption.

I would like to call attention, Mr. Speaker, that our own Government is permitting the daily sale of gasoline to Japan under leadership whose integrity has not been questioned by anyone other than those politically minded. Referring to the criticisms of the company's profits, particularly where the language—nastily applied—stated, "at the expense of American labor," many years were required to develop the process and plant to an extent where it was a profitable enterprise. The history of this company's progress definitely indicates that experimental and development capital were not available in this country but had to be obtained from other sources. No dividends were paid to the stockholder from 1913 to 1928, and the sum of $1,849,365 was the dividend paid from 1928 to 1935, inclusive. The records of the company definitely show that for the entire period from 1913 to 1938 the company reinvested or put back earnings of $9,238,703 in this plant on American soil, which was furnishing a substantial pay roll for American employees.

Regarding the criticisms that were made of this company pertaining to its employees' facilities, and so forth, being inadequate, living conditions deplorable, and excessive prices being charged to employees for merchandise, permit me to state, again from personal knowledge, that this plant is located out on the desert, miles away from centralized populations, and it was essential that the company provide housing and other facilities such as transportation, new roads, and pipe lines for water for domestic purposes, which all had to be built under remote desert conditions, and these facilities are being furnished to the employees of this company upon a nonprofit basis. The only charges made were for housing facilities and utility services to cover the cost of operating and maintaining these facilities, and nothing more.

They have a medical hospital, the services of physicians and nurses, a grammar and kindergarten school, library, Catholic and Protestant churches, restaurants, motion-picture theaters, a splendid club house, tennis courts properly lighted, golf course, a splendid swimming pool—in which I have bathed—and a baseball diamond which, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, is more indicative of a highly developed country club than a penitentiary for employees.

Aside from that type of high-class program which the employees can enjoy and participate in, they also have an opportunity for group-life insurance with health benefits which are made available at as reasonable a premium as insurance companies permit anyone, and one-half of these premiums, if you please, are paid by the company. I am reliably informed, upon a recent check, that it was found that approximately 98 percent of the employees eligible are insured under this splendid group arrangement.

I would also like to call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that Senate Resolution 274, enacted June 18, 1936, of which that splendid gentleman, Senator Key Pittman, of Nevada, was chairman, made an investigation of the potash industry, including the plant, facilities, and ownership of this company located at Trona, Calif., and the investigation was made by the subcommittee which was conducted by Senators Pittman, of Nevada, and ADAMS, of Colorado, two splendid gentlemen who were very thorough in their work and whose integrity is not questioned by anyone. I think that anyone who would have taken the trouble to have read the reports made by these gentlemen could have very readily found facts from an unquestionable source that would have absolutely precluded the acceptance of any information by a reporter who will work for the Friday magazine.

Regarding the criticisms of so-called excessive charges for merchandise sold at the company's store, again I find some very inconsistent statements. The store is actually operated on a nonprofit basis. Prices are regulated by comparing prevailing market prices at near-by towns. Those prices are very close to the prices that exist in the city of Los Angeles, Calif. I wish to call specific attention to the fact that the profits made through the operation of this so-called company store are divided among the employees at 6-month periods in proportion to the amount of the employee's purchases.

The allegation made that "scrip is required in making purchases as a device to require employees to purchase merchandise through this nonprofit store" is not correct. Scrip is used for the specific purpose, when it is used, to permit the employee to participate in the profit-sharing plan. There are customers served at this store from adjacent districts who are paying the same prices as the employees; and the employees, if you please, enjoy the profits that are derived through serving people who are not employed by this corporation; which definitely indicates, to my mind, an extremely fair attitude toward its employees by the American Potash & Chemical Corporation.

The criticisms offered that employees of this firm at Trona were paid lower than like industries, again, is not correct. The wage scale of this company over a period of years has been as high, and in many instances higher, than most industries similarly situated in that section of the country.

As there are quotations taken from a report of the Department of Commerce regarding this company's methods of operation, I call your attention to the concluding sentence of the Department of Commerce's report, which states:

> It appears that the potash industry has demonstrated clearly those factors of pioneering development, technological advance, and responsible management which represents the highest expression of American industry.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I am not assuming what is equitable or inequitable in the present controversy existing at the Trona plant, but I am taking definite exception to statements that employees are not properly housed; that employees are being exploited in the company's store; that employees do not have proper recreational facilities; and that there is not every reasonable provision made to see that employees are comfortable under conditions that prevail on the great American desert.

Anyone who makes statements contrary to the above conditions is either maliciously and intentionally misquoting or is quoting from a source of information which is definitely not reliable.

Pathway of the Future

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE BOSTON POST

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Boston Post of May 16, 1941:

[From the Boston Post of May 16, 1941]

PATHWAY OF THE FUTURE

A year ago the Nazis were beating down the impregnable gates of Sedan as if they were muslin and hurrying along the road to Paris.

The mighty armies of France were crumbling beneath blows they had never anticipated. Gamelin, in a frenzy, was calling upon his men to "conquer or die." They responded without question.

Against surpassing armament—tanks in front of them and planes overhead which Jules Verne might have created out of his imagination, and "fifth columnists" tearing away behind them—many died and multitudes started on the tragic retreat.

Those who now live, either in the Nazi prison camps or back in civilian labors again, must have shaken with grief and anger yesterday when another of their leaders, Petain, announced that another battle had been lost and that they must turn their backs on hopes for freedom for a long, long time.

When he had finished his abrupt, reluctant, 2-minute speech they must have wondered if it had been Petain after all. How hard it must have been for them to believe that it was their beloved and respected Petain, in whom they had such confidence, the block on the way to complete submission, who had stood off Hitler and the Lavals for a year. Yet he had said:

"It is up to you to follow me without mental reservation on the road of honor and of national interest."

This was no Gamelin call to "conquer or die." It was a sentence which had been pronounced upon them, a sentence of doom which shattered dreams of the day when France would be free again and made them an unwilling party to placing another terrible burden on the backs of their fierce-fighting allies, the English.

If they had dared, they must have been ready to leap to their feet, as Anthony Eden did in the Commons and shout:

"We can no longer place any reliance in the French Government."

They will wonder about this "collaboration" with the Nazis. Under strict censorship they probably have no idea that it was under way before Petain made it known to them.

Only by whispers can they be aware of the charges that Nazi transports hugged the French shore of Africa to land troops in Lybia, that Nazi boats were allowed down a French river to strike the English in a new place or that France has now put the foe in a fresh striking position against the British by allowing Nazi planes to land in French-mandated Syria.

When they do comprehend what has happened, even if they feel it was forced, they will hardly believe what Petain said—that the meeting between Hitler and Darlan "permits us to light up the pathway of the future."

If a year of suppression has not destroyed the spirit of 1914, the Bastille and Lafayette, they will be thinking of De Gaulle.

We Must Face Realities in Formulating Our Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT B. CHIPERFIELD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 19, 1941

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, those who are opposed to entering the World War are constantly told they are not willing to face grim realities and are likened to the ostrich who sticks his head in the sand. As a matter of fact the exact opposite is true. It is really the so-called isolationists who never permit their wishing to run away with their thinking.

In the first place, the interventionists tell us we are in danger of invasion; that Hitler intends to conquer the world. When you ask them why they believe that, you are informed Hitler stated that fact many times in Mein Kampf and in many other public addresses. You are asked to take these statements as gospel truth just because Hitler has made them. On the other hand, when you call attention to the fact that Hitler has not committed an overt act against this country or violated in any way our neutrality, you are told that the same situation existed with the many small democracies in Europe with which Hitler had treaties guaranteeing their neutrality, and yet when the time came and he desired to do so he ruthlessly destroyed them; that his word and his treaties are worthless.

In other words, in one breath we are told we are in danger of invasion because Hitler has said so, and with the next breath they tell us his word is worthless. No wonder there is resulting confusion and difficulty in answering arguments of this type.

It seems to me that those who do not wish to enter this war approach the problem realistically. Before they enter into this conflict they want to know what will be the cost; can we accomplish the task; where will such a program end and what will be the result for the United States.

On May 11, 1941, after 6 months of silence, former President Hoover addressed the American people. He agreed with the foreign policy that had been adopted by the administration and never questioned the fact but that we should give all aid to England short of war. He did, however, look grim realities in the face. He told the American people we must render this aid to England but only by methods that would not get us into the war. He advocated against the use of convoys as he felt this was almost a sure way to become involved in war. He called attention to the cold-blooded fact that this country was not prepared to go to war; that we could not even properly outfit 200,000 troops, let alone 5,000,000 that he said would be necessary for an expeditionary force. He called attention to the difficulties that confronted us preparing for an invasion of Europe and that it would be just as difficult for Germany to invade us. He said neither we nor Germany could be properly prepared to conquer the other world unless there had been at least 10 years of preparation.

Certainly no one can accuse President Hoover of being pro-Nazi as all his sympathies have been toward England, and no one can question his wide experience both in Europe and as President of this country for 4 years.

I am inclined to agree with Senator Taft when he said that the real defeatists in this country are those like Secretary of War Stimson and Secretary of Navy Knox, when they insist we depend upon the British Navy for our safety. I believe we can build up our own defenses so we will not have to depend upon the navy of any other country.

President Roosevelt said, in his message at the opening of the Seventy-seventh Congress, that we should establish four essential human freedoms throughout the world.

The first is freedom of speech and expression everywhere in the world.

The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way everywhere in the world.

The third is freedom from want, which, translated into world terms, means economic understandings which will secure to every nation a healthy peacetime life for its inhabitants everywhere in the world.

The fourth is freedom from fear—which, translated into world terms, means a worldwide reduction of armaments to such a point and in such a thorough fashion that no nation will be in a position to commit an act of physical aggression against any neighbor—anywhere in the world.

He said these could be accomplished in our generation. No one would quarrel with such an idealistic goal and everyone would like to see established such a Utopia but who is being realistic, Mr. Hoover or Mr. Roosevelt? Are we told how we can establish freedom of religion in Russia; freedom from fear in China; freedom of speech in Germany, freedom from fear in India? Which one is doing the wishful thinking and putting his head in the sand to obvious facts? Why would it not be better to dedicate ourselves to a foreign policy that would have for its goal America first?

Almost every American school child is familiar with that part of George Washington's Farewell Address when he cautioned the American people against becoming involved in European affairs but not as many know that Jefferson said on one occasion:

I am relying for defense on our own Navy and our own naval force to protect our coasts and harbors. I am for free commerce with all nations; political connections with none, and little or no diplomatic establishments. I am not for linking ourselves by new treaties with the quarrels of Europe; entering that field to preserve their balance. For us to attempt to reform all Europe and bring them back to principles of morality and respect for the equal rights of nations would show us to be only maniacs of another character. The first object of my heart is my own country.

These words are just as true today as the day they were spoken, and I feel that all true Americans could well adopt them as their creed. Why not adopt a foreign policy that would save this country before we attempt to save the world? My colleague and friend KARL MUNDT, of South Dakota, has summed up four objectives for this country to follow, which I think are more practical for America than the four freedoms suggested by the President. He said on the floor of the House:

That America stay out of war.

That we extend all aid short of war to Britain and her associates.

That we build and protect our own Military Establishments so as to make this country impregnable.

That we preserve in this country our American system of representative government in which the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches share coordinate power.

If we adopt these four objectives, I believe the future of America would be secure.

It seems to me the time has come when America should exert her efforts in the cause of peace rather than in the cause of war. I was greatly pleased to hear the five-point peace proposal of Secretary of State Hull in his broadcast of May 18, 1941, which I believe any fair-minded nation should be glad to accept. The President might well consider calling a conference of nations with the ultimate goal of working out plans that would bring permanent peace to the world. Secretary Hull's peace proposals were a step in the right direction, and I hope the administration will see fit to continue his efforts in behalf of peace.

Should Public Opinion Polls Be Investigated?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. W. (RUNT) BISHOP

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, we are hearing much these days about the desirability of having a fair and impartial investigation by Congress to determine the reliability of public-opinion polls. The attached article from this morning's Washington Times-Herald reports a speech by a prominent educator of my State pointing out how these polls are sometimes used to mold and influence public opinion rather than as a method of simply analyzing it.

Senate Resolution 111 is now before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee. This resolution would empower this committee to make a complete and candid investigation of the various public-opinion polls now using the mails to pursue their endeavors and purporting to be operated without prejudice or propaganda purpose. I think it would be highly instructive to all Americans to have this investigation conducted and I urge others to lend their support to Senate Resolution 111.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of May 22, 1941]

GALLUP POLL HOLDS DANGER TO PUBLIC, SAYS EDUCATOR

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., May 21.—Subtle dangers lurk in polls of public opinion despite the usefulness they have in common with all social techniques, Prof. Charles A. Harper, of the Illinois State Normal University's history department, warned an audience of businessmen here today.

Professor Harper centered his analysis on the Gallup poll, conducted by Dr. George Gallup, of the American Institute of Public Opinion, which this week does an about face and announces that 52 percent of the public favors the use of the Navy to guard ships carrying war materials to Britain, whereas last month the same poll showed only two-fifths of the voters advocating such a step.

"In the Gallup poll, there is some evidence that the interventionist angle in the present crisis is unduly accented," Professor Harper commented.

"Four independent studies indicate this fact. The best and most recent of these careful scientific criticisms has been recently made under the direction of Ross Stagner, of Dartmouth College. Forty-eight out of fifty-five Gallup poll questions on the war were found to be biased in favor of an interventionist answer. The Fortune poll has run 20 to 40 percent lower on interventionist policies.

"The American Institute of Public Opinion is assuming such a serious place in American thinking that it behooves every thoughtful citizen to regard it with a critical mind," Professor Harper continued.

"If it were merely forecasting elections the accuracy of its findings could be adequately checked, but when it attempts to evaluate fundamental public attitudes there is no definite means of estimating its authenticity.

"If it is to influence Congress and the administration of the United States Government, the American people must have greater assurance that it takes a fair sampling of the public, and, which is most important, that its questions are scientifically formed and are not leading questions loaded with conscious and unconscious bias."

"Social psychologists," said Professor Harper, "have found that questioning to find attitudes and opinions is a discouragingly difficult technique."

An American Speaks His Mind

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

ARTICLE BY WALTER M. LEEDOM, JR., OF HOLLIDAYSBURG, PA.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, the present national emergency has caused deep thought on the part of every interested American.

The billions represented by our national-defense program have caused our national debt to proceed in the direction of $100,000,000,000.

The following interesting article from the pen of Walter M. Leedom, Jr., 209 Allegheny Street, Hollidaysburg, Pa., is an expression from an outstanding student of public affairs and is inserted for its informative value:

The direction the great economic energies generated by our defense effort take will undisputably help shape to a large degree the whole structure of tomorrow's society. The plan here outlined proposes a method for using this extraordinary period of economic activity to curb inflation and to build a permanently safe and stable employee-employer relationship, compatible with our private enterprise system, by syphoning labor's excess purchasing power into equity holdings in the corporations wherein they derive their livelihood.

Priorities in more and more industries will inevitably cause a shortage in consumers' goods just when our purchasing power, especially labor's, is at an all time peak. Some Government compulsion will be necessary to dry up this excess purchasing power, in order to curb inflation. The three commonest methods of taxes, rations, and compulsory loans will be used in varying degrees as variable conditions necessitate.

For our immediate purpose let us look at the method of employing compulsory loans or savings. One compulsory loan plan has been advanced by the British economist, Mr. J. M. Keynes, the salient point of which is that a loan to the government be made mandatory on all income in excess of a subsistence level, the redemption date of this loan to be projected into the post-war period to act as a cushion for the probably deflationary dominated economy of that period. The inescapable danger inherent in this plan is the unprecedented degree of state domination over the whole economy.

This tendency toward state domination, which would lead—unintentionally or otherwise—to state socialism, could be alleviated somewhat by the plan herewith presented for directing labor's excess purchasing power into the purchase of private corporative equities rather than into what would in the long run amount to government equities.

A modification of the Keynes plan leaving individuals—not a few but many—in control of the post-war economy is the aim of this presentation. In brief, there shall be a reconstruction of all corporative capital structures, setting up a structure wherein laborer and investor will have equal capital interest; the labor in each specific corporation must invest its surplus purchasing power in capital equity in the corporation with which it is associated.

The goal to be obtained would be a corporation having 50 percent of its capital owned by a labor-capital group and 50 percent owned by an investor-capital group. If this were to be achieved in a 5-year period, only 10 percent of present capitalization would need to be liquidated in any one year. In fact, with the growing demand for more expansion capital, the need for liquidation of established capital would be even less than the 10 percent per year if the new capital financing were done with the newly acquired money from the employee group. No doubt the capital liquidated would find its way into Government investments, but in so doing its indirectness would add to available sources for taxation, thus facilitating current Government financing.

The corporative capital structures would, of course, have to be constructed to give equal representation and responsibility to both the labor-capital and the investment-capital groups. This new structure must be such that neither group can hold any priority claims over the other. The market (and real—no watered stock) value of both groups' holdings must always be equal, this to be accomplished by intracorporation stabilization machinery. The labor-capital group in contrast to the investor-capital group must be composed wholly of bona fide employees in that specific corporation wherein they find employment. Should a holder in the labor-capital group lose his status as a bona fide employee, his equity must be surrendered for reabsorption by bona fide employees.

At a time when labor is in possession of excess purchasing power and most corporations are in need of expansion capital, the realization of a plan of this breadth can be accomplished with a minimum of difficulty to either group—truly a heroic step capable of accomplishment in a limited amount of time only during a period of an heroically expanded economy. Therefore, when we enter into a more tranquil period of industrial and political activity, labor will find itself a responsible unit in our society; each member of the labor group will be a small capitalist in his own production sphere. Thus he will have a tangible proprietary interest in the capitalistic system, in contrast to the intangible remoteness of proprietorship in the ambiguous structure of state socialism.

Under such an individualistic set-up the worker will feel a part of the building in which he works; he will feel a sense of security from his very tools, a comprehensive understanding of the problems of management, and, above all, it will give him a concrete reason for believing in our way of life. According to Abraham Lincoln, each man shall direct his energies toward building a home of his own, rather than toward tearing down that of his neighbors.

Is the United States Willing To Undertake This Realistic Task?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY C. DWORSHAK

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, during the past few weeks there has been a widespread tendency in the National Capital to give consideration to the tremendous responsibilities involved in this country becoming an active belligerent in the war. Peace, and the requirements of stabilizing human relationships, constitutes a real challenge. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Times-Herald, which discusses this timely subject:

[From the Washington Times-Herald]

NOT ETHICS, BUT MATHEMATICS

"And while I am talking to you, fathers and mothers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before, but I shall say it again, and again, and again; your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars." (President Roosevelt at Boston, October 30, 1940.)

TROOP CALL

The above was the most important promise that President Roosevelt made during his campaign for third-term reelection. To date, he has done nothing that we know of to violate that promise.

The promise was made in the speech in which Mr. Roosevelt thanked for his campaign support "that Boston boy, beloved by all of Boston and a lot of other places, my Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, Joe Kennedy."

Mr. Kennedy, the day before, had radioed a fervent plea for the reelection of Mr. Roosevelt. The polls and straw votes were indicating that the contest would be unexpectedly close; the Catholic leaders in Boston were (and are) against United States intervention. Mr. Kennedy is one of the most prominent of Catholic laymen, and his help was most timely, especially his statement:

"Unfortunately, during this political campaign there has arisen the charge that the President of the United States is trying to involve this country in the World War. Such a charge is false."

Well, the London News Chronicle day before yesterday came out with an editorial plea to the United States to send troops into the war now. Britain is safe, said the News Chronicle; * * * "cannot be defeated in these islands * * * convinced we are going to win the war." But, it went on—

"If you come in and come in fighting, we can whip these savages back to their caves before the end of next year."

Thus begins an old familiar British technique. This first request for troops comes from an opposition paper. The next one can be expected to come from a paper supporting the Churchill government; and after that Mr. Churchill himself can be expected to make the request for troops.

Will that request be granted? If it is, can we and the British "whip these savages back to their caves before the end of next year"?

PROBLEM IN MATHEMATICS

Let's grant, for the sake of argument, that the Germans are savages. The trouble is that, as savages, they are like the Iroquois Indians, meaning they are tough and ruthless fighting men rather than like the peace-loving, slew-footed Diggers, Menominees, or Siwashes of old.

The Germans may be highly unethical from our point of view, but this isn't a question of ethics. It's a question of mathematics. We can't wish them back inside their former borders just by having high ideals. The real problem is: How can the 200,000,000 Anglo-Saxons apply the necessary armed force to the 70,000,000 to 80,000,000 Germans to beat them back to their alleged caves and restore some kind of sovereignty to Poland, Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium, France, Yugoslavia, and Greece?

Hitler has from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 men under arms and highly trained. To get at him in Europe we and the British will have to establish a bridgehead somewhere in Europe, presumably on the French coast. Judging from the recent highly carbonated conversations between Secretary of State Hull and French Ambassador Henri-Haye, the French won't give us such a bridgehead free for nothing. We'll have to fight for it.

Our problem, then, is to combine in crushing strength against Hitler the factors of arms, plus ships, plus planes, plus distance, plus time, plus other less factors.

As things look now, it will take 10,000,000 Allied (British and American) soldiers to do that. It cannot possibly be done before the end of next year, as promised by the London News Chronicle. It looks more like a job that will last from 10 years up. And there is no sure guaranty that we shall win in the end. We shall be operating 3,000 miles from our base; the Germans at home.

All defeatism and emotionalism aside, that is the mathematical, logistical problem involved in a decisive British-American defeat of Hitler. Because there are 130,000,000 of us and only 70,000,000 British, we shall inevitably be called to furnish most of the manpower and the materials. Before hastening to accept the British invitation to send over some men, let's be sure that we have the main outlines of the problem clearly in mind, so that we can know what we're letting ourselves in for.

Defense Bonds

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM IL PROGRESSO ITALO-AMERICANO

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial which appeared in Il Progresso Italo-Americano on May 19, 1941:

[Translation of editorial appearing in Il Progresso Italo-Americano on May 19, 1941]

DEFENSE BONDS

In the various branches of the Chase National Bank, which is the largest bank in the world, are displayed posters bearing the legend, "Now dollars, too, can enlist." Translated freely in the Italian language, it might sound something like this: Now the time has come for the dollar to do its soldier's duty.

In fact, the issuance of defense savings bonds is the voluntary mobilization of savings to cooperate in the defense of the Nation. In other countries, in cases of emergency such as they now find themselves, they would impose so-called forced loans, which is the compulsory mobilization of the financial resources of the nation.

The United States has not had recourse to coercion.

The patriotic sentiment of American citizens creates miracles which no coercive law can create.

The Government's appeal has found a profound response in the heart of every person loyal and faithful to this great country, and every purse has loosened its strings in a genous competition of offering, which clearly demonstrates the compact solidarity of the people to immunize the United States from every danger and from every present or future threat.

It is said that money is for necessity and no necessity is more urgent and impelling than that of national defense. He who defends his own country defends not only his spiritual and material patrimony, his government, its institutions, and the collectivity of the citizens, but he also defends his own person, his own family, and his own interests.

Italo-Americans have instinctively understood the significance of this voluntary conscription of money and have responded, are responding, and will respond with the generosity inspired by the gravity of the moment. From the richest to the humblest, everyone has done, is doing, and will do his duty to prove that in their loyalty to America there are not mental reservations and they are ready for every possible sacrifice for national security.

After all, purchasing national-defense bonds is not only a patriotic duty, but a profitable, prudent, and secure investment of one's savings.

A bond of series E, for example, may be purchased for only $18.75. After 10 years this bond is worth $25.

A bond of series F costs only $74. After 12 years it is worth $100.

The interest on these bonds is paid semiannually by Treasury checks sent directly to the investors.

As we have already pointed out, for those who have not the necessary cash to purchase a bond, there are defense-savings stamps which will serve to accumulate the sum necessary for the purchase of the bonds.

While defense-savings bonds can be purchased directly from the Federal Reserve banks or any other bank which have been authorized to sell them, defense-savings stamps can be acquired at all post offices.

Today there is no more remunerative and at the same time more secure investment. He who purchases these bonds not only performs a patriotic duty but also an excellent business transaction because he protects his money and he assures himself of a future income.

In referring to this issue, the executive council of the American Bankers Association declared that once again the national financial policy has counted on the monetary power of the United States to adequately carry on its vast defense program.

The issuance of these bonds—it added—tends to prevent the dangers of inflation and the economic dislocations which are common after a period of feverish activity stimulated by the emergency.

We must see to it that greater incomes do not increase our desire for dissipation. We must encourage savings and to encourage savings there are no more attractive means than remunerative investments, which offer an attractive premium guaranteed by the resources of a nation whose annual income amounts to $80,000,000,000.

Convoys

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES F. O'CONNOR

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

RESOLUTION OF ANACONDA (MONT.) ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS IN AMERICA

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolution:

ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS IN AMERICA,
Anaconda, Mont., May 14, 1941.

Hon. JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
United States Congressman,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Deer Lodge County, Mont., the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas it has been intimated that the United States Fleet be used as a convoy for merchant ships carrying munitions of war to certain belligerent nations now at war in Europe; and

"Whereas those convoy ships would necessarily have to travel in waters infested with submarines and sunken mines and thus run the risk of being destroyed, such an act would inevitably bring the Government of the United States into the European war: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the officers and members of Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Deer Lodge County, Mont., do hereby protest the use of the United States Fleet acting as such convoy for ships carrying munitions of war to belligerent countries in Europe or Africa;

"Resolved, That we petition His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt to be ever-mindful of his promises to the electorate in the recent campaign for reelection that no American boy would ever be sent across the Atlantic to fight on foreign soil; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; a copy to the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State; a copy to the Honorable Senators B. K. Wheeler and James E. Murray, United States Senators; and a copy to the Honorable James F. O'Connor and Jeanette Rankin, Members of Congress from Montana; and a copy spread on the minutes of this meeting."

Yours very truly,

MICHAEL LACEY,
P. J. O'DONNELL,
JAMES MULVEY,
Committee.

Tax on Intangible Personal Property

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WRIGHT PATMAN
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 1941

STATEMENT BY HON. WRIGHT PATMAN, OF TEXAS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following testimony given by me before the Ways and Means Committee on the tax bill:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please come to order.

The Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, Representative in Congress from the State of Texas, is the next witness on the calendar. I regret that we have not more members of our committee here to hear what I know will be a splendid statement.

Mr. PATMAN, will you please give your name and address?

STATEMENT OF HON. WRIGHT PATMAN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF TEXAS

Mr. PATMAN. My name is WRIGHT PATMAN, Member of Congress, representing the First Congressional District of Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you prefer to make your statement without interruption?

Mr. PATMAN. I would like to. However, if anyone wants to ask me a question that happens to be timely at the particular time I am talking, that will be all right.

I am hoping that the committee will accept one or more of the suggestions that I make. However, if they are not accepted, I expect to vote for the tax bill that this committee brings in. I realize that a large part of these expenditures should be paid by current taxation; that is the only way we can prevent a dangerous inflation with the large expenditures that we are making.

The CHAIRMAN. I am sure, Mr. PATMAN, that the committee has a high regard for your good judgment, and your ability, and your familiarity with these problems, and anything that you say will be received with an open mind and given due weight and consideration.

NEW AND UNTAPPED SOURCE OF REVENUE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee, members of this committee are seeking for new sources of tax revenue and have asked for suggestions as to where such revenue can best be found. The problem is particularly acute at the present moment, in view of the tremendous expenditures which we have recently made for the national defense. I have been studying a field which I feel offers an unparalleled source of tax revenue. It is a field that can be easily and cheaply tapped at a minimum of injury and inconvenience to the taxpayers and the national economy. I refer to taxes on intangible personal property, the stocks, bonds, and money of the Nation. I believe intangible personalty is a tremendous source of potential tax revenue for the Federal Government.

INSURANCE PREMIUM

Our Government is spending billions for national preparedness each year. The cost is referred to as a good insurance premium to protect us against a greater loss. It is said that even if we never need the battleships we are building, or the planes, the tanks, the guns, the ammunition, or the men we are training, it will be worth all it is costing because of the protection such a program gives to our country, including its wealth. I agree that this is true; but should not the wealth of the country help to pay these insurance premiums? Why should it all be borne by income taxes, sales taxes, and other different forms of taxes that are quite burdensome on the people who are making the greatest contribution toward building our country?

If the people who own the stocks, bonds, and money of the Nation are allowed to escape any tax burden except the small amount they pay on the net income derived from them each year, I doubt that wealth pays its fair and proportionate part to protect itself.

The point is: Should the person who owns the million dollars' worth of bonds, stocks, or money pay defense taxes only on the net income earned, or should he also be required to pay something on the million dollars for the protection of the million dollars?

WEALTH SHOULD PAY ITS FAIR PORTION

It is my belief that the wealth of this country should pay its fair share of the cost of preparedness. The States have failed in their efforts to tax intangible wealth because of the many perplexing problems of assessment, discovery, and the shifting residence of the owners, but there is no reason why the Federal Government cannot succeed in enforcing the intangibles-tax law. Such a law could be made to raise billions of dollars a year and at the same time allow very liberal exemptions. Possibly the first $25,000, $50,000, or even more should be exempt on the theory that the owners of such amounts pay their part through other kinds of taxes, but surely those possessing so much wealth to be protected should pay a special tax for that purpose.

It is suggested that the subject might be presented in a question-and-answer form, using the questions commonly asked:

1. Question. What do you mean by intangible personal property?

Answer. The term "intangible personalty" has no fixed legal signification. Intangible personalty is property which is not real property or tangible personalty and includes stocks, bonds, mortgages, notes, and similar commercial papers which embody an obligation in a document. Moneys and credits are generally deemed to be within the classification.

2. Question. What is the amount of the "intangible personalty" in the United States?

Answer. Estimates as to this vary. I am informed that there is around $400,000,000,000 worth of intangible personal property in the United States. The estimate of Mr. Colin F. Stam, chief of staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation of Congress, places it at $300,000,000,000, an estimate which he considers conservative. Mr. Stam's figures are to be found on page A1239 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the present session.

3. Question. How much in taxes could be equitably raised from this kind of property?

Answer. The possibilities for tax revenue are practically limitless. I myself am inclined to concur with Congressman KNUTE HILL, of Washington, who, in the last session of Congress, introduced a bill, H. R. 10174, providing for a tax of 5 mills or one-half of 1 percent on the excess of accumulations of intangible personal property over $50,000. It is estimated that this revenue measure would yield between $800,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 in tax revenue, on the basis of the estimated present concentration of wealth. This bill has been reintroduced in the present Congress as H. R. 980. In my investigation I discovered this well-drawn bill was pending. I am endorsing the part relating to taxing intangible wealth and not the part relating to taxing State and city bonds.

4. Question. What you are advocating is a capital levy, is it not?

Answer. No. A capital levy, to my information and belief, is a tax taking 20 or 50 percent or some other portion of a man's property without any reference to the benefits which he himself receives from the Government. The tax which Mr. HILL proposes is merely a property tax, a small property tax. It is no more a capital levy than is the general property tax levied by the States. The tax is directly in proportion to the taxpayer's ability to pay. With international bandits on the loose, the cost of protecting property is going up, and it is only fair that property owners should stand part of the cost of this protection.

5. Question. Intangible personalty pays taxes, does it not? The States tax it, do they not?

Answer. Fourteen States and the District of Columbia have no taxes of any kind on "intangible personalty." Some States have special so-called moneys and credits taxes on this type of property. A few apply general property-tax rates to it. This type of taxation has broken down in the States altogether. Most States rely on township or local subdivision assessors to assess their taxes. These men have no way to assess a man's intangible personalty. They cannot go to the books of banks or corporations. Intangible personalty is not fixed and visible like real estate or tangible personalty. It is transitory and can be easily hidden in secret depositories inside or outside the State. It is estimated that only 8 to 20 percent of the intangible property is declared for tax purposes in those jurisdictions which tax it. Intangible property is invariably on record some place, and the only way to reach it is to tax it on a national scale through an authority that has the ability to consult the places of record if need be. However, self-declaration has proved very successful in the income-tax field, and I feel that it would be equally successful in the field of Federal taxation of intangible property.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would you permit an interruption there?

Do I understand you to say that a man living in Texas who has his intangible wealth in New York cannot be taxed in Texas?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, if you had a way of getting at it, possibly you would be able to do it, but these local and State assessors are not in a position to examine books and make investigations that agents of the Federal Government are permitted to make.

Mr. KNUTSON. The States are permitted to examine the Federal records, and it would seem that that would make the information gained available to the local assessors.

Mr. PATMAN. In theory you are exactly right, Mr. KNUTSON, but in practice they have absolutely failed; and many States, including your own of Minnesota, have made a very conscientious and honest effort to enforce the law and failed.

6. Question. Would the States feel that their rights have been encroached upon should the Federal Government enter this field of taxation?

Answer. The Federal Government is already in this field through capital-stock taxes and similar taxation, although the incidence of these taxes is different from the tax that I have in mind. The States could not validly object to the Federal Government taxing intangible property because it is a field that they have been almost powerless to exploit through no fault of their own. If it is necessary, the Federal Government could arrange offset provisions to enable the States to benefit as much from the new law as they are benefiting under the old, and it would cost the Federal Government but a small fraction of its tax revenue. In the long run the States would probably benefit from this tax through Federal benefits.

7. Question. Is the thing that you are proposing—that is, an increased burden on intangible property—preferable in your mind to an increase in the income-tax rates?

Answer. I think so. I feel that a man's income is not always the best indication of his ability to pay taxes. A man whose income is derived largely from property is better able to pay a tax than a man whose income is derived from skilled or personal services. The income of the former is derived with less effort and is less likely to fluctuate than the income of the latter; and, if the worst comes to the worst, he can always fall back upon the security of his invested capital. The effort to solve this inequity by taxing so-called earned and unearned income at different rates has been a failure. It is administratively impracticable to trace and differentiate between them for tax purposes. An income tax can never accomplish this differentiation, whereas a tax on intangibles can, because it can reach the corpus of the property.

8. Question. Do you advocate a tax on intangible property to supplant an income tax?

Answer. No; but State income taxes are already at a high level. Federal corporation income and excess-profits taxes run up to 62 percent. Other levies are additional. Personal Federal income taxes are graduated up to over 81 percent. I know that the Office of Production Management is frequently troubled by the refusal of businesses to take defense work by reason of the high taxes on any profit margin. It is possible that a sizable portion of an increase in income-tax revenues will have to be paid out by the Government in plant subsidies. It seems to me that it might be better tax psychology in some upper-bracket tax cases to take only, say, for illustration, 25 percent of a man's income through an income tax and another 25 percent through a property tax rather than take the entire amount of, say, 50 percent of his income through an income tax.

I am afraid that we may get into trouble if we try to take the entire cost of this war out of consumers, producers, and businessmen through excise and income taxes. If a man's income is taxed at 70 or 80 or 90 percent his incentive to produce will naturally decline. Instead of taxing his income so heavily, consider taking part of it out of property. For example, I understand that many prominent executives are no longer bothering much about production and manufacturing because they already have all the money they want and could not make much more if they wanted to. However, if a man's tax is much the same irrespective of his income, he will have considerable incentive to produce.

Insofar as possible, taxes should be an incentive to production rather than restrictive. This is the theory of the intangible property tax; it measures ability to pay with fine discrimination, yet does not decrease the incentive of the owner to engage in productive enterprise.

9. Question. What is happening in other countries?

Answer. Great Britain is trying to finance her defense largely through income taxation, excises, and borrowing. Germany, which has been on a war economy for some time, has had since 1936 something approximating an intangibles tax in the form of a net worth tax. It is a tax of 0.5 percent on all property with exemptions of RM10,000 for a single man, RM20,000 for a married person, RM10,000 for each child, and RM10,000 if the taxpayer is over 60 years of age, incapacitated, or has an income of less than RM3,000. Norway has a graduated property tax with an exemption of 5,000 kroner. The tax runs from as low as 0.3 krone per 1,000 kroner on 10,000 kroner up to as much as 6 kroner per 1,000 kroner.

This rests most heavily on the owners of intangibles because property of this type tends to become more concentrated in its ownership. Sweden and other European countries have similar taxes. In the United States, by comparison to these countries, we get a disproportionately large amount of our Federal, State, and local revenue from real property and a disproportionately small amount from intangible property.

10. Question. Would this be double taxation? I mean that, inasmuch as a property tax is paid on the tangible property, which is frequently the basis or the security of the intangible property, would a tax on the intangible itself be taxing the same property twice?

Answer. I think not. For example, a bondholder has no interest in the equity of the property behind his bond. He is interested in it only insofar as it is security for the loan. He has no responsibility for the taxes or the liabilities of the property, yet his certificate is as valuable as though it were tangible property. It is a different kind of property altogether. Besides, it is not taxed at all by the Federal Government.

Stocks are not greatly different from bonds. Many corporations, particularly family corporations, have converted a large part of their stocks into bonds so that they might pay their income out as interest instead of dividends, and thus escape corporation taxes. Thus the two main types of securities are often rather similar in their nature for tax purposes.

Double taxation is generally a fallacious argument. The incidence of any property tax paid by a corporation or a debtor is usually very different from that paid by the owner of the intangible property. In any event, it is more than likely that double taxation may be desirable under some circumstances.

11. Question. I presume that such a tax as you propose would have some effect on multiple holding companies whose securities rest in layers one upon the other?

Answer. Yes. "Corporations" are included within the term "taxpayers" as it is used in H. R. 980. Each holding company would find it necessary to pay a property tax on securities which it holds in excess of the $50,000 exemption. This would tend to cut down the great tiers of holding companies in some fields and thus tend to accomplish some of the purposes of the Holding Company Act.

This tax would also reach idle, undistributed corporate surpluses by taxing the surpluses in the hands of the corporation and by taxing the increased market value of the stock in the hands of the stockholders, thus accomplishing in part the purpose of the undistributed-profits tax.

12. Question. What would be the effect on the security market of the bill which you propose?

Answer. I do not believe it would have any material effect on the security market, certainly no greater adverse effect than the presently proposed increase in corporation taxes.

A liberal exemption, such as $25,000, $50,000, or $75,000, will keep the intangibles tax from hitting the marginal investor. Thus, the tax would be absorbed where it hit and would not be capitalized to force down the security market.

Every new factor affects the security market, for that matter, and the results are not too bad, because things soon settle down to a new equilibrium. The value of capital goods is a derived value. It is derived from the demand for the things which the capital produces. This factor is more important in determining capital-goods values than the demand of an investor for an investment. Consequently, the security market can be affected almost as much by consumer taxes as by a tax on capital itself. In the long run, such a tax might help the capital-goods market by decreasing liquid capital and by lightening the tax burden on consumer purchasing power.

13. Question. Would such a tax rest more heavily on "low income" securities than it would on "high income" securities? I mean that where you take the value of the intangible property as a tax base without regard to the income and tax a low-income-producing security at the same rate as a high-income-producing security, might it not be a disproportionately heavy burden for the former?

Answer. I do not think that this is a valid criticism. To start with, the value of a security, like the value of land, is, in a large measure, determined by the income which it produces. Speculative future value also plays a part. There is some variance in the ratio of the income of the security to the value of the security by reason of the varying safety of the investment, or the convenience with which it can be liquidated. The question of whether the capital itself is increasing or depreciating in value is also important. A tax would have little bearing on these value-determining factors. If anything, I think that the value of a security is a fairer tax base than the income it produces.

14. Question. You state that the taxation of intangible personal property has broken down in the States. Do you think that the Federal Government would have an easier time assessing and administering such a tax?

Answer. Indeed I do. I think that the ease and economy of assessing and administering this tax by the Federal Government is one of its best features.

To start with, a relatively small number of taxpayers own more than $50,000 in intangible property. Then, self-declaration by taxpayers has been very successful in the income-tax field. It would be even more successful in connection with a national tax on intangibles. A man's net income may vary tremendously from year to year, but his net worth on his personal balance sheet changes but little. It is hard to check on the amount of a man's income in a particular year whereas it is a relatively easy matter to discover the amount of property he has. Income may be hidden or disguised. This is more difficult with property. An intangible must usually be of record some place whereas income is frequently not.

The States get only an 8 to 20 percent declaration of intangibles because they rely almost solely on township or other local assessors. These men have no authority to look at corporation or bank books in their own or in neighboring States. The Federal Government would not be balked by any such limitation in its jurisdiction.

I might also add that I am informed that such a tax has greatly aided some of the European countries in checking estate-tax and income-tax returns.

15. Question. You know that the so-called apportionment clause of the Constitution says that no poll tax "or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census * * *," etc. Would a tax on intangible personal property by the Federal Government be a "direct tax" contrary to this prohibition in the Constitution?

Answer. I think not. I know that there is authority both ways on this subject. I understand that the "apportionment clause" of the Constitution to which you refer was written into the Constitution only to satisfy southern landowners who were fearful that the North would try to tax their land and slaves. In 1880 the Supreme Court in the case of Springer v. U. S. (102 U. S. 586, 602), said, I quote:

"Our conclusions are that direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution, are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate."

However, the Court in 1895 in a 5-to-4 decision called Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429 and 158 U. S. 601), decided that an income tax on income from real estate or personalty was a direct tax. This necessitated the sixteenth amendment. The Pollock case made no mention of the Springer case, and did not purport to overrule it. On the other hand, the Court in 1911 in Flint v. Stone Tracy Co. (220 U. S. 108, 152), cited the Springer case with approval. Some authorities conclude that Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain (192 U. S. 397), a case decided in 1904, overrules the Pollock case. I am confident that the present Supreme Court would hold a Federal tax on intangible personal property to be constitutional.

SAVE $2,000,000,000 A YEAR

It is wrong for Congress to compel taxpayers to pay $2,000,000,000 a year interest on the public debt.

A few months ago when I appeared before this committee, advocating a slight change in our monetary system whereby the taxpayers would be saved from one to two billion dollars a year in interest charges, it was suggested that this matter properly came before the Banking and Currency Committee, of which I am a member. Since that time, however, administration leaders and experts before this committee have been insisting that in connection with the raising of taxes, social and economic problems, as well as effects upon the monetary system, including inflation, should also be considered. I presume that this committee is taking these different factors into consideration in writing this tax bill. If I am correct in that assumption, I desire to urge the committee to seriously consider at this time the proposal that I made at my former appearance.

The proposal was as follows:

"1. That Congress, as the policy-making branch of our Government, should adopt a policy of not paying interest; it is unnecessary.

"2. That the Federal Reserve Banking System should be owned by the Government instead of the private commercial banks.

"3. That when the Government needs money or credit, it should deliver to the 12 Federal Reserve banks noninterest-bearing Government obligations and secure credit for the amount thereof.

"4. That such a system will not cause the printing of an extra dollar because it is using exactly the same system that is in effect today, except the taxpayers will be saved the interest, which will be at the rate of $2,000,000,000 a year at the end of this year if Government expenditures continue as contemplated."

In that connection, may I state that the payments made by all of the individual income tax payers of this country are not sufficient to pay the interest on our Government debt? It only amounts to about 50 percent, if the interest is $2,000,000,000 a year, as contemplated by the end of this year, and some estimates go as high as $3,000,000,000.

Mr. REED. You mean on the Federal debt alone?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

RIGHT OR WRONG IS QUESTION

If this proposal is adopted, the tax bill under consideration will be unnecessary. I know that uninformed people, misinformed people, and those who are selfishly interested or those who may not have given the subject adequate consideration will immediately say "printing-press money," but they cannot for long succeed in misleading the people with the misinformation that such a phrase implies. The truth is, and every informed person knows it, that it is absolutely idiotic for the sovereign Government of the United States, which has the power to create both bonds and money to issue and sell bonds—interest-bearing—to purchase money of its own creation. This is not a question involving expert advice or monetary science. It is a question of right or wrong and is just as simple as the simplest problems confronting us in everyday life. People, who say that this part of monetary control is a mystery, have not given the question sufficient consideration, or they have been bluffed or intimidated by the artful and clever phrases of those, who profit by such a system that is so burdensome to the poor people of this Nation. I realize that a short, clever slogan will destroy an hour of logic and reason, but it should also be understood that such destruction is temporary and is not lasting. The truth will prevail and the truth is, one of these days the American people are going to wake up and curse their lawmakers for not changing such an idotic system and thereby placing upon them such an unnecessary and heavy burden.

Why allow the commercial banks and the Federal Reserve banks to use our Nation's credit free to purchase interest-bearing Government bonds? It simply does not make sense, and this committee should now take the initiative in making the change.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, I desire to urge the committee to consider the following suggestions relative to this proposed tax bill:

First. That the wealth of this country, and especially the intangible property, should bear a fair proportion of the cost of protection that is afforded through national preparedness.

Second. That a policy should be adopted by Congress which will save the taxpayers $2,000,000,000 a year in interest charges.

Third. That the automobile tax of 20 percent that has been proposed is unreasonable, clearly out of line with other taxes proposed, and should not be accepted.

Fourth. The proposed tax on bank checks is deflationary, in addition to being a nuisance, and will cause the people great inconvenience and trouble that cannot be justified for the comparatively small amount to be raised. The Government should cultivate the good will of the people in this emergency instead of creating ill-will through an annoyance tax.

Fifth. The Treasury, if it continues the policy of paying interest, should have a stable rate of interest on all issues, instead of 25 or 30 different rates as at present, or should acquire the money and credit necessary through competitive bids.

Sixth. Under no circumstances should taxes be levied on the income of State, county, or political subdivision bonds or securities.

I respectfully suggest that our enormous public debt can be retired in 25 years without a burdensome tax on the people if the Government will adopt the policy herein proposed of issuing no more interest-bearing bonds and by paying 4 percent each year on the principal of the bonds outstanding.

I repeat that it is wrong for the American people to be compelled to pay the bondholders $2 for every $1 that is borrowed and used to pay soldiers, materialmen, and others for services and supplies in connection with national defense or for other purposes.

As stated to you, gentlemen, in the beginning, I hope that you accept one or more of these suggestions, but I realize that money has got to be raised to pay this enormous debt and these expenditures in order to prevent a dangerous inflation.

I am in accord with your views expressed that a large part of it should be paid as we go, and I expect to support the bill that this committee in its judgment reports to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is very kind and considerate, I am sure, and the members of the committee appreciate that.

I would like to ask a question about the last paragraph of your statement, Mr. PATMAN.

"I repeat that it is wrong for the American people to be compelled to pay the bondholders $2 for every $1 that is borrowed and used to pay soldiers, materialmen, and others for services and supplies in connection with national defense or for other purposes."

Now, with regard to that $2 for $1, they would not have to pay $2 for $1 if the money was borrowed at a low rate of interest, such as the rate at which the Government borrows now, as compared with what individuals pay, unless the Government has the use of the money long enough so that this low rate would make it $2 for $1? That is, if you borrow it today and pay it back next year it would not be $2 for $1, but only a low rate of interest for the use of the money; is that not so?

Mr. PATMAN. I am just taking the history of bond transactions, and the history discloses that the Government usually pays $2 for every $1.

The CHAIRMAN. But the question that I wanted to ask right there is this: There is no way of making the bondholders, the people that have this money to loan, give us the money. The Government has got to get the money from somewhere, by taxing or borrowing or by printing it. How would you get the money from these bondholders?

Mr. PATMAN. You do not need to get it from the people now. I think the banks have too many Government bonds, I do not think it is in their interest or the people's interest to have so much of their resources in Government bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. Under your plan you would not get it from them at all.

Mr. PATMAN. The Government would use its own money just like it is doing now, except that the Government is now paying interest.

If the chairman will permit me a moment, the way it is now the Secretary of the Treasury causes to be issued both bonds and money. They are printed in the same place over here at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. When he issues bonds and sells them to a local bank, the local bank usually gives the Treasury credit at the Federal Reserve bank in that district. It is money created by the banks.

The Treasury recognizes that in this present bond campaign, because it is specifically provided that the banks cannot create the money to buy these bonds; they cannot do it. They do not want the banks to create any more money and I think that they are right about it. They have over $20,000,000,000 in Government securities already.

Now, the Federal Reserve bank has credit that may be checked upon by the United States Treasury, and the United States Treasury in paying debts of different kinds and various bills draws checks upon that Federal Reserve credit.

The only change that I would make, I would not go through that local bank at all. I would just deliver non-interest-bearing bonds to the Federal Reserve bank, and have the Federal Reserve bank give credit for those bonds just like it is giving the local bank credit now, and issue checks to pay the bills in the same way and manner as they are now issued.

Then I would retire 4 percent of that each year, and in 25 years you have got your national debt retired. It cannot be any more inflationary than the banks creating the money; no one can seriously contend otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it would require additional legislation to compel the Federal Reserve bank to do that; would it not?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know; they could not very well refuse to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. I am just wondering if it would not require additional legislation to compel them to do that.

Mr. PATMAN. I should think that there should be legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. You would have to start back at the Banking and Currency Committee to get that authorized, would you not?

Mr. PATMAN. No, sir. This committee is now considering—and I hope I am correct in this—together with the matter of raising the money you are also considering the effect upon inflation or deflation or other economic problems, and if this committee has assumed the burden of doing that I think that the question properly belongs right here with this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. You think that we would have jurisdiction?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, sir; in view of that.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not know whether the Banking and Currency Committee would be jealous of their prerogatives.

Mr. PATMAN. As one member of the Banking and Currency Committee, I know that I would not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then in your prepared statement, on page 14, your item No. 13, referring to automobiles, you state that the 20 percent that has been proposed is unreasonable, clearly out of line with other taxes and should not be accepted.

That is a pretty steep increase, we all realize that. But if it is the policy of the Government in the national-defense program to curtail automobile production in order that the material and skilled mechanics and others connected with the production of automobiles may devote their time and efforts to producing war materials, and war supplies; if that is the policy of the Government, and that creates a shortage in automobiles and the demand is greater than the supply, competition then for the automobiles that are made will be so great it is just natural the effect would be to raise the price.

Now, the traffic can only bear so much. If the effect of this policy of the Government is to curtail the production whereby the supply will be short of the demand, will not the automobile manufacturers if there is not something done to control the price, reap a rich harvest there?

Mr. PATMAN. It will be harder on the owners than it will on the manufacturers. It will be harder on the 30,000,000 owners of automobiles than it would be on the manufacturers.

The manufacturers will only produce, say, about 4,000,000 cars, but there are 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 cars in the country today.

The CHAIRMAN. We are talking now about new automobiles; are we not?

Mr. PATMAN. No; this proposal goes to second-hand cars, too. If it does increase the value of the article of 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 people, the value of their property, I do not see where that would be very harmful to the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not be fairer for the Government to take this difference between what the automobiles ought to sell for, and this inflated price? Should there not be a tax in there?

Mr. PATMAN. I would not object to a fair tax, but I think 20 percent is so clearly and unreasonably out of line that it should not be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. I would not say this is the policy or purpose of the Treasury at all, but sometimes proposals are made for trading purposes.

Are there any other questions?

Mr. CROWTHER. In relation to the statement about paying $2 for $1, your chief complaint is about the excessive interest burden that we bear on the national debt; is that right?

Mr. PATMAN. Any burden, Doctor, that is paid by the Federal Government, the sovereign Government that has the power to create its own credit, any amount is excessive, I say.

Now, if it were a State, I would say all right, or a political subdivision, or a private corporation. They should pay, but they do not have the money-creating power; they do not have the credit-creating power; but here we are dealing with the agency that has the power to create both money or credit and bonds.

Mr. CROWTHER. Have you any idea how much money the taxpayers have paid in interest on the World War debt?

Mr. PATMAN. I could determine it rather quickly, because many people will wonder why this is brought up now, and that goes right to the heart of it.

For the first 125 years of our country's history we paid no interest hardly; it meant nothing; it was insignificant, only about $3,000,000 a year, except during the War between the States. There were 3 years at that time when the annual burden of interest got up as high as $25,000,000. But outside of those years, the interest burden did not exceed $3,000,000 a year for the first 125 years of our country's history.

During the last 25 years, and since the World War of 1917, we have paid up over $1,000,000,000 a year, so we have paid approximately $25,000,000,000, Dr. CROWTHER, on the World War debt.

Mr. CROWTHER. We have not paid as much as that, but we have paid close to $15,000,000,000 on the World War debt.

Mr. PATMAN. I am just roughly guessing at it, knowing that it went over $1,000,000,000 a year, except for a short time it came down to about $700,000,000; I think that was about the lowest. I am not sure about that, but I am just averaging it up for the 25 years, at $1,000,000,000 a year. That is $25,000,000,000.

Mr. CROWTHER. But it started at $26,500,000,000, and got down to around $15,000,000,000, and there is $15,000,000,000 that is now attributable to the World War. That is part of our present debt, and on that debt alone we have paid very close to $15,000,000,000 in interest, and there is $15,000,000,000 of it still outstanding.

Mr. PATMAN. That is the point exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask my colleague there, he is a good financier and a good statesman. Do you not think it would have been better to have paid a little higher taxes and not have had to pay so much interest, or to have increased the taxes so that it would raise more revenue and we would not have had to borrow so much.

If we had increased our taxes we would not owe so much money.

Mr. CROWTHER. I do not know that there was any discussion at that time about raising it. Of course, hindsight is always a lot better than foresight. If we all had as good foresight as we do hindsight, we would all of us be worth a million.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not think I can agree with you, Congressman, about the matter not being discussed then. I think that if you will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD back during that time, they were saying then what they are saying now, that we should pay a substantial part of the debt as we go along, and I think you will find where President Woodrow Wilson said that the cost of the war should be paid by those who profited most from the war, and in order to do that higher taxes should be raised, including excess-profits taxes.

Mr. CROWTHER. We had all of them.

Mr. PATMAN. We had every one of them, and I think if those taxes had remained on the statute books we would have had the whole national debt liquidated by June 30, 1927.

Mr. CROWTHER. There is something to that, and over a period of years when the Ways and Means Committee were busy reducing taxes, we did have advice from outstanding economists, one in particular, Thomas G. Adams, and there were several of those people that thought we ought not to reduce taxes as long as there was a dollar of that war indebtedness left on the books.

Mr. PATMAN. I remember that was one of the principal contentions brought out.

Mr. CROWTHER. But there was a great hue and cry all over the country to get to a peacetime rate on taxes, to get away from the high rates and get down to a peacetime basis of taxation.

Now, whether that was right or not or wrong or not, I do not know, but it did involve a considerable degree of discussion at the time.

Mr. PATMAN. There was another argument along about then that was very interesting, too, that we should at all times have a large national debt, because it gave the insurance companies and banks and trusts and estates and different institutions like that an opportunity to have a backlog of Government bonds upon which they could rely at all times, and for that reason we should keep a high national debt.

Mr. CROWTHER. And were they tax exempt?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, sir; they were tax exempt.

Mr. CROWTHER. We have not had much of a cessation of the issuance of tax-exempt securities during the last 8 years.

Mr. PATMAN. This committee made a step in the direction of taxing these securities.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have one question, Mr. PATMAN. At this time and in this emergency, which would you prefer, a full production of airplanes or a full production of automobiles?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, the answer is obvious; I do not have to answer that; you know what the answer would be.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In other words, we must put defense needs first?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly we must; there is no question about that.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And in doing that, we should follow the advice of our technical experts to the extent that they tell us we must curtail production of automobiles in order to speed up the production of airplanes?

Mr. PATMAN. I would consider the advice. I would never commit myself to taking the advice of any expert, but I would consider it, because I think that you will find that where there is one expert saying one thing, there is another expert saying something different. And you cannot take the advice of both of them. They are like lawyers; there is a lawyer on each side of the case; one of them is bound to be wrong.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. PATMAN, if I understand your theory, then, it is that we might as well stop issuing bonds of any kind and let the printing presses go to work and put out the money; is that the idea?

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, that is a phrase that is used by people that have not given this adequate consideration, the way I view it.

Mr. BUCK. I have read all of your articles that you have been courteous and kind enough to give us, and I have listened to you on the floor many times.

Mr. PATMAN. I am sorry that I have not been able to convince the gentleman, but the gentleman does not state the question the way that I understand it.

Mr. BUCK. Will you please state it in your own language then?

Mr. PATMAN. My restatement is that you do not have to print an extra dollar, not a one; you do not change your monetary system, leave it like it is; you do not have to change the machinery in any way; you do not have to change the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" so far as the issuance of money is concerned; you just merely make a short cut to the Federal Reserve bank instead of going around the roundabout way and paying for the use of the Government's own credit. That is the only thing in the world it is. It is a question of right or wrong; it is not a question of monetary science.

Mr. BUCK. You object, however, to the payment of interest on bonds by the Government?

Mr. PATMAN. By the Federal Government; yes. I think it is absolutely wrong and uncalled for and unnecessary and extravagant.

Mr. BUCK. What about the bonds that are outstanding?

Mr. PATMAN. You could refinance them as they were due, as they became due, in the same way.

Mr. BUCK. And hereafter you would utilize the printing presses—I am sorry that you object to the word.

Mr. PATMAN. They would run just like they are now but no more; you would not print a dollar more than you are now; you can use the printing-press money now if you want to.

Mr. BUCK. You would put it in circulation; is that the idea?

Mr. PATMAN. In the same way that you put it in circulation now.

Mr. BUCK. It does not go into circulation now.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, it would not go into circulation then.

Mr. BUCK. Why?

Mr. PATMAN. Because you would have the same system exactly, the same money presses, the same printers, and the same system to put it out, and the same checks used; and you cannot answer that argument, Mr. BUCK; you just cannot do it.

Mr. BUCK. I am asking you; I am not answering anything. I am trying to get your viewpoint on it. After all, this is not the committee that deals with banking and currency.

Mr. PATMAN. I know; but you are dealing with inflation. You can double the reserve requirements of the banks, or give the banks the power to increase the reserve requirements, and you can give them lots of power to stop inflation, and you are dealing with that, and you should deal with this in connection with it.

Mr. BUCK. Well, I am always very glad to listen to you.

Mr. PATMAN. If you can find an answer to it, I would like to know it. If there is any reason on earth why that should not be done, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. BUCK. I think the answer is obvious. Like the gentleman from Texas, I am going to say that I do not think it is necessary to give the answer because I think it is obvious.

Mr. BOEHNE. I have just one question. Mr. PATMAN, forgetting for a moment the emergency and defense problems, under this system, what incentive would there be to take a thousand dollars that I have and buy a Government bond with it?

Mr. PATMAN. You would not do it; you would put it in something else and the Government would get its money elsewhere. The Government does not need your thousand dollars. The Government can create the $1,000 upon its credit.

Mr. BOEHNE. It has been needing it for years.

Mr. KNUTSON. Where would the Government get its money?

Mr. PATMAN. Just exactly where it gets it today, the same place, and the same system. The only difference is you would not pay anybody tribute for the use of the Government's own credit, and you would save $2,000,000,000. a year,

Mr. KNUTSON. I have got some Government bonds that I would sell tomorrow if I thought that they would adopt any such plan.

Mr. PATMAN. You would not sell them until they became due and then you would get your money for them, and you could continue to get the interest on them until they became due. It would not affect the bond market at all.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thought that you said that the Government should not pay interest on bonds?

Mr. PATMAN. I say that; but if they have a contractual obligation outstanding, they should respect it and pay it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then no private individual would buy a Government bond.

Mr. PATMAN. He would not need to; they would buy State, and county, and political subdivision bonds, and make investments otherwise.

Mr. KNUTSON. Where would they get the money?

Mr. PATMAN. They would get it from the Treasury, just like they get it now.

Mr. KNUTSON. Where would the Treasury get it?

Mr. PATMAN. From the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where they get it now.

Mr. KNUTSON. We are getting down to paper now, are we not?

Mr. PATMAN. That is where we are now, down to paper.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is interesting, and I think you are right. We are right down to 59-cent dollars, anyway.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman is going to trade with foreign countries, of course his dollar is 59 cents, but over here it is the same old 100 cents.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think that that is true. Do you think that we could better ourselves by further deflating it?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not think that that is a question that is before this committee right now.

Mr. KNUTSON. If it has a bearing, probably it should be before us.

Mr. PATMAN. I see no reason for deflation of the dollar further, and at this particular time I see no reason for it, but I am in favor of giving the President the power to do it if it is necessary.

Mr. KNUTSON. In the final analysis, we would get the money down at the Bureau of Printing and Engraving.

Mr. PATMAN. We would get it at exactly the same place that we are getting it now. We would not change a thing, we would use the same old trucks to haul it from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the Treasury, and the same people to print it, and the same paper, and the same presses, and the same length of time, and not an extra dollar would be printed.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is interesting.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does your plan have any reference to the backing of currency by gold?

Mr. PATMAN. No, sir; it has no reference to it.

Mr. CROWTHER. None whatever?

Mr. PATMAN. It has the same reference to it that it has today, there would be no change in that, it would be exactly the same as it is today.

Mr. CROWTHER. Now, we have got some twenty-odd billions of dollars' worth of gold in various places here; have we not?

Mr. PATMAN. You have got $22,500,000,000 worth of gold.

Mr. CROWTHER. Who really owns that?

Mr. PATMAN. The Government.

Mr. CROWTHER. The Government owns that?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, sir; certainly; read your own law on that.

Mr. CROWTHER. Where is that?

Mr. PATMAN. All of the right, title, and interest in that gold is in the United States; that is what your language says, and I think that you gentlemen wrote that language.

Mr. CROWTHER. Now, I have been told that the Federal Reserve banks own that gold.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, they cannot legally own it.

Mr. CROWTHER. They have issued certificates against it; have they not?

Mr. PATMAN. That is a kind of hocus-pocus shell-game proposition that they use.

Mr. CROWTHER. It seems to me that there is a lot of hocus-pocus about this business.

Mr. PATMAN. But the Government does own that gold. If the Federal Reserve banks owned it, why did not they get the increased value by reason of the devaluation? Who got that? The Government got it, because the Government owned the gold.

Mr. CROWTHER. Well, of course the Government does not get any increased valuation, because they paid the highest price for the gold, did they not?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, anyway the increased amount that the Government had at the time.

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes; they made $2,000,000,000 out of that.

Mr. PATMAN. Now, if the Federal Reserve owned that gold, why did they not get that $2,000,000,000?

Mr. CROWTHER. I cannot answer that; I am trying to get a little information.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, I say, Dr. Crowther, that the law that you gentlemen wrote says that all of the right, title, and interest in that gold is in the United States of America. You cannot change that law by regulations.

Mr. CROWTHER. That has no relation whatever to our currency; that is on a 40-percent backing, is it not?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; the old law still remains like it was.

Mr. CROWTHER. You remember a number of years ago at the bonus hearings which finally developed into a question of monetary policy a number of years ago in the old House Office Building, a number of the experts and including some of the bankers thought that they could issue currency on a 25-cent gold backing instead of 40 percent. Do you remember that?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, England stayed on the gold standard for 100 years with 10-percent gold.

Mr. CROWTHER. Well, what good is that gold doing us?

Mr. PATMAN. Not a bit. We are digging it out of one mountain and putting it in another mountain.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further questions, we thank you.

Mr. CROWTHER. Just a minute. I noticed today a letter in one of our leading newspapers from a man that thought that that was the answer to our taxation problem, not to have any tax bill but to hoist that gold out, and also the silver down at West Point, and pay the bills with that.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, the plan I propose is doing the same thing in a different way.

Mr. CROWTHER. Without disturbing the system?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, sir; using your system but just not paying the interest.

Mr. BUCK. Did the gentleman from Texas ever read the story of Marco Polo?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I used to read it.

Mr. BUCK. Did you ever read it?

Mr. PATMAN. It has been a long time since I read it.

Mr. BUCK. Did you ever read about the Emperor Kublai Khan?

Mr. PATMAN. I would rather the gentleman would make his own statement, because it has been so long that I read anything of it.

Mr. BUCK. I am afraid that we cannot; we put too much in it. But Kublai Khan and his successors issued these paper notes, and I do not know whether they even had 5 or 10 or 15 percent gold reserve against them in the great Empire of China, and they were accepted for a long time, maybe 100 years, and I do not know how long. I have forgotten that myself. But they were not any good; either they were burned up or they were destroyed, or they just were not used any more.

It seems to me that the gentleman in his thesis is presenting a theory that is along the same idea that Kublai Khan had.

Mr. PATMAN. He did not have this $22,500,000,000 of gold to back up his money, did he?

Mr. BUCK. What good is that gold?

Mr. PATMAN. It is worth a lot in international trade.

Mr. BUCK. Do you think that we have international trade now?

Mr. PATMAN. We have a little.

Mr. BUCK. Very little. But anyway, suppose that we did, and suppose that we get back to where we can have international trade, and it might be worth something. In the meantime, all we would be doing would be printing nice, pretty pieces of paper, hoping that people would take them, and they probably would for a long time, and receive them at the dollar value, or the $5 value that was printed on them.

I regret very much that I cannot agree with the gentleman in his theory that he has expressed here today, but I cannot.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, may I invite your attention to one final illustration along the lines that you suggested?

Mr. BUCK. Certainly.

Mr. PATMAN. When Texas was a republic, before it was a State in the Union, we had a firm at Galveston, Tex., by the name of Mills Bros., and they were issuing their own checks, which were as good as money in Texas, but the supreme court held under our constitution that they could not issue these checks as money. So over at Holly Springs, Miss., there was a bank that was issuing all kinds of wildcat currency; it was no good but it was used all over the country, but when it got right back to Holly Springs they would not get their money because the concern was no good, the bank was no good.

But the Mills Bros. took some of this money and they knew it was no good at all, and they endorsed it "Mills Brothers" on the back, and that money remained worth 100 cents on the dollar as long as Mills Bros. was in existence, so it depends on what is behind this money.

Although that was admittedly bad money, that was the only way that they could under our Constitution use a medium of exchange in their trade in connection with the business that they were running at the time.

Mr. BUCK. I think those things have happened elsewhere. In 1916 a check was issued by Frank H. Buck Co. of about $23, something like that, to a man who had been in the employ of the company. He went off as a fisherman up into the Alaskan seas. In 1928 that check came back through the bank, the man who had signed it who was at that time vice president, was dead, and they called me up and wanted to know whether it was any good or not, and so forth. Of course, I said it was.

Now, those things happen all the time, and I do not think that they are to be considered.

Mr. PATMAN. You can take the city of Cleveland as an example.

Mr. BUCK. I do not want to argue with the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. They did save their interest on their obligations. They will issue a bill and it looks like a greenback, and it is just a note that is signed by the city of Cleveland, and another one signed by the county, and they pay their employees half in that and half in regular money. And in that way they save their interest.

Now, here we are: We have the creating power, and we have the power to create both bonds and money, and we will sell the bonds and pay interest on the money of our own creation.

Mr. DISNEY. That is like the story of the $100 bill that was counterfeit, but paid all of the debts before it was discovered.

Patriotic Rally at Ardmore, Okla.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILBURN CARTWRIGHT

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

LETTER FROM HON. WILSON WALLACE, PRESIDENT, ARDMORE DEFENSE COUNCIL, AND ARTICLE FROM THE DAILY ARDMOREITE

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of a letter from Hon. Wilson Wallace, president of the Ardmore Defense Council, and an article from the Daily Ardmoreite relative to a patriotic rally held at Ardmore, Okla., on May 13, 1941, at which a resolution was adopted urging the President to speed up the production of munitions and to use every available power to deliver these supplies to Great Britain.

The letter and article follow:

ARDMORE, OKLA., May 14, 1941.

Hon. WILBURN CARTWRIGHT,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR WILBURN: Enclosed herewith please find a copy of a resolution passed unanimously by citizens of southern Oklahoma, assembled in Ardmore in a mass meeting the night of May 13, 1941, signed by Thad B. Orr, chairman.

The citizens attended this meeting as a voluntary movement because of their patriotism and because of their belief that the production of defense materials and munitions must not be stopped or hindered in any way by anyone and the delivery of those productions to Britain must not be stopped or hindered.

I desire to call to your attention the fact that the resolution calls for drastic means to stop any delay in war materials. I might point out that at the meeting the greatest outburst of cheering and applause during the entire time was given when the statement was made "that strikes and profits by employees and employers must not be allowed to delay the defense program in any way while American boys are being forcibly taken from their homes to serve for $21 a month because of the emergency."

We citizens of southern Oklahoma are back of you and back of the President in any drastic steps that you may take to stop the disgraceful and un-American activities of business management and employees alike in the industries producing defense products. We expect you to stop dilly dallying and procrastinating and to do something, and do it now.

A copy of this resolution is being sent to each member of the United States Congress from Oklahoma and to the President of the United States.

Most respectfully submitted for your immediate attention and action.

Respectfully yours,

WILSON WALLACE,
President, Ardmore Defense Council.

To the President of the United States and to the Oklahoma Representatives in the House and Senate of Congress:

Whereas destruction of the democracy of England is imminent unless immediate aid is given by the United States of America in the way of tanks, planes, guns, and other munitions of war: Be it

Resolved by the citizens of southern Oklahoma in mass meeting assembled at Ardmore, Okla., on this the 13th day of May 1941, That the President of the United States immediately speed up production of munitions of war; and in the event delay should be threatened from any source, that he take the most drastic means to prevent same; be it further

Resolved, That he direct the transportation of such munitions as rapidly as possible to England in such manner as he may deem necessary to assure their safe delivery, and to use armed convoys on the sea and in the air to insure that delivery.

Adopted unanimously.

THAD B. ORR, Chairman.

[From the Daily Ardmoreite of May 14, 1941]

RESOLUTION ASKS DELIVERY SUPPLIES TO GREAT BRITAIN—PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT URGED TO USE EVERY AVAILABLE POWER TO ACCOMPLISH PURPOSE

Southern Oklahomans, gathered at a patriotic mass meeting held in convention hall on Tuesday evening, enthusiastically and unanimously adopted a resolution urging the President to use every power at his control to provide the sinews of war for Britain and to resort to any method he may deem wise to deliver these weapons to England.

The resolution, which was presented by Wilson Wallace, Ardmore attorney, at the close of a meeting marked by a patriotic address by Robert Kerr, former departmental commander of the American Legion, will be sent to the President, to each of the Oklahoma Congressmen and Senators, and to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate.

It reads:

"To the President of the United States and to the Oklahoma Representatives in the House and Senate of Congress:

"Whereas destruction of the democracy of England is imminent unless immediate aid is given by the United States in the way of tanks, planes, guns, and other munitions of war: Be it

"Resolved by the citizens of southern Oklahoma in mass meeting assembled at Ardmore, Okla., on this the 13th day of May 1941, that the President of the United States immediately speed up production of munitions of war, and in the event delay should be threatened from any source that he take the most drastic means to prevent same: be it further

"Resolved, That he direct the transportation of such munitions as rapidly as possible to England in such manner as he may deem necessary to assure their safe delivery and to use armed convoys on the sea and in the air to insure that delivery."

SPEAKERS APPLAUDED

The program, arranged by a committee from the George R. Anderson post of the American Legion, was not as well attended as had been anticipated but the applause which greeted the statements of the speaker indicated the approval of his viewpoints by his audience.

Kerr rapped business management and labor leadership which stood in the pathway of defense preparation and warned against the so-called leaders who plead for appeasement and prattle of defeatism.

"We are committed to a program which requires our fullest effort and complete sacrifice," he declared. "We cannot afford to wait or waste time.

"We know that we cannot get along with the dictators and we do not want to get along with them. Our course is clear, and we are struggling to save our own ideals and our own principles.

"We must either disregard or destroy those who seek to obstruct the pathway we follow. We are for complete defense and we must move quickly. This is not a war of men, but of machines. We can make the machines.

"We have the horrible example of other nations which sought to appease the totalitarian leaders; we cannot and will not make the mistake they made."

AMERICAN SPIRIT PREVAILS

"There are those who are ready to fight, they say, when the enemy reaches our shores. I say, let's stop that enemy on other shores. We do not want to wait until that deadly time.

"Our history is replete with instances where freemen fighting for a cause in which they have believed have accomplished miracles and the same American spirit that inspired these heroes of our history is still with us and must be preserved.

"As Americans we must make the resolve that no sacrifice and no effort can be too great for us to make in this drive to save American ideals and the ideals of democracy."

Thad Orr was master of ceremonies at the meeting. A concert by the Ardmore High School Band under the leadership of E. Paul Enix preceded the program proper.

The colors were advanced as the opening feature with representatives of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps officiating. The Reverend George H. Quarterman pronounced the invocation. A group of Boy Scouts led the audience in the pledge of allegiance.

Special guests were Sam Battles, France Paris, Democratic State chairman, and Mrs. Kerr.

Quinn Wicker, mayor, spoke briefly commending the leaders who arranged the meeting.

Closing feature of the program was the singing of God Bless America by the audience, led by Mrs. Meredith Rawlins.

Representatives of all organizations in the city were present on the platform.

Condition of the Bituminous Coal Industry in the Northwest

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSHUA L. JOHNS

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

LETTER FROM NORTHWESTERN RETAIL COAL DEALERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

NORTHWESTERN RETAIL COAL DEALERS ASSOCIATION,
Minneapolis, Minn., May 19, 1941.

The Honorable JOSHUA JOHNS,
The House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A condition has developed in the bituminous-coal industry at the present time which seriously concerns the northwest coal industry and the consuming public in the Northwest. This is brought about by virtue of the fact that a very substantial part of all coal supplies for the northwest territory is shipped across the Great Lakes to docks at Duluth, Superior, Ashland, Manitowac, Green Bay, and Milwaukee. Stocks of coal on hand at these various docks are now at the lowest point in a number of years. Very little coal is moving across the Great Lakes at the present time.

There is a very real threat to the Northwest in the much discussed additional coal strike in the bituminous-coal mines. In the event that it occurs, navigation across the Great Lakes will be delayed for a period of not less than an additional 30 days. There has already been lost a period of 60 days' navigation across the Great Lakes.

If there is anything that can be done by Congress or by the Government of the United States to prevent any additional shut-down of the bituminous-coal mines, it will be most helpful to the coal industry and to the public in the Northwest. Your interest and cooperation is earnestly solicited.

Yours very truly,

NORTHWESTERN RETAIL COAL DEALERS ASSOCIATION,
B. E. URHEIM, Secretary.

American Association of Independent Small Business Institute

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

EXCERPTS FROM ADDRESS BY ALFRED CALVIN GAUNT

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, although it was delivered nearly a year ago, I had never seen until very recently a copy of the speech of Alfred Calvin Gaunt, chairman of the Advisory Council of Independent Small Business, delivered in Washington last June 14. I think some of the things Mr. Gaunt says are so true and so important that I am asking to have portions of this speech reprinted in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Every economic force at work in our country today favors big business and monopoly. But our defense program cannot succeed unless the little businesses are brought into it and made a part of it. And certainly unless we bestir ourselves and fight now for these small enterprises and against the monopoly that stifles them, I shudder to think what will happen to them in the post-defense period. A good start for all of us will be to read what Mr. Gaunt has to say.

EXCERPTS FROM ADDRESS OF ALFRED CALVIN GAUNT

Small businesses, employing less than 200 workers, comprise 98.7 percent of all businesses, according to the Social Security Board's latest figures. They employ half of all wage earners and do 65 percent of the Nation's business. An independent small business, as defined by the American Association of Independent Small Business, is one which does less than 5 percent of the business in its particular field and whose management or control is independent of outside domination.

THE TRUE NOTE

Deterioration of our economic picture has been attributed to many causes. The one true note that runs through most criticisms of our maladjusted economy is that undue restriction is at the root of all our troubles, whether it be restriction of output by labor through overshort hours or a slow-down attitude, by agriculture through a policy of destroying crops or raising less, by industry in maintaining prices or policies which curtail demand, by investors with timid capital which goes into tax-exempt securities instead of financing new enterprise, or by Government in restricting the employment of American workers by admitting from abroad materials that American labor can well produce at home.

Maintained prices or monopolistic practices or production restrictions, whether perpetrated by agriculture, or by labor, or by industry, or by Government, are the greatest deterrents to consumption and the greatest handicaps to recovery.

Lower prices mean more demand. If we as producers can lower prices or improve quality, we benefit doubly. The demand is multiplied because for every producer in America there are three consumers. So we are blessed with more work and less unemployment.

Therefore the promotion of independent small business with that full and free competition, which is the very antithesis of some big business, with its monopolistic tendencies, is the sound and immediate answer to our so-called No. 1 problem of unemployment.

The competitive instinct is one of the most powerful instincts of mankind. We call it by many names—ambition, individual initiative, fear of failure, desire for reward, venturesomeness, pioneer spirit. It is a driving force that is most noticeable in youth. It is the direct opposite of any philosophy of a so-called social security that would provide hand-outs rather than jobs. It has its unpleasant aspects, of course, and must be kept of service to the common good by a cooperative spirit of friendliness and helpfulness to one's fellows.

BIG GROWING BIGGER?

Forty-five years ago, with a population of only 64,000,000 persons, there were 350,000 independent manufacturing concerns in the United States, while today, with a population twice as large, there are less than 210,000. From 1926 to 1929, 960 corporations made $16,000,000,000, which was about the same amount that 450,000 smaller businesses made. But from 1930 to 1935 the 960 companies continued to make profits of $9,000,000,000, while the 450,000 lost seventeen billions.

Small independent business is steadily being merged or eliminated, while big business and concentration of wealth are growing apace. In only 3 years, from 1930 to 1933, 600,000 independent enterprises in industry, trade, and the professions were driven out of business—1 out of 6. The survivors tremble.

The rise of the need of big Government is because of the development of big business and its attendant evils. Only by a big Government can big business be regulated or controlled. And big business must be regulated or controlled or it can run wild, as did, for instance, Standard Oil, when it sought and obtained secret rebates to the effect that competition was destroyed, and Standard Oil was reaching the position of monopoly, where all citizens could have been compelled to pay on a necessity of life any tribute demanded.

We read in the New York Times of May 28, of the indictment of an optical monopoly that makes us pay $20 for spectacles that could be profitably sold for $7.50, with one of the principal members of the trust being a concern under the domination of the German trust or cartel. Only a big Government, with its enforcement of its Sherman Law can curb such vicious monopolies.

Let's list some concrete examples of handicaps operating against small-scale operation:

1. Inequitable burden on small enterprise of governmental returns and reports.

2. Disproportionate cost to small units of credit accommodation and financing and insurance and other services.

3. Undue and discriminatory quantity and cumulative discounts. The Postal Service is a good example of democracy in prices. Letter postage is 2 cents regardless of the customer or the quantity.

4. Reciprocal buying: Big No. 1 can and does say to big No. 2, "Regardless of the fact that you are getting good service from small independents, unless you buy from me everything in my line which you use, you lose my business."

5. Unfair competition such as less-than-cost selling in certain territory by big business to clean out independents.

6. Use of patents and patent pools for price-fixing agreements of industry-wide scope.

7. Lack of enforcement of laws against monopolistic practices and price fixing.

Let's also list concrete things that will help independent small business.

OUR DUTIES

1. Keep the country out of war. With adequate defense, let our leadership be that of tranquilizers and not that of provocateurs.

2. Let any emergency measures of promulgation of overlong hours of labor, or of agriculture or industrial regimentation, be delayed as long as possible, and then be effectively limited to the terms of the emergency.

3. Promote full, free, and fair competitive enterprise in industry, trade, and agriculture.

4. Promote proprietor-owned enterprise with the social benefits resulting from close contact between owners and employees.

5. Discourage tendencies toward absentee ownership which work to destroy human relationship and thus engender the wholesale curtailing of employment at the first sign of business recession.

6. Freeze overlarge chains at present levels or unwind them where they constitute threat of monopoly. Weigh against any alleged lower prices of chain stores, with their impersonal, distant, and absentee control, the violation of those sentiments of solidarity which we all implicitly feel for our fellow men.

7. Retard the accelerating absorption of business by big aggregations of capital as an insidious menace to the liberty of the citizen.

8. Limit so-called benefit payments for restriction of production to not over $10,000 to any one outfit, or discontinue altogether.

GOVERNMENT'S DUTIES

9. Let any War Resources or other boards and commissions be constituted to include representatives of independent small business and of agriculture, as well as big business, labor, and consumer.

10. Let such regimentation as may be necessary be on a graduated basis, with big business first, medium business next, and the tiny "pants presser" entirely exempt.

11. Curtail wasteful expenditures and work toward a balance of the Budget.

12. Curtail or abolish the issue of tax-exempt securities, such as may be used for purposes of tax evasion.

13. Repeal the present so-called reciprocity wherever it deprives American workers of their jobs, and seek true reciprocity whereby we promote the exchange of materials of which we have a surplus for materials that we lack.

14. Eliminate State barriers affecting interstate trade.

15. Outlaw monopoly or monopolistic practices.

16. Regulate closely the operations of natural monopolies or utilities and their application of excessive salaries and rates in the interest of the whole public.

17. Abolish the holding company as a device for owning, controlling, and managing other corporations, for avoiding competition, for tax evasion.

18. Reestablish parity for industry and labor by debarring products of foreign low-paid labor which unfairly compete with products made under American conditions.

As You Sow, So You Reap—The Battle of Armageddon

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

POEMS BY CITIZEN OF CHICAGO

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include two original poems written by a citizen of Chicago:

AS YOU SOW, SO YOU REAP

(Book of Job IV: 6; Galatians VI: 7; Proverbs XXII: 6)

You sowed into the minds of young and old
The hellish seed of hatred millionfold.
You taught the very babes to scorn and hate,
As did Benito, your confederate.
You warped the souls of dupes by hook and crook,
He by his snout, you by your beak and—book,
In history the sole one of its kind,
The loony bastard of a rabid mind.
Do you recall its crack-brained lore of thought?
Not one lone line of common sense it taught,
But hatred only, of a madman's rage,
From top to bottom and from page to page.

This seedy rubbish from a seedy brain
Was fed by both of you with might and main.
And ceaselessly you nurtured it to grow,
To share it promptly with your erstwhile foe,
The one you both abused and called him red,
When seemingly he got of you ahead.
And, finally, with half the world ablaze,
You joined, the three of you, the yellow race.
And now you'll reap what you have sown in crime!
Your crop matured, and it is harvest's time.

The reaper has appeared. His name is Mars!
He'll stride along and end this bloody farce.
For hate breeds hate, as spite breeds spite, and spurn—
All those you hated, hate you in return.
All decent mankind, north, south, east, and west,
Hate human beasts of your kind like the pest.
And now you rant, you swear at us, and cuss—
Did you expect a lover's kiss from us?
Did you suppose that we sit idly by
While you rain deadly hatred from the sky?
While all of you rob wholesale, burn and sack
Your very neighbors like a wolfish pack?
Like thugs and ruffians, whether shine or storm,
You're naught but highwaymen in uniform!
And while you burglarized states far and near,
Did you imagine we were struck with fear?
You sowed the seeds of war in hate and sin,
As cutthroats do, but you will never win!
The scale has swung, and all the dice are tossed—
Who sows the wind will reap the holocaust!

—Civis Americanus.

THE BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON

No bombs from out the clouds or sea below
Will in near future strike the final blow.
And no torpedoes with their thund'rous crash
Will in this struggle score the final smash.
No tanks on ground, no foe in sky or sea
Will ever quench our torch of liberty!
It is still blazing in its dazzling light—
The symbol stellar for the final fight.

The Armageddon battle, when 'tis fought,
Will down forever deviltry and fraught,
All reign of terror from the fists of mail,
And all mass murder in its gory trail;
All pillage, robbery, and wholesale pelf
By fiends committed from their victims' shelf.
When it is faught some day, all war will cease,
And human kind will breathe again in peace.

The Armageddon battle is at hand,
The conflict final over sea and land.
No longer 'tis a bloody home affair,
But spheric in its nature ev'rywhere;
Gigantic in its littoral extent—
The fray of continent 'gainst continent,
Of west against the east, both front and rear,
Of hemisphere against a hemisphere!

Thus speaks a prophecy of ages old.
Its test in battle never could be told,
For there was none in mankind's history
Announced supreme for all the time to be.
And yet a conflict, final and complete,
Is bound to come, should freedom meet defeat,
When all the west will fight the east en masse—
The Armageddon, then, may come to pass.

—Civis Americanus.

Farmers Protest Increase in Gasoline Tax

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN F. SMITH

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in discussing levies to safeguard national security we should consider thoroughly the admonition of President Roosevelt that the taxes imposed upon the American people shall not make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

To avoid inequalities in the imposition and burden of taxation we must consider carefully the basic theories of taxation and weigh painstakingly the effects of proposed taxes upon the economic well-being and the morale of the people.

The Congress of the United States has a sacred trust to see to it that taxes should be imposed in accordance with our democratic ideals of equality.

Fair and just taxation is the bulwark of democracy. Democratic principles cannot survive in a nation where inequitable tax burdens are imposed upon the people.

A study of history reveals that the democratic way of life has gone forward only when just taxation prevailed. The history of the rise of representative government in the world consists chiefly of the people's struggle for control over the public purse strings—the control of taxation and appropriation. Our constitutional form of government developed largely because transference of the source of governmental authority from the person of the ruler to the people brought about sounder principles of taxation. King John in accepting the Magna Carta at Runnymede in 1215 abandoned his authority for high-handed and unfair taxation, giving the barons more control over the levying and spending of taxes.

At the time the common people were not represented in the council, and the struggle was between the King and his barons. Between the granting of the Magna Carta in 1215 and the adoption of the Bill of Rights in 1689, the English people, from which our American stock has largely descended, and whose traditions guide us in our destiny, pressed steadily for enlargement of their control over taxation and appropriation. The Bill of Rights transferred the taxing power from the Crown to Parliament.

The American Colonies broke away from their mother country largely because of the unfair tax burdens that were imposed upon them through the arbitrary dictates of King George III. The colonists believed that democratic freedom could not exist and flourish under any system of taxation without representation. The American Revolution thus was brought about chiefly from unfair taxation policies.

As representatives of a democratic people, the Congress of the United States, therefore, in this critical time should examine carefully the guiding principles of taxation to be used in framing the levies needed to defray the cost of the national-defense program.

There are three traditional types of taxation in the United States:

First. Taxes on wealth.

Second. Levies to control forces in the public interest.

Third. Benefit taxes.

It should be pointed out, however, at this point that there are two kinds of wealth in the United States, namely, first, tangible wealth and, second, token wealth. Real estate, machinery, automobiles, and other physical objects are tangible wealth. Token wealth consists of money, stocks and bonds, and Government securities. These tokens merely represent their holders' shares in the physical wealth of the land. All the stocks, bonds, and other so-called token wealth in the whole United States could be obliterated and the intrinsic wealth of the Nation would not be diminished one iota.

It would appear that taxation of the token wealth of the United States should receive first consideration in any tax program to defray the cost of national security.

The second type of taxes are those levied to control forces in the public interest. Taxes on liquor and tobacco are at higher rates than on other commodities, as food and clothing. The Congress of the United States also for many years has enacted high tariffs on certain commodities, as wool and sugar, to protect the standards of living of American workmen from being undermined by competition from cheap labor abroad.

It should be pointed out, however, at this point that all taxes, regardless of their broad objectives, aim to raise revenue.

The third type of taxes, the so-called benefit taxes, are levied primarily to defray the costs of special services provided by Government. The Federal Government charges 3 cents to mail a letter to cover the cost of the particular service provided. Gasoline levies and automobile registration fees were inaugurated by the States to obtain money from highway users to build and maintain roads. Such levies are based upon the benefits received. The family that does not own an automobile does not pay such taxes.

Congress, in 1932, adopted a temporary emergency tax on gasoline. Revenue of the Government was at that time at its depression low, standing at only about one-quarter of its level in recent years. The tax was planned only as a temporary expedient, to be removed within a year or two.

However, Congress has repeatedly extended the tax, competing with the States in its search for revenue. Last year Congress increased the tax by 50 percent for defense purposes. Thus, motor fuel is now subjected to double taxation by the Federal Government, over and above the heavy levies imposed by the States.

Our farm and agricultural organizations contend that to increase further the Federal tax on motor fuel would serve only to confuse and muddle the principles of taxation in a democratic people. The burden of Federal taxation on motor fuel now stands at 12 percent of the retail price. That burden is paid largely from the pocketbooks of families with modest incomes.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau has warned Congress from imposing taxes upon the table of the workingman. Mr. Speaker, levies on motor fuel are taxes that fall chiefly upon the efforts of the average man to earn a livelihood. According to the United States Public Roads Administration, more than half of the gasoline used in passenger cars is consumed by men and women in earning a living.

A tax on motor fuel, therefore, is chiefly a burden upon the efforts of millions of men and women to earn a living. There are few taxes on the table of the workingmen that can compare with the present Federal tax on the workingman's motor fuel.

If the Federal Government increases its tax on motor fuel, the burden of such taxation will fall largely upon those families least able to pay increased taxation upon so vital a prop to their present standards of living. There are 12,000,000 car-owning families, it is estimated, in the United States with incomes of less than $30 a week. By no stretch of the imagination could these families be thought of as wealthy. These should not be subjected to excessive taxation by the Federal Government either on their table or upon their transportation. Any increase in motor-fuel taxation by the Federal Government can result only in depressing the standards of living of the lower-income families of the Nation.

GRANGE OPPOSES INCREASE

Mr. Fred Brenckman, national legislative representative of the National Grange, in testifying against the proposed increase in the gasoline tax, before the Ways and Means Committee, on May 16, 1941, said:

We do not believe that the existing Federal tax of 1½ cents per gallon on gasoline should be increased. * * *

So far as agriculture is concerned, motor transportation under modern conditions is not a luxury but an absolute necessity. More than 1,000,000 motortrucks, or about one-fourth of the country's total, are owned and operated by farmers. A recent survey discloses the fact that with the abandonment of many branch lines of railroads that are no longer profitable, there are about 48,000 communities throughout the United States that are entirely dependent upon highway transportation.

The farmer must have his motor-vehicle facilities, and he does not feel that his use of the highways is a proper and adequate measure by which to determine his contribution toward the cost of national defense.

Some idea of the importance of the motor vehicle to the American farmer may be gained from the records of the United States Department of Agriculture, which show that approximately 27 percent of the butter, 39 percent of the eggs, 65 percent of the poultry, 40 percent of the fruit and vegetables, 62 percent of the cattle, 61 percent of the calves, 68 percent of the hogs, 29 percent of the sheep and lambs, and 50 percent of the mules and horses are now moved from farm to market by truck.

Looking For Trouble

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, one illustration of the way in which the President has advocated peace, while carrying a chip on his shoulder and looking for trouble, is well shown by an editorial from the Chicago Daily Tribune on May 20. That editorial is as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune of May 20, 1941]

INTO THE WAR ZONE

Mr. Roosevelt told the inquiring reporters that he didn't think Germany would be able to blockade the Red Sea and that the United States was merely adhering to its unbroken policy of insisting on the freedom of the seas. When Mr. Stimson, as a proxy voice, demanded the convoying of supply ships, he referred to piracy and intimated that if an American warship encountered a raider it would mean merely dealing with outlawry on the sea.

When he made that reference there was an expectation that more would be heard of it, and Mr. Roosevelt obliges. He refers to the Barbary pirates which our new Republic had to fight and to the undeclared war with France to protect our shipping. With these illustrations he prepares a way for new naval encounters along these lines.

Mr. Roosevelt's reversion to the freedom of the seas is a departure from the position he took when he started his war moves by asking for repeal of the Neutrality Act. Mr. Wilson, when the other World War began, did insist upon freedom of the seas. He demanded that Germany abide by the recognized rules of naval warfare, and he also addressed himself sharply to the British Government, protesting against violation of American rights.

Mr. Roosevelt in 1939 said in effect that this was a mistake. He said that it gave rise to the incidents which drew America into the other war. It allowed American ships to go into dangerous zones where they were destroyed. It was a cause of war and he didn't want any of it. He wanted authority to prohibit American ships and American citizens from going into war zones and that would preserve the peace. He put freedom of the seas on the shelf as a dangerous doctrine and Congress gave him authority for which he asked.

Now he uses that authority to open up a war zone and is back in Mr. Wilson's position without any of Mr. Wilson's consistency in the matter. Furthermore, he has no reason to hope, as Mr. Wilson might have had, that he can carry his point and make the American policy respected. Mr. Wilson almost did. But what he got out of it in the end, for this and for other reasons, was the war he said he was trying to avoid.

Mr. Roosevelt rejects his own policy and goes back to the Wilsonian principles because he wants the war he said he wanted to avoid. If he had persisted along the lines he first adopted, he might have made it very difficult for this country to find any cause for war. If he were doing now what he promised in September 1939, the peace of the United States might not be threatened. He has reversed himself on all points, he has betrayed the faith he pledged to the people in the beginning, and he is doing every war-provoking thing that he said he would not do.

The authority he asked for one purpose he is using for an exactly contradictory purpose; his cash-and-carry has become contribution and convoy; his war-zone restrictions have been split to permit the carrying of material of war by American ships into the Egyptian war zone, and he asks the German raiders what they are going to do about it.

What he says, in effect, is, "Here's an American ship; so what?"

A Separate Air Force

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MELVIN J. MAAS

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 21, 1941

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, a separate air force independent of the Army and the Navy and coequal with them has great public appeal and sounds logical on the face of it. However, such a military division does not, in my opinion, fit the military needs of the situation for the United States at this time. The time may come, and I very strongly feel that it will come, when military and naval aviation will not bear the same relationship to our Army and Navy that they do today. I think the time is now virtually at hand when experience in aviation will be a prerequisite of all high military or naval command. I visualize the time when air will be the main striking force and the ground and surface naval forces will be in support of the air force; but a realistic examination of the peculiar military problems of the United States does not indicate that a separate independent air force will fit our needs under present circumstances.

In my opinion, 90 percent of the military problem of the United States in its initial critical stages of perhaps the first 6 months, is naval. Naval aviation is just as distinct from Army aviation as the Navy is itself distinct from the Army. It merely happens that in both cases they use the same method of transportation—the air. This is no proof that aviation is in itself separate from either the Army or the Navy. Both the Army and the Navy use gunpowder as their main weapon. This does not mean that therefore the Army and the Navy should be consolidated. If 90 percent of our military problem is naval, then it stands to reason that 90 percent of our aviation problems is naval aviation. No one expects that a thoroughly trained, competent naval officer should also be a thoroughly competent Army officer. Yet it is just as reasonable to expect this as it is to expect that a naval aviator should be a competent Army aviator or vice versa. The training, the mission, and the target of the naval aviator and of the Army aviator are entirely independent of and unrelated to each other. In the one case the target is a naval target, and in the other case it is a ground target. An average human being has done all that the average human being is capable of accomplishing if he has become a thoroughly competent and well-trained naval aviator, experienced in naval navigation, naval missions, naval tactics, and the ability to recognize and differentiate from great altitudes not only all types of surface vessels but also the silhouettes of every type of vessel of every different nation's navy. An Army aviator has accomplished all that the average human being can accomplish if he has become a thoroughly competent and highly trained Army aviator, experienced in land-flying navigation, Army tactics, military formations, and in ability to recognize, estimate, and properly report the size of troops, their tactical maneuvering, and to most effectively interfere with their operations by the appropriate use of machine gunning, high-level bombing, or dive bombing. To try to make both a naval aviator and an Army aviator out of the same individual is very likely to result in a pilot becoming thoroughly accomplished in neither branch of aviation. One of the tragedies of the British campaign in Norway when they lost the Battle of Narvick was the fact that they had a separate air force neither properly trained nor equipped for naval aviation and naval cooperation. The Navy had no control over the Royal Air Force; the Royal Air Force had no control over the aircraft carriers. The results are well known to the world. The Royal Air Force pilots in many instances were unable to distinguish their own ships from the German ships, and too often British ships were bombed unintentionally by Royal Air Force pilots.

The United States today has the most competent, efficient, and effective naval aviation force in the world. To endanger this effectiveness at this time might very well become a world tragedy. What I do believe is absolutely essential, however, is that in both the Army and the Navy separate Air Corps be set up, similar to the Marine Corps in the Navy. The Navy has no such Air Corps, and its Bureau of Aeronautics is largely only a procurement organization. In the Army the so-called Air Corps is simply a branch similar to infantry or artillery. The United States Marine Corps is recognized as perhaps the most highly efficient fighting force in the world. It is a complete separate military entity but within the framework of the Navy. In my opinion, both the Army and Navy need such an organization of their aviation, within the Navy and within the Army.

So often we hear that the all important thing is to gain supremacy of the air. Actually, the all important thing is to gain military supremacy, of which air is only a part, albeit a very vital part. But merely to gain supremacy of the air, without naval and military control also, is ineffective and gains little. Germany has had superiority in the air from the beginning of this war, but lacking naval control of the Atlantic, has failed to conquer the British Isles.

The converse is also true. Naval superiority, without control of the air, is ineffective. Control of the air is vital to success either on land or on sea. No matter how large or efficient our Army or Navy are, unless we can control the air for both of them, we cannot win a war.

I am thoroughly sold on air power, and its absolute importance. The important thing is to get superior air power.

The question of a separate air force versus Army and Navy Air Corps, is not in itself the question of air power. This is merely a question as how to best organize your air power. I not only concede the dominant character of air power, but I have been carrying on vigorous fight in and out of Congress for years to step up our aviation to the point of dominant air power for us.

The method of organizing and administering aviation is a very important matter. Since airplanes cannot of themselves occupy territory any more than artillery can, but are both auxiliaries to infantry, the control of airplanes must be under the same supreme military command as the artillery, tanks, infantry, and so forth. True, airplanes can transport troops, but it is the infantry as passengers who occupy the territory seized, and not the crew of the plane who do the occupying.

Merely aerial bombings, no matter how effective, no matter how intense nor how extended, will not in themselves win a war. The ability to follow up effectively with troops is the dominating factor. You may not have actually to use the troops or even commence the physical land force invasion, but your ability and readiness to do so must be established. If after sufficient bombing, the home defenses are sufficiently shattered to make your invasion certain to succeed, the enemy quite likely will capitulate rather than suffer further damage with certain defeat as the outcome. No Allied soldier ever set a foot on German soil until after Germany surrendered in 1918. But, Germany knew that the Allies, with the American reinforcements, were by then capable of an invasion of Germany.

The Navy's effectiveness has been materially lessened, if not destroyed when it operates close enough to shore so that land-based aircraft can dominate coastal waters. This does not mean that navies are obsolete. Far from it. They still dominate the high seas.

The battleships will disappear, with the rest of the Navy, when the commerce of the world is carried in airplanes.

What will actually happen then, is that the Navy will take wings, and in effect we will have virtual flying battleships.

The fundamental military and naval situation, however, will not be altered.

Unified military control will still be an absolute necessity.

The Challenge to World Trade

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SOL BLOOM

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER, COORDINATOR OF COMMERCIAL AND CULTURAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include therein a most interesting and informative address delivered by Mr. Nelson A. Rockefeller, on the subject The Challenge to World Trade. Mr. Rockefeller, who is Coordinator of Commercial and Cultural Relations between the American Republics, spoke at the world trade luncheon of the New York Foreign Trade Week Committee, at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on May 19, 1941. I know that the Members of the Congress will be interested in reading about what Mr. Rockefeller and his organization are doing to combat subversive activities in this hemisphere and to cement the friendly relations existing between the peoples of North and South America.

In this fateful year of 1941, foreign-trade week takes on special significance.

In ordinary times foreign-trade week has focused attention on the importance of external trade to our national well-being. It has been an occasion to reaffirm our faith in trade conducted on a plane of mutual advantage—openly, fairly, and with peaceful intent.

But these are no ordinary times. The world is locked in a struggle in which is at stake every institution that contributes to our spiritual and material welfare. We must go beyond a simple expression of confidence in liberal economic policies as an instrument of economic progress.

How best can that instrument be preserved and strengthened? How best can we insure the survival of a world in which such policies will be acceptable?

I believe the answer is clear: We must produce the goods needed in defense of the free way of life. We must see that those goods reach the armies of the democracies. I am confident that we will. We will unite in support of any and all measures that may be necessary to achieve these purposes.

The American people, as always, are responding to the moral issues of the struggle for human freedom. On these grounds alone we reject the passive role. On these grounds alone we enlist on the side of the democracies the greatest engines of production the world has ever seen—the might of American industry.

But the economic issues further fortify us in the decision that democracy must survive.

You who operate on the far-flung frontiers of American trade well know wherein lies our national interest. You have seen the fate of businessmen who sought to temporize with the aggressor. You have seen the course of commercial development in Germany during the past decade. You see the pattern of economic life in the countries that have fallen. You know the blueprint which Germany has drafted for the world.

Can we trade with this Germany?

Can we trade with an enslaved Europe?

Can we continue healthy trade relations even within our own hemisphere, once the familiar technique is fully unleashed—the deliberate use of commerce to extend political authority, the sapping of the strength of peaceful nations by infiltration, by propaganda, and by sowing of internal dissension?

Can we visualize a victorious Germany denying itself the greatest prize of them all—the Americas, North, South, and Central?

Can we hope to prosper with the economic life of the rest of the world subordinated to a conqueror's lust for world domination, geared to the task of bringing down the last great citadels of freedom?

Let us be realistic. The time is short, the issue clear, the answer is, "No."

A compromise is unthinkable. He who would have to trade with Hitler would be compelled to do so on Hitler's terms. He would be compelled to deliberately close his eyes to the coupling of commerce with political penetration.

The position of this Government was set forth by Secretary of State Hull at Habana in this way: "Only where equal treatment, fair practices, nondiscrimination, and peaceful motives lie beneath trade can it develop to the degree needed to rehabilitate a shattered world and to provide a foundation for further economic progress."

It is clearly to our national interest to maintain foreign trade, a healthy trade in a free world. There is no denying this. We tend to underestimate the importance of our $4,000,000,000 of exports and $2,500,000,000 of imports when we compare it with our national income of $72,000,000,000 last year. Foreign trade is vital to particular areas and particular segments of our production. Its benefits permeate our economic life at all points.

Yes, we want and need foreign trade, but not that trade which is used by totalitarian powers as a lever to political domination.

We need Europe, but let us not confuse pre-war Europe with the Europe which Germany would reorient as slave to a master. Under the Hitler blueprint human and national interests would be sacrificed relentlessly in ruthless shifts of population, industries, and occupations. Such a reorganization, stemming from the continuing quest for political power, would force upon the world a drastic revision of the whole mechanism of international trade. It would force upon us a revision of our whole economy in an effort to hold our own in an unending economic war.

I have confidence in the drive and organizational capacity of the free Americas once fully aroused to danger. But unless we make our resistance to the Nazi threat effective now, we make doubly difficult the task of preserving our political institutions, maintaining our standards of living, and retaining our social gains.

We realize that when the war is over and the victory is won, we must be prepared to face major changes in our international economic relations. But we shall at least be sitting down to the problem in the company of free men.

As national defense has enlisted more and more of the Nation's productive energies, a major role has fallen to those of you who maintain trade relations with the other American republics. It may seem commonplace to mention (1) the replacement of agents engaged in anti-American activity; (2) the expanded purchases from Latin America; (3) adequate shipping in the inter-American trade; and (4) the supplying of essential manufactured goods to the other American republics.

Yet these add up to the maintenance of economic stability of the Americas, and that is a major contribution to hemisphere defense. The job is to a large extent in your hands. It is against the other American republics that the first attack on this hemisphere would be launched by aggressors. These are the areas whose economic vulnerability would provide the first target. And on them would be based the final challenge to a free America.

Our people are alert to the importance of hemisphere solidarity. Only last week the Gallup poll of public opinion revealed that 86 percent of the people would approve taking up the arms of defense in case of an attack on any one of the American republics.

Our Government also is alert to the importance of hemisphere solidarity. It is making continued progress in the creation and use of machinery for closer inter-American cooperation—the wise use of funds of the Export-Import Bank, joint action in regard to commodity problems, participation in the inter-American bank, and in the establishment of the Inter-American Development Commission, which has already set up nine local councils in as many countries, the creation of the merchandising advisory service, are all part of this effort.

But you men hold the key to the full performance of this job. This is clear from the contributions you have already made and from the responsibilities which rest upon you today.

We are already buying at a heavily increased pace in the other American republics. A considerable portion of the increase derives from the requirements of our tremendous defense program, but in no small measure it reflects your efforts to find products that can be successfully marketed in the United States.

Some of you may have seen a dispatch from Berlin in the newspapers last week in which the Berlin Institute for Business Research charged, among other things, that we have failed to maintain our purchases from Central and South America since May 1940. Actually, our purchases from the other American republics in the last half of 1940 were 12 percent higher than in the same period of 1939 and 39 percent higher than in the same period of 1938. In the first quarter of 1941 our purchases were 41 percent higher than during the same period of 1940. We are now buying from the other American republics at the rate of a billion dollars a year.

I do not propose to go into a point-by-point discussion of the other errors and misrepresentations in the Berlin analysis, but I cannot refrain from one additional comment. When Berlin mentions surpluses with which the Americas are glutted, when it points to the normal ability of Europe to absorb them, it brings home to me more strongly than ever the fact that we must not allow trade to be strait-jacketed into the Nazi pattern, that we must not allow the great consuming capacity of the Continent of Europe to be wiped out by the enslaving of its people.

Certainly Europe is not consuming what it should consume. Certainly the Americas feel this loss of markets. But an enslaved Europe producing under the lash of the conqueror, and an America driven to trade intended to enslave them as well, is a mighty poor alternative to hold out to a free people.

I should like to mention particularly an area in which American exporters are rendering an effective service in the interest of hemisphere defense. The Office of the Coordinator in conjunction with the Departments of State and Commerce has been engaged for the past few months in enlisting the cooperation of our exporting firms in replacing representatives who are identified directly or indirectly with anti-American activities in the other American republics. Our objective is to withdraw from these subversive elements the financial support and prestige acquired through the represenation of United States business which they have been using to combat and weaken hemispheric solidarity.

The response to this aspect of our defense effort has been one of immediate and wholehearted cooperation. It is a large job, and the job is by no means completed, but I can assure you that we are getting results. To date the problem has been taken up directly with upward of a thousand companies and already we know that hundreds of undesirable representatives have been replaced; hundreds more are in the process of being replaced. We have communicated with some 17,000 companies interested in export trade and have requested them to use care in taking on new representatives and accounts. The Department of Commerce is assisting exporters in checking their existing representatives and in making new connections. The result has been that the undesirable agents are finding it almost impossible to do business with United States companies today.

Shortly we hope to be able to make a comprehensive report on the accomplishments of this cooperative approach to a most serious problem. We hope the entire job can be done through the cooperative approach. Based on the response received so far there can be no question that an overwhelming majority of responsible exporters recognize that it is to our advantage to have our goods distributed abroad by representatives who will not mix trade with political penetration or subversive activities. It is imperative in a cooperative approach to this problem that each of us charge himself with the responsibility for seeing that clean-up action is taken and taken promptly.

One of the most serious problems facing us today is the supplying of minimum import requirements of our neighbors. In this period of international crisis you who are engaged in export trade are faced with an important strategic part in the Nation's defense effort. Inseparable from our determination to preserve the economic stability of the hemisphere is our responsibility for keeping its nations supplied with their vital production requirements.

Many of you are already working at full capacity on defense business and civilian consumption. Yet, recognizing that our aid to the democracies is in itself defense of our neighbors, you must not lose sight of the vital requirements of these nations. As you plan for future production, you should always keep in mind the importance of making deliveries on orders of the other American republics.

The United States is the only remaining major source of these nations for manufactured and semimanufactured goods. Their purchases from us have already increased from about $500,000,000 in 1939 to around $750,000,000 and probably a still larger volume of demands on your production will be forthcoming. With their export markets already dislocated by the war, it is doubly important that the industrial plants, the construction work, and the efforts at diversification of industry continue functioning.

If you fail to meet their minimum import requirements, factories will close down for want of machinery, workers will be laid off from construction work, and industrial employment for lack of small quantities of imported goods, with the result that an additional strain will be put upon their economies.

Our national-defense program, our program of aid to the democracies fighting on the front lines, are measures of hemisphere defense. After we meet the demands of these efforts, our industry must turn its productive capacity in the direction of our neighbors as well as toward sustaining our needs at home.

As defense-conscious Americans engaged in export trade you will recognize the soundness of such an approach. When the emergency is over, we shall be able to point with pride to an industry which was able to deliver the goods on all fronts.

Convoys

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES F. O'CONNOR
OF MONTANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

PETITION OF STUDY GROUP OF FARM WOMEN OF PARK COUNTY, MONT.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following petition:

We, the undersigned members of a study group composed of farm women of Park County, Mont., say to you, the President of our United States, that we are willing our sons and grandsons should protect our own country and our own shores should that need arise, but we protest their being taken to Europe, Asia, or Africa to fight in foreign wars. We believe you will be violating your oath of office if you send convoys. We believe convoys mean war and war means sending our sons and grandsons to slaughter. We protest.

Mrs. A. M. Kirscher, Mrs. M. D. Stieves, Mrs. D. Z. David, Mrs. G. A. Chadbourne, Mrs. A. W. Chadbourne, Mrs. Guy Gibson, Mrs. Gretchen Dunn, Mrs. Louise Gibson, Mrs. Marion W. Kenney, Mrs. Myrtle Birch, Mrs. Bill Gibson, Lucetta Holliday, Mrs. H. D. Von Gundy, Mrs. E. C. Durgan, Mrs. Marion A. Melin, Mrs. J. D. Ballard, Mrs. Beatrice Young, Mrs. E. B. Keitz, Mrs. Haakon L. Nelson, Mrs. John Putzker.

What Constitutes An American?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. M. MICHAEL EDELSTEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

SPEECH DELIVERED BY HON. HAROLD L. ICKES, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, last Sunday afternoon, as I sat on the platform on the Mall in Central Park, New York City, I saw thousands of people in front of me who had come together to reaffirm their faith in democracy and in the United States. Everywhere throughout this great land of ours, the same stirring scene was being reenacted at about the same time. Last night, I saw a news reel which showed that all of these scenes had been photographically preserved.

I think it both desirable and proper that the leading address delivered in New York City as part of the I Am An American Day celebration on May 18, 1941, should also be preserved for posterity in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, although I feel sure that this vivid, homely talk of Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, on that occasion will be retained in many places and in many minds for a long time to come. I know that those who did not have the pleasure of hearing Secretary Ickes speak will derive new strength for their democratic belief from his forthright affirmation that our democracy is a positive program rather than the last weak defense of defeatism. His remarks at that time, are as follows:

I want to ask a few simple questions. And then I shall answer them.

What has happened to our vaunted idealism? Why have some of us been behaving like scared chickens? Where is the million-throated, democratic voice of America?

For years it has been dinned into us that we are a weak Nation; that we are an inefficient people; that we are simple-minded. For years we have been told that we are beaten, decayed, and that no part of the world belongs to us any longer.

Some amongst us have fallen for this carefully pickled tripe. Some amongst us have fallen for this calculated poison. Some amongst us have begun to preach that the "wave of the future" has passed over us and left us a wet, dead fish.

They shout—from public platforms, in printed pages, through the microphones—that it is futile to oppose the "wave of the future." They cry that we Americans, we free Americans nourished on Magna Carta and the Declaration of Independence, hold moth-eaten ideas. They exclaim that there is no room for free men in the world any more and that only the slaves will inherit the earth. America—the America of Washington and Jefferson and Lincoln and Walt Whitman—they say, is waiting for the undertaker and all the hopes and aspirations that have gone into the making of America are dead, too.

However, my fellow citizens, this is not the real point of the story. The real point—the shameful point—is that many of us are listening to them and some of us almost believe them.

I say that it is time for the great American people to raise its voice and cry out in mighty triumph what it is to be an American. And why it is that only Americans, with the aid of our brave allies—yes, let's call them "allies"—the British, can and will build the only future worth having. I mean a future, not of concentration camps, not of physical torture and mental strait jackets, not of sawdust bread, or of sawdust Caesars—I mean a future when free men will live free lives in dignity and in security.

This tide of the future, the democratic future, is ours. It is ours if we show ourselves worthy of our culture and of our heritage.

But make no mistake about it; the tide of the democratic future is not like the ocean tide—regular, relentless, and inevitable. Nothing in human affairs is mechanical or inevitable. Nor are Americans mechanical. They are very human indeed.

What constitutes an American? Not color nor race nor religion. Not the pedigree of his family nor the place of his birth. Not the coincidence of his citizenship. Not his social status nor his bank account. Not his trade nor his profession. An American is one who loves justice and believes in the dignity of man. An American is one who will fight for his freedom and that of his neighbor. An American is one who will sacrifice property, ease, and security in order that he and his children may retain the rights of free men. An American is one in whose heart is engraved the immortal second sentence of the Declaration of Independence.

Americans have always known how to fight for their rights and their way of life. Americans are not afraid to fight. They fight joyously in a just cause.

We Americans know that freedom, like peace, is indivisible. We cannot retain our liberty if three-fourths of the world is enslaved. Brutality, injustice, and slavery, if practiced as dictators would have them, universally and systematically, in the long run would destroy us as surely as a fire raging in our nearby neighbor's house would burn ours if we didn't help to put out his.

If we are to retain our own freedom, we must do everything within our power to aid Britain. We must also do everything to restore to the conquered peoples their freedom. This means the Germans, too.

Such a program, if you stop to think, is selfishness on our part. It is the sort of enlightened selfishness that makes the wheels of history go around. It is the sort of enlightened selfishness that wins victories.

Do you know why? Because we cannot live in the world alone, without friends and without allies. If Britain should be defeated, then the totalitarian undertaker will prepare to hang crape on the door of our own independence.

Perhaps you wonder how this could come about? Perhaps you have heard "them"—the wavers of the future—cry, with calculated malice, that even if Britain were defeated we could live alone and defend ourselves single handed, even against the whole world.

I tell you that this is a cold-blooded lie.

We would be alone in the world, facing an unscrupulous military-economic bloc that would dominate all of Europe, all of Africa, most of Asia, and perhaps even Russia and South America. Even to do that, we would have to spend most of our national income on tanks and guns and planes and ships. Nor would this be all. We would have to live perpetually as an armed camp, maintaining a huge standing army, a gigantic air force, two vast navies. And we could not do this without endangering our freedom, our democracy, our way of life.

Perhaps such is the America they—the wavers of the future—foresee. Perhaps such is the America that a certain aviator, with his contempt for democracy, would prefer. Perhaps such is the America that a certain Senator desires. Perhaps such is the America that a certain mail-order executive longs for.

But a perpetually militarized, isolated, and impoverished America is not the America that our fathers came here to build.

It is not the America that has been the dream and the hope of countless generations in all parts of the world.

It is not the America that 130,000,000 of us would care to live in.

The continued security of our country demands that we aid the enslaved millions of Europe—yes; even of Germany—to win back their liberty and independence. I am convinced that if we do not embark upon such a program we will lose our own freedom.

We should be clear on this point. What is convulsing the world today is not merely another old-fashioned war. It is a counter-revolution against our ideas and ideals, against our sense of justice and our human values.

Three systems today compete for world domination. Communism, fascism, and democracy are struggling for social-economic-political world control. As the conflict sharpens it becomes clear that the other two, fascism and communism, are merging into one. They have one common enemy, democracy. They have one common goal, the destruction of democracy.

This is why this war is not an ordinary war. It is not a conflict for markets or territories. It is a desperate struggle for the possession of the souls of men.

This is why the British are not fighting for themselves alone. They are fighting to preserve freedom for mankind. For the moment the battleground is the British Isles. But they are fighting our war; they are the first soldiers in trenches that are also our front-line trenches.

In this world war of ideas and of loyalties we believers in democracy must do two things.

We must unite our forces to form one great democratic international.

We must offer a clear program to freedom-loving peoples throughout the world.

Freedom-loving men and women in every land must organize and tighten their ranks. The masses everywhere must be helped to fight their oppressors and conquerors.

We free democratic Americans are in a position to help. We know that the spirit of freedom never dies. We know that men have fought and bled for freedom since time immemorial. We realize that the liberty-loving German people are only temporarily enslaved. We do not doubt that the Italian people are looking forward to the appearance of another Garibaldi. We know how the Poles have for centuries maintained a heroic resistance against tyranny. We remember the brave struggle of the Hungarians under Kossuth and other leaders. We recall the heroic figure of Masaryk and the gallant fight for freedom of the Czech people. The story of the Yugoslavs', especially the Serbs', blows for liberty and independence is a saga of extraordinary heroism. The Greeks will stand again at Thermopylae, as they have in the past. The annals of our American sister republics, too, are glorious with freedom-inspiring exploits. The noble figure of Simon Bolivar, the great South American liberator, has naturally been compared with that of George Washington.

No, liberty never dies. The Genghis Khans come and go. The Attilas come and go. The Hitlers flash and sputter out. But freedom endures.

Destroy a whole generation of those who have known how to walk with heads erect in God's free air, and the next generation will rise against the oppressors and restore freedom. Today in Europe, the Nazi Attila may gloat that he has destroyed democracy. He is wrong. In small farmhouses all over central Europe, in the shops of Germany and Italy, on the docks of Holland and Belgium, freedom still lives in the hearts of men. It will endure like a hardy tree gone into the wintertime, awaiting the spring.

And, like spring, spreading from the south into Scandinavia, the democratic revolution will come. And men with democratic hearts will experience comradeship across artificial boundaries.

These men and women, hundreds of millions of them, now in bondage or threatened with slavery, are our comrades and our allies. They are only waiting for our leadership and our encouragement, for the spark that we can supply.

These hundreds of millions of liberty-loving people, now oppressed, constitute the greatest sixth column in history. They have the will to destroy the Nazi gangsters.

We have always helped in struggles for human freedom. And we will help again.

But our hundreds of millions of liberty-loving allies would despair if we did not provide aid and encouragement.

The quicker we help them the sooner this dreadful revolution will be over.

We cannot, we must not, we dare not, delay much longer.

The fight for Britain is in its crucial stages. We must give the British everything we have. And by everything, I mean everything needed to beat the life out of our common enemy.

The second step must be to aid and encourage our friends and allies everywhere. And by everywhere I mean Europe and Asia and Africa and America.

And, finally, the most important of all, we Americans must gird spiritually for the battle. We must dispel the fog of uncertainty and vacillation. We must greet with raucous laughter the corroding arguments of our appeasers and Fascists. They doubt democracy. We affirm it triumphantly so that all the world may hear:

Here in America we have something so worth living for that it is worth dying for.

The so-called wave of the future is but the slimy backwash of the past. We have not heaved from our necks the tyrant's crushing heel only to stretch our necks out again for its weight.

Not only will we fight for democracy, we will make it more worth fighting for.

Under our free institutions, we will work for the good of mankind, including Hitler's victims in Germany, so that all may have plenty and security.

We American democrats know that when good will prevails among men there will be a world of plenty and a world of security.

In the words of Winston Churchill, "Are we downhearted?"

No; we are not.

But someone is downhearted.

Witness the terrified flight of Hess, Hitler's No. 3 man.

And listen to this—listen carefully:

"The British nation can be counted upon to carry through to victory any struggle that it once enters upon, no matter how long such a struggle may last or however great the sacrifices that may be necessary or whatever the means that have to be employed; and all this even though the actual military equipment at hand may be utterly inadequate when compared with that of other nations."

Do you know who wrote that?

Adolf Hitler in Mein Kampf.

And do you know who took down that dictation?

Rudolf Hess.

We will help to make Hitler's prophecy come true. We will help brave England drive back the hordes from hell who besiege her and then we will join for the destruction of savage and bloodthirsty dictators everywhere. But we must be firm and decisive. We must know our will and make it felt. And we must hurry.

America Speaks Its Mind

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, since I delivered my radio talk on May 20 over the Columbia Broadcasting System, many members have expressed an interest in learning what reaction I received to my proposal (which appears on page A2425 of the Appendix of the RECORD) that President Roosevelt call a mediation conference of neutrals to consider the basic outlines of a just and enduring peace for the nations of the world. For that reason, I am reproducing herewith some typical examples of the many wires and letters I have received from members of the radio audience.

Insufficient time has elapsed to permit mail to reach Washington from the West and Middle West so, except for telegrams, most of these communications come from what I believe has been erroneously referred to as the "interventionistic east." All communications are identified by the initials of their senders and the complete letters with original signatures are available in my office if any one wishes to read the whole cross section of correspondence coming in as a result of this broadcast.

Since so many speakers and writers are devoting their entire time to endorsing policies designed to put this country completely into a total war or to the defense of just its private peace, it is both surprising and gratifying to me to learn that so many people in so many sections of America are interested in the possibility that this country can render an even greater service to the world by inspiring and helping to formulate the terms of a sound and just peace. Judging from the overwhelming tone of the correspondence reaching me following my broadcast, a great many Americans feel that we can better serve humanity by helping to end the war now by a peace planned on terms of common decency, sound economics, national justice, and Christian brotherhood than we can by expanding the conflict to engulf the rest of the people of the world. It is to be hoped that our national leaders will fully explore every possibility of ending all the fighting in the world before the fighting intensifies and spreads to the point where it may put an end to all the civilization of the world.

Some letters—about 10 percent of the total—have also reached me in protest against my proposal that President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull invite leading neutrals of the world to meet at some neutral point to discuss among themselves the fundamental basis for bringing order out of chaos and of suggesting a series of provisions which would be considered by this conference as a just and equitable formula for restoring peace. Practically all of these dissenting letters were based on the false assumption that such a peace would be proposed on Hitler's terms or that it would be a "negotiated peace" on the theory that Hitler had won or was winning the war. Such a false assumption entirely misses the purport of my proposal and suggests a defeatist attitude which I am unwilling to admit as valid or acceptable. In my opinion, Hitler has not won this war. Nor can he win it so long as the British Navy and the British Isles withstand attack. Furthermore, I think that Hitler and the German people know that they have not won the war. Many indications coming out of Germany suggest that even there can be found a much greater sentiment for bringing an end to this destructive war than is popularly supposed.

A set of peace suggestions, prepared by a mediation conference of neutrals and agreed upon by them as sound and just, might find a better reception in both Germany and Britain than leaders of either country could presently admit for fear of showing weakness or destroying public confidence in the progress of their side of the war. Certainly, if Hitler and Mussolini refuse to consider or accept the type of equitable and just peace suggestions which could come from a mediation conference of neutrals they will weaken their position dangerously on the home front by depriving themselves of the propaganda value of an appeal to their followers that "we must crush the enemy or be destroyed as a race and as a state."

Since every military strategist of any note agrees that the best and quickest way of invading the continent and stopping the aggressors is to break down the morale of those who follow the dictators, there is much to gain and nothing to lose by encouraging a mediation conference of neutrals to prepare the outlines of a peace which will give victory to all with vengeance to none and which will so settle this worst of all wars that no seeds will be sown in its wake to again crop out in a bloody harvest of worse wars to come or more depraved forms of government ideology to follow after.

SECRETARY HULL HAS PROPOSAL FOR MEDIATION CONFERENCE OF NEUTRALS

Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from Secretary of State Hull advising me that the White House has referred to him the proposals for a mediation conference of neutrals which I sent to President Roosevelt before my broadcast of May 20. These proposals are now being studied by the State Department. It will be recalled that on May 18 the Secretary of State himself suggested some general proposals as guide rules for what might become a permanent peace for all the world. It is well that before we weakly say, "it can't be done," we bravely say, "let's do our best to try." Surely while we are at peace there can be no harm done in trying to see our way through to a pattern which the world can accept as an alternative to a type of warfare which puts a premium upon the bombing of babies, the destruction of churches, and the burning of homes.

If we fail to make the effort now, the world has no place else to turn in search of a great influence to right the wrongs of this war and to reestablish order in a world which has gotten almost entirely out of gear.

A war fought on for many years to come, increasing in its death-dealing destruction as it goes, ending in a weird confusion of exhaustion, bankruptcy, and despair for all sides offers little hope for any new order except prolonged disorder and depression, coupled with a near world-wide break-down of morals, economic practices, and political behavior. The four freedoms might have to start from scratch again after the final end of such a war. And while one side might call out "quits" before the other, there can come no victory or security or permanent peace for any side from the ashen fruits of such a finish fight.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is the unerring vision of the common people of America seeing the dark road that lies ahead which stimulates them to write so hopefully and helpfully in favor of America launching a "peace offensive" now, which would not impair the war activities of any belligerent, would not consult their claims and counterclaims, but which would bring together the nonbelligerent leaders of the world for one last try at fixing up the formula for a return of sanity and justice to the world. Those "defeatists of war" who urge that America cannot survive unless we get into a total war and those "defeatists of peace" who urge that because the task is difficult America should make no effort to bring order out of chaos by helping formulate the "area of agreement" needed to revive the hope and happiness of peace, should take courage as they tune in with the heartbeat of America, which has not yet lost faith in the teachings of the Prince of Peace or the power of reason, justice, tolerance, and equality. There follows a liberal sampling of typical letters which have come to me since May 20:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I bespeak the feeling of a lot of us "battle casualties" when I say that your radio talk of last evening was one of the best yet and my wish for you is that you live to deliver the same speech the day when some few will finally be compelled to gather around a peace table, as it's the only way it can be settled. I can express myself best by saying, "Them's my sentiments."

C. M. W.

ARLINGTON, VA.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MUNDT: I am writing in regard to your proposal, as reported in this morning's paper, for calling an end to the war by a conference of neutrals. This sounds like one of the most sensible plans yet made. I wish to offer you my earnest hopes for success in your efforts. Please send me a copy of the full statement of this plan.

I. R.

WORCESTER, MASS.

SIR: Thanks for your constructive talk about a peace by humanity and for humanity. It may be possible. It is worth trying.

E. F. T.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

HONORABLE SIR: Heard your timely and, if heeded, country saving, humanity saving speech. If we do this and also put America first there is no possibility of American boys going over to become cannon fodder in European wars. I also hope the fine ideas expressed in Secretary Hull's speech will become our policy.

Miss M. C.

WALTHAM, MASS.

Your peace plan the finest American utterance in recent years. We have wired our support to the President and our Senators. May God crown your efforts with success.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. S.
Mr. and Mrs. F. W. C.

WOODRIDGE, N. J.

Congratulations; your peace plan is the first sensible proposition to come to our attention. Am wiring the President accordingly.

J. F.

FREEPORT, LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: We just heard your patriotic speech over the radio and we heartily endorse the sentiments you have expressed.

Mr. and Mrs. C. G. K.

STEBBINS AVENUE, BRONX, NEW YORK CITY.

SIR: I listened to your fine radio address advocating that we stay out of the present European war. Your common-sense views are right. I agree with you that our President should be the man who would bring peace.

W. H.

EAST FORTY-NINTH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Just listened to your sane and eloquent appeal for peace over Station WABC which you so aptly captioned, "America's Rendezvous With Destiny." It is certainly reassuring to know that some of our lawmakers are thinkers and not just jobholders. I have a real Congressman representing me, the Honorable WILLIAM T. PHEIFFER, of New York. I am writing the President along the lines you suggested.

J. J. A. M.

NINETIETH AVENUE, WOODHAVEN, N. Y.

HONORABLE SIR: May I express my gratitude on your energetic defense of America by keeping out of foreign entanglements. Please continue your efforts in behalf of our country as expressed by you over the radio this evening.

Mrs. M. M.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE MUNDT: I congratulate you for your radio address this evening. I urge you to continue your efforts for peace.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

Your broadcast address last evening was very effective. Please send copy at once. Will publish same in effective trade journals.

W. M. P.

FORT WAYNE, IND.

Congratulations on your radio address. Please keep up the good work. Millions are behind you.

H. J. M.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

God bless your peace proposals.

A. V.

MITCHELL, S. DAK.

Powerful, clear, and understandable speech. Over 100,000,000 people will think the same. You are making history. Keep up the good fight.

C. W. F.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

DEAR SIR: I heard your talk last night on the radio and appreciated it very much. I know that all American mothers appreciate the work Senators and Congressmen are doing to keep this country at peace. Would it be possible to get 1,000 copies of your speech? American mothers will not forget those Senators and Congressmen who have stood by the American people.

Mrs. L. S.

MASPETH, LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I liked your radio talk on Tuesday. I noted particularly that you offered something constructive; some alternative to war. As an American, I want something else; something American. I am glad, too, to hear Secretary Hull speak out with a degree of common sense.

J. T. K.

[From high-ranking officer in one of America's greatest insurance companies]

HARTFORD, CONN.

MY DEAR MR. MUNDT: I listened with a great deal of interest to your radio address last evening entitled "America's Rendezvous With Destiny." If you have a copy of this address available, will you be kind enough to send it to me?

C. B. E.

WEST OHIO STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Thank you many times for your excellent broadcast of last night; it is so seldom nowadays that one may listen to constructive proposals. Most broadcasts are just emotional. History should make it clear that violence cannot be cured with more violence.

G. P.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Congratulations on your radio speech of May 20. You have the right idea. Starting today on airplane pushing same objectives.

W. B. L.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

DEAR MR. MUNDT: I was encouraged by your able and forceful radio address of May 20. I will write my Congressman and the President, urging favorable consideration of your peace proposal. I know that you will persist in your courageous stand against further involvement in the war and do your utmost to inform the people of the perils of convoying, patrolling, etc., and of the vicious propaganda being used to incite the people to war. The inarticulate masses of our people will be eternally in your debt for your efforts in their behalf, and I wish you Godspeed in the great work you are doing.

W. K. P.

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL,
Cambridge, Mass.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE MUNDT: I attended the political rally in the Boston Garden, October last, and consider the President's promise not a mere campaign gesture, but a solemn pledge to those who made him trustee of their Government for 4 years. Student sentiment seems as strong or stronger than it has been in the past against our involvement in this war. President Conant has a strong following among our law professors (all too old to fight), and we find ourselves subjected to very subtle propaganda from visiting professors from England. Keep up the good fight.

A. R. S., Law Student.

MADISON, OHIO.

DEAR SIR: I have just listened to your radio broadcast from Washington, America's Rendezvous With Destiny. I appreciate talks like that. You are working while others stand still. May you have support to carry forward your good ideas.

E. W.,
Rural Free Delivery No. 2.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I heard your address on the radio last night and was much impressed with the outline of the possible peace position for the United States of America.

C. L. S.,
British World War Veteran.

CHICAGO, ILL.

DEAR MR. MUNDT: I heard your splendid talk this evening. I hope and pray that our President will follow your suggestion for peace. We surely expect the President to keep his campaign pledges not to get us into war.

MRS. J.

DALLAS, TEX.

Listened to your radio talk last night and you are to be congratulated. The most sensible talk I have heard on our war problem. Please air mail me copy of your speech.

J. A. E.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C.

SIR: Wonderful speech of yours tonight. I wish you could have been at our peace rally here Sunday of farmers, workers, teachers, ministers—all eager for peace. They have no radio or newspaper to control, but they are legion. Fight for peace.

E. E. E.

MILFORD, CONN.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE MUNDT: I am a native-born American citizen whose father fought in the Civil War and whose three half-brothers voluntarily enlisted in the World War. I am for America first, last, and always. If America is attacked, then every loyal American man and woman will pitch in and fight the invader, and I will be one of them. I am opposed to America's entry into another foreign war and to the use of convoys. I have a right, and it is my duty, to be as concerned about my country as any foreigner is about the land of his birth. God bless you and all the other Congressmen championing the cause of America and of Americans.

A. W.

BOSTON, MASS.

HONORABLE SIR: I would like to have a copy of your radio address as given over the network last night. I endorse wholeheartedly your most basic American stand.

S. E. S.

Mr. Speaker, the foregoing are but a small sampling of the communications which I have received in connection with my suggestion for a mediation conference of neutrals and that America keep out of this war, both in her own interests and in the interest of better maintaining our flow of aid to Britain. These samples are sufficient, however, to indicate the trend of these communications. Any Member desiring to read any of these communications coming from his city or district, or to read through the entire stack of this correspondence, is invited to come to my office where the entire collection of telegrams, letters, and post cards will be made available to him. It is quite apparent that the people who comprise the backbone of America are doing some mighty serious and constructive thinking in this important period of our history.

Speeding Up American Industries

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER F. GEORGE

OF GEORGIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. CARL A. HATCH OF NEW MEXICO

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] over the facilities of the National Broadcasting Co. on Monday night, May 19, 1941, on the general subject of speeding up American industries.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Before speaking on the subject which I have chosen for this evening, I first want to thank the Evening Star for the opportunity to appear on this program.

I address you tonight with no thought of promoting the aims or purposes of any group or faction, organization or party. Fortunately, we are not now concerned with any question of partisan politics. Even the much-too-often used terms "interventionist" and "isolationist" have no meaning in connection with the things I have in mind. In fact, I wish those terms had never become a part of our vocabulary. The words "interventionist" and "isolationist," as they have been used in recent months, carry the implication to the country, and to the world for that matter, that America is divided on vital issues of policy and even of defense. That, I deplore.

I do have a purpose—there is one thing I do want to promote. That one thing should be paramount in the minds of every American. It involves only one course of action. It is a course of action upon which we can all agree, without any difference and without reservation of any kind. I plead tonight only for those things which will insure and guarantee the welfare and the safety of the people of the United States of America and her form of government. In this spirit and from this standpoint alone, I speak tonight.

It was not until just about 1 year ago that we in America became conscious of the absolute necessity to arm and prepare ourselves, as we had never dreamed would be necessary in our day and generation. I do not mean by this that we had been altogether asleep. I, myself, have always advocated a strong preparedness program, and since I have been in the Senate I have voted for and supported every bill which has in any way tended to strengthen defenses of this country. I am frank to confess that until the downfall of France last year I did not believe it would be necessary for us to take the extreme measures which we are compelled to adopt today. I believed that we could maintain a more-or-less neutral position and that we could avoid becoming involved in the war abroad.

Certainly no man dislikes more than I do the terrific waste which even preparedness for war involves. War itself is something I hate with all the intensity of my soul. But of war and our becoming involved therein, I shall not speak tonight. Let us hope that that bitter cup will pass us by.

I am glad that I can say that this urgent need for defensive rearmament and the awful threat of war which hangs over every nation of the world today are not of our making. Not one single bit of it can be charged to America, her people, or her leaders; for that, I am thankful.

Notwithstanding our complete lack of responsibility for the condition which confronts the world, we must nevertheless face that condition as it is. The safety of 130,000,000 people, the preservation of free government for free men, are obligations and responsibilities which we cannot shirk. We have no choice; the choice has already been made for us by those powers and nations who know no law except the law of brute force. Our safety lies only in our strength; our full strength must yet be developed.

With these general thoughts in mind, I want to discuss with you tonight some of the conditions with which we are actually confronted.

I think we all realize that war as waged in the last Great War is not the kind of war that is happening today. During the long years of that war the armies of the great powers faced each other on the battlefields with practically unbroken fronts. Machine-gun nests, artillery fire, barbed-wire entanglements, deep trenches, and all those things held the respective armies in check. When attempts to break through those lines were made the loss of life was so appalling the attempts often failed. Relying upon the experiences of that war, practically all the nations of the world, save one, prepared their defenses along those lines. France, at great cost, built the Maginot line. Other countries relied upon their more or less stationary and natural fortifications. They believed themselves to be secure against attack from without.

Under Chancelor Hitler, the German nation pursued a different course. With his ascent to power, they rearmed their people for war in a way which now seems to have been entirely beyond the comprehension of the other great powers. Mechanized armies furnished with tanks and other equipment were strong enough to pierce almost any fortification. Airplanes and air forces in overwhelming numbers not only swamped but actually terrified the opposing forces. Germany relentlessly used and adopted all the machinery and everything the inventive geniuses of the world had provided as a part of her scheme to conquer and destroy, dominate and control the entire world.

While not a part of my general theme tonight, it might be well to observe here, merely to show how entirely and completely the German nation started on this road of conquest, that even more devilish and brutal than her armed forces were her cruel and barbous methods of the "fifth column." Through spies and intrigue, they sought to destroy—and did in more than one instance bore from within and conquer an entire nation without the firing of a single shot and without the loss of a single German life. Their diabolical program in this regard is ably detailed and explained in an article appearing in the current issue of Fortune magazine by Mr. Edward Taylor. From that article I quote a short paragraph:

"At the core of the totalitarian philosophy of war, profoundly influencing its strategy and tactics, is what might be called pure political warfare—attacks on political objectives with political weapons. By political warfare the Nazis, who are its leading exponents to date, mean all the roughest and shadiest tactics of politics such as bribery, blackmail, terrorism, assassination, and propaganda utilized in accordance with strict rules of strategy to destroy the enemy from within."

Added to the vicious methods being employed in the world today, the German nation has not hesitated to but does freely make use of the insidious, but nonetheless deadly, economic warfare. It is as much a part of German strategy as the hordes of marching armies Hitler has constantly at his command. In this phase of warfare they adopt every evil practice known to the world of trade. Monopolistic practices, all sorts of trade discriminations, barter according to their own peculiar standards, and many other methods in which no honorable businessman would deal, are the rule and not the exception.

While I shall not dwell with these subtle, insidious, and ingenious practices of the "fifth column" or of the economic warfare tonight, I think it is well that America should realize exactly the type of warfare that is being carried on in the world today, and which we in this hemisphere may not escape—try as we may. In fact, can there be any doubt that many of these practices are being employed in this hemisphere even now? You don't see these things in the headlines of the newspapers; you don't read about them largely because they are under cover. They are secret, and only come to light when their evil aims and designs have been accomplished.

Yet, we cannot be blind to these conditions. In the light of Norway, Denmark, Holland, and all of the other strictly neutral countries conquered from within and without, to say nothing of the tragedy of Greece and the other Balkan states, can any of us justify any fond hope that we are to escape unscathed and unhurt when the whole world is being burned and destroyed by the forces I have mentioned. Only the deaf hear not; only the blind see not. Let America be neither deaf nor blind.

I said in the beginning that our choice has already been made. It has been made. There is but one course and there is but one answer to these perilous conditions—which I have only mentioned and have not attempted to portray in all their horror. We must prepare. We must be so strong in military might and power, in the air, on the sea, and on the land, that no outlaw nation, either in Europe or in Asia, will dare engage us in battle. We must prepare to fight the hard fight of an economic invasion, just as strongly as we would fight an invasion by force of arms. The activities of the hated "fifth column" must be stopped immediately and those who carry on its evil work must be rooted out and driven forever from our land.

All this is the great task which confronts all America—not any group, not any faction, not any party, but each and every one of us.

The greatest immediate need now is the immediate speeding up of our vast industrial machine. We have proudly and truthfully boasted that we are the greatest industrial nation in the world. We lead the whole world in our manufacturing establishment and our equipment, skill, and energy for the mass production of every conceivable kind of machine and device. A large part of the German triumphs, through the machine and mechanical equipment, is due to American inventive genius.

Because we are the kind of people that we are, however, and because we have been more concerned, in fact only concerned, with peaceful pursuits, we have not geared this industrial machine of ours to wartime methods such as are employed today. Our plant capacities have been devoted to the building of tractors for humble farm use, automobiles for pleasure and commercial purposes, trucks for similar uses. We have never sought to utilize this great capacity to make machines of death. This is all to our credit, and I am glad that we are that kind of a people. But, nevertheless, today we are faced with this fact, which I believe is unalterably true, that if we are to live and are to be able in the future to direct our attention to those peaceful pursuits, we must today turn this vast industrial empire of ours away from peaceful pursuits and into the ways of preparing ourselves with every war machine which the enemies of free government and free people already possess. We must not only equal them in the production of these things, we must excel them. That is our immediate task; that is the call to industry in America today. Civilian needs are going to have to be curtailed. In some respects we may be able to continue with the production of certain needed and required machines for civilian use, but if we are going to prepare this Nation as I believe she must be prepared, the military requirements for our great defensive program must supersede and take priority over all other considerations.

Perhaps you are thinking I am extreme in these views, and you may look back again at the first World War and think that we did not then completely turn our entire industrial activity over to the manufacture of military supplies. That is true: we did not. During that war our Allies were able to, and did, supply us with much of the equipment with which our armies fought. After a time we were able to supply our Army in France with light equipment, such as arms, rifles, bayonets, and so forth; but even at the time of the armistice, all the heavier equipment, such as heavy artillery, was being supplied by the French and British. Even with our knowledge of tractor machinery and equipment, according to Secretary of War Stimson, we had succeeded in shipping only 143 tractors to France when the armistice was signed.

In 1917 we knew nothing, practically, about airplanes for war purposes. Even after we had declared war we sent a mission to France to find out what types of planes were needed. It was not until 1918 that a single plane was delivered in France. In July 1917 we had appropriated $365,000,000 for the purchase of airplanes; in 1940 the Congress appropriated one and one-half billion dollars for this purpose. The situation in the manufacture of airplanes vividly portrays what I am trying to tell you. Compare one and one-half billion dollars against three hundred and sixty-five million and you will see how necessary it is that this industrial machine be speeded up and faster and greater progress be made each day.

The figures I have just used give something of the general idea confronting the industries of this Nation. Time does not permit a detailed discussion of each industry; therefore I shall only mention one—again merely to show something of the gigantic task that awaits industry itself.

If this war has proved anything, it has proved beyond any shadow of a doubt that a nation which is not adequately supplied with air power will lose. Control of the air today is as vital as control of the seas proved to be in the last war. The first job, therefore, in the Nation's arms program is the building of airplanes—and more and more planes. We are told that with the impetus given by French and English orders the airplane industry had already launched a gigantic development and expansion program before our effort really began in 1940. But even now the number of planes being produced is far short of the 4,000 planes monthly which the President recommended.

Unfortunately, adequate supplies of aluminum and magnesium have not been provided. One company had a complete monopoly of the production of aluminum in this country. The special Senate investigating committee, headed by Senator TRUMAN, of Missouri, which is considering many questions of our defense program, developed some most interesting information concerning the aluminum and magnesium supplies. This is important when it is considered that at least 80 percent of a big bomber, including the engine, is aluminum. The Aluminum Co. had followed the practice of providing no excess capacity, either of alumina or aluminum production. This may have been good business practice, beneficial to a monopoly, but it gave us no excess capacity for war purposes. The Aluminum Co.'s total production on its own power, even in 1942, will only be 410,000,000 pounds annually, whereas the estimates for direct military needs alone are more than 1,200,000,000, without including indirect needs or civilian requirements.

This situation in aluminum presents the thought which I just expressed with reference to civilian uses. It applies likewise to many other industries. I am definitely of the opinion that if we are going to put forth our full effort, we must reduce, curb, and curtail our civilian uses of these essentially important war materials. Our industries must devote their entire time and all the facilities toward the building of our defense needs. When I say, "they must devote their entire time and facilities," I include not only the machines but also the management which owns the machines, and the men who operate them. I mean there must be no strikes, either of labor or of capital. The selfish interest of no group shall be permitted to impede or hold back this work vital to the welfare of the whole country.

Most inadequately, I fear, I have endeavored to give something of the great need for the mobilization of all our industries in order to make this country as strong as it can be made—and as it must be made.

I have not mentioned our program of aid to the British. It is a subject unto itself. Frankly, I believe that the superb battle Britain is putting up daily strengthens our own defense. I therefore wholeheartedly approve our program of giving all aid possible to Great Britain.

Our own task, though, is to utilize the vast industrial equipment of this country to its full capacity. That can be done, but it will require strong effort. Half-way measures are not enough; anything less than complete use of the facilities which we have could be disastrous. The cost will be great—but failure will cost far more. Whatever lies ahead in this hour of our country's need, it must be met courageously. Let us not be afraid. Let effort be put forth for our country's welfare.

"He who lets his country die,
Lets all things die;
And all things dying, curse him.

"But he who lets his country live,
Lets all things live;
And all things living, bless him."

Federal Bureau of Investigation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE W. NORRIS
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

LETTERS BETWEEN ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF AND DR. MARY BEARD

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on Tuesday last I asked unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a series of letters between Alexander Holtzoff, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, and Dr. Mary Beard, of New Milford, Conn., on the subject of the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. My request was granted, but at the time I did not have the estimate provided for under the rules. I now have the estimate. The expense will be $247.50. I renew my request.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., March 25, 1940.

Dr. MARY BEARD,
New Milford, Conn.

MY DEAR MRS. BEARD: While you probably do not remember me, Professor Beard will, of course, recall me in view of the fact that in my student days at Columbia I did some research work for him for a couple of years. On the strength of this fact, I am taking the liberty of writing you this letter.

The Washington Star for Saturday, March 23, contains an article summarizing an address delivered by you at the Wardman Park Hotel the night before. The article contains the following statement:

"Dr. Beard scored the Federal Bureau of Investigation and declared that 'under the aegis of our Federal Government an incipient Ogpu or Gestapo appears to be taking form.'"

One of the headlines reads as follows: "Assails F. B. I."

It may be that you were erroneously quoted. If so, I am sure you will welcome having the matter brought to your attention, as you would probably want to make an appropriate correction.

If, however, you were accurately quoted, I should like to inform you of certain facts of which it is reasonable to assume you are not aware.

It so happens that for the past 15 years I have been, and am now, connected with the Department of Justice in a legal capacity. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, as you know, is a branch of that Department. I have had numerous official contacts with the Bureau, sometimes almost daily. In addition Mr. J. Edgar Hoover is my close personal friend. Consequently I have had an excellent opportunity to observe the operations of the Federal Bureau of Investigation at close range from day to day.

I know that as a liberal you will not want to make unfair or inaccurate accusations against any individual or group of individuals, founded on insufficient data. The liberal spirit, of course, includes within its scope a spirit of fairness and tolerance.

I feel strongly that all liberals should support the Federal Bureau of Investigation as an outstanding demonstration of the fact that the criminal law can be enforced efficiently and at the same time with due observance of the rights of the accused.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation does not make arrests on suspicion. It first investigates the facts from an impartial point of view, free from any preconceived ideas. An arrest is made only after the investigation inescapably leads to the conclusion that the person that is being taken into custody is guilty of the offense with which he is charged. This is an explanation of the fact that about 98 percent of persons arrested by the Federal Bureau of Investigation are later convicted in the courts—a record that is never equaled by any State or local law-enforcement agency.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation does not engage in any third-degree tactics, either physical or moral. It observes all the requirements of the law, some of which are highly technical, safeguarding the rights of prisoners as to detention, arraignment, removal from one district to another, etc. I have seen Mr. Hoover and his agents time and time again meticulously analyzing the legal rights of a person whom they had placed under arrest and assuring that such rights are properly protected.

In a number of cases an investigation made by the Bureau has resulted in a vindication of persons suspected, and occasionally even convicted of grave offenses, for all investigations conducted by the Bureau are carried on on a perfectly impartial and scientific basis, without any desire to lead to a particular conclusion.

The Bureau, as you probably know, has placed criminal investigation on a scientific basis and has harnessed the processes of physics, chemistry, and other sciences to the task of solving crime. The result is that in the Department of Justice Building today there is an outstanding physical and chemical laboratory, used solely for investigative purposes.

Democracy and liberalism are not incompatible with efficiency. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is an outstanding illustration of this fact.

Mr. Hoover himself represents the best type of career men in the Government, a type of public servants without which the Federal Government cannot effectively function. One of the basic reasons for the failure of our municipal governments is found in the fact that they have not developed the career type of public servant to any great extent. Mr. Hoover has rejected many an opportunity of pecuniary advancement in an entirely honest and legitimate manner. For example, 2 or 3 years ago he spurned an offer to go on a radio program for a period of 3 minutes a week, which would have resulted in paying him several times the annual salary that he receives from the Government, and which he could have accepted without interference with his official duties. Mr. Hoover still lives in the modest house in which he was born.

Personally Mr. Hoover is a practical idealist. He has the highest possible ideals of public service. He devotes to his work almost all of his waking hours, as well as many hours during which he should be sleeping, and has practically no outside interests. He is a dynamic person and is a magnificent organizer and executive. In addition, he is equipped with a splendid imagination and vision, which is, of course, needed in his line of work. And yet, when you get to know him closely, you find, strange to say, that he is a man of an artistic temperament, and is highly sentimental not only in his own personal circle but also in his relations with all of his subordinates, and even at times in dealing with persons whom he has to arrest. In spite of the fact that Mr. Hoover is a strict disciplinarian and a hard taskmaster, his entire staff idolizes him, and it has been my observation that, certainly here in Washington, the severest critics and the most discerning judges of the merits of a high public official, are his own subordinates, for Washington is not addicted to hero worship. The entire personnel of the Bureau is permeated with enthusiasm and high ideals for public service as a result of Mr. Hoover's pervading influence.

You will, of course, recall that the kidnaping wave which menaced the Nation several years ago was checked as a result of the work of the F. B. I. Similarly bank robberies have diminished to such an extent that insurance companies have reduced their insurance rates on policies protecting banks against burglars and robbers. On the other hand, I have never heard of an innocent person being convicted as a result of an F. B. I. investigation, while persons erroneously suspected have frequently been vindicated by the F. B. I.

There have been a few criticisms recently directed against the Bureau which, on analysis, do not hold water. These criticisms have originated from three groups of persons. In the first are some persons who are moved by professional jealousy. I have no criticism to make of them, because nature endowed mankind with envy and jealousy. The second group is composed of those who have been interested in persons who have come afoul of the criminal law. Of them nothing need be said. The third group is composed of a few isolated liberals who have not taken the trouble to inform themselves, but have acted on hearsay derived from the first two sources. They have forgotten that "He that filches from me my good name robs me of that which not enriches him and makes me poor, indeed."

The criticisms have been directed to an arrest of a few individuals in Detroit for violating the statute making it a criminal offense to enlist persons in this country for service in the armed forces of foreign countries. The fact is that these prosecutions were ordered by Attorney General Murphy, who directed that firm and prompt action be taken. It was Mr. Hoover's duty to carry out those directions. The arrests were made early in the morning, as it was known that some of the persons against whom the warrants were issued were so employed as made it necessary for them to leave their homes very early. The persons arrested were not put in cells, but were permitted to remain in the Bureau offices until they were arraigned in court that afternoon. They would have been arraigned in the morning, except for the fact that the judge did not want to take the case up until 3 o'clock. After arraignment, they were turned over to the United States marshal, with whom the Bureau has no connection. A picture has been published showing the prisoners as being chained with others for safe conveyance to jail. This happened after the prisoners left the custody of the Bureau.

A considerable fog has been created in regard to wire tapping. Actually, the Bureau has employed this investigative weapon in comparatively few cases, and even then in respect only to such grave offenses as kidnaping, extortion, etc. Other investigative agencies, such as the post-office inspectors and the alcohol tax agents of the Treasury, have been accustomed to use it to a far greater extent. To what extent wire tapping conducted by law-enforcement officers is illegal has not as yet been decided by the courts. The Supreme Court has merely held that evidence obtained by this means is not admissible in court. Whether it will hold that tapping telephone wires by law-enforcement officers is illegal for all purposes, for example, locating the victim of a kidnaping, remains for the future to determine.

As a matter of ethics, tapping telephone wires is no different from wearing false whiskers, overhearing a conversation, pretending to be an employee, or any of the other devices which have been used by investigators from time immemorial and which have always been sanctioned by public opinion. Tapping wires is, after all, nothing but an elongated form of eavesdropping.

I suppose that if a member of your family were kidnaped and you were informed that Bureau agents had lost the trail of the kidnaper because they were unable to tap certain telephone wires, you would be exceedingly indignant. This discussion is, however, purely academic, because the Attorney General very wisely has issued orders that all wire tapping should stop, and that no cases in which any Government agency had tapped wires should hereafter be prosecuted by United States attorneys, unless and until the Congress should clarify the matter by further legislation.

Some persons who are not familiar with the situation have intimated that Mr. Hoover likes publicity. This is a common human failing, but one which Mr. Hoover does not share. Newspaper men in Washington have frequently criticized Mr. Hoover for his inaccessibility to reporters and for his refusal to divulge information to which they think they are entitled. He never discusses pending cases, because he does not consider it in the best interests of law enforcement to do so. After an arrest is made the public is entitled to the information, and such information and the surrounding details are given out through the Attorney General's office.

I have on more than one occasion told Mr. Hoover that in his files are many interesting statements that would make excellent material for a Sunday newspaper article, or for a magazine story, but he has always shrunk, with, I think, unnecessary and undue modesty, from volunteering to give out such data.

This letter has been longer, perhaps, than it should have been. I know, however, that as a liberal you will want to know the facts, for the liberal point of view necessarily implies such an attitude. I also know that you would not want to do an injustice to a group of efficient, high-minded public servants, who, after all, have not lost the feelings of human beings merely because they have entered the Federal service.

I am enclosing herewith transcripts of two speeches made in the Senate and House of Representatives dealing with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which substantiate the foregoing facts.

With best regards to yourself and Professor Beard, I am

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF.

NEW MILFORD, CONN., March 30, 1940.

DEAR MR. HOLTZOFF: It is a pleasure to renew an old acquaintance if only by letter. Of course, I remember you very well and the efficient help you rendered my husband in other years. He often speaks of you himself in warm terms of appreciation of your cooperation at that time and has been interested in good work you have since done on your own responsibility.

Coming to the subject of your letter to me, dated March 25, I admit first of all that the report of my address to which you refer is substantially correct. I did say that "an incipient Ogpu or Gestapo appears to be taking form" and that a black network is being prepared under the aegis of the Federal Government.

In reply to this declaration of mine, you pay high tribute to Mr. Edgar Hoover as a man and to the services which he has unquestionably rendered in tracking down genuine criminals such as kidnapers. Of course, efficiency in this matter is commendable and all decent citizens are grateful for it. But to use the language of lawyers, if

I am not presuming, I reply, in turn, that your comments on my charge, granting their truth, are immaterial and irrelevant.

My statement was a statement of fact. The proof of the fact is provided by Mr. Hoover's own testimony.

Now what is an Ogpu or Gestapo? It is a political police system. In his testimony before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations on November 30, 1939, Mr. Hoover stated that he had "found it necessary to organize a General Intelligence Division in Washington" for the purpose (among other things) of indexing individuals, groups, and organizations engaged in "subversive activities * * * or any activities that are possibly detrimental to the internal security of the United States." In his testimony in January 1940 Mr. Hoover elaborated on the work of this G. I. D. and said that he is getting ready for the event of "any greater emergency to our country."

You know very well, Mr. Holtzoff, as a lawyer, that it is the sole business of the F. B. I. to detect crimes under Federal law, and crimes only You know very well that subversive activities are not crimes defined by any statute of the United States. You know also that activities possibly detrimental to the internal security of the United States are not crimes defined by any statute of the United States. You know that these are political terms used, often loosely, to blacken or smear anybody who holds unconventional or unpopular ideas. Until such things are made crimes by law, no officer of the Government of the United States has any lawful right to index or spy upon persons engaged in these activities.

Thus, on the basis of Mr. Hoover's own testimony, he stands convicted in the eyes of the law and justice of the offense of setting up a political police for the purpose of spying upon and blacklisting persons guilty of no crimes against the United States. Do you deny Mr. Hoover's own testimony? Do you deny that the G. I. D. is primarily concerned with so-called political opinions and actions which are not crimes at all? Do you contend that Mr. Hoover has plenary jurisdiction over the opinions and political activities of American citizens and a right to index and blacklist them in the F. B. I.?

Granting that your high praise of Mr. Hoover as a gentleman is entirely correct, I must say to you that I have first-hand knowledge (evidence) of the kinds of offenses against decency and democracy which were committed in the days of A. Mitchell Palmer when the same Mr. Hoover was associated with the same kind of general intelligence work he is now undertaking; when the most elementary political and civil rights of American citizens were violated by Federal officers; when innocent persons were hounded and rounded up; when persons were arrested on mere suspicion, held incommunicado, and then released without so much as a word of apology. You and Mr. Hoover himself may have forgotten this history, but informed, educated men and women of America have not forgotten it.

It is by their words that men are known. You know that the political police hysteria of those days not so long ago has been vigorously condemned by such outstanding and exceedingly reputable citizens as Charles Evans Hughes, Harlan F. Stone, and Felix Frankfurter, now Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

You and Mr. Hoover will have to do more than praise your own works and his character if you are to escape the charge of forming a political police and blacklisting citizens innocent of all crimes under the law. You will have to clean house. You will have to abolish the political police division of the F. B. I. You will have to convince the decent people of America, defending their democracy at home, that you are engaged solely in enforcing the law and that you are not interfering with lawful political opinions and activities—that is to say, with free speech and assembly. Fortunately a majority of the members of the Supreme Court have respect for the Constitution and the laws of this land and those of us who have any money may defend ourselves against your political police, though the poor and helpless may have to take blackjacks, detention cells, prison, and ruin.

To these insistent questions I shall greatly appreciate your answers: Is there a G. I. D. in the F. B. I.? Or is there not? Is it engaged in activities connected with the indexing of persons who in Mr. Hoover's sovereign opinion are engaged in activities which he calls subversive or "possibly detrimental to internal security?" Or is it not? What does the adverb "possibly" mean in this relation? Is Mr. J. Edgar Hoover the same person who helped in the Palmer raids? Or is he not?

These questions can be answered simply by a yes or a no. And you know the answers. What are they?

With warm personal regards based on an old friendship,

I am sincerely.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1940.

Dr. MARY R. BEARD,
New Milford, Conn.

DEAR MRS. BEARD: I appreciate your full and frank reply to my letter of March 25, and I take pleasure in promptly answering the questions contained in it.

Mr. J. Edgar Hoover was not in charge of, and had nothing to do with, the manner in which the arrests were made of the so-called radicals under the administration of Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer. Mr. Hoover at that time was not connected with the Federal Bureau of Investigation but was a special assistant to the Attorney General. His function was at that time limited to the handling of legal matters and the preparation of evidence for presentation to the proper authorities in connection with those activities.

It is unquestionably the fact that the function of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is to detect violations of Federal criminal statutes and to apprehend offenders against such statutes. I am afraid that there is a great deal of misapprehension concerning the General Intelligence Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The Bureau, as any efficient law-enforcement organization should do, and many of them actually do, keeps lists of persons who have committed certain crimes in the past, and may therefore commit similar crimes in the future. For example, it has a list of bank robbers. In the same sense it maintains a list of persons who have engaged in foreign espionage and sabotage or have committed other similar criminal offenses. These activities, it must be remembered, are violations of specific Federal criminal statutes.

The phrase "subversive activities, or any activities that are possibly detrimental to the internal security of the United States" was used by Mr. Hoover in his testimony in that narrow sense as being limited to activities that constitute violations of statutes that are now on the books. It was not used in the tenuous, nebulous sense in which it is sometimes employed. Consequently, I must indeed deny in answer to your question that the General Intelligence Division is concerned with so-called political opinions and actions which are not crimes at all. There is no political police division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

In this connection the term "subversive activities" was used in a similar sense in a statement made by the President on September 6, 1939, instructing the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice to take charge of investigative work in matters relating to espionage, sabotage, and violations of the neutrality regulations.

I am afraid that I do not understand your suggestion that the poor and helpless may have to take "blackjacks, detention cells, prison, and ruin." Federal Bureau of Investigation Agents do not carry blackjacks or any other weapon of that type, and they have never been known to maltreat prisoners. The few detention cells that they have are used in the same manner as are cells in every police station, to hold a prisoner overnight or for a few hours during the day before he is taken before a Federal Judge or a United States Commissioner for arraignment. No one is sent to prison except as a result of a trial prescribed by law.

With kind personal regards to you and to Professor Beard, I am

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF.

NEW MILFORD, CONN., April 4, 1941.

DEAR MR. HOLTZOFF: I am grateful to you for your kind letter of April 2, in reply to my reply to your original letter to me. In writing you again, I am taking it for granted that you appreciate the fact that I am not a virago but a seeker after the realities of this affair. And as I am given to see the situation, your letter of April 2 does not yet meet the issues which I had raised. So let me take up the points of your reply seriatim.

I said in my letter to you, dated March 30, that Mr. J. Edgar Hoover was associated in the days of A. Mitchell Palmer with the same kind of general intelligence work he is now undertaking. You reply that he was not in charge of and had nothing to do with the manner in which arrests were made; that he was not then connected with the F. B. I.; that he was a special assistant to the Attorney General.

But I did not say that Mr. Hoover had anything to do with the manner of the arrests or that he was connected then with the F. B. I. I know that Mr. Hoover, from 1919 to 1921, was special assistant to Mr. Palmer, and that Palmer was the man guilty of the outrages described in The Deportations Delirium of 1920, by Mr. Louis Post, then Assistant Secretary of Labor in the Wilson administration.

You admit that Mr. Hoover handled legal matters and the preparation of cases in connection with those activities. Thus you concede my contention that Mr. Hoover was then associated with that type of general intelligence work. Mr. Palmer's whole policy was a policy of frenzy; arrests were often made in defiance of law; the whole business was disgraceful; and yet Mr. Hoover stayed right there at his post helping Palmer. If he was not in thorough sympathy with the activities of his superior he could have resigned as a free citizen of the United States and not an intransigent bureaucrat. So I contend that my point about the two men—Hoover and Palmer—stands unshaken. Indeed it is confirmed by your own statement in your letter dated April 2.

In the second place, you say that the F. B. I. keeps lists of criminals. Of course, it does and should. I never suggested that it should not keep track of criminals and persons charged with being criminals. Hasn't the F. B. I. been doing that all along? I have not assailed it for that operation. But why the establishment of a General Intelligence Division in September 1939? Why didn't the Bureau simply expand its Indexing Division if it needed more indexing of criminals?

In the third place, you say that Mr. Hoover used the phrase "subversive activities or any activities that are possibly detrimental to the internal security of the United States in that narrow sense as being limited to violations of statutes that are now on the books."

Mr. Hoover is a trained lawyer. Subversive activities and possibly detrimental activities are loose words and they are never used by a careful lawyer as denoting positive crimes on statute books. Nor is the word "general", as applied to Intelligence Division, one of narrow implications. Mr. Hoover is either a loose thinker and a loose talker or he uses words in their exact meaning as far as may be. If the former is true, he has no business in the Department of Justice at all. If the latter is true, he was talking about running down persons not guilty of actual legal crimes. Furthermore, Mr. Hoover, in the testimony to which I have referred in my earlier letter, used other language indicating that he meant exactly what I declared he meant, namely, interfering with persons not accused of crimes. Please read again the whole of Mr. Hoover's testimony and then let me know whether you are still confident that he meant only crimes defined by statue.

In the fourth place, you say that there is no political police division in the F. B. I. Then why have a General Intelligence Division at all? Why not call it a division for indexing criminals? The fact that President Roosevelt spoke of subversive activities does not make these activities crimes. Nor does it necessarily make these activities subversive. Subversive of what? And after all, President Roosevelt is not the lawmaker under the Constitution.

In the fifth place, you say that the F. B. I. has "never been known to maltreat prisoners." This may not be known to you but if you will read the booklet F. B. I. Detroit and the statements signed by the persons arrested in Detroit, you will surely have more information on this subject.

In my letter I said that "the poor and helpless may have to take the blackjacks, detention cells, prison, and ruin." That is what many of them got in the last "general intelligence" delirium, under A. Mitchell Palmer whose special assistant was J. Edgar Hoover. Since we are threatened with another "general intelligence" delirium, it seems rational to expect that many will have to take these things again.

You say that no one is sent to prison except as a result of a trial as prescribed by law. But as a lawyer you know that many a person has been tried in scenes of hysteria, falsely convicted, and imprisoned. In an address to the Harvard law alumni in 1920, Charles Evans Hughes himself described the fanatical way in which many trials were conducted in the "general intelligence" outburst of 1919.

Naturally I am not recounting here the history of that political police frenzy. Fully to get my meaning you have but to read the volume by Louis Post cited above.

Yours sincerely.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1940.

Dr. MARY R. BEARD,
New Milford, Conn.

DEAR MRS. BEARD: Naturally I do not want to prolong unduly the correspondence that we have been having concerning your criticisms of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and its Director, Mr. John Edgar Hoover. I do feel, however, that the remarks contained in your letter of April 4 call for some comments.

The fact that Mr. Hoover had no connection with the manner in which the arrests were conducted under the direction of Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer is sufficient to disassociate him from any responsibility in the matter. The mere fact that he was connected with the Department of Justice at the time is of no consequence. There are many officials and employees now in the Department of Justice who were here when Mr. Palmer was Attorney General, and there are a good many who antedate him. There are many here now who served in the Daugherty era. Surely you would not visit on them the sins of Mr. Palmer and Mr. Daugherty. In a big organization such as the Department of Justice the various members of its personnel cannot be held morally responsible for actions of other officers or employees. Each one is responsible for what he does himself. Neither is there any moral responsibility on the part of a member of a big organization to resign from his position merely because he disagrees or disapproves of some of the actions of his associates. I strongly feel that any intimation that Mr. Hoover is in any way responsible, or should be judged even to a partial extent by the character of the raids conducted in the Palmer regime, is grossly unfair, especially as I happen to know that he has personally disapproved the course then pursued.

A considerable portion of your letter is devoted to questioning the terminology used by Mr. Hoover and by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. After all, this resolves itself into a disputation over linguistics. The facts themselves are as I have stated them heretofore.

So far as the Detroit arrests were concerned, I think it is only fair to reiterate that they were ordered by Attorney General Murphy, who issued directions that the matter be handled immediately and with firmness. The alleged maltreatment of the prisoners consisted in the fact that they were chained by the marshal after they were committed by the court. This happened subsequently to the time that they left the custody of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The fact is that during the few hours they were in custody of Bureau agents, they were treated with every possible consideration and were allowed to sit in the offices of the Bureau until the judge convened court.

The last two paragraphs of your letter constitute a criticism of the courts rather than of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and, therefore, may properly be considered to be outside of the scope of the questions that we have been considering.

I consider myself a competent witness concerning the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, since I have watched them from day to day over a period of years. The facts are as I have stated them in my former letters to you. I can vouch for their accuracy. Of necessity you have not had the opportunity to secure any information except through hearsay, which always forms a very unreliable and uncertain basis for condemning another human being or group of human beings.

I hope that this correspondence will lead to a renewal of our old acquaintance. If either you or Professor Beard have occasion to be in Washington, I trust that you get in touch with me.

With best regards to Professor Beard and yourself,

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF.

NEW MILFORD, CONN., April 16, 1940.

DEAR MR. HOLTZOFF: Of course, you and I have no desire merely to quarrel. Nor do I wish to base my thinking on mere hearsay, for that is not my custom.

You are no doubt right in saying that perhaps a prolongation of our correspondence may not be useful. I appreciate what you have written me, and what you have written out of your knowledge and experience naturally carries weight with me.

But there is one point concerning which I have doubts and which I would appreciate your helping me to clear. You were not in the Department of Justice in 1919–20 and your statements bearing on that period must be based on some documentary or other evidence, rather than on hearsay. May I therefore assume that you have such documents which you can refer me to or send to me? Or that you have talked over that period with Mr. J. Edgar Hoover and have his personal authority for your statement concerning his relation to the actions then taken against elements called "subversive"?

If you could enlighten me on this matter, I should feel more certain of my ground. I regret that the distance between us makes direct conversation so difficult.

Yours sincerely.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C. April 23, 1940.

Dr. MARY R. BEARD,
New Milford, Conn.

DEAR MRS. BEARD: I am very glad that you propounded the question which is in your mind concerning assertions that have been made and which attempt to connect Mr. J. Edgar Hoover with the raids conducted under the direction of Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer.

My statement to you to the effect that he did not direct, supervise, participate in, or have any connection with the manner in which those dragnet raids were conducted was based on Mr. Hoover's personal authority to me, and therefore I am willing to vouch for it. The arrests were made under the direction of William J. Flynn, then head of the Bureau of Investigation, who, together with Mr. Palmer, must be regarded as responsible for such excesses as took place. Mr. Hoover was then special assistant to the Attorney General. His function was confined to the preparation of evidence. He did not participate in ordering or carrying out the arrests.

I also happen to know that Mr. Hoover personally did not and does not approve the manner in which those raids were conducted. This can be demonstrated by the fact that since Mr. Hoover became Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation the Bureau has never engaged in dragnet raids of any kind, not even when endeavoring to solve a vicious crime. The Bureau considers such tactics as an improper procedure and violative of the civil rights of individuals who may turn out to be innocent, although I might add that there are other law-enforcement agencies which indulge in such practices without having any criticism turned against them from liberal groups.

While I did not become connected with the Department of Justice until October 1924, during the regime of Justice Stone as Attorney General, many of the events that had transpired during the preceding few years were still sufficiently fresh in the minds of many members of the departmental staff, to enable me to gather considerable knowledge as to the departmental activities during that period.

May I add in this connection that it was Justice Stone, who, as Attorney General, elevated Mr. Hoover to his present post. Justice Stone, as an outstanding liberal, would not have done so if he had not made a study of Mr. Hoover's personality and found him in every way fit for the high position that he occupies. As you probably know, Justice Stone in addition to being a great liberal is an excellent judge of men. The confidence reposed in Mr. Hoover by Attorney General Stone was continued by every one of his successors.

I feel very strongly that a grave injustice has been done to Mr. Hoover in attempting to connect him with the Mitchell Palmer raids, merely because he happened to be a member of the departmental staff at the time. Unfortunately, it is difficult to make complete reparation for criticisms that have been publicized against persons in the public eye. For that very reason it is essential that caution and care be observed in undertaking to condemn an official publicly.

If there are any other questions that I may be able to help to answer, I hope you will not hesitate to let me know, as I want to do everything in my power to give you ample and accurate information on the subject in which you are interested.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF.

NEW MILFORD, CONN., May 7, 1940.

DEAR MR. HOLTZOFF: Prior to the receipt of your letter of April 25 it was my intention to let the subject of our correspondence drop. But your categorical declaration in that letter raises a question of fundamental accuracy which has led me to review as carefully as I could the historical evidence in my possession that bears upon all your allegations, assertions, and contentions. Naturally, as a student of American history, I keep records of events which, in my opinion, are basic to this history.

With respect to your letter of April 25, 1940, to which I refer, you declare positively, in language that admits of no double interpretation, "My statement to you to the effect that he (Mr. Hoover) did not direct, supervise, participate in, or have any connection with the manner in which those dragnet raids were conducted, was based on Mr. Hoover's personal authority to me, and therefore I am willing to vouch for it. * * * He did not participate in ordering or carrying out the arrests."

You make this affirmation on the authority of Mr. Hoover himself, you say. But I invite your attention to the following facts relative to this declaration—facts drawn from authentic statements by high authorities in a position to know just what were Mr. Hoover's connections with those political raids:

(1) The raids of 1919–20 led to a report by a group of distinguished lawyers in 1920 which condemned the Department of Justice for gross illegalities and violations of civil rights. This signatory group included Dean Roscoe Pound, of the Harvard Law School; Dean Tyrrell Williams, of the Washington Law School at St. Louis; Profs. Zechariah Chafee, Jr., and Felix Frankfurter, of the Harvard Law School, and many others in different parts of the country. As a result of their investigation, a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee conducted hearings on these charges in 1921 (66th Cong., 3d sess., Charges of Illegal Practices of the Department of Justice, pp. 19–20). Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer was questioned by this committee. When he was asked how many search warrants were issued in the worst of the raids, that of January 2, 1920, Mr. Palmer said that he did not know and that he would have to ask Mr. Hoover, who had been in charge of the raid.

In placing this statement by Mr. Palmer, Attorney General of the United States, beside your statement, made on the authority of Mr. Hoover, that Mr. Hoover did not "direct, supervise, participate in, or have any connection with the manner in which those dragnet raids were conducted," which are we to believe? Shall we accept the statement of the head of the Department of Justice? Or the statement of Mr. Hoover, then a subordinate in the Department?

(2) If it be assumed that Mr. Palmer, now dead, was misrepresenting the situation, for whatever reason, we can consult Mr. Hoover himself, who is living.

In your letter of April 2, 1940, you state categorically that Mr. Hoover at that time (of the raids under Palmer) "was not connected with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, but was a special assistant to the Attorney General." This is what you write me, on the authority of Mr. Hoover himself. But what did Mr. Hoover himself say in 1935?

In that year, the F. B. I., under Mr. Hoover's direction, prepared a mimeographed digested history of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This document is mentioned in footnote 26 on page 429 of a volume by Attorney General Cummings and Special Assistant to the Attorney General, Carl McFarland. It is entitled "Federal Justice" (Macmillan, 1937).

The footnote reads as follows: "A digested history of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (mimeographed document of the Bureau, 1935), states that the "General Intelligence Division" was organized in 1919 "under direct administrative supervision of J. Edgar Hoover, since 1917 in charge of counter-radical activities as a Special Assistant to the Attorney General."

While Mr. Hoover was head of it, this statement was prepared in the F. B. I. and accepted as truth by Attorney General Cummings. It declares that Mr. Hoover was head of the General Intelligence Division organized in 1919 and after 1917 (when the period of dragnet raids opened) was "in charge of counter-radical activities as a Special Assistant to the Attorney General" and that Mr. Hoover had "direct administrative supervision" over the General Intelligence Division organized in 1917 when the dragnet raids began in full force.

Am I to accept, that is, believe, what Mr. Hoover said about himself in 1935? Or what you say about him, on his authority, in 1940?

(3) In what activities then did this General Intelligence Division engage after it was organized in 1919 "under the direct administrative supervision" of Mr. Hoover? The importance of this question and answer lies in its direct indications of the kind of activities in which Mr. Hoover might again engage through the new General Intelligence Division created in 1939.

An answer to this question comes from high authority and deserves credence. It is provided in the Cummings-McFarland book (cited above) on pages 429–430 dealing with the period following the armistice of 1918. This is what these authorities affirm respecting the activities which, you allege in 1940, Mr. Hoover disapproved:

"The War Emergency Division had been dissolved. A new unit, called the General Intelligence Division, was created to investigate radical activities. Within 3½ months it gathered and indexed the histories of over 60,000 persons, and it received many complaints regarding prominent teachers or writers. It maintained a force of 40 translators and assistants who read nearly 500 foreign-language newspapers published in the United States and abroad, to keep a check on radical propaganda. Before long 200,000 names were in the suspect indexes. A few days after his house was bombed, Palmer appeared before a congressional committee to advocate legislation for the suppression of sedition in time of peace. Seventy bills were pending in Congress 5 months later. However, none of the measures passed.

"Nevertheless, with such enthusiastic approval, the agents of the Department of Justice, in a series of dramatic raids, took more than 5,000 persons into custody. American citizens were surrendered, sometimes to be dealt with by State and local authorities; aliens were turned over to the Bureau of Immigration for deportation. Palmer's plans met with some discouragement when the Labor Department failed to cooperate in wholesale deportations on what it regarded as flimsy evidence. Warrants to the number of some 5,000 had been issued on assurance that the aliens in question were participants in a gigantic conspiracy to overthrow the Government. As the records were referred to assistant Secretary of Labor Louis F. Post, for deportation authorizations, he began to doubt wholesale participation in any such conspiracy. He investigated, and in March and April ordered the cancelation of hundreds of warrants."

(4) The Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Palmer, had said in 1921 that Mr. Hoover had charge of the dragnet raids. Mr. Hoover said in 1935 that he was "in charge of counter-radical activities" after 1917 and was head of the General Intelligence Division after its organization in 1919. The activities of this General Intelligence Division were described by a succeeding Attorney General, Mr. Cummings, and his special assistant. Then, in 1936, Melvin Purvis, associated with Mr. Hoover in the F. B. I. for a number of years and holding high position under Mr. Hoover as head of branches in various large cities, published a book entitled "American Agent" (Doubleday, Doran, 1936). In this book, on page 57, Mr. Purvis confirms Mr. Hoover's statement of 1935 that Mr. Hoover was head of the General Intelligence Division which, according to Cummings and McFarland, directed, supervised, and participated in general dragnet raids. On page 57 of Mr. Purvis' book appears this passage:

"On May 20, 1924, J. Edgar Hoover, who from August 1, 1919, had served as head of the Intelligence Division as a special assistant to the Attorney General, was appointed Acting Director (of the F. B. I.) On December 19, 1924, he was appointed Director."

The activities of Mr. Hoover's Intelligence Division are described above (in item 3).

In the light of all such testimony, was Mr. Hoover head of the General Intelligence Division after 1919? Or was he, as you insist, merely a special assistant to the Attorney General, looking after legal business?

(5) Before 1940, Attorney General Palmer testified (in 1921) that Mr. Hoover had been in charge of dragnet raids. Before 1940, other high authorities, including Mr. Hoover himself, testified that Mr. Hoover was "in charge of counter-radical activities" after 1917 and head of the General Intelligence Division on its organization in 1919. High authorities have described for us the actual activities of the General Intelligence Division which was directed by Mr. Hoover in that period. Either these reputable authorities were mistaken and Mr. Hoover himself mistaken or his memory has failed him in 1940.

But there is other evidence on this point, contained in the court records of the case of Colyer v. Skeffington. One of the Federal dragnets raids, that of January 2, 1920, led to litigation before United States Circuit Judge George W. Anderson in the United States district court in Boston. Much testimony was introduced in evidence. One item consisted of the instructions issued by Burke, Acting Director of the F. B. I., to George B. Kelleher, head of the Boston office of the F. B. I. The instructions were dated December 27, 1919, and related to the proposed January 2 raids. These instructions contained the following items, among others:

"On the evening of the arrests this office will be open the entire night, and I desire that you communicate by long distance to Mr. Hoover any matters of vital importance or interest which may arise during the course of the arrests. You will possibly be given from 7 o'clock in the evening until 7 o'clock in the morning to conclude the arrests and examination. * * * I desire that the morning following the arrests you should forward to this office by special delivery, marked for the 'Attention of Mr. Hoover,' a complete list of the names of the persons arrested, with an indication of residence or organization to which they belong, and whether or not they were included in the original list of the warrants. * * * I desire also that the morning following the arrests that you communicate in detail by telegram, 'Attention of Mr. Hoover,' the results of the arrests made, giving the total number of persons of each organization taken into custody, together with a statement of any interesting evidence secured."

On December 31, 1919, the Acting Director of the F. B. I. wired Kelleher in part as follows:

"Arrests should all be completed and examinations concluded by Saturday morning, January 3, 1920, and full reports forwarded by special delivery, addressed attention Mr. Hoover."

Both documents just quoted are to be found in the opinion which Judge Anderson wrote in the case of Colyer v. Skeffington, printed in 265 Federal Reports, beginning on page 17, these documents themselves being on pages 32–33 and 36. The decision was rendered on June 23, 1920.

The opinion of the Court shows that the raids were conducted by F. B. I. agents; that they engaged in gross illegalities; that they made arrests without warrants; that they employed agents, provocateurs, and informers to take part in the organizations to which the persons raided belonged and to cause them to assemble in meetings on the night for which the raids were planned; that they chained the arrested persons and exposed them, chained, to photographing by newspaper reporters; that they subjected the arrested persons to spectacular publicity; that they held them incommunicado; that the F. B. I. agents were no better than a mob; and that they detained the arrested persons under improper conditions. The Court severely criticized what was done by the F. B. I. agents, including their examination (through Labor Department inspectors) of the arrested persons without permitting them to have the assistance of counsel. (See the opinion, pp. 28, 36–40, 43–48, 65, 67–69, 78.)

(6) In the taking of testimony before Judge Anderson, one of the F. B. I. agents was questioned as follows:

"Question. Did you have instructions as to this procedure?

"Answer. We had an understanding.

"Question. Written instructions?

"Answer. No. We had a conference in Washington in the Department of Labor with Mr. Hoover and another gentleman of the Department of Justice.

"Question. Who is Mr. Hoover?

"Answer. Mr. Hoover is an officer in the Department of Justice."

This testimony is printed as exhibit 13, page 46, of the report issued by the distinguished lawyers and law professors cited above (fact 1).

(7) If, however, it be contended that all the witnesses whom I have quoted with respect to Mr. Hoover's activities before 1921 were mistaken, suffered lapses of memory, or simply lied, there can be no doubt that Mr. Hoover became Assistant Director of the F. B. I. in 1921. That year Attorney General Palmer went out of office and Harry M. Daugherty, well known in American history, became Attorney General under President Harding.

Who's Who in America states that Mr. Hoover became Assistant Director of the F. B. I. in 1921. This statement is confirmed in the foreword, written by Courtney Ryley Cooper, to the volume published by J. Edgar Hoover, entitled "Persons in Hiding" (Little, Brown, 1938). Since this is Mr. Hoover's own book, since he and Mr. Cooper have together written many articles on crime for magazines, and since Hoover wrote the foreword for Cooper's book, Ten Thousand Public Enemies (Little, Brown, 1935), it may be assumed that Cooper knew what he was saying and that Hoover approved when Cooper declared in his foreword to Hoover's book (on p. XI): "in 1921 * * * J. Edgar Hoover was made an Assistant Director of the Bureau of Investigation."

In this connection, did Mr. Hoover's position alter his operations or give greater scope to his talents in the sort of work he did under Mr. Palmer? On this point let me quote from the testimony given in October 1938 before the Dies committee by Jacob Spolansky (vol. 2):

"The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

"Mr. SPOLANSKY. Jacob Spolansky. (P. 1310.)

* * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. Were you ever connected with the F. B. I.?

"Mr. SPOLANSKY. Yes, sir; I was connected with the Department of Justice for 6 years.

* * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. What did you specialize in while you were there?

"Mr. SPOLANSKY. Exclusively in subversive activities (p. 1310). * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. What is your background. Were you once connected with the F. B. I.?

"Mr. SPOLANSKY. I was in the Military Intelligence Department of the United States Army during the war. I was assigned as a personal investigator to General Wood. Immediately after I was discharged from the Army I was appointed as a special agent of the Department of Justice and I worked under the direction of Mr. Hoover until 1924" (p. 1444).

It is well known that the Department, in the period 1921–24, went much further than in the Palmer period in its drive against radicals and against labor unions. The annual reports of the Department of Justice—that is, of the Attorney General—boast of these activities in those years.

(8) In your letter of April 25, 1940, Mr. Holtzoff, you speak of Justice Harlan F. Stone as "a great liberal," and cite the fact that Mr. Stone, then Attorney General, "elevated Mr. Hoover to his present post"—as if that disposed of any charges respecting Mr. Hoover's activities prior to 1924.

Mr. Stone, serving as Attorney General, ended the G. I. D., as I reminded you in one of my letters. And it is true that he retained Mr. Hoover in the Department of Justice in the Crime Bureau. But have we any evidence that Mr. Stone, suddenly plunged into the Department of Justice as Attorney General and charged with cleaning the Augean stables left by Attorney General Daugherty, was familiar with Mr. Hoover's personal record? Some of the evidence I have cited on that matter was already buried in musty documents before Mr. Stone took office. Other portions of the evidence did not come to light until he had left the Department of Justice for the Supreme Bench. Mr. Stone was appointed Attorney General on April 7, 1924, and transferred to the Supreme Court on March 2, 1925. Thus he was head of the Department of Justice less than 1 year, his time consumed in immediate matters of major importance. There is good reason for assuming that he did not dig into the details of Mr. Hoover's history. If he did, he might have supposed that, by taking away the investigation of subversive activities and leaving Mr. Hoover the responsibility for legal crimes alone, he was removing Mr. Hoover from the position in which he could violate American civil liberties.

Hosts of us Americans, men and women, in this hour of a semiemergency legally proclaimed, with a greater emergency threatened, intend to stand by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights and by the democratic proposition these men and women shall not be hounded, arrested, and imprisoned, by Federal authorities for their political opinions but only for crimes defined in laws duly enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Inasmuch as our correspondence is strictly germane to that intention, I am thinking of publishing our letters, without however using your name if you object to its use.

I should not have pursued the issues in such a long correspondence if you had not initiated it and seemed so sure of your statements. There is nothing personal in my attitude. The matters we have discussed are more important than either of us and belong in the open forum where our civil liberties must be defended, if at all.

Sincerely.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1940.

Dr. MARY R. BEARD,
New Milford, Conn.

DEAR MRS. BEARD: I have your letter of May 7.

I am afraid that I am constrained to say that the authorities cited by you do not contradict my statement to you that Mr. Hoover did not direct, supervise, participate in, or have any connection with the manner in which the dragnet raids were conducted in the administration of Mitchell Palmer as Attorney General. The quotations that you adduce do not indicate anything to the contrary. Neither do they warrant the interpretations that you seem to place upon them. As I have stated heretofore, Mr. Hoover's functions during that period were limited to the collection and study of evidence, while the raids were in charge of Mr. Flynn, who acted under the immediate direction of Attorney General Palmer.

Reiteration is not emphasis, and yet I can do no more than to reiterate my prior statement.

As I follow our correspondence, it is difficult for me to refrain from noticing the fact that most of your letters seem to shift the ground of the previous discussion, abandoning the point made in my first letter. One necessarily is led to wonder whether you are unconsciously endeavoring to rationalize a preconceived conclusion. If so, it is futile to hope that you may be convinced of your error. Yet in the light of your own and Professor Beard's reputation as historians, I wonder if your attitude in this matter is in accord with the true spirit of historical scholarship.

I hope you will forgive me when I express surprise at your suggestion that Attorney General Stone appointed Mr. Hoover as Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation without becoming familiar with his qualifications or with his record. Attorney General Stone did not function in that manner, as is well known to his thousands of friends and admirers.

After all, it is a great pity to permit our thinking to become confused in the maelstrom of our own emotions. My letters have been confined solely to the proposition that you made erroneous statements of fact concerning Mr. Hoover personally and the Federal Bureau of Investigation as a body. On the other hand, you tell me that you intend to stand by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights and by the democratic proposition that men and women shall not be hounded, arrested, and imprisoned by Federal authorities for their political opinions. This is a sentiment which everyone will endorse, but it has no connection with the subject that we have been discussing. I certainly do not agree with you that our correspondence is germane to this general proposition, which in itself is entirely beneficent. Like so many generalizations, however, it does not advance the specific question that you originally raised and that evoked my protest, namely, the assertion that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has been violating the law—an assertion which I emphatically feel is grossly erroneous.

I note your suggestion that you are considering the publication of our letters. I have no objection to my letters being published under my name, subject to the limitation, however, that whichever letters are published they be published as a whole, and that no portion of any letter be excised in the publication. So far as your letters to me are concerned, I need hardly say that they are your literary property, and therefore, you have the legal right to dispose of them as you will. I do feel, however, that as a matter of fairness and justice—and I know that you want to be fair and just—you should hesitate to give to the world your letters containing accusations, which I deem unwarranted, against a high-minded and respected public official and an important Bureau of our Government. Perhaps you feel that being the target for attacks, irrespective of whether or not such attacks are based on thorough investigation, is one of the burdens of public service. If so, I can add nothing to what I have said.

In closing this correspondence, I want to express the hope that I may have occasion some time in the near future to meet both you and Professor Beard again after a great many years during which I have had no opportunity to see either of you.

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF.

Celebration of National Maritime Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANCIS MALONEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES M. MEAD, OF NEW YORK

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered yesterday, National Maritime Day, over a National Broadcasting hook-up, by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Today we pay fitting tribute to the mighty strength, progress, and prestige of the American merchant marine. The success story of our merchant marine is a saga of adventure, romance, and drama. Rich in the best traditions of the sea, it has been built up through the years by virtue of American imagination, ingenuity, and industry. It commands the respect of all the world. It has helped to make America the wealthiest, the happiest, and the most progressive nation on earth.

This year, as we observe National Maritime Day, we are more than ever cognizant of the strength and value of this great commercial arm of our Republic. It has always been our pride. Today it is more than that. It is one of our important first lines of defense.

Today we are resorting to all practical means and methods to insure our national peace and security. We are engaged in an all-out program of defense that will make our shores impregnable to attack from without; a defense that will afford a comfortable measure of securit, to all of our neighbors in the Western Hemisphere. We are steadfastly determined, in the traditional spirit of the New World, to extend a helping hand to the oppressed, the persecuted, and the embattled in other lands when, in the light of democratic ideals, the cause which they defend is just.

This gigantic task to which we have applied ourselves permits of no compromise, no equivocation, no dissension. Complete national unity of all sections, all races, all classes, all religions, all political parties is the indispensable demand of the hour. We can outthink, outwork, outproduce, and, if attacked, outfight any potential enemy or group of enemies if we have mobilized every ounce of energy and initiative available within our borders.

There are two conspicuous schools of so-called patriotic Americanism which today preach the philosophy of defeatism. One group demands that we urge the beleaguered democracies to sue for a negotiated peace and that we participate in such a peace on terms surely to be dictated by the modern tyrants of Europe. The other group scoffs at the possibility of America's invasion from without and constantly charges that we are not building for defense but for a campaign of imperialistic conquest; for active armed participation in one or several of the wars abroad. I reject the implications raised by these sources. The majority of the American people reject them. They spring in many instances from the distorted and warped minds of persons who are either misjudging the temper and background of the American people or whose first allegiance is to leadership far away from American shores.

Our faith and our loyalty are with the leadership of this Nation. This great American merchant marine that we salute today is a reality because men believed in the future of this country and in the dignity and durability of our democracy. It is growing by leaps and bounds under the pressure of the defense program. Its progress during the past year has exceeded many estimates that were made. A year from now it will give pause to the most power-infatuated despot who may be inclined to cast greedy eyes on the Western Hemisphere.

We are building our merchant marine day and night. Into this program of ship construction is going the skill of American labor and the benefits of experiment and research. These ships will be the finest that sail the seas.

They are under construction today in shipyards located along all of our coasts. The magnitude of this construction program will not be fully appreciated until we see more and more ships floating out to sea in the service of our Government. But it is happening constantly and the volume is increasing rather than diminishing.

The Nation owes a debt of gratitude to Rear Admiral Emory S. Land and to his associates in the United States Maritime Commission, whose leadership has conceived and guided to accomplishment this superlative program. Thanks, too, go forth to the private construction companies and to the skilled craftsmen who keep the work going ever forward.

This is, indeed, an epochal year in the history of the American merchant marine. This year will be long remembered, for the complete success of the defense program will chart the course which we will follow in the future. May we build quickly and surely. We all have a precious stake in this race against time. Our one goal is the peace and security of America. In that noble objective we cannot fail.

Campaign Pledges

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD P. NYE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE SOUTH BEND (IND.) TRIBUNE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Destructive," published in the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune of May 18, 1941.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune of May 18, 1941]

DESTRUCTIVE

Violations of political campaign pledges by successful nominees are not novel. In some instances unsuccessful nominees also have assumed positions after election days that were inconsistent with their campaign expressions. In general, however, such violations and changes have been accompanied by the explanation that they were justified by developments subsequent to the elections. That is, the political principals did not, at least in public, assume a contemptuous attitude toward the citizens who had voted for them.

The case of Woodrow Wilson is especially pertinent because the issue in 1916, as in 1940, was involvement in a foreign war. In November 1916, Mr. Wilson was reelected President after a campaign in which "he kept us out of war" was the Wilson party slogan. Five months later, in April 1917, Mr. Wilson and the predominantly Democratic Congress collaborated in a declaration of war against imperial Germany. The pro-war argument was that conditions had changed between election day and war declaration day. The German declaration of unrestricted submarine warfare was heavily emphasized. To the day of his death Woodrow Wilson never admitted or was tolerant of the charge that he was actually planning full involvement of the United States in the European war while the "he kept us out of war" campaign in his behalf was in progress in the autumn of 1916.

In 1940 Wendell L. Willkie, the Democrat ostensibly drafted to serve as Republican Presidential nominee, warned the voters that if President Roosevelt were elected the United States would be fully involved in the foreign war in 1941. That is, he stuck the warmonger label on the President and, by strong implication, pictured himself as the man who would, if elected, keep the United States out of the war. Mr. Roosevelt, under that strong campaign pressure, gave unqualified pledges against military participation in the European-Asiatic war.

With heavy emphasis on the President's political astuteness up to 1940 some of the journalists who classify themselves as Washington "insiders" are describing him as "embarrassed" now by his strong remarks on the war issue when he was seeking a third term. It seems settled, however, that if Mr. Roosevelt becomes a war President in his third term he will not formally admit that he was a hypocrite as a 1940 political campaigner. Changed conditions or at least an interpretation of conditions as changed will be cited, in that event, to justify violation of a forthright campaign pledge.

What about Mr. Willkie? As a pro-war witness in a congressional hearing this year he was reminded of his 1940 campaign utterances on the topic of war. The official record shows that Mr. Willkie airily dismissed his 1940 statements as mere "campaign oratory." Thus he stands self-convicted of lack of sincerity, to express it conservatively, on the war issue, than which none is more vital, when he was seeking votes.

The American political system can be no stronger than the volume of the people's confidence in it. When successful contenders for public office violate campaign pledges, even with what are intended to be plausible explanations, and defeated nominees for public offices, also with apparently sincere explanations, change their attitudes on vital issues after the elections it is bad enough from the viewpoint of maintaining public confidence in the system. If campaign pledges are not to be honored why should Americans bother to go to the polls on election days? It is infinitely worse when a defeated aspirant to the highest office in the land, the Presidency, almost airily admits to a congressional committee that he was indulging in mere "campaign oratory" on the issue of war or peace. He is in effect trying to destroy the foundation of this republic's political system, public confidence.

The Spirit of American Citizenship

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SCOTT W. LUCAS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

ADDRESS BY OSCAR L. CHAPMAN

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by Mr. Oscar L. Chapman on May 18, 1941, in Alton, Ill., at the "I Am an American Day" celebration.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Throughout the Nation America today is welcoming its new citizens, honoring those who have achieved citizenship during the past 12 months through naturalization and those native-born sons and daughters who have reached their majority during the year.

We are equally proud of both groups. There is no difference or distinction in the citizenship that you have attained. You are Americans, citizens of a Nation that accords equality to all of its people irrespective of their race or of their creed, irrespective of their economic class or of their ancestry.

It is indeed a proud day in anyone's life when he can say: "I am an American."

For to be an American is not only a great honor, it is also a great privilege, and especially so in these days of dictators. You, as Americans, are free men and women, free to worship God as your conscience dictates, to belong to the political party of your choice, free in your physical being, free in every way that is the right of free men and women.

The haven of the oppressed, America has always been the sanctuary of those seeking religious or political freedom—whether they stepped ashore at Plymouth Rock from the Mayflower or landed at Ellis Island after crossing in the steerage of the latest ocean liner to ply the Atlantic.

All of us—unless we chance to be full-blooded Indians—have ancestors, if we are not foreign-born ourselves, who came to these shores from other countries. If you were foreign-born, that cannot keep you from becoming a real American, in the true sense of that word; and, may I add, if you are a native-born American that does not necessarily make you an American in the true sense of that term. For Americanism—real, true Americanism—is not something that is given you by circumstance of birth, nor is it something that can be denied you because you are foreign-born. Real Americanism is a quality of soul that can be acquired only by devotion to those great principles on which this Nation was founded. You may have been born in America, you may have become a naturalized citizen—it makes no difference which. But unless you are truly devoted to those immortal principles that have made this Nation different, that have made this Nation great, you are not, you cannot be, a true American.

You must love justice, and demand it for all, if you would be a true American. You must love equality, and be willing to accord it to all, if you would be a true American. You must love freedom, not only for yourself, but freedom for all, if you would be a true American. You must be willing to recognize talent, and aid in giving it an opportunity for development, if you would be a true American; not merely the talent that your children and mine may chance to possess, but also the talent of the humblest among us. As a true American, you will practice tolerance, tolerance of another's religious convictions, tolerance of his social and economic convictions, tolerance of his political convictions. You are not a true American, whether you are native-born or foreign-born, if you would deny another the rights that you demand for yourself. A true American is willing to share—no, he demands to share—all the rights and privileges that this free country give him. He asks them not only for himself and for his family, but for everyone, everywhere.

So you see, my friends, whether your ancestors were on the passenger lists of the Mayflower, or whether you, yourself, came to this country in the steerage of an ocean liner—it is possible for you to be, or to become, a true American. Your nativity cannot give it to you, nor can your nativity deny it to you. You must acquire it by a sincere devotion to that magnificent passage in the preamble to the Declaration of Independence:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Dedicate yourselves to that sublime declaration, you new American citizens; and, for those of us whose citizenship may be of longer standing, I say that a rededication, a reconsecration, to those same principles would aid in making us more worthy of the citizenship we possess.

America is indeed the land of the free—and it will remain the land of the free so long as you and other Americans are militantly determined that the liberties which past generations won for you shall be preserved by you for future generations. Freedom is our most cherished possession, but it is also a sacred obligation. It is not merely ours to enjoy and to abandon at will. It is ours to preserve and to protect, and to pass down to future generations undiminished. Unless we do that we are unworthy of the freedom we possess.

Freemen everywhere—not only the freemen of England—are challenged today as never before. We have seen the freemen of many lands make a desperate but futile effort to defend their countries. And now they are enslaved. We have seen the freemen of other nations give up without a fight.

In the first instance, the nations surrendered because they were not adequately prepared to meet their enemy; in the second instance, the nations surrendered without a struggle because they lacked the spirit—the will—to defend their homelands. In both cases the result has been the same—14 nations now lie beneath the conqueror's heel.

So it is evident that a nation—if it is to defend its freedom—must possess two essential qualities. It must have not only the means of national defense; it must also have the spirit—the will—to preserve its freedom. Little Greece had the will but not the equipment; France had her Maginot Line but was lacking in spirit—lacking in will—the morale of France had ebbed almost to the vanishing point.

It behooves us, as American citizens, to inquire diligently into our own situation. We know that great factories throughout this land are working day and night in the production of armament; we know that a mighty army is being drilled, and that its ranks are being augmented daily; we know that shipyards are loaded to capacity as we rush a two-ocean navy to completion.

Our Army and our Navy are being brought to a state of perfection as rapidly as American genius can accomplish the task—and that genius is considerable. It is a task that challenges the best that is in us, but I am confident that America is equal to the challenge, as we are not lacking in resources or in the ability to avail ourselves of those resources.

Where, then, do we stand in that equally important phase of national defense—the morale of our Nation?

We saw proud France, with its mighty army—an army acclaimed as the world's best—crumble and fall. That army, and the nation behind that army, was honeycombed with intrigue. Group was against group—special interests sought and obtained privileges; class was arraigned against class: government, it appears, had ceased to be an instrument through which the greatest good for the greatest number of people was sought; government had become the tool of the few, and all too often the unscrupulous few.

What have we in America done to guard against similar conditions? What are we doing that will make certain that similar conditions will not, cannot occur here.

The morale of a nation is not something that can be brought into being through force; it is not something that we can summon in an hour of national emergency and disregard the remainder of the time. No amount of mechanical skill or inventive genius can produce morale for us as it can produce ships, planes, and other munitions.

The morale of a nation, the spirit of a nation, the soul of a nation—call it what you will—is a quality that requires constant husbandry. It is not a hardy perennial that will flourish and blossom without cultivation.

The morale of a nation—the love which the rank and file of the people bear for that nation—is strong or weak, dependent upon the qualities of that nation and its government.

If that government has failed to be a zealous guardian of its people's rights, if it has failed to protect the weak, if it has disregarded the needs of the handicapped and the unemployed, if it has allowed the strong to pillage, or if it has permitted justice to be corrupted, then one can hardly expect the morale of the citizens to be strong.

If a nation is in such a sad plight, it has already lost its battle for freedom; it has been conquered from within—by corrupt forces—before the invader has turned foot in its direction.

But, fortunately, such is not the case in America.

Here our government has long sought to guard against the very type of moral decay which caused the fall of France. And we did not wait until we were menaced by a military conqueror before precautions were taken.

No; this Government, founded on principles of equality, justice, and freedom for all, has sought—especially in recent years—to make itself worthy of that loyalty which a nation requires of its people—particularly in times of national crisis.

In a time of emergency, the nation has the right to call its citizens into military service in defense of that country. A nation that exercises that right should make certain that it—and the way of life it accords its people—are worth fighting for. The test is whether the living in that nation is worthwhile—whether government in that nation makes certain that its people receive justice—whether there is an equality of opportunity for all—jobs for those who can work—security for those who need it—no special privileges for the few—and whether the civil liberties of all are scrupulously guarded.

A country that does all this for its people will find them willing to make sacrifices, because life in it is worth while.

In recent years our Government has made a special effort to make life worth the living for all of its people, not for just a few of the more fortunate, but for the rank and file.

It has provided for the unfortunate and the handicapped, following the principle that subsistence must be provided for any who cannot work, or who are unable to find work. It has sought, through unemployment insurance, to provide for the worker who, occasionally experiences a period of unemployment. It has endeavored to make old age secure against want. It has sought parity for the farmer. It has curtailed monopolies whose activities were directed toward pillaging the people by a control of essential commodities. It has legislated against certain pernicious practices.

This record has unrolled before you in recent years. You are as well acquainted with it as I am. And it has been accomplished without real damage to any legitimate business. Of course, some few who were denied swollen profits have complained. But the great majority of the people have benefited. The greatest good has been accomplished for the greatest number, and that is the test of our brand of good government.

But it is our duty, as citizens, to make certain that our Nation always remains one in which life is worth while for all our people.

I believe we have done and are doing just that. Consequently, I am certain that the morale of America—one of the two vital elements in our national defense—is good—that it will stand any strain that any emergency may place on it. We know that the President of the United States is striving mightily to keep war from our shores.

Oh, yes; I know that there are some newspapers in this country which daily tell the people that the President is seeking to lead us into war—which daily find fault with his every act. But we have always had such newspapers. We will always have them as long as we have a democracy, as it is only in a democracy that newspapers are free to criticize public officials. As citizens of a democratic nation we insist on our rights of free speech and a free press. I would be the first to object to any limitation on either of those sacred rights. But one of the duties of citizenship is to know what to believe—to be discriminating. Accordingly, we should bear in mind that some men, and some publications—when they make charges and attacks—are sometimes actuated by purposes of their own—purposes that frequently are not in accord with the public good.

So, I am not concerned, and you should not be, about the tirades delivered against our President, as the majority of the people realize that he is doing all within his power to avert war—that if war comes it will be unavoidable. They also know that if there is any man in America today who can keep war from our shores, that man is the President of the United States. As citizens, however, it is your duty to separate propaganda from fact so that you can act intelligently in appraising the actions of the leaders whom you freely choose.

Now while speaking of the duties of citizenship, let me suggest another phase of this same subject. Inflamed, angry men are seldom able to be useful, constructive citizens in a crisis. Such men cannot reason; they are motivated by passion and prejudice. In this hour of emergency—when our very national existence may be at stake—we should all resolve that calm judgment will govern our course. Let us, then, resolve that we will not prejudge any course of action that is suggested; let us examine it carefully, weigh its possibilities, and then reach a conclusion based wholly on fact—a conclusion in which prejudice and fancy play no part. Good citizenship requires cool heads. Times like these are too dangerous, too fraught with peril, for passion and prejudice.

But a good citizen is not merely one who is willing to sacrifice for his country in time of peril, or one who carefully weighs the facts and allows naught but reasoning to guide his actions. A good citizen also participates—as actively as his circumstances will permit—in the affairs of his community. For America, in the aggregate, is but a multitude of Altons, a multitude of Madison Counties, and a number of other States somewhat like Illinois.

Our Nation will be strong only if our cities, our counties, and our States are strong. As citizens, it is your duty to see that justice, decency, and public administration are not defamed in your local communities; you should support none but honest and capable men for public office, and you should aid such men when they are in public office—regardless of their party affiliations.

We Americans too often possess a cynical attitude toward those whom we have elected to govern us. Perhaps the men and women we have elected would be more apt to justify our confidence if we would continue to support them after they take office.

One of the tragedies of American life is that good citizens too often abandon good men and women after they are in office—we, too, often abandon them to the disreputable elements in a community. Instead, we should continue to be active in our support of all public officials who are earnestly seeking to perform their jobs in an honest manner. Let us then dispel the cynical idea that merely because a man or woman holds a public position he or she is necessarily a "crooked politician." Instead let us see to it that none but men and women of honor and of ability are elected or appointed to public office. For America cannot exist—any more than France was able to exist—unless all of our citizens actively participate to the fullest in public affairs, and unless they insist upon putting and maintaining the very best of character in their government.

Here in Alton, where Lincoln and Douglas concluded that memorable series of debates, where is established one of the oldest colleges in the Midwest, and where today you have great industrial enterprises—here in Alton a citizen should be inspired both by the traditions of the community and by the present greatness of the area of which it is so vital a part. He should be inspired to good citizenship—good citizenship which will give attention and aid to the really worth-while endeavors in your vicinity.

A community's greatness comes not from vast industrial enterprises or productive fields alone. The character of the men and women residing in that community is the prime factor in its greatness. Your schools, your colleges, your churches, your hospitals, your various civic enterprises that seek to better the lot of the handicapped or unfortunate—these are the things that give character to a community; and a community—the same as a man—cannot possess true greatness without character. As an essential element of good citizenship, then, a new citizen, as well as one of longer standing, should devote himself to these efforts.

Today we are devoting more attention to developing qualities of citizenship than ever before. Your own State of Illinois has been in the forefront of this endeavor. Several years ago a division of State government was organized which devotes itself exclusively to Americanization efforts. The Federal Government, too, has done much in this field in recent years, and citizenship and its duties have been taught. I like to recall, too, the benefits that many of our young men have received in the way of a greater appreciation of their citizenship as a result of their services in C. C. C. camps—especially those whose services took them to some one of our great State or national parks.

I need not dwell longer on this subject of good citizenship, its obligations, and its benefits. You of Illinois have taken into your midst greater numbers of our foreign-born than most of the other States.

This community, with its traditions of Père Marquette, of Lewis and Clark, and of Lovejoy, has had a glorious history.

Alton, we recall, was once an outpost in America. From but a short distance away, Lewis and Clark, after spending the winter, set out on the trek that led them across the Great Plains, over the mountains, and down to the shores of the Pacific. That journey was instrumental in winning for America the vast Northwest—in opening up a new frontier. But many years before that, Pere Marquette and Louis Joliet, together with their five companions, paddled their canoes past this site, as they pushed the frontiers of new France ahead. A few miles away, near the confluence of the Illinois and the Mississippi, is that beautiful white cross, standing on the side of a bluff, which reminds us that Father Marquette's interest lay not only in extending the frontiers of a temporal government—but also in extending the frontiers of Christianity.

Perhaps there were those who told Joliet, and, at a later date, told Lewis and Clark that the frontier had been reached. Those hardy men thought otherwise, and won for their governments a vast domain. But my mind dwells on the saintly Marquette, who was seeking not just new lands but new souls. That gentle priest was uninterested in the temporal gains that the voyage might achieve; he was seeking new frontiers of Christianity.

And we of today, if our temporal frontiers have been fully explored, as some have told us, can dedicate ourselves, as did Marquette to seeking new frontiers for our people; not new frontiers washed by unknown oceans as did Lewis and Clark; not new frontiers watered by mighty rivers, as did Joliet; but new frontiers for the soul, the heart, and the mind of men, as did Pere Marquette. And there are many such new frontiers, vast, unexplored opportunities in the realm of human relationships; in fact, we have not started to exhaust the frontiers that are ours. And they will not be exhausted, these frontiers, until we have solved many difficult problems. Before anyone can tell me that our frontiers are exhausted, I insist that he show me that mankind has found some means other than war by which to settle his difficulties; I must be shown that want and privation among some of our people will be no more. Our frontiers will not be exhausted so long as a part of our people have inadequate housing, so long as we have inequality in educational opportunity among the children of this Nation. No; my friends, there are many frontiers touching upon the rights and the needs of men that we have not explored, that we have not developed. Let us win these new frontiers—the new frontiers of happiness—for our people.

The Axis Penetration in South American Aviation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAT McCARRAN

OF NEVADA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS BY OSWALD RYAN

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a speech delivered over the radio some evenings ago by Mr. Oswald Ryan, on the subject The Axis Penetration in South American Aviation. I invite the attention of Senators to this address, because if there ever was an address which should arouse interest in the matter of national defense and our program in aviation, this is one, coming as it does from an outstanding member of the Civil Aeronautics Board, who is thoroughly familiar with the subject with which he deals. It shows that today Germany has a network of air lines crossing and recrossing South America to such an extent that some of those air bases and air lines are today within 300 miles of the Panama Canal.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen. 1 year after the close of the last World War a group of German and Austrian pilots and ex-army officers established an air line in Colombia. It was German in personnel, management, and control; and it was the first commercial air line in the Western Hemisphere.

That was the beginning of Axis penetration in South America. Today the air map of the southern continent reveals a vast network of Axis controlled and dominated air lines covering 22,000 miles of scheduled routes—only 200 miles less than the total routes of Pan American Airways and all its affiliates in the southern continent. The Axis air lines form a ring around South America, except for the northern coast, crisscrossing the continent from trade center to trade center and penetrating the sparsely settled regions of the interior. From the mouth of the Amazon on the coast of Brazil, they extend down the South Atlantic coast to the southernmost tip of the Argentine; from Buenos Aires they reach westward across the Andes to Santiago on the Pacific coast; from Rio de Janeiro they cross through southern Brazil and Bolivia and, until the first day of last month they stretched across Peru to Lima on the west coast; and they fan out through Ecuador, where their planes fly within 3 hours of the Panama Canal.

Now this penetration in South American aviation cannot be regarded as the spontaneous development of a free and expanding industry. Commercial profit is not and has never been its controlling motive. These air lines either operate in sparsely settled territory where there is no commercial demand or commercial justification for the service, or they operate in territory where the commercial advantages are insignificant as compared with the political and strategic advantages to be attained. The staffs of these lines work in close cooperation with the diplomatic staffs and military attachés of the Axis embassies in those countries. Thus the Axis network in South America is not a commercial enterprise; it is the well-considered instrumentality of a national policy, a policy which is bent upon the cultural and political domination of the South American Continent; a policy which, backed by the financial aid of Axis governments, has the support of one of the most effective propaganda machines the modern world has known.

Can any thinking person doubt that this development constitutes a potential danger to our national and our hemisphere security? The present war has taught us that where a scheduled air liner can fly a military plane can fly—and it can carry troops and bombs. Indeed, many of the planes flown by the German air lines in South America are identical in type with the transports used by the German air force in the invasions of Norway and the Low Countries. Again, some of the landing fields of this Axis network are within bombing range of important United States bases in Trinidad, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and within bombing range of that key to our naval and military defense, the Panama Canal. It is significant to note in this connection that the German air line, Condor, has very recently extended its network to a region in Brazil in which there is no city or town of any importance and no public convenience or necessity to be served. The new route offers no commercial opportunity, it does call for the establishment of landing fields which will be strategically located close to the city of Natal on the bulge of Brazil. Natal, you will remember, lies within 2 hours' flight of the French-controlled fortress city of Dakar on the coast of Africa, and France's new agreement to "collaborate" with Germany gives this fact new and vital significance.

Again, control of these air lines makes it possible for German and Italian pilots to become familiar with the difficult and varied terrain of the southern continent. And the fact that some of these lines maintain photographic sections for the making of aerial maps of the territory over which they fly indicates that this opportunity has not been neglected.

Let me point out another potentiality which is revealed by recent events. The Italian air line Lati, whose manager is Mussolini's son, operates a trans-Atlantic service between Rome and Brazil, thereby connecting the Axis air-line system of South America with the Axis air-line network in Europe. Less than 2 months ago one of its planes made a so-called test flight lasting 7 hours out over the sea from the Brazilian coast. After this flight a heavily loaded Italian tanker dashed out of a Brazilian port in an attempt to run the British blockade. The Government of Brazil was so concerned over this incident that it laid a fine upon the Italian air line for violating Brazilian neutrality and warned the management that another such offense would terminate the company's operating rights.

A similar event took place shortly after the outbreak of the present war. Two British cruisers, the Ajax and the Exeter, on patrol duty off the southern coast of Brazil, sighted a large plane of the German air line Condor flying at a high altitude above them. It was later established that the German pocket-battleship, the Graf Spee, was in the vicinity at the time. The Argentine Government failed to obtain from the plane's crew a satisfactory explanation of the flight and issued an order prohibiting Condor planes thereafter from making any nonscheduled flights without having on board an Argentine Army officer as observer.

Other instances of this kind have occurred; even the efforts of the Argentine and Brazilian Governments have failed to prevent German and Italian air lines in South America from acting as the eyes of the Axis admiralties. There can be no question, therefore, as to the past and potential use of these Axis air lines for purposes of military observation over the South Atlantic; nor can there be any doubt about the great importance which the Axis has placed upon these air lines. The best measure of the value which the Germans attach to their South American air lines lies in the fact that the only German merchant ships which, for some time, have been able successfully to run the British blockade have been two German freighters—the Lech and the Hermes—which very recently arrived at Rio loaded with airplanes and airplane parts for Germany's most important South American air line.

Can there be any doubt as to the purposes which motivate this Axis enterprise on the southern continent? The German Lufthansa controlled air line in Ecuador recently sought a governmental permit to extend its line to Colombia and to the Galapagos Islands in the Pacific. Those islands offer no commercial opportunity to an air line but they do offer the strategic advantage of being one of the two most important island groups that are located near the Pacific entrance to the Panama Canal.

But while the Axis continues to plan air-line expansion in our southern continent, its activities have been curtailed in some of the countries. Thus the Axis hold on the leading air line of Colombia has recently been broken; the government of Peru on the first day of last month canceled the franchise of the German line, Lufthansa of Peru; and the Bolivian Government is proceeding with plans for eliminating Axis control from the air line of that nation. Our own Government has indicated its willingness to work with other American republics along this line and has been of help in several situations.

But while progress has been made, a vast and important task still remains to be accomplished. It must be accomplished through the common effort of all the 21 republics of this hemisphere.

We of the United States are wisely committed to the defense of this Western Hemisphere. This means that we must defend its frontiers as if they were our very own.

Not only is such a course required by our pledge to the Monroe Doctrine; our own national safety and the safety of our neighbors demand it. It is no longer fantastic to accept the possibility of an air attack upon this Nation should an unfriendly Axis Power gain supremacy in the present war. The Atlantic, particularly the South Atlantic, has become a narrow ocean; the modern bomber has made it so. If this hemisphere should be attacked by hostile planes, Dakar on the African coast in all probability would be the jumping-off place. And if this Nation should be attacked, it would be from South American air bases that enemy aircraft would operate against us.

That is why the aviation set-up in South America is vitally important to the United States. That is why we can no longer safely close our eyes to the fact that there is a Trojan horse in South America and that it has wings that are dangerous to our national life. So long as Axis planes, camouflaged as commercial airliners, are taking off from Axis-subsidized airports and are flying daily over the airways of South America, sometimes within bombing range of the Panama Canal and our vital defense bases, neither our safety nor that of the other 20 American republics can be regarded as secure.

There is but one answer to this challenge. The Axis must be eliminated from the aviation of this hemisphere; the aviation of all the Americas must be made truly and safely American.

Annual Memorial Service of Jewish War Veterans in New York

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES M. MEAD

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

ADDRESS BY COMMANDER HARRIS, OF JEWISH WAR VETERANS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by Commander Harris of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States at the annual memorial service held in New York City on May 18, 1941.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Today we have gathered here in memorial service, to pay homage to those brave Americans of our faith who died so that democracy might live. With their heroes-in-arms of other faiths, they rest in eternal peace underneath the many battlefields of America and Europe. But we have not forgotten them. We shall never forget them. For, although their bodies sleep forever, their spirit will always live with us.

Today is a sad day. Many of us have felt the loss of dear ones who made the supreme sacrifice for our beloved land. But it is also a day of hope, of inspiration. Abraham Lincoln expressed such hope and such inspiration when he said at Gettysburg: "It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they gave their last full measure of devotion."

Yes; these American lads we honor today did give the last full measure of devotion to our country. We meet here particularly to pay tribute to the men of Jewish faith who died in the service of America. And yet, somehow we just don't think of them as Jewish soldiers. We think of them rather as American soldiers. That's as it should be.

For they were American boys who heard their country's call and answered. They were not alone—young men from every part of the country, every faith, and every color, answered that call. There were hundreds of thousands of Catholics and Protestants. The Negro people jumped at the chance of serving the Old Glory which they loved so well. Their companies were among the best on the whole western front. And the boys from the mountains and plains of the West, the hills of the East, the cotton and tobacco fields of the South, and the lumber camps of the North, marched off to do battle together. They all did their part. They all were heroic soldiers of the American brand.

Among these were our Jewish lads. Their heroism was of this same American brand and their record was a good one. I happen to have a few figures with me today that substantiate that record in the last war. It is one in which we can all take pride. For while at that time about 3½ percent of the Nation's population was Jewish, 5 percent of the armed forces were from Jewish homes. Two hundred and fifty thousand in number, they left some three thousand four hundred fallen on the battlefields of France. These figures speak for themselves. They speak of the love those boys had for America, for democracy—for the cause for which they gave their last full measure of devotion.

We of the Jewish faith have always been a peace-loving people. We have abhorred war throughout our long history. Indeed, the great contribution of the ancient Hebrews to the civilized world was the ideal of the brotherhood of man—the notion, the aspiration, and the faith that men might live among men in peace and harmony. This has always been our Jewish ideal. It was the ideal that bound us together in ancient times and protected us against our enemies. It was a Jewish ideal, and yet—in a larger sense—it was a human ideal.

The Jewish and Christian religions have always been linked by this common concept of brotherhood. The Judeao-Christian ethic inspired men throughout the ages. It made them feel that they were all working together for a common goal—for peace and prosperity and good will. It was a unifying force, and eventually it became a force so strong that a form of government—democracy—was built around it.

For democracy, after all, is merely a form of government which derives its strength—and its whole strength—from the intensity of this ideal. Democracy, without the Jewish-Christian ethic of brotherhood, is merely an empty form of government. But with it, it is the crystallization of human hopes and the effective force for bringing those hopes into reality.

Love of peace is but one of the arches in this structure of human faith. Another is the belief in doing good. That's a simple belief. We all accept it. It might even be said we all take it for granted. Helping one's neighbor, doing acts of charity, helping the weak and the wayward—all these things we accept as human ideals. We Americans believe, too, that man possesses a sort of human dignity, distinct from the physical instincts of mere animals. This is what we mean when we speak of the human soul. We Americans believe, too, that man has the natural intelligence to govern himself—that his best qualities should be encouraged, and his worse habits gradually eradicated. And these things, too, are simple—so simple that we take them for granted.

But there are those in this world who do not take them for granted—those who have been misled by false leaders—nor do they accept them as unshatterable human beliefs. On the contrary these people—and there are millions of them—believe in just the opposite.

They have been led to believe in war—war as an ideal and as a living reality. They have been led to believe in bloodshed, in the desirability of killing as a way out of man's troubles. They have been taught to hate peace, even as we Americans hate war.

They do not believe in doing good. Rather they exalt cruelty and vindictiveness and ruthlessness. They will destroy their neighbors at the command of their leaders. In that way, they are told, and many of them believe, they are serving their state.

Nor do they believe in the divinity of the human soul. They have been taught to exult in the success of their campaign to eradicate spiritual concerns from men's minds. They have destroyed men's consciences and implanted a hunger to serve the state in slavery. In this sort of thinking, religion has no place whatsoever. Religious faith merely would detract—and possibly destroy—faith in the men who set themselves at the head of the state. So the whole concept of God must be uprooted.

We all know who these people are who have been misled—the people of Russia and Italy and Germany and we are all only too familiar with their relentless campaigns against our Jewish people and our Jewish religion. But perhaps some of us do not realize that the attack upon our people is merely the prelude to an all-out attack on all religious sects. In every country of Europe the spreading of anti-Catholic and anti-Protestant feeling has followed on the heels of the assault on the Jews. This spiritual warfare is a ruthless but a tragically logical result of the whole mental outlook of the Nazis, Fascists, and Communists—the outlook that the only allegiance to be permitted must be allegiance to the leader.

It is well that we understand this outlook—it is well that we understand all the varied ideas and prejudices and uninhibited instincts which go to make up the pattern of totalitarian thinking. Whatever we may think of this philosophy, we must face it. It may be illogical, it may be inhuman, and it may be very, very confused. But one thing remains clear. The dictators thinking is directly opposite to our democratic thinking, opposite in every detail, opposite not only in matters of immediate concern, but opposite to the whole Jewish-Christian tradition on which democracy is built. There can be no lasting compromise between the two.

The dictators, at least, are aware of the logic of this fact. They realize that they must combat democracy—must combat human feelings of decency and brotherhood—on every front if they are to maintain their power in the world. And so we here in America are subjected to a campaign of ideas, sometimes so subtle that we are taken in, sometimes so bold that we tremble, but always persistent and unscrupulous. This penetration in the realm of ideas hits here, there, and everywhere.

Sometimes it hits at our democracy as a working system of government. We are encouraged to believe that democracy doesn't really work—that it is a thing of the past—to be supplanted by a philosophy which has been granted a mysterious monopoly over the future of mankind. We are told democracy doesn't work, that it can't work, and we are shown the best ways of preventing it from working.

Sometimes it hits in our communities or in our factories or stores, trying to fan little troubles into far-reaching feuds. There are honest differences between capital and labor, for example, but these are exploited and expanded in order to create disunity and dissension in our land. There is long-standing friction between Negro and white, North and South, rich and poor, young and old—frictions which can almost always be ironed out by a little understanding and good will. But these frictions do exist, and the enemies of democracy are making the most of them. Just as the totalitarian ideal is one of breaking down our institutions—the home, the church, the school system, and the economic system—the preparation for this totalitarianism is also one of breaking down. We can readily enough understand how quickly our country would fall if we became, as Abraham Lincoln said, "a house divided against itself."

It's not the larger differences that are really the important ones. After all, the entire Nation last fall was a house divided against itself when we were either Republicans or Democrats and pretty well excited about the outcome of the Presidential campaign. But were we really divided? No; for on the greatest issue confronting the country, the defense of democracy, we were united as never before.

It's the little differences that are important. The smaller differences that spell the distinction between a weak democracy and a strong one. After all, although we believe in democracy as an ideal, we must make it more than that. We must make it a reality in our lives every moment of the day. The banker downtown, the push-cart peddler on the East Side, the shopkeeper on Broadway, the commuter in Westchester, and the farmer in Dutchess County—must believe actively, wholeheartedly, and concretely in this thing we call democracy. They must all have a feeling that something belongs to all of us, and that something, American democracy, stands before any of the smaller interests of any one of us or any groups of us.

Today we honor those who did feel this democracy; felt it so deeply that they were willing to devote their lives to it. They did not die in vain—for we here today owe the blessings of liberty and self-government to the very men whose memory we honor. But, alas, the fight they fought is never completely won. Liberty is not only a heritage but a fresh conquest for each generation.

And so we who stand in tribute today must dedicate ourselves to that very task. We must join with Americans of every other faith in reasserting the strength of our democratic government and our democratic ideals. We Jews have a stake in democracy, but it is the same stake that every other American has—the continuance of our personal freedom, the existence of our homes and our communities, and the possibility of progressing toward a better and better future for our children.

It so happens, too, that today is by Presidential proclamation I Am An American Day. A man, whoever he is, whatever his faith, who has the precious privilege of being able to say "I am an American" has a possession more priceless than anything else on earth. We must defend this possession and defend it truly, lest we betray the sacred trust of those who gave their lives that it might remain ours. And we must defend it, too, so that those who come after us may be able to say, just as proudly as we say it now, "I am an American."

Manners in the Modern Style

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD P. NYE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

ARTICLE BY GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Manners in the Modern Style," by George E. Sokolsky, published in the New York Sun of April 15, 1941.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Sun of April 15, 1941]

THESE DAYS—MANNERS IN THE MODERN STYLE

(By George E. Sokolsky)

I saw in the newspapers last week that Congressman JOSEPH CLARK BALDWIN accepted an invitation to lunch and figuratively spat into the face of his host. Even in an era when manners, like thrift and public morals, are taboo, it did not quite go down.

I know JOE BALDWIN, and I would say, offhand, that by birth, breeding, education, and taste such a performance, in another, would have been utterly distasteful to him. He undoubtedly did it because he has recently become a Member of Congress in an age when nothing matters so long as it produces votes. That is why we have so enormous a national debt, why taxes are rocketing to heaven, why labor leaders run riot over the land, why a learned official was heard to say that he trusts his instinct rather than his conscience.

JOE BALDWIN'S imitation of the vulgar occurred at a luncheon given by the New York State Economic Council, of which Merwin K. Hart is president. It must be noted here that Merwin K. Hart is in bad with the liberals because he supported Franco in Spain. He wrote a book, which is an inalienable right, too often pursued, of every American. From that moment the Communists, liberals, fellow travelers, and their camp followers have been calling him a Fascist and an anti-Semite. Hart committed the error of saying what everybody now knows about Spain before the Stalin-Hitler alliance. Had he waited a few months and had he associated his anticommunism with lip service to aid to Britain, he would have avoided smearing. In fact, he might have been an accepted person in the newly formed anticommunist salons. His crime was prematurity.

So Joe Baldwin accepted an invitation to comment unfavorably on the St. Lawrence River project. The St. Lawrence River project is, I am certain, unrelated to the Jewish question, except as politicians, like Mr. Hitler, can relate the unrelated to anything that has to do with votes. No one required Mr. Baldwin to accept this invitation to deliver a speech. Nevertheless, Mr. Baldwin did agree to speak. He came. He broke bread with his host. He ate his lunch. He was, with fitting compliments due a Member of Congress, presented to a panting audience. Then he opened an address on the virtues of his own undiluted and unprejudiced democracy—while implying that Mr. Hart's was Fascistic and anti-Semitic—with this:

"I have been informed that certain sponsors of the New York State Economic Council hold views on our American democracy and its defense completely at variance with mine. Had I known of these views in advance I would not have been here today and no doubt neither would many of you."

Of course, that is silly. When Congressman BALDWIN wrote those lines he was at home or in his office. Copies were sent to the press. He could easily have stayed where he was. He might have sent Hart a telegram saying that he was busy, ill, indisposed, or that he did not like the contour of Hart's face. He came because he wanted a forum to say what he should not have said at another man's table. He wanted to say it dramatically because it might get some votes in the next election.

Now, I don't like this business of dragging Jews into every kind of personal and political quarrel among the politicians. We Jews have troubles enough of our own, and God help us as much from our friends as from our enemies. This business of calling everybody who, for the moment, is on the unpopular side a Fascist and an anti-Semite is bad business for the Jew. It manufactures anti-Semites. It makes men bitter. It forces them to believe that Jews are persecuting and boycotting them. It makes them vindictive.

I write this because the time has come to say in the open what many of us are saying privately. We wish that those Jews who hold jobs fighting anti-Semitism would let us alone so that we might live among our neighbors in peace.

Merwin Hart has sent me a pamphlet in which appear two letters. Miss Eva Panton of the Bronx writes Mr. Hart to ask why he hates Jews. Mr. Hart replies:

"It seems to me that you gained your incorrect impression of me as a result of a concerted campaign to create the impression that I am hostile to the Jews. Those who direct that campaign are using the cry of "anti-Semitism" recklessly. They serve not the Jews, but the enemies of the Jews. They create anti-Semitism where it does not exist. * * * It is becoming difficult to express any opinion in New York in disagreement with certain Jewish leaders without being branded an anti-Semite. Those Jewish leaders have forced the Jewish question into the highways and byways of American life. I, for instance, had never been faced with the question, Do I or do I not like Jews? Nor did I ask whether a man is or is not a Jew. It seems to me as unnatural in American life to ask such questions as it would be to ask similar questions about those who come from California or Iowa. An American's mind should be free from such questions.

"But these Jewish leaders say in effect, 'You must agree with us on all questions—political, social, economic, international—or we will smear you as an anti-Semite.' I hope that you will believe me when I tell you that they are doing infinite harm to the Jews in the United States. They are the authors of the Jewish question."

There is more to the Hart letter. It is unfortunate that this question should arise in America at all. Americans are not anti-Semitic. They have likes and dislikes, prejudices, and pettinesses even as you and I, but there is no hatred, no ideological basis, no race consciousness such as exists in Germany. There is at the present time an inevitable reflex to the vile propaganda against the Jews that comes out of Germany daily. There is even an imitation of it. And there are sharpshooters who find that there is a dollar or two in the hatred business and who take it up as a profession. But they soon exploit themselves as they do their financial aids and, having become utterly ridiculous, they disappear even from their narrow circles. Nobody has become a millionaire as a professional anti-Semite. Nobody has achieved distinction or glory in such a role.

But that does not mean that Jews should go about indiscriminately labeling men as anti-Semites because they disagree on Stalin, Franco, the St. Lawrence waterway, food for the small democracies, the lease-lend bill, or similar unrelated matters. The time has come to drop this nonsense.

The Middle West and War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD P. NYE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE PROGRESSIVE MINER

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Middle West and War," published in the Progressive Miner.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Progressive Miner]

THE MIDDLE WEST AND WAR

The middle westerners are certainly a bunch of dull witted, unimaginative, apathetic, unpatriotic peasants—according to some of the higher-paid columnists and commentators and highpowered politicians along the Atlantic seaboard.

Judging from the remarks of the better, or should we say worst propagandists, we of the Middle West don't even know there is a war or two in progress and that maybe a week from Tuesday planes are going to fly over from Europe and Asia and shower bombs on our peaceful habitations. That'll shake us out of our lethargy. You betcha. Then we'll show the rest of the Nation just how to become hysterical about war.

Why, we of the Middle West are so dumb and ignorant we don't even know the United States furnished the European countries, with the exception of Germany, the money, through our fantastic gold-buying program, to start the glorious war for democracy. We're so ill-informed we didn't know that this country, in increasing the price of gold from $20 to $35 and buying all the yellow metal Japan, Russia, France, and Great Britain sent us, merely gave those countries, principally the latter, as an outright gift $7,000,000,000, and then after we got the gold we buried it in a hole in Kentucky.

We don't even know the United States Congress appropriated $7,000,000,000 to furnish Great Britain with war materials, and that every sort of war implement we produce is being sent direct to Britain to aid it in its fight against Hitlerism. We're contrary enough to believe this country is doing its part in the battle for so-called democracy. So lacking in imagination are we that we don't think the British Isles is going to fall to the onslaughts of the Nazis, and we believe the European war has reached a virtual stalemate.

We're so naive we don't think it's good ethics to supply both belligerents with war materials, such as this country is doing in the case of China and Japan and of Great Britain and Germany. The latter, of course, gets hers through the backdoor—via Russia.

We're so dense we believe the best way to kill democracy is to go to war, and strange as it may seem to the highly intelligent and cultured New Yorkers and Washingtonians that is one of the reasons we are opposed to entering Europe's current showing of the "War to Save Democracy." We can't see the strength of strangling democracy here to fight for it somewhere else. We also entertain the quaint notion that this Nation can't possibly spread democracy throughout the world by force of arms.

We of the Middle West must be a source of worry and vexation to the dear little lovers of mass murder. We are willing, however, to be reasonable and meet the blood-loving ultra-patriots half way. We will be willing to go to war provided all the prominent columnists, radio commentators, public officials, Army officers, and politicians who are so extremely anxious for everyone else to go, will fight in the front lines with us. What, no takers? Egad, they must be pro-Nazi.

We don't snivel and cringe with fear when Hitler's name is mentioned for the simple reason we are quietly confident the United States can take care of itself very capably when and if the occasion demands it. We learned well the lesson we were taught in joining in on World War I, that is why we are a trifle interested in keeping out of the current conflict.

No Reduction in Nondefense Expenditures Now Apparent

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, fast-moving world events have to a very great degree diverted the American people from a realization of the additional burdens of taxation our people must bear if this country is to survive economic chaos. It is inevitable that as our governmental debts—Federal, State, and local—increase our taxes, whenever we return to a pay-as-we-go basis, automatically increase also. It is also inevitable that when our taxes increase the cost of living increases, and automatically the standard of living lowers in exact ratio. The American people are soon to come face to face with the truth of this statement.

Two alternatives are open to the Congress at this time. One is to return to a pay-as-we-go basis so far as nondefense activities are concerned, and to pay at least a part of the defense expense by taxation while such expenditures are being made. The other is to continue the suicidal policy of the last 8 years—of riding along from year to year with ever-present, and usually increasing, deficits. The latter policy has resulted in increasing the national debt from $23,000,000,000 to more than double that sum. In addition to this direct debt of the United States, various bureaus of the Government have been authorized to borrow and spend approximately $10,000,000,000, all guaranteed both as to interest and capital by the Government itself. Thus the real national debt at the moment is ten billions in excess of that acknowledged by the administration, or about fifty-five billions.

The Congress has during the last year appropriated directly, or has issued contract authorizations, in the immense sum of more than $32,000,000,000 for the national defense alone. This figure includes the $7,000,000,000 lease-lend-give appropriation. As this is written, it is understood the President is to ask the Congress for another four billion for tanks and other military equipment. This will bring the program for defense expenditures for this year and next up to the shocking sum of $36,000,000,000.

National-defense work affords the Government an opportunity to eliminate some of the expenditures of various relief agencies. Many of the millions who have been unemployed over a period of years now have an opportunity to become self-sustaining. Any policy of continuing expenditures on a scale comparable to that of the past few years must be recognized as a refusal on the part of the administration to take advantage of the best opportunity it will ever have to put a large part of the unemployed American people back on a self-sustaining basis.

The present tax-increase program, as outlined by the Treasury, contemplates raising three billions, six hundred millions in additional revenue. If this program proves acceptable to the Congress and is finally written into law, the revenues derived from all Federal taxes will be approximately twelve billions, three hundred millions. This figure, in my judgment, represents considerable wishful thinking on the part of the Treasury Department.

The estimated expenditures for the defense program alone vary from nineteen billions to twenty-four or twenty-five billions. Add to this the estimated nondefense expenditures and we find the maximum estimate reaches a figure of thirty-four billions, three hundred millions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942. Subtracting the estimated receipts of twelve billions, three hundred millions, we are faced with the necessity of increasing the national debt by borrowing another twenty-two billions. This sum added to the present debt of fifty-five billions will raise the debt to approximately seventy-seven billions.

There is a rapidly growing demand in the Congress for a radical reduction in nondefense expenditures. It seems to many of us that if the several million able-bodied men now unemployed in industry and other lines of activity are ever to be returned to a self-sustaining basis, it must be done while the present growing demand for labor of every kind exists throughout the country. Certainly the President's proposal to reduce relief expenditures a mere hundred millions is so absurd as to constitute an invitation to the Congress to continue to increase the various appropriations, as has been the case up to this time, instead of bringing about substantial reductions.

Public Health and National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSIAH W. BAILEY

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY WILLIAM H. RICHARDSON

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a brief radio speech by Hon. William H. Richardson, of North Carolina, on the subject of Public health and national defense.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

From every quarter, during this momentous period, you hear talk of preparedness for national defense. You read about it in the newspapers, you hear it discussed over the radio and by speakers in the public forum.

PREPAREDNESS FOR WHAT?

For whatever may come. For war, if it is our lot to be thrown into the world-wide conflict of arms and opinions that marks this tragic era; for peace, if we continue to occupy the enviable position of nonbelligerency; for the readjustments that some day must result from what is now taking place.

DEFENSE AGAINST WHAT?

Against aggression, if that is thrust upon us; against foes within, as well as foes from without—against a recurrence of those economic distresses that followed the crash of 1929.

To speed effective preparedness, those who are engaged in building our defenses must themselves be prepared. International disturbances bring about difficult situations, but it is the man behind the machine for making the gun who, in the ultimate, must support the man behind the gun. Upon the shoulders of the individual rests the responsibility for mass production, whether against armed aggression or disease.

Individual preparedness, then, is our first line of defense. To bring about a state of adequate preparedness, the various agencies of your Government—Federal, State, and local—are at work, at work in close cooperation, and this cooperation must be strengthened; it must continue without interruption.

Your State board of health, responsible for ways and means of promoting mass health protection, is working in close cooperation with the national-defense program on several important fronts.

On May 25, of last year, just after the Germans had overrun the Low Countries, and following closely President Roosevelt's appeal for immediate preparedness—in view of the gravity of the situation—Dr. Carl V. Reynolds, your State health officer, sounded this note of warning:

"A desperado and his gang are loose in the world. They are running wild, destroying civilization, leaving in their wake death and destruction among innocent, God-fearing people. Our President has called for a program of preparedness designed to give us protection against this sinister force. Mechanized units will avail us nothing unless we enter into a definite program of physical preparedness. Let us not repeat the mistakes of 1917, when our manpower was 33⅓ percent unfit for active military duty. If we must fight to preserve our heritage, let us man our machines of war with men whose eyes are clear, whose hands are sturdy, and whose nerves are of iron."

Again, on June 14, he issued another urgent appeal for physical preparedness, in which he used this language:

"Whatever our material resources may be, we cannot properly utilize them unless they are placed in charge of those who are mentally and physically fit."

In this second appeal, Doctor Reynolds set forth the duties of the individual, the physician, the employee, and the employer.

Yet again, this time on June 20, he declared:

"Delay means waste of both time and opportunity. Procrastination is a thief whose loot is never recovered. Man's physical fitness is essential in war or peace—it is an integral part of preparedness."

During last summer, he addressed the Raleigh Rotary Club and other organizations, emphasizing the importance of physical fitness for national defense, pointing out where the responsibility lies.

But the matter did not end with mere words. Your State board of health put the words of Dr. Reynolds into action, and it has continued to give our national-defense program its 100 percent cooperation in the present crisis, which bids fair to try men's souls, as well as their bodies. The North Carolina board's activities have paralleled those of the United States Public Health Service and other institutions and organizations working with the Government in this grave matter.

The United States Public Health Service is authority for the statement that, during the first World War, venereal disease in the United States Army caused the loss of 7,000,000 days—equal to a full year's absence from duty of 19,000 men. It is estimated today that there are about 300,000 men with infectious syphilis among the 16,500,000 men registered under the Selective Service Act.

North Carolina, through its State board of health, launched an offensive against "the mistakes of 1917" almost immediately following the passage of the Selective Service Act, when steps were taken to induce registrants, through the processes of education, to submit to voluntary serologic tests. The result was that, out of the 448,555 who registered in this State, more than 130,000 presented themselves for these tests. Statistics are now being made up and will be announced in due time by your State health department.

North Carolina's quick and effective work in this matter led an official of the United States Public Health Service, who was quoted in the December 15, 1940, issue of the Raleigh News and Observer, to declare that if all States had followed its lead in this and preceding efforts in behalf of the eradication of syphilis, this entire Nation would now be 10 years ahead of schedule in its fight on venereal diseases.

Immediately preceding registration day, when Dr. Reynolds called a conference of local health officers to explain the plan of procedure in detail, former Gov. Clyde R. Hoey was invited to be present and address the meeting. During the course of his remarks, he said:

"I ask you to envision the beneficial results that will accrue to humanity 5, 10, even 50 years from now, as the result of the program you have launched."

Dr. Reynolds, chairman of the subcommittee of the State and Territorial Health Officers' Association's committee on Federal relations for securing voluntary serologic tests among registrants, pointed out during the campaign and following its successful culmination that the cooperation given by local health officers, the press, and other cooperating agencies proved of immense value.

Your State board of health is now engaged in work along numerous other fronts in the national-defense program. Only recently there was held in the board's auditorium the second annual conference of the North Carolina General Nutrition Committee—which is sponsored by the board of health, through the cooperation of representatives of various other interested groups, including universities, colleges, and governmental agencies.

The purpose of this movement is to ascertain and correct nutritional deficiencies existing among the people of North Carolina in order that they may become physically fit—not only for war, if that should come, but for the vital task of building our homes, industries, and institutions.

The division of industrial hygiene, a conjoint activity of the State board of health and the North Carolina Industrial Commission, is engaged in making preemployment examinations in plants turning out material for the national defense.

The director of this division, who is Dr. T. F. Vestal, will address you over this station at a later date.

Dr. Vestal recently said:

"Let us not be weighed in the balance and found wanting. Let's protect and prepare our industrial forces with the same degree of enthusiasm and patriotism that marks our efforts in behalf of our military forces. Let's do the whole job, and do it in the American way."

I might enlarge on the foregoing national-defense activities to which your State board of health is giving its active support, but time will not permit just now.

As I left for the studio, Dr. Reynolds said:

"Be sure to tell the people that in the near future we will make known to them our activities in the army areas—for the protection of our civil, as well as military, population, in matters pertaining to their physical welfare. This is a gigantic undertaking but essential and cannot be minimized."

Your State health officer, through the proper channels, will advise you, for example, what is being done and contemplated in Cumberland, Onslow-Pender, New Hanover, and perhaps other counties where military preparations soon will be under way.

Public health, ladies and gentlemen, is dedicated not only to the duty of reclaiming the lives of the underprivileged, but also of waging an "all out" war against those diseases and maladjustments which harass God's creatures and make them miss the mark.

And now, until next Wednesday at this same hour, your State board of health bids you good afternoon and wishes you good health.

Balancing the Risks

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, May 23, 1941

ARTICLE BY STUART CHASE

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by Stuart Chase, entitled "Balancing the Risks," published in the Progressive of Saturday, May 17, 1941.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Appendix, as follows:

[From The Progressive of May 17, 1941]

BALANCING THE RISKS

(By Stuart Chase)

Two major groups are battling for the leadership of American foreign policy—the "interventionists" and the "isolationists." Already these labels have become fighting words, with a whole string of epithets attached to them. Interventionists are also "warmongers" and "British agents"; isolationists are also "appeasers" and "defeatists." In the middle of this verbal free-for-all stands Secretary Ickes calling everyone who does not agree with him a "Nazi fellow traveler."

In order to keep this discussion on a civilized level, I propose two new labels: "planetarians" and "hemispherists." The planetarians are openly or implicitly for war now. The hemispherists are for rushing the defenses of the Western Hemisphere, and taking a chance on war later.

Each group has its own fellow travelers—a kind of emotional annex. The planetarians have a trailer full of stern moralists who think that panzer divisions can be licked by the strong sword of righteousness, so up and at 'em.

The hemispherists have a trailer full of religious pacifists, and another full of 1790 George Washington isolationists, who don't like foreigners and to hell with them.

DIFFER ON MEANS, NOT ENDS

If we ignore the whooping trailers, we get down to reasonably intelligent folks in both camps, who recognize a fact when they collide wth one. They are honest, patriotic, and sincere Americans who have precisely the same goal—the preservation of the American republic. They differ on means, not on ends. The planetarians put their faith in an east-west axis, with the United States strengthening the resisters of aggression in Europe, Africa, and the Far East.

The hemispherists put their faith in a north-south axis from Greenland to Cape Horn, with the United States taking the lead in defending and directing half the world. The planetarians think that war now is a risky business but that it will better preserve the republic. The hemispherists think that peace now has its risks but will prove a sounder policy in the long run.

This is a reasonable distinction about which reasonable men can argue and come to a decision. If Secretary Ickes and his fellow hog-callers in both camps could be given nice consular jobs in the interior of Tibet, we might get on with it faster. Obviously either policy involves a set of risks. Which is the graver? I have made a short inventory which may help to clear the air. First let us look at: The risks of a hemisphere policy.

1. If we avoid war now, we may have to fight later without the aid of the British fleet and such aid as is now available from China, the Dutch colonies, the free French forces.

2. If we do not act energetically now, the totalitarian powers may overrun the whole Eastern Hemisphere and consolidate their gains. They will then have more men, more resources, more shipbuilding capacity than we shall have.

3. The only hope of saving the little nations is right away before they are locked up in the totalitarian blocs. We risk a great defeat for democracy if we do not go to their aid at once.

4. A hemisphere policy risks the loss of all our foreign trade with the Old World.

5. It risks turning the United States into an armed camp for the indefinite future, waiting for the totalitarians to strike.

6. It risks Axis economic domination of some South American republics, if the hemisphere trade program does not succeed, and a degree of commercial imperialism by the United States if the program does succeed.

Outside of shouts from the trailer about moral risks and moral duties, the above six points are the core of the realistic case against a hemisphere policy. I think they need extensive qualification before final acceptance, but first let us inventory: The risks of an immediate all-out war policy—

1. Such a war will quickly transform the United States into a totalitarian state, with the Government in complete control of the economy, private business relegated to the servants' quarters, a strict official censorship, the Bill of Rights in abeyance, minorities silenced if not prosecuted, Congress reduced to a saluting squad. Unfortunately, this is the only way to fight a full-out war in 1941.

2. We risk war in the Atlantic and the Pacific simultaneously, if the tripartite pact means what it says. We can expect no help from Russia if we attack Japan, under the terms of the recent Russo-Japanese agreement. This starts us off against heavy military odds.

8. We risk the defeat of Britain before we can make our military aid effective. If the British Isles should go down, we then face the unpleasant choice of signing a humiliating peace or continuing the war abroad with no British Fleet to assist us. The chances of our subduing the Continent of Europe and the Japanese Islands, simultaneously, are somewhat worse than the chances of a successful invasion of North America by the totalitarian powers. Both are very slim chances indeed.

4. We risk the immediate loss of the Philippines, all our interests in the Far East, a large part of our foreign trade and foreign investments in the Old World. Foreign trade, you will note, appears in both inventories. The difference is in the timing. We can lose it somewhat faster by going to war than by waiting. In either event the loss of Old World trade cannot be fatal to the Americas. We have every essential resource, including tin and good substitutes for rubber, within the hemisphere.

5. The United States is not yet ready to fight a two-ocean war abroad, either materially or psychologically. Our Navy is still a one-ocean fleet, our Army is in the infantile stage of mechanization, our air arm is still relatively small. When a country sets out to conquer such tough, seasoned customers as Germany and Japan together—with perhaps Russia thrown in—it is a good idea to have something more tangible than rhetoric with which to conquer them. The risk involved in thinking we can conquer with our bare hands because our hearts are pure is one of the gravest any nation can take. Ask the gallant Finns and the Greeks about this. We risk, in short, defeat.

6. If we go to war unprepared and suffer serious reverses abroad, our position in Latin America will be greatly weakened.

7. Four Americans out of five do not want to fight now, and will probably be apathetic if we do fight. It will be necessary for the administration to prove to them that the fighting is getting results. If the results are not forthcoming, apathy may turn into angry disillusionment, with alarming political consequences. So, we risk severe internal dissension.

A FEW QUESTION MARKS

Before coming to any final conclusions, let us spot a few question marks on both inventories. Going back to the risks of the hemisphere policy:

Certainly, it would be better to fight, if at all, with the British Fleet on our side. But who can read the future and say categorically that we must fight the totalitarians later? Suppose Hitler dies, or is deposed by the real managers of Germany? Suppose Germany, or Japan, or both, pitch into Russia a few years hence? Suppose Germany and Japan clash over India or the Dutch East Indies?

We may have to fight later, and should prepare for it to the hilt, but history has too many surprises to justify the word "inevitable" in this connection. The totalitarian powers are reasonably unified now, and will be more so if we attack them en masse; they may or may not be later. They have more men, but their combined industrial plant is no more powerful than that of the United States. Hanson Baldwin, military expert of the New York Times, recently pointed out in Harper's Magazine that we could build more than enough ships for hemisphere defense.

FOUR COUNTRIES QUALIFY

In my opinion, it is already too late to save the little nations as sovereign states. The power age and the bombing plane have made it impossible for any nation to insist on its sovereignty without the military force to protect it and a supply of strategic raw materials within its borders.

Only four countries qualify for sovereignty under this definition today—the United States, Germany, Japan (with resources from China), and Russia. The British Empire is too scattered, geographically, to form a compact fighting unit.

Little nations will have to snuggle under the aluminum wings of one of these four, or build up federations of their own, to which they must perforce surrender their sovereignty. The little countries of Europe can only be saved in some kind of United States of Europe. Have we the plans or the power with which to set this up?

The "armed camp" risk goes for both categories. If we engage in war now we shall get a bigger and better armed camp, with a good chance that it will last equally long.

The Latin-American trade risk also appears in both lists. The hemisphere policy would attempt to meet this danger from the Axis directly, the planetary policy only indirectly.

PROMISES VERSUS DELIVERIES

Let us now qualify the war-risk inventory a little. Perhaps the tripartite pact does not mean what it says, and if we attack Germany we shall not have Japan to fight as well. Perhaps Russia can somehow be won over to our side. This would be excellent strategy, though it might somewhat dent the slogan of a war for democracy.

Perhaps German supplies will give out, or her long-suffering people will revolt. In this event, a conquest of Europe would not be the bloody, costly, probably impossible adventure contemplated. But the internal collapse of Germany is a long, long chance to take.

Perhaps if we go to war we shall find no place in which to fight on a large scale. It will be only a little, limited war of convoys, skirmishes, name calling, and a few long-distance air raids. This will not hurt us much, but by the same token it will not hurt our enemies much. Our prestige, however, will be seriously hurt. We have promised all things and delivered nothing.

CASTING THE BALANCE

This is as fair and just an inventory as I know how to make. As a hemispherist, perhaps I have unconsciously stacked the cards. If so, I invite any honest planetarian to set me right. I will not be impressed by moral objections. The national interest of the United States in the dangerous world of 1941 depends more on fire power than on moral exhortations. The enemy can always be counted on to have as strong a moral case as we have so far as his people are concerned. If he has more fire power, we are sunk.

Examining the two lists of risks, a man from Mars would say that for the United States to go to war now would be to exchange risks which are remote and uncertain for risks which are immediate and of the gravest nature.

Albert J. Nock's Review of "Union Now" Knocks Bottom Out of Contemptible Idea

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ARTICLE FROM SCRIBNER'S COMMENTATOR

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks I include a review of Union Now, by Albert J. Nock, appearing in the May issue of Scribner's Commentator magazine. This review is a well-studied discussion of the much-talked-about proposal for subjugating the United States to Great Britain. It not only points out the dangers of the Union Now movement, but also the fallacious reasoning upon which it is based:

[From Scribner's Commentator of May 1941]

UNION NOW—A REVIEW

(By Albert J. Nock)

Mr. Clarence K. Streit's book Union Now is a literary curiosity. Its spirit is excellent. It is written in such deadly earnest, it is so honest, so sincere, and its sentiment is so sound, that no fair-minded critic could dismiss it lightly. Moreover, it has modesty—modesty with firmness—a rare combination of qualities in the work of any publicist in these days. To approach the book in a right frame of mind, the reader should begin with the last two pages, and then turn back. In these two pages Mr. Streit says in effect that he has done the best he could with his idea, not so well as he would wish, especially in style and arrangement, and his only desire is that others would pick up his idea and do better with it than he can. Mr. Streit shows himself fully aware that the question of who is right or wrong is a very small one, and the question of what is right or wrong is a very big one. No critic could ask better than that.

Mr. Streit is for individual freedom. He is against the current manifestations of rationalism and statism. In this he seems to be quite in the spirit of the declaration's doctrine of natural rights, though he does not discuss the point theoretically. His design calls for the constitutional union of a group of national governments somewhat like our union of a group of States. This union would be for the purpose of providing effective common government "in those fields where such common government will clearly serve man's freedom better than separate governments," leaving the present independent national government to carry on "in all other fields where such government will best serve man's freedom." The union thus formed would be made constitutionally capable of attracting nonunion governments into its group, and in this way ultimately grow into a world-wide governmental system.

In pursuance of this plan the author suggests beginning with a union of what he calls "the North Atlantic democracies," that is to say, the British Empire, the United States, the Low Countries, the Scandinavian kingdoms, France, Switzerland, and Finland. These should unite in a general governmental policy of (1) free trade, (2) common citizenship, (3) common defence, (4) a common currency, (5) a common postal and communications system. Mr. Streit thinks these five points would do for a starter. Others might be added as circumstances required, but these would be enough to be going on with.

Mr. Streit differentiates sharply (and correctly) between his idea of a union and the idea of a league or of an alliance. In the two latter, the state is the unit; in the former, man would be the unit. A league is of, by, and for the state; his union would be of, for, and by man. The union's minimum bill of rights should guarantee "not only those rights of man that are common to all the democracies, but every existing national or local right that is not clearly incompatible with effective union government" in the five fields above named.

Finally, how to bring about this union. First, Mr. Streit says, let unionists unite; let them unite and organize, then evangelize. All like-minded persons in the North Atlantic democracies should form an international world unionist party, and then each one should devote his talents to spreading the light among his kinsfolk, neighbors, and acquaintances. In short, these persons should form an international pressure group. "Union has the great advantage," according to Mr. Streit, "that its supporters do not need to petition governments or wait on diplomats to get it; they need only turn to themselves and their neighbors." The idea apparently is that citizens of a democracy do not petition their government; they give orders to it. Hence there is no inconsistency where, two pages after this statement, Mr. Streit urges the fine old democratic expedient of writing to your Congressman; he recommends a "post-card plebiscite." These posts cards are not petitions of a servant to a master; they are orders of a sovereign to his ministers. They ask nothing of a Congressman; they merely tell him where he gets off.

The foregoing is the gist of Mr. Streit's work. The rest of the book is made up of exposition, explanation, and the answering of hypothetical objections.

Precisely so. There nevertheless remain a few little complaints against Mr. Streit and his project, which he seems not to have anticipated, and which a critic is, therefore, bound to bring out. In the first place, Mr. Streit is unsatisfactory about his democracies. "By democracy," he says, "I mean government of the totality by the majority for the sake equally of each minority of one, particularly as regards securing him such rights as freedom of speech, press, and association." Among the states he specifies, just where does he find, where did he ever find, that sort of government? Does he find it in England, perhaps, or the United States, or France? Not so anyone else could notice it. Our constitutional Bill of Rights, for example, is as notoriously a dead letter as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Indeed, Mr. Dooley hit the fact exactly when he spoke of the Constitution itself as "applicable only in such cases as it is applied to on account of its applicability."

As far as my observation goes, any state will allow its citizen full rights up to the point where some state interest makes it inexpedient for him to have them, and at that point it promptly confiscates them. The state does not care a button for the principle of liberty, but quite the contrary. It views liberty, as it views all things, in the light of practical policy in its own interest. The more liberties the citizen has, the more he tends to become quiet and docile, so the state has nothing to gain by confiscating them arbitrarily. Our citizens have had many liberties only because the occasions for suppressing them have happened to be few and infrequent. When one arises (as we shall shortly see) our "democratic" state is as quick and ruthless as any to shut down on them.

Pre-war czarist Russia seemed to me one of the freest countries I ever visited. My impression was that if you kept off politics and kept off the Greek Church, you could pretty well think, say, and print whatever you liked. I have often spoken of this to people who knew pre-war Russia well, and they all said my impression was correct. What was true of Russia in those days is as true of one type of state as another; it is as true of the North Atlantic "democracies" as of the South Atlantic "republics." What then becomes of Mr. Streit's discriminations in favor of the former? If none of these democracies, taken singly, has any respect for the principle of freedom, nor governs its totality by its majority for the sake equally of each minority of one—and certainly none of them has ever had the faintest idea of doing any such thing—then what makes Mr. Streit think they will do it when they are signed up together in his union?

This fact rather knocks the bottom out of Mr. Streit's idea at the outset. When all comes to all, his proposal is to put his idea into effect by state action. That is to say, the groups in the various North Atlantic democracies are to bring pressure on their governments, and then these governments are to get together and form a union for the purposes that Mr. Streit describes. This notion is fatuous. It is like a proposal to put pressure on Captain Kidd, Jesse James, Claude Duval, Blackbeard, and Al Capone to get together in a union for the suppression of highwaymanry. Common experience ought certainly to show Mr. Streit that no state has any interest whatever in the kind of thing he wants, but on the contrary has every interest against it. If the pressure on the state were strong enough, his pressure groups would doubtless get something, but what would it be? Exactly what our citizenry got in their precious Bill of Rights. They would get the appearance of what they wanted, not the reality.

Mr. Streit's notion of constitution making seems equally fatuous. He has the eighth-grade schoolbook's conception of our constitutional history firmly fixed in his mind.

If Mr. Streit's plan could be put through, and then if his great union of democracies could be administered by the spirits of just men made perfect, one might think the thing would be worth trying. But unfortunately the spirits of just men made perfect are not available for this job, or indeed for any job. The main trouble with social architects like Mr. Streit, Mr. H. G. Wells, and many others, is that they lose sight of this, and plan their projects altogether too grandiose and hefty for the only structural material they can get to build with.

Mr. Streit thinks he counters on this point, but actually he misses it. He says in a perfervid passage that man's worst weakness is that he has always had too little faith in what man could do. This may be so, but the point here is not what man can do, but what man can be. Mr. Streit's union would be administered by man, and man is simply not up to that much of a job. He can't be enough to do it in accordance with Mr. Streit's intention of a government "for the sake equally of each minority of one." Not too many are up to governing a family in accordance with that intention, let alone a State, a county, or even a village. It is ridiculous to expect it.

Moreover, on Mr. Streit's own showing, his union would be put together and administered by politicians. Well, look at them! How many could you sift out of those now in charge of the North Atlantic democracies who impress you as likely to be interested in "serving man's freedom" or in government "for the sake equally of each minority of one?" How many have shown any more than an electioneering interest in anything? Check the list on our own great democracy, from President to poundmaster, and how many would you bet on as not coming under Ben Franklin's dictum, that the duty of a democratic jobholder is first, to himself; second, to his party; third, to his country? Ben had a lot to do with democratic jobholders and jobseekers in his day, and the breed has not noticeably improved since then.

One has to be realistic about all this when one is assessing a work like Mr. Streit's. The reader should remember that while the first law of human conduct is self-preservation, the second law is exploitation, and the operation of the second law is as powerful and invariable as that of the first. Man's implicit obedience to that law has not once wavered in 6,000 years of recorded history. Next to armed force, political organization is that law's most effective instrument, and provides the largest scope for its action. It dictated the drafting of the American Constitution. It converted the League of Nations (over which as many of us went daft as are now going daft over Mr. Streit's proposal) into a handy pocket weapon for its own purposes. What, really, could Mr. Streit expect? The same kind of men, actuated by the same kind of motives, would be floor managing his union as were floor managing the League of Nations. They would see in it simply an instrument which could be used to help buttress and copper-rivet an Anglo-American imperialism; and if Mr. Streit thinks they would be above using it in this way, I am afraid he must be put down as too pure and simple for this world. Heaven is his home.

As a matter of fact, before his plan is out of its swaddling clothes it has already been knaved into just this kind of disreputable service. Observe those who have organized to promote it. What are they? Trim off the lunatic fringe, which is abundant, and those who share in Mr. Streit's honest ignorance of zealous stupidities, and what have you left? A group of people committed to Anglo-American imperialism, heart and soul. They are the kind of Americans that the Chinese, who see so many of them in the Far East, call "second-chop Englishmen."

As I write this, I notice the announcement of another book by Mr. Streit called Union Now With Britain, which, I judge by its title, may help this contemptible propaganda even more than Union Now. The book is not yet published, so not having seen it, I cannot speak with certainty. Probably since the rest of Mr. Streit's "democracies" are pretty well out of commission, he is trying to make the best of what is left. Union Now With Britain, however, looks to me a lot like buying into an insolvent concern, and I suggest going at it with very long teeth.

Award of Scholarships by University of Arkansas to South and Central American Students

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILBUR D. MILLS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

RESOLUTION BY BOARD OF TRUSTEES, UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS

Mr. MILLS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks, I desire to include a copy of a resolution adopted on May 17, 1941, by the board of trustees of the University of Arkansas, which reflects the friendliness that exists on the part of the people of Arkansas toward our neighbors in South America.

Whereas it has been called to the attention of the Democratic Women's Club of Arkansas and in this way reached the public print, at the suggestion of Mrs. David Terry, wife of Congressman TERRY, that as a good-neighbor policy and a friendly gesture in these trying days through which we are passing, that the University of Arkansas should offer some scholarships to students of Central and South America.

Believing this suggestion to be a very important and valuable one at this time, and thanking Mrs. Terry for the suggestion, be it

Resolved by the board of trustees of the University of Arkansas, That six scholarships be offered to brilliant and outstanding students from Central and South American countries, the test and qualifications to be determined by the registrar and the faculty of the University of Arkansas.

Brooklyn Postal Employees' Credit Union

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES M. MEAD

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a brief table showing the progress record of the Brooklyn Postal Employees' Credit Union of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The attorney for this rapidly growing credit union, Mr. Nathan Amchan, has written me the following interesting information about this useful agency:

Since April 1, 1941, the interest rate on loans, discounted in advance, has been reduced to 3 percent.

You will be happy to learn that this steady increase in the volume of money loaned is not due to an assumption on the part of our employee-members of additional financial burdens, but rather the anticipation of purchasing commodities for cash, instead of on credit—at the cost of a small interest rate, discounted in advance—now 3 percent.

You will also be pleased to learn that under our credit-union system a borrower's credit is rated by his comakers, who necessarily are careful to properly evaluate need, capacity to repay, and the utility of all loans. Such credit evaluations by the borrowers' comakers are limited only by the sound and seasoned judgment and experience of the credit committee. Thus many loans have been granted to members in numerous emergencies, where one loan is already outstanding and is being repaid. Further, we have been able to make rehabilitation loans to an extent well in excess of any mathematical formula concerning borrower's credit but which are based essentially upon the character of the borrower.

For the large majority of our members our credit union provides an easy and continuous opportunity for systematic saving, many of our employees depositing regularly as little as $1 every pay day. We notice that our credit union, together with the other credit unions operating in our locality, have decidedly influenced the financial institutions in our city to open personal loan departments with low interest charges; our credit union loan rate being to a great measure the community's interest-charge barometer.

The progress of this particular credit union will quickly be observed from the chart.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Progress record—Brooklyn Postal Employees Credit Union, Brooklyn, N. Y.

	1931	1932	1933	1934	1935	1936	1937	1938	1939	1940	1941
Membership	479	715	975	1,238	1,445	1,606	1,886	2,109	2,255	2,600	----------
Shares	$14,851	$20,224	$44,277	$64,303	$83,913.43	$107,785.48	$181,769.60	$218,819.25	$263,001.80	$360,355.73	----------
Loans	259	550	1,020	1,447	1,729	1,755	2,145	2,570	2,511	3,009	----------
Amount of loans	$22,975	$59,585	$105,700	$162,475	$211,175	$263,485	$410,540	$461,791	$555,331	$614,348	----------
Interest rate (percent)	6	6	6	6	6	5	5	4½	4½	4	3
Dividend rate (percent)	5½	5½	5½	5½	5½	5½	5½	5½	5½	5½	----------
Dividends paid	$205.81	$1,037.25	$1,850	$2,823	$3,846.39	$5,161.50	$7,738.95	$10,636.84	$13,038.22	$17,096.55	----------
Guaranty fund	$340	$797.80	$1,704.92	$3,050.14	$4,595.72	$6,222.65	$8,071.56	$10,370.61	$13,265.55	$16,251.88	----------
Undivided profits (after payment of dividends)	$45.81	$305.72	$806.86	$2,517.64	$4,474.63	$6,123.41	$7,215.67	$9,537.78	$10,218.15	$10,076.99	----------

America and the War—Terms for Lasting Peace

REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY DR. OSCAR BLACKWELDER

Mr. RANKIN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, while some of President Roosevelt's enemies are charging him with trying to plunge us into war, and some of his erstwhile enemies and pretended friends are urging him to do so, I wonder if it would be out of order for me, one who has always been his friend, to express the hope that he will explore the possibilities of peace based on the following five points laid down by Secretary Hull.

I insert the five points:

1. Extreme nationalism must not again be permitted to express itself in excessive trade restrictions.

2. Nondiscrimination in international commercial relations must be the rule, so that international trade may grow and prosper.

3. Raw material supplies must be available to all nations without discrimination.

4. International agreements regulating the supply of commodities must be so handled as to protect fully the interests of the consuming countries and their people.

5. The institutions and arrangements of international finance must be so set up that they lend aid to the essential enterprises and the continuous development of all countries and permit the payment through processes of trade consonant with the welfare of all countries.

If he can bring this catastrophe to a close and save the British Empire and the British Navy intact and restore peace on these terms, he will be entitled to the gratitude of the entire world, now and for generations to come.

It has been said that the last war destroyed a generation of young men. This one is destroying a generation of women and children.

I am glad to note that Senator NORRIS and other strong friends of the administration are coming around to my view on the question of convoys, that we should transfer these vessels to British registry and let Great Britain do the convoying under her own flag. That applies to naval vessels as well as merchant ships. It would enable us to give Britain a greater amount of aid than we could possibly render if we entered the war. For then our commerce would be subject to attack all over the world, and we would be compelled to keep a large part of our Navy in the Pacific Ocean on account of Japan.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, we are in the deepening twilight of naval power as is being demonstrated on every hand, and if this war continues we must by all means put a stop to these strikes that are paralyzing our defense industry and build the strongest air force on earth, because it has become the dominant weapon of war.

Under permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am inserting an address delivered by Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder here in Washington on yesterday.

Dr. Blackwelder is one of the ablest preachers in this country. He is an old-line American whose people have been here for more than 200 years. His forbears fought with Washington in the Reolutionary War, and both of his grandfathers fought under Robert E. Lee during the War Between the States.

The matter referred to follows:

AMERICA AND THE WAR

(By Dr. Oscar Fisher Blackwelder, Pastor, Lutheran Church of the Reformation, Washington, D. C., and President, Washington Federation of Churches, delivered Sunday evening, May 25, 1941)

John Peter Gabriel Muhlenberg, brother of the first Speaker of the National House of Representatives, was pastor of the Lutheran Church in Woodstock, Va., before the Revolutionary War. In connection with a now famous church service he is reported to have said, "There is a time to pray and a time to fight and the time to fight has come now." Removing his clerical robe there he stood in the uniform of a continental officer. He has been canonized in American patriotic history for that act. If Muhlenberg had the right to do that in the first crisis of American history, we of the modern ministry have the same right to confess our faith and to affirm his other words, "There is a time to pray."

In this hour Franklin D. Roosevelt presides over the destinies of 130,000,000 Americans. I pray for him daily and not one word I speak tonight would I have you consider a personal or official reflection upon him.

One further personal word. I belong to no committee or lobby related to the war. I owe only two allegiances beyond my family: One, my obligation as a minister to Jesus Christ; the other, my obligation to my country, as an eighth-generation American. In this spirit I speak with you tonight on America and the War—As I See It.

I believe the strongest statements President Roosevelt made in the 1940 campaign and the ones that drew him the greatest amount of strength were when he promised, "We will not participate in foreign wars, and we will not send our Army, naval or air forces to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas except in case of attack" * * * "And while I am talking to you, fathers and mothers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before, but I shall say it again, and again, and again, your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars."

The overwhelming majority of the American people as well as a majority of the Congress are opposed to our going into this war. We are not in the war now as had been most clearly demonstrated by ex-President Herbert Hoover, whose recent speech has not been answered. And Mr. Hoover is perhaps the best friend England ever had in this country. But we are fearful of the play of propaganda upon the average man. Why, for example, did we learn about the Zamzam boat a month after it happened? Why the delay from Saturday to Monday in learning about the Hess trip to Scotland? Why does the British Ambassador tour the Midwest where the antiwar sentiment is so strong? Are we fearful because there are not a sufficient number of the Members of the Congress who are willing to speak out?

This is not the time or the place to recite the history that has led to the present sad world picture. However, here we are. There is no one who loathes the acts of Hitler more than I do. For example, our brother in the Christian ministry, Martin Niemoller, is still locked up, as far as we know. That is where many of us would probably be if we were in Germany and where all of us would be if we were in Russia. My sympathies are definitely and specifically with England in spite of her tragic mistakes. But let's look at the facts.

During the debate on the lend-lease bill it was stated over and over and over again that this is a policy to keep the war away from our shores—that it meant "aid short of war." It would never have passed on any other terms. And now that policy has brought us to the brink of war because a determined minority demand that we shall deliver the aid we promised by convoying vessels under our flag. Under that lend-lease bill we did not promise delivery but we have the right to transfer necessary vessels to British registry and let them do the convoying under their flag.

The factual question is this: Does the life and future of the United States of America depend upon our getting into this war? Every normal mind must recognize that it will tremendously aid our future for Great Britain to win—but that isn't the question. Many things are most desirable that are not imperative. Do you believe America can continue as a nation in a world with Hitler? Do you believe America can live in a world with Stalin? I believe this Nation can live regardless of them. I haven't lost my faith in this country. I believe we can continue as a nation even though it has been asserted repeatedly that tyranny and freedom cannot live side by side in the same world. The answer is: They always have. I despise tyranny, but freedom and tyranny have lived together on this planet for 2,000 years. It will take more than military might to prevent their continued existence side by side for years to come.

We are told that we are likely to be invaded next. What's the point of that? The point is that we will not be able to repel that invasion alone, hence we must go in now and have England's help, that we are utterly dependent upon the British fleet in the Atlantic. What is the conclusion of such talk? If America cannot defend herself on this continent against all comers and repel a possible Hitler invasion, can we be expected to retake the continent of Europe which he now holds? If we cannot repel him here, can we overcome him there? I would like to meet a man who can answer that question.

Where would we land an expeditionary force in Europe, anyhow? And to take Europe by air perhaps means more bases than can be built on the little island of England. And taking Europe means fighting France, America's historic friend.

Here is my facing of the facts. Let us see through the agreement of the lend-lease bill in the interest of a greatly desired English victory. Let us do all we are able to do to help her in her desperate struggle. If convoys there must be, let's transfer ships to British registry and let them do the convoying under their flag, but keep the American flag out of the war zone. Let us then say to all men that with the lend-lease bill we stop. We will have done more than any nation ever did for us. We begin now the defense of our own hemisphere. It's high time we do so. We are woefully unprepared. We have been promising aid that we couldn't and can't possibly deliver. Our task from this time forward is in two directions, the first is the defense of this hemisphere. Being responsible for at least an entire hemisphere doesn't look like isolation to me.

I am amazed at the speeches made by some men in the Congress, by some outside, and even by some preachers. These speeches sound like England's promises to Poland, Yugoslavia, and Greece. Let it be emphatically said in reply that we must never be put in position of depending for our principal support on any other nation than ourselves. We have come to the hour when we must see that no other nation can save us. We are strong enough to keep the terrific and destructive forces out of this hemisphere but we are not strong enough to police the world.

In this connection I think the warnings of an outstanding columnist are very wise, "We got into the first World War with negligible taxes and debt and a long unbroken record of Treasury surpluses and superb fiscal strength. We are now loaded with a colossal debt, a crushing burden of taxation, and an 11-year record of staggering deficits." The best we can do beyond the lend-lease bill is to defend this hemisphere.

But our second task as a nation is the burden of this address. I am speaking not as a Member of the Congress but as a Christian minister, concerned with the kingdom of God on this earth. It is as a servant and instrument of this kingdom that Mr. Roosevelt can be a man of destiny and the people of America will be with him to do that. We are not divided on that, but on shooting participation we are hopelessly divided.

It has been said on the House floor during the past week that our President could bring this war to a close if he will bring the pressure of his mighty office to bear. Who else can? He has said again and again and again that he wants to stay out of this war. Let him now move for peace, call a truce, on the basis of Secretary of State Hull's five points laid down last Sunday night.

I find my own convictions magnificently expressed by a resolution adopted at the International Convention of the Disciples of Christ in St. Louis. They respectfully and earnestly petitioned the President of the United States to use the great powers of his office to keep this Nation out of the war now raging in Europe, Asia, and Africa. The resolution continues: "We make bold to present this petition in view of the repeated and solemn pledges assuring the country that the armed forces of the United States would not become involved in the war.

"We note with anxious apprehension that the policy of aid to Britain has carried the Nation to the brink of belligerent participation, and that the country and the President now face a crucial and irrevocable decision which will affect the destiny of America. We affirm our conviction that America's responsibility to the civilization of the future requires the maintenance of her own peace and the preservation of her democratic way of life.

"We implore the President to revive the role of mediator for himself and our Nation, and to adopt no further policy in aid to Britain which will carry the hazard of involvement in the war. The American people are overwhelmingly opposed to belligerent participation, and we look with grave foreboding upon any action by the Government which will plunge a divided nation into war."

If America becomes an active, shooting participant, which convoys under our flag certainly will lead to, where on earth is there a land which can serve as mediator? We cannot be a mediator of peace and a belligerent at the same time. This does not mean that we propose an appeasement which will save ourselves at the expense of other peoples, but it does mean that the strength, prestige, and resources of the United States under God could even yet be used to bring the war to a close.

Mr. President, I commend to you the Master's words, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." Here is your mission, here is your opportunity, here is your leadership, I believe, and our destiny as a nation is at stake. Whether we shall be the world's healer and peacemaker constitutes our real emergency. This is our sacrifice. As America assumes the role of healer and peacemaker among the nations, we can build our own moral armament which is a nation's lasting defense.

I call upon the Christian churches of America; I call upon the fathers and mothers of young men; I call upon my brethren in the ministry to help lead this country's present attitude of nonparticipation in war into constructive leadership for peace. This is the work of God.

State Gasoline Taxes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WESLEY E. DISNEY

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit four simple tables for the RECORD.

The first table indicates the proportion of State gasoline-tax revenue available for expenditure by the State highway departments of each State which now is required for the single purpose of servicing the State highway bonded indebtedness.

The second table tabulates each State's outstanding highway indebtedness.

The third table details the present rate at which the gasoline tax is levied in each State which possesses a 4-cent-per-gallon tax or higher, and shows what the total tax would be in that State if the proposed 1-cent-per-gallon increase in the Federal tax were enacted. This table also discloses what this swollen gasoline tax would cost the consumer on every 10-gallon purchase, and compares this tax cost with the price which the consumer actually would pay for the gasoline he bought if no taxes on the product were levied.

The fourth table presents an index of the relative debt-paying and tax-paying ability of each of the 48 States, compiled by Dun & Bradstreet.

A warm, red warning may be found in these cold, black statistics. Like the hiss of an adder, they forecast danger.

The correlation of the information in these tables discloses a significant coincidence of four important factors—a large bonded indebtedness, a large proportion of the State gasoline tax pledged for service of these bonds, a gasoline tax rate which already is exorbitant, and an extremely low relative ability to pay debts and taxes.

Take the first State on the list, Alabama, for example. In this State, 3 cents of the 6-cent State gasoline tax is allocated to the State highway department. By law, 2 cents of this 3 cents, or two-thirds of the total available revenue from this source, is pledged for highway bonds, and an additional one-half cent is pledged for the service of outstanding notes. At present, Alabama is using 29 percent of its gasoline tax revenue for bond service, but any increase in these obligations will preempt up to 83 percent of all gasoline tax revenue.

Now, table 3 discloses that Alabama already levies a 6-cent State gasoline tax. In addition, numerous counties and municipalities in the State collect their own local taxes on the product. Gasoline taxes actually double the cost of motor fuel to many Alabama consumers.

Obviously, the addition of an increased Federal tax only would compound what already appears to be a tax offense against the Alabama folks who must use their cars in business or on farms or even for a little well-earned recreation.

Less obviously—but just as importantly—an increased Federal tax is going to strike a severe blow at the highway finances of the State. In the first place, taxes already are so high that any increase will have an immediate and depressive effect upon consumption. We know, from experience, that income curtailment results in rapid abandonment of motor-vehicle ownership. One out of every 10 automobiles was forced off the road by adverse economic conditions during the 3 years from 1931 through 1933, and increased taxes may be just as effective in reducing income available for expenditure for gasoline or other commodities as is an economic depression. And when this high tax rate is considered in conjunction with table 4, which shows that Alabama's citizens rank forty-sixth in the entire Nation in their ability to pay taxes and to meet obligations of debt, further evidence is provided that Alabama motorists simply cannot take another tax increase. They simply do not have the money in their pockets.

Suppose the tax is increased, and gasoline consumption falls. With every dollar lost in revenue, the proportion of the total which must be used for bond service goes up. It is not difficult to imagine that, soon, the entire 83 percent of the State's share of the tax would be required to meet indebtedness. No funds would be available for necessary highway construction and maintenance. More bonds would be floated, or else the roads would disintegrate. And the vicious circle would have begun.

A different situation might be described, if it were not for the obvious fact that any tax increases imposed now will be with us for years to come. These are not temporary taxes. He who believes otherwise is fooling himself. And he who is realistic will realize that these taxes will be in effect when the United States no longer is steaming along under the force of an artificial national income of from ninety-five to one hundred and fifteen billion dollars. The real effect of the taxes which now are levied will not be felt until we descend once again into a peacetime economy, and face the brutal task of supporting this burden with our normal capacity and enterprise. And, like taxes, bonded indebtedness and the necessity for highway expenditures are not temporary. They, too, will be with the States when our defense boom has collapsed.

Alabama is not an isolated case. The situation in Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Louisiana, Maine, New Mexico, and Tennessee, is just as dangerous, or worse. Numerous other States may be superior in income rating or tax-paying ability, but nevertheless possess high tax rates or a large indebtedness which combine to signal the fact that an increased Federal tax would jeopardize the State's financial position or cause a serious curtailment in the highway program.

Accordingly, I believe that it would be worth while for every Member of this House to select the States in which he vitally is interested, and to analyze the information in each of these tables with respect to those States. Only by such analysis may it be appreciated that the proposed increase in the Federal tax adversely will affect the finances of a large proportion of all the States in the Union, and eventually will result in widespread economic harm through its effect upon the credit of the States, or in forcing the elimination of necessary highway expenditures from State budgets.

The tables follow:

TABLE I.—Proportion of State gasoline-tax revenue available to State highway departments now being used for payment of highway bond interest and principal, 1939

	Percent
Alabama	[1] 28.9
Arizona	None
Arkansas	67.2
California	None
Colorado	27.8

[1] 83 percent of tax available to State pledged by law for bonds and notes. Additional 1 cent of tax allocated to counties may be used for payment of road bonds.

TABLE I.—Proportion of State gasoline-tax revenue available to State highway departments now being used for payment of highway bond interest and principal, 1939—Continued

	Percent
Connecticut	16.1
Delaware	24.8
District of Columbia	None
Florida	41.2
Georgia	[2]
Idaho	[2]
Illinois	[3] None
Indiana	[4] None
Iowa	46.9
Kansas	12.5
Kentucky	None
Louisiana	100.0
Maine	31.6
Maryland	[5] 22.6
Massachusetts	[6] 53.3
Michigan	20.0
Minnesota	None
Mississippi	54.1
Missouri	47.9
Montana	[7] 20.8
Nebraska	None
Nevada	[8] None
New Hampshire	[9] 32.1
New Jersey	[9] 21.9
New Mexico	43.8
New York	35.4
North Carolina	28.3
North Dakota	None
Ohio	None
Oklahoma	None
Oregon	23.8
Pennsylvania	15.1
Rhode Island	11.1
South Carolina	25.1
South Dakota	[2]
Tennessee	[10] 76.0
Texas	[11] 35.0
Utah	None
Vermont	17.3
Virginia	1.5
Washington	[12] 2.5
West Virginia	46.3
Wisconsin	28.7
Wyoming	5.9

[2] Less than 1 percent.

[3] 18.7 percent of 2 cents allocated to counties pledged for bonds.

[4] 15.6 percent of cities' share of $2,000,000 allocated them, and counties' share of one-third of tax remaining after deduction of $1,250,000 for general fund and $2,000,000 for cities, is pledged for bonds.

[5] 14.5 percent of counties' share of 70 percent of 1½-cent lateral road tax and Baltimore's share of 30 percent of basic 2-cent tax, of 30 percent of 1½-cent lateral road tax, and of 20 percent of special ½-cent tax for grade crossings, pledged for bonds.

[6] 15.9 percent of $9,600,000 allocated to cities and towns.

[7] Entire 5-cent tax pledged by law for bonds until March 31, 1949.

[8] 16.8 percent of $769,000 allocated to local units pledged for bonds.

[9] 17.7 percent of $5,033,000 allocated to local units pledged for bonds.

[10] Entire 5 cents allocated to State pledged by law for bonds.

[11] 1 cent of 4-cent State tax allocated to counties for payments on county road bonds.

[12] 4.5 percent of $8,068,000 allocated to counties and cities pledged for bonds.

Authority: Compiled from data published by the Federal Public Roads Administration.

TABLE II.—Total State bonded indebtedness for highways and bridges, 1939

Alabama	$41,497,000
Arizona	None
Arkansas	141,894,732
California	43,425,000
Colorado	25,968,000
Connecticut	14,668,000
Delaware	9,275,000
District of Columbia	None

TABLE II.—Total State bonded indebtedness for highways and bridges, 1939—Continued

Florida	$128,851,844
Georgia	16,000,745
Idaho	311,500
Illinois	121,175,000
Indiana	None
Iowa	$87,692,550
Kansas	19,945,309
Kentucky	None
Louisiana	106,309,877
Maine	28,432,000
Maryland	14,284,000
Massachusetts	23,000,000
Michigan	47,419,000
Minnesota	48,000,392
Mississippi	36,300,000
Missouri	94,990,000
Montana	4,500,000
Nebraska	None
Nevada	157,500
New Hampshire	7,970,000
New Jersey	97,870,000
New Mexico	24,380,000
New York	194,530,000
North Carolina	80,055,324
North Dakota	600,000
Ohio	None
Oklahoma	None
Oregon	16,926,750
Pennsylvania	62,942,000
Rhode Island	5,087,000
South Carolina	59,576,200
South Dakota	None
Tennessee	110,215,800
Texas	89,002,853
Utah	1,000,000
Vermont	4,039,285
Virginia	3,428,000
Washington	8,346,000
West Virginia	76,212,000
Wisconsin	21,786,187
Wyoming	2,885,000
Total	1,923,389,840

Authority: Compiled by American Association of State Highway Officials, reproduced in American Highways, January 1940, p. 17.

TABLE III.—Significant gasoline-tax rate and tax-cost statistics, by States[1]

	Rate of State gas tax, cent per gallon	Total gasoline tax if Federal tax becomes 2½ cents	Total price,[2] excluding tax, 10 gallons	Total tax cost, 10 gallons, if Federal tax 2½ cents
Alabama	$0.06	$0.085	$1.35	$0.85
Arizona	.05	.075	1.50	.75
Arkansas	.065	.090	1.31	.90
Colorado	.04	.065	1.31	.65
Delaware	.04	.065	1.03	.65
Florida	.07	.095	1.11	.95
Georgia	.06	.085	1.32	.85
Idaho	.051	.076	1.78	.76
Indiana	.04	.065	1.45	.65
Kentucky	.05	.075	1.30	.75
Louisiana	.07	.095	1.24	.95
Maine	.04	.065	1.08	.65
Maryland	.04	.065	1.26	.65
Minnesota	.04	.065	1.34	.65
Mississippi	.06	.085	1.39	.85
Montana	.05	.075	1.47	.75
Nebraska	.05	.075	1.17	.75
Nevada	.04	.065	1.56	.65
New Hampshire	.04	.065	1.08	.65
New Mexico	.05	.075	1.32	.75
New York	.04	.065	1.09	.65
North Carolina	.06	.085	1.31	.85
North Dakota	.04	.065	1.47	.65
Ohio	.04	.065	1.13	.65
Oklahoma	.04	.065	.93	.65
Oregon	.05	.075	1.41	.75
Pennsylvania	.04	.065	1.02	.65
South Carolina	.06	.085	1.29	.85
South Dakota	.04	.065	1.46	.65
Tennessee	.07	.095	1.40	.95
Texas	.04	.065	1.19	.65
Utah	.04	.065	1.46	.65
Vermont	.04	.065	1.12	.65
Virginia	.05	.075	1.41	.75

[1] Only those States possessing tax rates of 4 cents per gallon or more are included.
[2] 1940 average.

TABLE III.—Significant gasoline-tax rate and tax-cost statistics, by States—Continued

	Rate of State gas tax, cent per gallon	Total gasoline tax if Federal tax becomes 2½ cents	Total price, excluding tax, 10 gallons	Total tax cost, 10 gallons, if Federal tax 2½ cents
Washington	$0.05	$0.075	$1.57	$0.75
West Virginia	.05	.075	1.44	.75
Wisconsin	.04	.065	1.39	.65
Wyoming	.04	.065	1.62	.65

TABLE IV.—Comparative State rankings as to resources—Index of debt-paying capacity compared with income and tax-paying ability

State	Debt-paying index	N. I. C. B. income 1935	Tax-paying ability 1930
New York	1	1	3
California	2	3	6
Nevada	3	6	2
Massachusetts	4	7	8
Connecticut	5	2	5
Rhode Island	6	5	10
New Jersey	7	9	4
Maryland	8	13	22
Delaware	9	4	1
Wyoming	10	8	7
New Hampshire	11	17	29
Illinois	12	10	9
Montana	13	11	12
Washington	14	18	15
Pennsylvania	15	12	18
Ohio	16	16	17
Wisconsin	17	15	24
Oregon	18	24	13
Michigan	19	14	14
Minnesota	20	19	23
Maine	21	20	31
Colorado	22	21	20
Vermont	23	27	35
Arizona	24	22	19
Iowa	25	25	11
Missouri	26	26	27
Nebraska	27	29	16
Utah	28	31	28
Indiana	29	23	30
Kansas	30	28	21
Idaho	31	32	25
Florida	32	30	34
Texas	33	35	37
Virginia	34	36	39
South Dakota	35	38	26
New Mexico	36	33	38
North Dakota	37	39	33
West Virginia	38	34	32
Oklahoma	39	40	36
Louisiana	40	37	43
Tennessee	41	44	40
Georgia	42	41	45
Kentucky	43	43	42
North Carolina	44	42	41
South Carolina	45	45	47
Alabama	46	46	46
Arkansas	47	47	44
Mississippi	48	48	48

Source: Resources and debts of the 48 States, 1937. Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., p. 102.

Faith—The Cornerstone of the Republic

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES M. MEAD

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY, FORMER POSTMASTER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address by the Honorable James A. Farley, former Postmaster General of the United States, at the third annual communion of the St. George Association of the New York Post Office, held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, Sunday morning, May 25, 1941.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

If there is one thing to be learned, it seems to me, from this representative gathering of men who have assembled here today from every branch of the Postal Service, it is the lesson that there are still God-loving men in our midst, despite the ravages of materialism, atheism, selfishness, and crime.

Our country was developed by religious men and women. Its progress has been due in large measure to the deep religious faith of the pioneers, trusting in the help of the Almighty. Faith watches over the cradles of national atheism argues at their graves The founding fathers recognized God at Jamestown, Va., in 1607, and at Plymouth, Mass., in 1620. Our colonists trusted in the power of prayer and all their records bear the name of God. Our coins have the inscription, "In God we trust."

The United States Senate and the House of Representatives have each a chaplain, and every session of Congress is opened with a prayer. An oath is administered to those who testify in all our courts to remind them that they are in the presence of God; that their testimony should be truthful and just. Everywhere we turn we find evidence of the deep faith of our forefathers, and their abiding trust in a Supreme Being.

If we are to continue the work they have begun; if we are to build on the solid foundation they have laid so that we may erect a structure which will withstand the waves of oppression and the winds of doubt, we, too, should be men of faith and trust, men of prayer and humility, men with the conviction that all things are possible to those who follow the rule of justice and practices the precept of honest dealing.

There is no force in the world today, nor has there been in past ages, that can destroy foundations established on the bedrock of eternal truth. At times it may have seemed that the godless were in the ascendancy, that those who sneered at or openly ridiculed religion were the masters of civilization. Time has shown and will continue to show that the enemies of religion and decency, however, are merely actors "who strut and fret their hour upon the stage, and then are heard no more."

George Washington said in one of his addresses: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." As a matter of fact, there can be no real prosperity, political or otherwise, without religion and morality. The Father of his Country was wise enough to foresee that those rulers who seek to drive God out of the lives and hearts of their subjects are raising up to themselves a dangerous Frankenstein that will bring on their own destruction and the destruction of their people.

As a rule, faith and morality are bound together in unshakable union. There are two opposing standards under which men march—one of which may be described roughly as the law of brutality and the other as the law of idealism. This conflict of ideas exists in the life of government as it does in the life of individuals.

The standard of brutality in human affairs attracts all those who entertain a low concept of order and duty and the possibilities of human nature. It appeals to those who believe that power is the supreme law. It has accomplished nothing in history except the destruction of all that right-thinking men and women hold dear. It never bred a nation, nor built a city, nor created a civilization, nor inspired a good life.

The law of idealism, on the contrary, has inspired individuals in all ages to the noblest accomplishments of mankind. It has inspired all the great dreams of prophets, statesmen, and poets; it has been the fountainhead from which came the power and might of those empire builders and temporal rulers who fashioned the institutions and monuments which now constitute the glory of modern civilization. Idealism is never lost except when faith and morals are permitted to wither and decay. It has lived through the ages, teaching human beings the lesson that the salvation of nations and individuals rests upon faithful adherence to the higher law of life.

The lesson of what man may accomplish by holding fast to the idealism of the forefathers is too plain to go unrecognized even in this age of force and materialism. But it will accomplish nothing unless we as individuals are ready and willing to accomplish the teachings of Christ in our own lives. Each of us can make a contribution to improve the world by living an exemplary Christian life and giving good example to those around us.

That is what the world needs today; the faith of Christ living in the hearts of men and women and the love of man for his neighbor; whether that neighbor be robed in purple and gold or clothed in sackcloth and ashes. That is the message that goes forth from this gathering today where men have laid aside the routine of business to take part in this service, giving God his rightful place in their lives, and asking His blessing upon all their works.

In the olden times Abraham besought the Lord to spare the world from the deluge if but 10 just men could be found among the people. And God promised Abraham that He would save the world if 10 such men could be found. One sometimes wonders why the Almighty is so patient and forgiving in the light of what is happening in the world today.

I sometimes think that the only bulwark now protecting humanity from universal catastrophe is the host of human souls who gather together on occasions of this kind to pay homage to the power of the Almighty and who join the faithful throughout the world in praying for the gift of Divine mercy. For without that gift, everything attempted by mankind is barren and worthless.

I am glad to be here to join with you in asking God to preserve our country and our people. I congratulate you upon your excellent showing today and I extend to your chaplain, your officers, and your members my best wishes for the continued success of your splendid work.

European War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BURTON K. WHEELER

OF MONTANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM SIOUX CITY (IOWA) TRIBUNE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have read with a great deal of interest an editorial which appeared in the May 21 issue of the Sioux City Tribune, a daily newspaper of Sioux City, Iowa, where I recently had the honor of speaking to a large and responsive audience. I believe the editorial expresses the viewpoint of the great majority of the people of Sioux City and of Iowa; and I ask unanimous consent that it be placed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Sioux City (Iowa) Tribune of May 21, 1941]

CHOICE LIES BETWEEN PEACE, GUERILLA WAR; F. D. R. SHOULD ACT SOON!

Despite all claims and counter claims of the belligerents, when the pretense and propaganda have been stripped away and the facts stand revealed in the cold light of truth, there is one inescapable conclusion concerning the war, to wit:

As matters stand today, the war is a draw. Germany, victorious on land, has been defeated at sea and air victory has been denied her. Britain, defeated on land, is victorious at sea and is holding her own in the air realm of combat.

The war of movement is temporarily ended, except in the Mediterranean area where, whoever wins, the result will not decide the issue of the survival or defeat of the contending powers.

Aside from what may transpire in the Mediterranean sector, the war threatens to degenerate into a guerrilla struggle at sea and in the air, a struggle which conceivably might be prolonged over a period of years, leading to exhaustion of all participants and possibly involvement of the United States and other nations.

The belligerents face the choice of two alternatives, namely, a pause now to explore the possibilities of peace by negotiation or to continue a struggle to the death which will leave the whole world a shambles.

We Americans particularly owe it to ourselves and to all humanity fully to explore the possibilities of peace before dedicating ourselves to the other course.

Within the next 2 weeks President Roosevelt and Congress must make some momentous decisions. Three courses are open to this country—to get in the war as an active participant, to stay out or to seek an understanding among the major powers.

The rank and file of American citizens do not want to engage in either a declared or an undeclared war. Neither are they content to play an ignoble role while despots attempt to crush out the last vestige of human liberty in this bedeviled world. But they are reluctant to make a decision either way if the necessity for making it can be avoided.

President Roosevelt could lead a united America into a peace movement, whereas a large segment of our citizens would be anything but enthusiastic about going to war over there!

Possibly there is no basis for peace at this time. Perhaps Germany, drunk with victory, would make demands which could not be granted with honor. Possibly Britain is in no mood to make any concession worth while. But—

Germany, through France, and possibly through Rudolf Hess, is making peace gestures. That much is certain.

What could be lost in calling for a showdown?

Why not, before the United States takes any final step, call for a statement of objectives from Germany and Britain alike?

Also, why not state our own objectives?

If the United States is to be drawn into—or thrown into—this struggle, let the people know what they are fighting for and what they might expect specifically to gain by fighting.

The whole war situation needs clarifying. The real issues have been smothered under an avalanche of ambiguities, evasions, half truths, slogans, and glittering generalities.

Why not turn on the light? Why not force both sides into the open? Why not make both sides state their minimum demands upon each other—now?

When that has been done—and not until it has been done—the American people can get a proper perspective of the situation and the issues and base their own decisions upon an intelligent understanding.

Then, if we decide that we should and must fight because there is no other course, let's drop all pretense and go in with everything we can put into the effort.

A currently popular lecturer begins his discourse by asking his audience, "Did you ever live in hell?"

He then tells his listeners his conception of hell. It is, he says, a state of indecision, a situation in which a nation, a business, an individual, lacks purpose, direction, or a foundation for certainty.

The whole world today is living in a hell of indecision, and indecision breeds fear, hesitation, mutual distrust, defeatism, lack of faith, and, finally, despair.

President Roosevelt has it in his power, as no other man on earth now has, to put an end to much of the indecision concerning the American course and the course other nations should pursue.

Calling for a show-down now would not be an act of cowardice, an attempt at appeasement, but an act based on realism and courage.

If Germany will not listen to what Americans consider reason, there is not much question now what the American course would be.

Obversely, if Britain will not listen to what Americans consider reason, she would forfeit all claims upon American support. And that, too, would be as it should be.

But let's fix the blame—now—for further slaughter of human beings and destruction of property and what may happen as the aftermath of war before—not after—war is declared.

Let's know the facts. Let's take the elements of doubt and guess and indecision out of the situation. Let's know where we are going—and why we are going.

No Economic Threat

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWIN C. JOHNSON

OF COLORADO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE COLORADO SPRINGS GAZETTE

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on May 19 the Colorado Springs Gazette published an editorial from the pen of Robert H. Wardwell, which is an out-and-out challenge to American defeatists who are afraid that soon Hitler will put the United States completely out of business. In order that this excellent and timely editorial may be made available to the Members of Congress and other readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I ask that it be printed in the Appendix.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Colorado Springs Gazette]

NO ECONOMIC THREAT

Here is a paragraph with which everyone is familiar:

With only 7 percent of the world's population, the United States has 45 percent of the world's wealth. That wealth is more widely distributed; there is a vastly greater percentage of home ownership here than anywhere else, and an incomparably higher living standard. The United States owns 74 percent of the world's automobiles, 57 percent of its telephones. It has more than half the developed electric power; its industrial potential is greater than all Europe. It uses 42 percent of the world's iron, 47 percent of the copper, 58 percent of the tin, 69 percent of the petroleum, 56 percent of the rubber, 70 percent of the silk; in short, half of all the raw materials the world produces.

We used to repeat such figures with a glow of pride. But it is no longer popular to speak the strength and the greatness of America. Tory leadership has seen to that. The idea today is that the country is puny and weak and in imminent danger of being overthrown by a Nazi militarist. Americans are urged to fight now for freedom, else be isolated and starved in a post-war totalitarian world.

We returned to the statistics for comment on the alternative, for it is fear of the economic consequences of Nazi victory that is fanned in hope it can be made a blazing ember of war. The theme is that Hitler will overrun Europe and Africa, while Japan will gain control of Asia, and that thenceforth the United States will be completely surrounded by enemies who, employing a barter economy, will force this country into submission by pressures which will deny it trade except on totalitarian terms.

We have commented before on the assertion that America cannot compete against slave labor by remarking that it always has.

But there is a prior point to consider. When and if Hitler becomes master of all the world outside the Americas, he will have to consolidate it. Military conquest is only a first step. Economic organization is the essential. Indeed, it is for this that conquest is undertaken. Germany and Japan reach out for territory to exploit. To exploit it they must pacify the peoples and make them self-sustaining. They must provide industry and trade.

And it is the United States that provides the market for half the world's raw materials.

What good is East Indian rubber to Japan if Japan cannot sell it to the United States? Not all the other nations of the world combined can buy it or use it. What good is tea? What good is the silk crop, to which Japanese economy is tied, if the United States, buying 70 percent of all the silk produced, is made a closed market?

When Hitler has taken over European industry, the luxury products of France, the specialties of Scandinavia and middle Europe, where is he going to find markets? Bankrupt nations can't buy such things and little nations don't buy much anyway. How is a world molded to Nazi economy to maintain itself with the country which heretofore has bought half of its raw materials out of the market?

The United States has nothing to fear in a post-war world or from Nazi economy. So long as it maintains its own productive efficiency, it can meet any trade challenge that can be hurled at it.

Tax on Retail Dealers in Oleomargarine

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM H. STEVENSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

RESOLUTION OF WISCONSIN LEGISLATURE AND LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter and resolution:

WISCONSIN LEGISLATURE,
SENATE CHAMBER,
Madison, May 22, 1941.

The Honorable WILLIAM H. STEVENSON,
Member of Congress, Wisconsin,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. STEVENSON: I am transmitting herewith an enrolled copy of a joint resolution adopted by the Wisconsin Legislature entitled "A Joint Resolution Memorializing Congress to Defeat Legislation Designed to Repeal the Tax on Retail Outlets Handling Oleomargarine."

Very truly yours,
LAWRENCE R. LARSEN,
Chief Clerk, Senate.

Senate Joint Resolution 27

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to defeat legislation designed to repeal the tax on retail outlets handling oleomargarine

Whereas two bills, known as H. R. 3753 and H. R. 3754, designed to repeal the Federal tax of $6 per annum on retail dealers handling oleomargarine have been introduced and are now pending in the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas in 1940 when said tax was in effect, approximately only 162,720 retail establishments out of a possible 600,000 in the Nation were licensed to deal in oleomargarine; and

Whereas with the tax removed and every retail outlet free to handle oleomargarine without payment of any Federal license fee, it is probable that under the provisions of the proposed legislation outlets for sales of oleomargarine would increase about 73 percent and that the sale thereof would increase tremendously, with a corresponding decrease in the sale of butter; and

Whereas these bills are of extreme importance to the dairy industry, and it is the sense of this legislature that the dairy industry of this and of other States of the Union should continue to be protected by a tax on retail outlets handling oleomargarine, a cheaper and inferior product in competition with creamery butter: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to defeat bills H. R. 3753 and H. R. 3754, now pending before it, and urges the Wisconsin Members of Congress to do all in their power to bring about such defeat; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to each House of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

WALTER S. GOODLAND,
President of the Senate.
LAWRENCE R. LARSEN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
VERNON W. THOMSON,
Speaker of the Assembly.
ARTHUR L. MAY,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Who Is the Big Boss?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, has the Congress surrendered all of the freedom, all of the liberties, guaranteed to us by our Constitution?

Recent strikes in industry, including those in industries engaged in national defense, lead inevitably to the conclusion that unless Congress awakens it is the rankest kind of hypocrisy to talk about carrying the four freedoms to all the world.

Congress has conscripted your boys for military service and, like patriotic Americans, you have submitted. The President apparently intends to use them, to sacrifice them, to carry equality of opportunity—one of the four freedoms he named—to the remotest corners of the world. Yet, here in America, the President permits John L. Lewis and his political associates to deny equality of opportunity, equality of opportunity to work, to millions of Americans.

Read the following telegram from J. T. Wilson, president of a coal company, and the following advertisement of the southern coal operators wage conference:

BLUEFIELD, W. VA., May 23, 1941.

Hon. CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building:

Quite obviously large majority of Members of Congress must promptly speak and act in statesmanlike manner or Americanism and true democracy will be completely taken from us. Present mine and other John Lewis strike dictatorial situations are distressing examples. Fair government is for all citizens and not just labor unions. Congress should force all officeholders to perform sworn constitutional duties, thus guaranteeing freedom to all employers and employees.

WINCO BLOCK COAL CO.,
J. T. WILSON, President.

LISTEN AMERICA

THE WORST IS YET TO COME—UNLESS—

Like every other patriotic citizen, you have worried about the wave of strikes that has swept the country.

You know how seriously they have disrupted the Nation—that they have halted billions of dollars of defense work—that they have already affected, let's hope not fatally, the safety of the United States.

But the worst is yet to come.

Over the head of every American hangs the threat to close down, not one factory or group of factories, but every factory and every industry throughout the land. The threat to deprive us of most of our heat, nearly all of our light, practically all of our railroads, subways, streetcars, and elevators.

Who has made this incredible threat? Who holds the titanic power to make that threat effective?

One man, John L. Lewis.

John L. Lewis has publicly announced that unless the southern coal operators agree to every syllable of his outrageous mine workers' contract, he will strike every soft-coal mine in the country. And this before the Nation has recovered from the disastrous strike of April.

If he keeps his threat, this country, within 15 days, will be without coal. Industry will begin to shut down completely. Railroads will begin to stop. Lights will begin to go out in our cities.

All right, you say, why don't we sign the contract? Here's why:

By the very words of that contract, John L. Lewis will become what so many believe he wants to be—dictator of this country. A man potentially more powerful by far than the President of the United States. A man who holds in the palm of his hand the life or death of every industry, the success or failure of our entire defense program, the comfort or hardship of the bulk of our citizens.

You think we exaggerate?

It's there in black and white, in the contract which we, under threat, are ordered to sign without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." It's there in John L. Lewis' own sinister words. He demands of southern operators a 50 percent greater wage increase than the North will pay. But that—the so-called differential clause—is not, as the public has been mistakenly led to believe, either the sole reason or the chief reason why the southern operators have refused to sign this contract. John L. Lewis demands the power to call unlimited "memorial periods." He demands the right to change entire systems of mining. He demands that all the mines be shut off at one time, for a yearly vacation period, thereby completely stopping the flow of industry's lifeblood, coal.

But that is far from all. By the very words of the contract, he would have the right to strike any and every mine at any time at his own will or pleasure. He would have the right to shut off any and every industry from its coal supply. He would have the right to deprive any and every city of light, heat, and power.

We have already agreed to almost every demand John L. Lewis has made.

We have long since given our 150,000 men a 7-hour day and a 5-day week.

We have given them the check-off for union dues and assessments, and a labor contract which Lewis himself hailed only 2 years ago as the model labor agreement of the world. We've offered, not only to renew this model agreement, but to liberalize it.

As an industry, we have paid higher wages than those given any comparable group of workers in the Nation.

At the request of the President of the United States, we are already paying a minimum basic wage increase of $1 a day—an increase that will almost certainly bankrupt many companies in an industry that lost $35,000,000 last year—that has lost money every year save one for the last 12 years.

But that's our worry, not yours.

Your worry is this:

Shall we, by agreeing to John L. Lewis' demands, sign away the liberty of our country? Shall we place in the hands of any one ruthless, domineering man power to control the security of our Nation? Shall we, with a stroke of the pen, place in jeopardy your well-being, your safety, perhaps your very life?

John L. Lewis is no fool. While America slept, he has craftily gained a death-grip on the one industry which affects the destinies of all others. Now, he is apparently using that death grip to shoot for the dictator's crown.

He called the strike in April. He threatens to call another if he doesn't get what he wants. We can't stop him. All we can do is what we have done—refuse to authorize by contract such dictatorial acts.

No; we can't stop him.

The only person who can stop him is you!

You can. Your voice—the voice of the great American public—has kept this country a free country for 165 years. It can do so now.

Write your Governor. Write your Congressman. Write your Senators. Write the President of the United States. Write the Department of Labor. Write the National Defense Mediation Board. They'll listen to you. Send a letter or a telegram.

Tell these representatives of yours in your own words whether or not you want John L. Lewis to control the industry of this country, and through that power, to control the freedom and safety of every man, woman, and child in the United States.

This is not a matter of tomorrow. This is a matter of today—now.

Here's what will happen in New York if John L. Lewis strikes the coal mines.

Within a few weeks the city's lighting system will be imperiled.

Subways, elevated trains, and commuter trains will be sharply curtailed.

The supply of steam heat and hot water will be greatly reduced.

Buildings may be without elevator service.

Factories will be shut down for lack of power.

Defense activities may be fatally affected.

Southern Coal Operators Wage Conference, Washington Building, Washington, D. C.

Representing: Operators' Association of Williamson Field, Big Sandy-Elkhorn Coal Operators Association, Hazard Coal Operators Association, Kanawha Coal Operators Association, Logan Coal Operators Association, Southern Appalachian Coal Operators Association, New River Coal Operators Association, Pocahontas Operators Association, Winding Gulf Operators Association, Greenbrier Coal Operators Association, Upper Buchanan Smokeless Coal Operators Association, Harlan County Coal Operators Association, Virginia Coal Operators Association.

Tribute to Senator Bankhead

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LISTER HILL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in the Birmingham News of May 20 last there appeared a very-much-deserved tribute to my colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] in an editorial captioned "JOHN BANKHEAD'S Leadership." I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Birmingham News of May 20, 1941]

JOHN BANKHEAD'S LEADERSHIP

Almost every man in public life in this country likes to say that he is a "friend of the farmer," and no doubt most such men do sincerely feel that they are friends of agriculture. Unfortunately, however, not all of them really understand agricultural problems, and some of them do not have the farmer's interests at heart as much as they might.

No matter how many public officials or candidates for office may call themselves friends of the farmer, and no matter how sincere many of them may be, American agriculture knows that its best friend in public life today is Alabama's Senator, JOHN N. BANKHEAD.

JOHN BANKHEAD is the recognized farm leader in Congress, including the House as well as the Senate. He is respected and admired by his colleagues for his knowledge of farm problems and for his earnest efforts to promote the country's agricultural welfare.

Senator BANKHEAD has been a farm leader in Washington ever since he took his seat in the Senate 10 years ago. Very quickly he started making himself felt in the interest of the farmers, and he has grown steadily in stature as an agricultural statesman.

As the author of the original Bankhead Cotton Control Act, of the Bankhead-Jones Tenant Purchase Act, and of many other measures of far-reaching importance to agriculture, the Alabama statesman established himself as a legislative leader in this field during the years when the great depression bore down so heavily on the farmers of all sections of the United States.

His first Cotton Control Act became the model, in principle, of all succeeding legislation for the regulation of agricultural production, not only in cotton, but in wheat, tobacco, and other major crops.

His measure to enable tenant farmers and sharecroppers to acquire farms of their own stands as a landmark of progress in the fight to overcome the growing blight of farm tenancy.

His was a leading part in the enactment of the highly important 1938 Agricultural Adjustment Act, which reconstructed the Federal farm program on the ruins of the original A. A. A. after the disastrous Supreme Court decision of 1936 had wiped it out almost altogether.

All these and other accomplishments by Senator BANKHEAD have won him an enduring place in the history of agricultural development in America.

Last week brought another great triumph for JOHN BANKHEAD as an agricultural statesman, perhaps the most striking tribute to his leadership that he has had. It was the passage of the Farm Parity Act, by which the prices of certain major crops, including cotton, corn, and wheat, will be protected by Government loans up to 85 percent of parity prices. By parity price is meant the price for an agricultural product which stands in the same relationship to industrial prices today that farm prices had in the base period, 1909–14.

For some time in Washington, Senator BANKHEAD has been called "Parity JOHN" by some of his friends because of the long fight he has made for farm parity. It has been a hard fight, as most of his fights for agriculture have been, but he won it when the Senate and House agreed last week on 85-percent parity loans.

Week before last Senator BANKHEAD made a great address in the Senate in behalf of his bill. Then last week, when it was finally voted on in the Senate, only 2 votes were cast against it and 75 votes for it.

And of 18 Senators not voting, it was announced that all but 1 or 2 would have voted for the bill if they had been present.

Thus it was almost unanimous among Democrats and Republicans alike. And thus did JOHN BANKHEAD'S leadership command support for a measure that would have been snowed under at any other time before.

Actors' Equity Association

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. LAMBERTSON

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

LETTER TO CHAIRMAN OF NOMINATING COMMITTEE, ACTORS' EQUITY ASSOCIATION

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my own remarks, I include a letter of mine addressed to Miss Florence Reed, chairman of the nominating committee, Actors' Equity Association, New York City:

MAY 23, 1941.

Miss FLORENCE REED,
Chairman, the Nominating Committee, Actors Equity Association,
New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR MISS REED: It is most gratifying to read in the current issue of Equity of the effort of the Nominating Committee to clear Equity's council of the subversive element which has tainted its former fine reputation. May I congratulate you, as chairman.

So far as I know, this is the first and only effort by an influential and prominent member of your profession to enforce the Equity resolution of last fall that "* * * no member of or sympathizer with a Communist, Nazi, or Fascist organization may be employed by or hold office in Actors Equity Association."

Nothing has come to my attention since last summer to diminish in the slightest my charges in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD against Mr. Loeb, Mr. Hewitt, Mr. Jaffee, et al. Any doubt in my mind as to whether Mr. Hewitt was an unwitting rather than a knowing tool of the Communists is pretty well dispelled by his position in this election.

Actors are engaged in public work. Therefore, their loyalty and integrity become a matter of public importance. Their employment is directly affected by their reputation, whether that employment is in the regular commercial theater, or on a Federal Theater project, or a project to entertain the boys in army camps. As I stated over and over again, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, innocent and deserving actors and actors all over the country are being penalized because the Communists in high positions are not weeded out of the theatrical organizations.

It is incredible that an honest and unselfish man, devoted to the interests of his organization, should drive so persistently for an endorsement which cannot vindicate him (only a public trial could do that), but which would further tarnish the reputation of Equity and penalize hundreds of his fellow actors.

The nominating committee would have been gravely remiss in its duty to the association to recommend Mr. Hewitt's reelection pending hearings on these charges.

As to those who are calling you and me un-American, Miss Reed, a very cursory check of the names published in Equity as supporters of Mr. Hewitt reveals 25 who have well-known records as sympathizers and supporters of the Communist Party. Take only one example, Mr. Charles De Sheim. His affiliation with Communist organizations in Chicago, while he was connected with the Federal Theater project and the Repertory Theater, is a matter of public record. He was among those actors who refused to play a benefit for Finnish relief in January 1939, because of conscientious objections. If time permitted, I could list the records of many more of those protesting the nominating committee's ticket. Since I have other work to do, I hope that the members of your organization will investigate for themselves. It would be most unfortunate for Equity should the good work done by your committee be nullified by the indifference or gullibility of your members.

Mr. McGrath's article is so full of evasions and misrepresentations as to my statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I should be very pleased to send a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD covering all the material on this matter to any of your members who care to send for it. If you think any of your associates might be interested in this letter I should be glad to have you show it to them.

May I once more congratulate you and your committee on your intelligent and courageous effort to carry out a truly patriotic duty.

Yours most sincerely,

W. P. LAMBERTSON.

Convoys

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY S. TRUMAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio address delivered by the able and distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] on the subject of convoys.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In my campaign for reelection last year I gave my pledge that I would never vote to send a single American soldier to fight on European soil.

I intend to keep that pledge, not by stubbornly voting "no" when it is too late to do anything except fight to save our own homes and firesides—but by doing everything in my power to make the occasion of such a vote unnecessary.

The question of aid to Britain long ago passed the stage of discussion. We are committed to it, irrevocably. We have geared our industrial plant to a war-production basis. We have curtailed our production of consumers' goods to release raw materials for armament. We have sent Britain guns and destroyers, planes, and mechanized equipment. We have appropriated and are spending billions of dollars under the Lease Lend Act. We are opening new plants every day, extending our facilities to the utmost to provide ships, cannon, ammunition. Our entire economy is rapidly being placed upon a war basis.

We know this is being done because our people want it that way. They want to help Britain.

Some want to save democracy in its fight against aggression—some want to save our own country from the disaster which inevitably would follow an Axis victory. Whatever their motive, the intention of the vast majority of our people in all cases is the same—more aid for Britain.

We are giving aid to Britain for one reason only—because we want Britain to win. We have gone into it with our eyes open. We knew when we started that we were building weapons of death for Britain's use against Hitler.

Short of actually releasing the bombs that fall on Hitler's troops and Hitler's factories; short of actually sighting and firing the guns, we, too, are combating the forces—diplomatic and military—which threaten the liberty of mankind on the fighting fronts of Europe.

When we undertook the job of helping Britain to stop Hitler, we undertook to see it through.

We realized the demands upon us would be heavy. We realized they would call for sacrifice. And we realized we would have to take whatever steps were necessary.

We have now reached the point where another step is necessary.

We have done much but it is not enough. In war, not enough is worse than useless.

Our people have good reason to be proud of the magnificent response we have made to Britain's call. We have performed industrial miracles. We have changed over from a peacetime economy to a war footing with a swiftness unparalleled in history. We have started a steady and ever-increasing stream of armaments across the Atlantic.

We must now ask ourselves: Does our duty end there? We know it does not. We know it cannot end short of victory for the forces of democracy.

And we now know, bitterly distasteful as the fact may be, that the arms we create with so much labor, at so great a sacrifice, are not reaching Britain.

Some get through. But far too great a portion never does. It goes down at sea, to appease the voracious appetities of Adolf Hitler's sea raiders, his submarines, his dive bombers, his armed cruisers.

In the face of that fact, we can no longer deceive ourselves. We are not giving aid to Britain in full measure. We are merely saying—"Get it if you can"—when we know we are asking an impossibility.

We are not giving England the tools to finish the job. We are giving up the fruits of our toil and treasure, the pledges of our faith in democracy, to the Nazi pirates of the Atlantic.

Our people will not be satisfied with mere gestures and we can no longer doubt that the steady sinking of merchant shipping is rapidly making our aid more and more of a gesture—less and less of a reality.

I am satisfied that the American people are prepared to face the realities. Once committed to a course of action which they believe to be right, they have never shrunk from its implications or its consequences.

We have all condemned, with righteous scorn, those politicians and privileged groups who "appeased" Hitler by permitting him to ravage one small nation after another.

What of ourselves? Should we fail to do everything in our power to prevent a Nazi victory over Britain, after giving our pledge of aid and assistance, would we not be just as guilty as those whoseshame was immortalized at Munich?

I say we would be for in that event our failure would help to send a great democracy to its destruction on the faith of our unfulfilled pledge to give every aid short of war.

Already our inability to send enough aid, and send it in time, has contributed to disaster abroad. Not long ago, as every well-informed observer knows, we launched a counteroffensive to Hitler's diplomatic drive in the Balkans.

Hitler's was backed by guns, ours by promises—and Hitler's won.

Had we been able to furnish arms instead of diplomatic assurances, the tragedy of the Balkans might not now be written so large in the history of World War No. 2—and Hitler might not be as close as he is today to a "jumping off" place for conquest in the Americas.

On the home front, our unwillingness to face unpleasant facts has encouraged the appeasers in our midst, giving aid and comfort to the "fifth column" and its dupes, the faint-hearted who have lost faith in the American ideal and surrendered themselves to the counsels of despair.

We can avoid eventual war with a triumphant, world-conquering Hitler in one way, and one way only, by giving Britain the weapons to destroy him.

But we must give them to Britain, not to the sea sharks that infest the shipping lanes of the Atlantic.

Had Britain's sea power been adequate to protect the aid we are giving, we would have no problem. But we cannot ignore the fact that it is not adequate.

Therefore, we must NOW make our decision—to forego aid, and fight Hitler after he has immeasurably strengthened himself by defeating England, or to give that aid and risk fighting him now.

I say risk, because it is only risk, for so long as our shipping is unmolested, which means so long as Hitler chooses to obey international law where we are concerned, there is no danger.

We should make up our minds right now that nothing we do is going to make Hitler fight us until he is ready, if ever—and when he is ready nothing we do or fail to do is going to prevent him.

Isolationists and "fifth columnists" have shouted, at every move we made, that we were inviting war. They said repeal of the original neutrality measure meant war. They said the lend-lease bill meant war. They said the destroyer-air base exchange meant war. They said the seizure of Axis ships meant war.

In every case, we did what we had a right to do, under our own laws and the laws of civilized nations.

The isolationists admitted we were within our rights under the law. They had, and they have, just one argument: "You might offend Hitler."

The offending of Herr Hitler is no justification for abdication of our rights. We didn't back down after we offended the Barbary pirates—as President Roosevelt has aptly pointed out—and I see little real distinction.

The simple answer is that we have already given Hitler sufficient reason for annoyance. If he has not retaliated it is not for lack of desire but for lack of opportunity.

Should Britain fall, his opportunity will come.

Bullies have blustered and attempted to intimidate this country before now.

More than a century ago, under President Adams, we convoyed our shipping to Britain when France attempted to blockade us. When necessary, our convoys fought. French ships were sent to the bottom. French ships were seized and taken as prizes.

But France didn't declare war—even after we bombarded French ports in the West Indies. And France then had a larger naval force, proportionately, than Hitler has today.

I do not say Hitler will follow the example of France, but I do say the same considerations will apply.

I mean that he will not risk war on another front unless he is ready, and if he is ready it will be immaterial whether we have been convoying or not.

There has been much evasion of this explosive issue. It is time to end this evasion.

If our war aid can reach England in no other way, we must convoy it there.

I know the President has said that where there is convoying there may be shooting, and where there is shooting there may be war. I agree with him.

But I submit that we are faced with several self-evident propositions which cannot be avoided.

We have a right to manufacture arms for Britain, and we are doing it. If Hitler could stop us, he would.

We have a right to freedom of our commerce on the seas, outside of all war areas not effectually blockaded by the belligerents. We are not exercising that right.

If we choose to exercise it, Hitler can stop us only by acts of aggression—in other words, by making war on us. That threat hangs over us today.

If it prevents us from giving aid to Britain, we must confess ourselves guilty of fear, and permit that fear to affect Britain exactly as the Munich fear affected Czechoslovakia.

Let us face facts. When we try to find alternatives to convoying we find there are none, save submission to Hitler, which is no alternative at all for a people who believe in human freedom.

Hitler has dismembered most of Europe. He is striving mightily to dismember England now. Should he succeed, we are next on the Axis timetable. We cannot afford to wait.

We have promised all aid short of war. It is no more an act of war to ship and convoy armaments than it is to make them. One is as much within our rights as the other.

Shall we make arms, because we know Hitler can't reach our factories, yet refuse to deliver them, because he might reach our shipping? The only possible distinction is that in the first case we feel safe from the consequences, and in the other, we do not.

I do not believe the American people, once they see that distinction, will accept it as valid. They will see it for what it is—fear—and fear alone.

Shall we fear to exercise a right we enjoy as a sovereign nation, and thereby fail in a task imperative to our national security? The answer is "no."

We have the right, and the duty under our most sacred and binding pledges, to place our weapons in the hands of those who are fighting their battle, and our battle, for human liberty throughout the world.

We face the alternative of convoying now—or fighting later.

I say—convoy now.

Life Lines—Highway and Second Canal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS ROLPH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I include therein an editorial which appeared in the San Francisco Examiner entitled "Life Lines—Highway and Second Canal."

[From the San Francisco Examiner]

LIFE LINES—HIGHWAY AND SECOND CANAL

The projected inter-American highway linking the United States and the Panama Canal Zone, for which President Roosevelt now seeks an appropriation in Congress is, of course, essential to hemisphere defense as the President says.

It would constitute a supply and communications line to the vital canal which, under war conditions, would make the entire North American Continent easily defendable and probably impregnable against invasion.

As the European conflict has demonstrated, highway facilities for the movement of the equipment of mechanized warfare are as important as the machines themselves.

It therefore seems almost axiomatic that if the United States should be able to keep a moving wall of fighting machines along every inch of the continent, no conceivable massing of foreign power could get or maintain a foothold.

Let such a superhighway be constructed by all means and with all speed, if for no other reason than as Secretary of State Hull has said that it would be of "real value from the standpoint of the defense of the Caribbean area."

But, of course, there are other and monumental reasons for this useful highway, which it is contemplated will ultimately extend over the full 12,000 miles between the United States and Argentina.

The economic uses of the highway would be incalculable in time of peace.

And let us not overlook our ultimate needs in peace.

Congress should certainly comply with the President's reasonable and moderate request for an appropriation of $20,000,000 for this constructive and commendable purpose.

At the same time Congress, and the President as well, should reexamine their attitudes toward the equally vital interocean waterway across Nicaragua.

Should not the United States avail itself of all possible life lines?

Why do we content ourselves with half measures for the defense of this vast American neighborhood which is so important to us and which is so wholly dependent upon us for protection?

Why do we commit the same errors of "too little and too late" in providing for our national and hemispheric safety that have made conquests of European nations possible?

Why do we not utilize every natural and providential advantage for our safety instead of just a few of them, and those few partially and inadequately?

All authorities recognize the vulnerability of the Panama Canal.

Under the precise conditions which exist at this moment, with the bulk of the American Navy in the far Pacific, a quick enemy thrust from the air or easily contrived acts of sabotage could trap our fleets in one ocean.

The proposed Nicaraguan Canal would be a supplementary life line upon which the United States might very well depend in war for the difference between defeat and victory.

Let us not be so concerned with events abroad that we neglect our own important affairs.

Let us link the Americas with a magnificent highway, as the President so well advises.

Let us have networks of air lines throughout the Americas, as is our present sound purpose.

And let us also have two avenues of safe passage between the great oceans which border our continent.

If we do all of these wise things, our American neighborhood will be safe in war.

And when we are free to pursue our peaceful way again, as is our most earnest desire, these same agencies of protection will give impetus to commerce and be the foundation of hitherto unattainable prosperity.

Cigar Taxation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY L. HAINES

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

STATEMENT BY HON. HARRY L. HAINES, OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement made by me before the House Ways and Means Committee on May 20, 1941:

Mr. Chairman, It is not my purpose to come before you today to oppose any measure that has for its objective additional revenue to the Treasury of the United States, as I fully appreciate the necessity for a tax bill to provide part of the funds to take care of our great program for national defense.

I represent a district where cigars are being manufactured, and probably there are more cigars manufactured in my congressional district than in any other in the Nation. Obviously, I am quite interested in anything that has to do with increased burdens upon that industry.

In the 1939–40 period there were produced in the United States a little more than four and one-half billion cigars retailing up to and including 5 cents each; a little more than 41,000,000 retailing above 5 cents and not to exceed 6 cents each; a little more than 428,000,000 retailing above 8 cents and not above 15 cents each, and so on up to 462,000 retailing above 25 cents each. As you know, we have a graduated tax on cigars based upon their retail value. I have contended for a number of years that cigars retailing at below 5 cents should not be taxed as much as those retailing at 5 cents, and at one time I introduced a bill to correct this unfair situation. Through the courtesy of you, Mr. Chairman, a hearing was given to me on that bill, but I am sorry to say the bill was never considered by your full committee to the best of my knowledge.

In the bill I proposed I wanted one-half of the tax to apply on cigars already retailing at and below 3 cents each, because I believe it only fair that this application be made to these cheaper cigars. I want to be very brief and leave this suggestion with you, Mr. Chairman, because I believe this committee will see justice in what I am about to propose.

If it is right to tax 10-cent cigars double the amount of revenue you tax 5-cent cigars, isn't it equally fair to tax two-for-5-cent cigars, or those retailing even below two for 5 cents, at one-half the tax that the 5-cent group must bear? I want to recommend to your committee serious consideration of this suggestion, and I am rather confident in doing so I am not going to take very much money away from the Treasury of the United States.

At the present time it is impossible for anyone to tell this committee how many cigars are sold at two for 5, three for 5, or 5 for 10 cents, because the same tax applies to each group. I know the interest of every member of this committee in the farmer and his welfare, and I want to say to you from my years of experience in the cigar industry I know that the farmer must have a market for his lower grade of cigar leaf tobacco, and his only market is in this group that can use such types for their cheaper cigars. I understand that about 27 percent of the farmers' crop is in these lower grades, used by manufacturers of these cheap cigars, and when I say "lower grades," Mr. Chairman, I do not want you to understand that the tobaccos are so very much inferior to the other types. All this tobacco grows on the same stem, but in the group there are the top leaves and the sand leaves which are not as desirable for 5-cent cigars, but when handled properly this type of tobacco does produce a good-quality cigar, and it is the smoke for the lower-income group, and it is a source of income to the farmer that he must have.

I think tobacco is taxed heavily enough right now, and the proposal to double this tax on tobacco products seems rather severe to me. However, I think the people I have the honor to represent will not object to the proposal to increase the tax on cigars above the two-for-5-cent group, even though it does cut into their profits tremendously. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, that we are producing less cigars today in the United States than we produced 35 years ago, and I say to you that if the cigar industry is to live, and particularly this group who are making these cheaper cigars, it is unsound to put an additional tax burden on them. I know it is going to be pretty hard for the manufacturers of 5-cent cigars to bear a double tax at this time, but I am not here today to tell this committee what they should do. I am simply pointing out to them what I believe to be my duty, and from my years of experience in the cigar business I have no hesitancy in saying to you that the manufacturers of these cheap cigars cannot stand this additional tax. To chase the two-for-5-cent cigars into a higher retail price means those men must start from scratch. I believe this committee would be wise in writing into the bill that you will give to the House a modification of the recommendation made by the Treasury to you, and you would be doing no harm to an industry that is now working upon a margin of profit that only those who make quantities of cigars can stand. At one time there were upward of 25,000 manufacturers of cigars in the United States, 20 years ago, and today there are only a few thousand of them left.

I would like to suggest to the committee, therefore, that section 400 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 832), be amended to include the following:

"On cigars made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, to retail at not more than 3 cents each, $2 per thousand."

This, of course, would call for a new classification because of the fact that all cigars retailing up to and including 5 cents are in the class A group. Because I believe that cigars maufactured to retail at 5 cents and upwards can absorb the double of the present rate of taxation, I will approve the suggestion by the Treasury Department, but I do so most reluctantly insofar as 5-cent cigars are concerned. It would almost seem that the Treasury Department in checking its regular sources of revenue reached the conclusion that if the tax on cigars is doubled it will double the revenue receipts. There are products, of course, on which such expectations might be approximately fulfilled, but because of the record I am rather confident that cigars should not be included and are not that kind of product. The use of many products is stable, but the use of cigars is an unstable and declining practice which is just now balancing between a comeback and a virtual extinction. For example, Mr. Chairman, several days ago one of the largest, and possibly the largest manufacturer of two-for-5-cent cigars from outside of my congressional district, paid me a visit. He told me that if his firm had to go into the market with their product priced at above two for 5 cents, he anticipated the same experience he had back during the N. R. A. days. At that time their cigars retailed at two for 5 cents, as they do today, but because of N. R. A. codes the cigar was stepped up to retail three for 10 cents. He made a startling statement to me when he said that they had a monthly production at that time of 17,000,000 cigars, retailing two for 5 cents. When this cigar was stepped up to three for 10 cents, the sales declined from 17,000,000 down to 4,000,000. That is simply one example, Mr. Chairman, of what we can hope to expect when we get into the practice of stepping up taxes on a product that cannot stand it. Thirty-five years ago from 30 to 50 percent of the regular cigar output was from three for a quarter up and today, Mr. Chairman, 90 percent of the output is cigars from a nickel down.

I received a letter the other day from a gentleman that I have known all of my lifetime. He is one of the smaller manufacturers in my congressional district, and he produces cigars that retail 5 for 10 cents and 2 for 5 cents. He is terribly worried because he believes that he cannot go into the highly competitive market and step up the price of his product with any degree of success. He realizes the need for additional taxation, but he suggests that this tax be placed upon those best able to pay it. He makes some few 5-cent cigars and is perfectly willing to pay a double taxation. If I wanted to take the time of this committee I could stand here for an hour, perhaps, and recite instances similar to this one.

When I was back home the other day a gentleman came to me stating that he sells tobacco to one concern that usually owes him from thirty-five to fifty thousand dollars. He is quite familiar with the cigar industry and he says, "Harry, I know that these people cannot continue in business if they must pay double the present rate of taxation, as I know full well that their product will not stand an increase in price to the consumer." It is my firm conviction, Mr. Chairman, that the Treasury Department will be sadly disappointed if their recommendation is accepted by this comittee, and I am equally firm in my conviction that the cigar industry will show a further decline in production, which of course reflects itself in tax receipts.

There is one phase of the situation that little concern has been given to, and that is that most of the 5-cent cigars today are wrapped with tobacco imported from the Island of Sumatra. The import duty on that type of tobacco is $1.50 a pound and that tax adds at least $2 additional cost to every thousand cigars. There is no member of your committee, Mr. Chairman, more anxious than I am to cooperate with the Federal Treasury in securing more money from the taxpayers to meet national-defense obligations, and I feel it my patriotic duty to do this. However, I believe we have reached the point in the cigar industry where we should not place additional taxes on these cheap cigars and discourage men of low income from purchasing this product. It is perfectly obvious to each one of us that this will occur.

Please bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, that two-for-5-cent cigars are made of domestic-grown cigar-leaf tobaccos. About 90 percent of the tobacco grown in Florida, Georgia, and Alabama goes into two-for-5-cent cigars. Wisconsin farmers' delegation who visited me recently told me that at least 70 percent of their tobaccos go into the cigars retailing below 5 cents. This is also true with Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York Connecticut, and Massachusetts tobaccos, so that from an economic standpoint, insofar as the farmers are concerned, it would be most unwise to destroy a market for them that they need so badly. It is their cash crop and usually the most profitable crop for them. Knowing these facts, from more than a quarter of a century of practical experience in the cigar-manufacturing industry, I appeal to you, my colleagues, to save this cheap-cigar industry and give them a differential in the tax rate, the same as you give to cigars retailing above that price. To charge the same rate of taxation on two-for-5-cent cigars that you charge on 5-cent cigars, I repeat, is unfair, because you tax the two-for-5-cent group 8 percent against only 4 percent on cigars retailing at 5 cents and but 5 percent on cigars retailing at 10 cents, and even less on cigars retailing above 10 cents each. My suggestion of one-half the tax on two-for-5-cent cigars now applying to 5-cent cigars is equitable from every viewpoint and deserves the complete approval of the Congress.

Views on Public Questions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EARL WILSON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

COMMUNICATION FROM OFFICIALS OF ORANGE COUNTY, IND.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following communication sent to me by the officials of Orange County, Ind.:

We oppose: American involvement in foreign war. Repeal of Neutrality Act. Use of naval force to deliver goods to warring nations. A declaration of national emergency. Gifts, grants, or loans to foreign powers at expense of American taxpayers. Selection of defeated candidates for appointive office. Appointment of foreign-born citizens to high positions in national defense while qualified American-born citizens are available.

We favor: Strong national defense economically secured. Reinstatement of cash and carry system. Investigation of all foreign propaganda agencies. Peaceful attempts to secure Western Hemisphere islands. Frank and honest dealing at home and abroad. We expect our President to keep his pledges. We believe on this basis alone can America unite.

Very truly yours,

OFFICIALS OF ORANGE COUNTY, IND.,
By GARRETT FERGUSON, Recorder.

Axis Victory Won't Ruin United States, Kennedy Says

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT F. RICH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

STATEMENT BY HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the comments of former Ambassador to Great Britain—appointed by President Roosevelt—Joseph P. Kennedy, stated that it was nonsense to say that an Axis victory spelled ruin. The Ambassador wants us to stay out of war in Europe, and so do I. That is the reason for this insertion.

AXIS VICTORY WON'T RUIN UNITED STATES, KENNEDY SAYS

ATLANTA, May 24.—Joseph P. Kennedy, former United States Ambassador to Great Britain, urged tonight that the United States "not be deluded by any claim that self-interest should make us guardians of the peace of the rest of the world."

In an address prepared for the Oglethorpe University commencement exercises, Kennedy said "the crusaders' argument for war is the silliest of all" and asserted that "democracy cannot be imposed by force or otherwise."

"In our very attempt at this colossal crusade," he said, "we would end in failure and disgrace abroad, in disillusionment and bankruptcy at home.

"We cannot, my fellow Americans, divert the tides of the mighty revolution now sweeping Asia and Europe. They were not of our making and they will not be subject to our control, no matter how courageously or exhaustingly we strive to subject them."

He also urged the Nation to beware of slogans and said this country should not become a belligerent "just because we hate Hitler and love Churchill."

Kennedy said he was "particularly unimpressed by the hysteria which I suspect is consciously stimulated by the idea that we are in danger of military attack."

This country was so situated, he said, that "a direct attack on us would require an armada mightier than the power of man could create."

"We have gone to the aid of Britain not only because we believe their cause to be just," he said, "but because the American stake in the present war is the precious element of time. But as a nation we should not let our aid to Britain become the argument for direct involvement."

SEES AXIS VICTORY NO TRAGEDY

The former Ambassador, who recalled that when he resigned he said he hoped to assist President Roosevelt "in his oft-proclaimed desire to stay out of war," asserted that although a British victory would be helpful from the viewpoint of this country's foreign markets, it was 'nonsense' to say that an Axis victory spelled ruin.

"From 90 to 95 percent of our trade is internal," he said. "If worse came to worse, we could gear ourselves to an intelligent self-contained national economy and still enjoy a fair degree of prosperity.

"But that 'worst' must never be permitted to include Axis domination—social, economic, or military—of any spot in the Western Hemisphere. In my definition of the Western Hemisphere I include, I wish to add, any island which is considered by our military experts to be a threat to our security if the Axis Powers possess or dominate it."

Excerpts from Articles by George S. Counts and Sidney Hook Contained in The American Teacher for May 1941

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the American Federation of Teachers. I have continued to be a member of that organization first because I believe in the professional organization of teachers and believe such an organization should be part of the labor movement; and second because I wanted to do what I could to help combat the attempts of a Communist group to control the organization. I am pleased to be able, therefore, to quote herewith from the American Teacher, official organ of the American Federation of Teachers, for May 1941, two passages which are, I believe, as pertinent and searching an analysis of the problem of Communists in America as I have read. I wish every person in the country who calls himself a liberal could read these passages. The first is from George S. Counts, president of the American Federation of Teachers:

The confusion arises in part out of the terminology of politics. There is a fiction that the political struggle moves in a single dimension, that it moves either to the right or to the left. The inference follows that every population distributes itself in some fashion between the extreme left and the extreme right and that all men who incline in the one direction or the other should stand together. By loudly proclaiming themselves spokesmen and defenders of the "left" the Communists have contended that any criticism of them or any refusal to work with them on the part of labor or liberal elements constitutes a betrayal or a weakening of the democratic cause. And many liberals who have failed to think the problem through have accepted this logic.

The effectiveness of our political thought and behavior will be vastly increased if we recognize clearly that democracy as a total pattern bears no affinity to either communism or fascism. It is neither the one nor the other. Nor is it in any sense something midway between the two. Indeed, the course of history is proving clearly that communism and fascism resemble one another far more closely than either resembles democracy. Consequently, for the friends of democracy to open their ranks to the champions of any totalitarian doctrine is to reveal poverty of understanding or hospitality to deception. As a form of government, as a way of life, or as a social faith, democracy is distinctive and unique. To paraphrase the words of Thomas Jefferson, the Communist movement adds just so much of support to democracy as sores do to the strength of the human body.

The second quotation is from an article by Sidney Hook and appeared also in the May 1941 issue of the American Teacher:

But are not Communists sincere, even if mistaken revolutionists? Is not their willingness to sacrifice themselves as well as others evidence of this? The answers is that their fundamental sincerity is only to the Russian state, and that they are revolutionary, nonrevolutionary, or counterrevolutionary, depending upon whether these policies further the interest of the Russian state. The varying program of Communist Parties in Italy, Germany, France, Spain, and the United States are cases in point. It is literally true, therefore, that the Communist Party is not a genuine part of the indigenous working-class movement of the country in which it is active. For its policies are not fashioned in the light of the interests of the workers of that country but exclusively in the light of the interests of a foreign power, Russia. The discovery that the Communist Parties do not hesitate to sacrifice the interests of the workers of different

Columbia catch a substantial portion of the silver and chinook salmon originating from the streams in Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia; and

"Whereas all fishermen operating in the inland waters are being subjected to rigid regulations for the conservation of the species of salmon supporting the commercial fishing in outside waters; and

"Whereas the outside fishing is entirely unregulated, taking unlimited numbers of chinook and silver salmon in any season; and many of them immature: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, That we urge the President and the Congress of the United States to amend the present international salmon treaty by expanding the duties of the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission to include the investigation of all species of salmon in outside waters from the State of California to Cape Scott on Vancouver Island; and be it further

"Resolved, To provide that commercial fishing in said waters come under the jurisdiction and regulation of said Commission at the time said Commission is given power to regulate the Fraser River sockeye in accordance with the terms of the present covenant; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be immediately transmitted to the Honorable President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and to all Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States from the State of Washington."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of Washington; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Memorial No. 4

"To the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition Your Excellency and honorable body, as follows:

"Whereas the present National and State social-security laws relating to old-age pensions are steps in the right direction but have proved unsatisfactory, inadequate, inefficient, and subject to many conflicting State and National interpretations, all of which have created uncertainty and doubt as to the time, amount, and payment of old-age pensions; and

"Whereas President Roosevelt has advocated a liberal, uniform, national old-age-pension system; and

"Whereas the nationally known old-age-pension poll indicated that the citizens of the United States favor a uniform, national old-age-pension system with individual monthly payments of $40 and such additional amounts of the Congress may from time to time decree; and

"Whereas the electors of the State of Washington in the recent general election clearly indicated by the passage of an initiative measure that individual pension payments be increased to $40 per month: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, do hereby respectfully memorialize and petition the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to cause to be enacted into law a uniform, national, old-age-pension system along the lines of the desire of the people as expressed in the nationally known poll; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be immediately transmitted to the President of the United States and to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Washington."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of Washington; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Senate Joint Memorial No. 5

"To the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition your assembly and honorable body as follows:

"Whereas the United States Government has embarked on a large-scale and long-range defense program to protect the shores of both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans from attack; and

"Whereas there is an area within Pacific County between the cities of Raymond and South Bend, in the State of Washington admirably situated for the establishment of either an Army or Navy air base or both in that such area is but 15 miles from the Pacific Ocean; lies alongside the Willapa River, it has a channel depth of 25 feet and is at least 1,000 feet in width, thereby making the requested air base accessible to and for seaplanes; and

"Whereas the port of Willapa Harbor is the owner of 300 acres, and is willing to convey a considerable portion of such land for such purposes, and has contributed the sum of $20,000, completely diking the land to the extent of 4½ miles, all of which would give the air base a runway of a mile; and

"Whereas the estimated cost of establishing an air base between Raymond and South Bend, Wash., would amount to less than $175,000: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Washington do hereby respectfully memorialize and petition the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to appropriate the sum of $175,000 for the purpose of establishing a military air base between Raymond and South Bend in Pacific County, Wash.; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be immediately transmitted to the President of the United States; to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States; to each of the Representatives and Senators in Congress from the State of Washington; to the Secretary of War; and to the Secretary of the Navy.

"And your memorialists will ever pray."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of Washington; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

"Senate Joint Memorial No. 7

"To the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition Your Excellency and honorable bodies as follows:

"Whereas the practicability of the construction of an international highway to Alaska has been under consideration for some years; and

"Whereas the existing water and air transportation routes to Alaska should be supplemented by a through land route to facilitate economic and military connection with that Territory; and

"Whereas the Army and Navy Departments of the United States Government have pointed out the strategic value of Alaska to the North American Continent and the necessity for a coordinated transportation system reaching from the continental United States through to Alaska; and

"Whereas Congressman WARREN G. MAGNUSON, of the First Congressional District of the State of Washington, as chairman of the Joint Alaskan International Highway Commission, has made commendatory efforts toward making a through highway from the United States to Alaska an accomplished fact: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, That we urge the President and the Congress of the United States to approve and pass suitable legislation for the construction of the Alaskan International Highway for the purposes of providing adequate transportation for defense and development; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be immediately transmitted to the Honorable President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and to all Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States."

A House memorial of the Legislature of Arizona; to the Committee on Finance:

"House Memorial No. 4

"House memorial urging passage by Congress of H. R. 1036, relating to the general welfare

"To the Congress of the United States of America:

"Your memorialist respectfully represents:

"The problems of unemployment and social security are among the most vital economic issues now confronting the people of the State of Arizona, as well as of other States of the Union.

"These pressing problems cannot be solved satisfactorily by individual States, but are national issues involving the general welfare of the Nation.

"There has been introduced in the present session of Congress H. R. 1036, relating to the general welfare, which will, if enacted, alleviate in large measure the economic distress resulting from widespread unemployment and poverty among the aged. Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, prays:

"That H. R. 1036, now pending in the first session of the seventy-seventh Congress, be enacted into law, to the end that deserving old people may be properly cared for and the States relieved of the burden resting upon them in that regard."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

"Senate Joint Memorial No. 15

"Memorial to the President of the United States and the Representatives from the State of Montana and the State of Wyoming in the Congress of the United States requesting careful consideration and prompt support in the passage of an act providing for the construction of storage of water by the War Department, and that such provisions be made as will assure the people of Montana and Wyoming of water necessary for their present and potential needs for domestic and irrigation purposes by the building of proper dams in the Big Horn River in Montana and Boysen, Wyo.

"The members of the Senate of the Twenty-seventh Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (and House of Representatives concurring), respectfully represent as follows:

"Whereas the War Department, under direction of Congress, made a survey of the Yellowstone watershed and has made its report wherein it recommends that storage be provided at either the Kane or Boysen sites in Wyoming, and that owing to the complexity of the interest involved and the widespread benefit which would accrue from the storage, it is considered appropriate for the United States to bear the entire cost of the new project adopted; and

"Whereas the Board of Engineers of Rivers and Harbors held a public hearing at Billings, is constantly drinking strength out of new sources by the voluntary association with it of great bodies of strong men and forward-looking women out of other lands. And so by the gift of the free will of independent people, it is being constantly renewed from generation to generation by the same process by which it was originally created. It is as if humanity had determined to see to it that this great Nation, founded for the benefit of humanity, should not lack for the allegiance of the people of the world.

While it is fitting that we should especially emphasize the entrance into the body politic of the United States of those who have just been naturalized, and those who have reached their majority, I do not believe that we should overlook those upon whose shoulders the responsibilities of Government have rested in the past by putting too great an emphasis upon those who have just entered into those responsibilities. But let us on I Am an American Day so arrange our celebrations that all citizens may feel that they are as much a part of the Government and should realize that fact as those relative to whom special dedication is made today.

President Roosevelt's recent message to new citizens sounded the keynote for ceremonies held throughout the country:

"It gives me real pleasure to join in the observance of I Am an American Day which has been set aside as a public occasion for the recognition of all, who, by coming of age, or by naturalization, are attaining the status of citizenship. Great responsibility rests upon those born here who are reaching their majority and also upon those born in other lands who, as new citizens, are taking the oath of allegiance to the United States. Now, they must be prepared to share with millions of their fellow citizens in the responsibilities and duties which are those of all patriotic and home-loving Americans.

It will be their responsibility and their duty to think first of America and at the same time to think in terms of humanity. This Nation was created to insure the things that unite and to eliminate the things that divide. It will continue to be a land of opportunity for native-born and foreign-born citizens. It will continue to offer them the hope, liberty, and justice which have always prevailed in this great democracy of ours.

I join with citizens everywhere in welcoming the more than 2,000,000 American-born boys and girls reaching the age of 21 this year, and also additional thousands of foreign-born becoming citizens by adoption. In return for the rights and responsibilities of citizenship I am sure they will, for all the years of their lives, perform the high patriotic and American duty of supporting their Government at all times in keeping with its principles, traditions, and ideals as a democracy.

Speaking particularly to the new citizens and inferentially to other citizens, I hope that you will pledge yourselves with me to a solemn rededication of citizenship; that you will give more of your efforts, more of your being, and more of your hearts to the task of teaching and emulating Americanism; that you will strive ceaselessly to focus the spotlight of truth upon subversive activities which seek to undermine the foundations of our Nation. By so doing you will illuminate the world with the brilliance of American democracy and demonstrate the sacred character of honest, decent, human elements which, God willing, our Stars and Stripes may forever symbolize.

The exercise of this freeman's franchise is also a duty devolving on all who are entitled to that priceless gift. We hear a great deal about patriotism, Americanism, and kindred virtues, but the very essence of either and all of these is the duty of the citizen to interest himself or herself in the Government of the Nation.

Attention has been called on many occasions by speakers to the fact that the Government of the United States is a democracy. That term means a government by the people, in which the responsibilities of government rest upon the individual citizen, but very few realize that this Government is that of a limited democracy. When the Constitution of the United States was being drawn it was appreciated by those interested that although the majority should rule, there might be times when, due to stress of emotion or hysteria, the majority might override the rights of the minority. Therefore, it wrote into the Constitution certain checks by which the majority could not act without due deliberation and debate. Some of these checks are indicated by the fact that the Constitution grants free speech, free press, the right of assembly, the requirement of a search warrant before officers of the law can enter homes or buildings, and the right of trial by jury. These were all granted by the Constitution itself and cannot be changed without amendments to the Constitution, and these amendments can only become effective after ratification by the necessary number of States. It can readily be seen that this procedure will take some time and consequently the period of hysteria or emotion will have passed and the citizens will have seen the error of their ways.

No stream can rise above the level of its source, and the stream of freedom and Americanism has its source in the selection of the Nation's management through the full and free exercise of the franchise by each and every qualified voter, and I wish to say at this time that each and every American citizen should interest himself in, and study the principles of American government. This can best be done by joining yourself with some political party that does not teach destruction of our form of government, and as a result of the stimulated interest brought about during election periods, you will better understand the basic theories of those principles.

We have been disturbed recently, my fellow citizens, by certain symptoms which have shown themselves in our body politic. Certain men—I have never believed a great number—born in other lands, have in recent months thought more of those lands than they have of the honor and interest of the Government under which they are now living. They have even gone so far as to draw apart in spirit and in organization from the rest of us to accomplish some special object of their own. I am not here going to utter any criticism of these people, but I want to say this, that such a thing as that is absolutely incompatible with the fundamental idea of loyalty, and that loyalty is not a self-pleasing virtue. I am not bound to be loyal to the United States because I live under its laws and am its citizen, and whether it hurts me or whether it benefits me, I am obliged to be loyal. Loyalty means nothing unless it has at its heart the absolute principle of self-sacrifice. Loyalty means that you ought to be ready to sacrifice every interest that you have, and your life itself, if your country calls upon you to do so, and that is the sort of loyalty which ought to be inculcated into these newcomers, that they are not to be loyal only so long as they are pleased, but that, having once entered into this sacred relationship, they are bound to be loyal whether they are pleased or not; and that loyalty which is merely self-pleasing is only self-indulgence and selfishness. No man has ever risen to the real statute of spiritual manhood until he has found that it is finer to serve somebody else than it is to serve himself.

Those engaged in subversive activities of the Government are found in every walk of life, and are the most insidious influences in those activities. The man who stands up and loudly proclaims the fact that he is endeavoring to destroy the United States Government is the man who is easily handled, but the group in our midst who by practices and propaganda tend in the minds of those who will listen to them to change the color of the flag gradually from red, white, and blue to the black background of the swastika and the blue background of the hammer and sickle. This is the type of propaganda that is seeping into our religious institutions, our schools and colleges, and influences the younger generation to look upon this Government as a Government of oppression and encourages the theory that their only salvation is a government along the lines of the Soviet Republic, where the individuality of the person is suppressed and the citizen, who in a democracy formulates the principles of government through its elective representatives, in the government of the dictator becomes a pawn of the government, and is required to do as the government says, instead of being able to tell the government what to do. In the first, he is a nobody; in the second, he is the government. The symbol of our Government is the flag.

A fitting part of ceremonies such as these is a prominent display of the American flag. Far from being a mere piece of bunting, it is a symbol of all that is finest and best in our country. It represents both the Government and the people. The beautiful colors of the flag have come to have a deep meaning. The white of its stripes and of its stars stands for the purity of our motives and conduct. One of the most important objectives to be attained by our country is a clean Government of high political integrity which carries out the will of the people as expressed by them through the ballot.

The red of the alternate stripes is a badge of courage and takes our thoughts back more than a century and a half to the days of Washington's troops at Valley Forge and to those brave hearts who during and since those trying times have given of their strength, and their lives, when necessary, that this Nation might endure.

The blue field which forms the background of the 48 stars representing the States of the Union stands for our pledge of loyalty to a Government which has taken its place in the world as a great democracy.

It is a well-known fact that in these United States the franchise of the citizen is not looked upon with the seriousness that it should be, although in some districts a better interest is shown than in others. For instance, in this vicinity in the last election in which the entire judiciary was elected, less than one-half of the citizens who were registered to vote actually voted. In other words, you can readily see that as far as this district, and no doubt it is true of other sections of the United States, that there is not the proper interest shown by the citizens and that we have a government of the minority.

The many rights and privileges of citizenship carry with them serious duties and responsibilities. If a person insists upon all of the benefits to which he may be entitled but refuses or is unwilling to perform his duties and obligations, he cannot be called a good citizen. The good citizen obeys his country's laws. No government can be strong or successful if its citizens are not faithful to it.

In taking your oath to bear true faith and allegiance to the United States, you gave a solemn promise before God that you would uphold and do your part to protect the Government which the Constitution guarantees to this country and all of its citizens. I am sure that when you leave these colorful and deeply moving ceremonies which have been prepared to do you honor you will have engraved upon your hearts the great obligation which you owe to the faith, loyalty, devotion, and sacrifices of other citizens of the United States, both of the past and present, who have helped to establish and maintain this democratic form of government which we all so deeply love, and the many rights and privileges of citizenship. It is encumbent upon you, the generation who is not taking up the franchise, to hold high the torch of democracy and keep it well lighted so that it will guide and perpetuate the principles of democracy throughout the world.

In conclusion, let me say that the good citizen in the final analysis in exercising his right of franchise will weigh the various candidates on the scales of past performances from the viewpoint of his reliability, capability, and honesty of purpose and vote and work for the election of those men and women who regardless of party affiliations will make it their solemn duty that this Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the welfare of all its citizens, shall go forward on its God-given mission and not become lost in the mazes of selfish disaster.

If we as Americans will do this, in the words of the immortal Lincoln, this Nation of the people, by the people, and for the people will not perish from the earth.

Plasterers' Wages

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

LETTER TO HON. LELAND M. FORD, OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

MAY 9, 1941.

Hon. LELAND M. FORD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In the Appendix of the RECORD at page A2073, under the title of "Plasterers' Wages," I read a letter addressed to a certain man called Lee, wherein a veiled attempt is made to belittle men who work with their arms and body as well as their brains. In the first place, you know, and I have discovered in my law practice, that people who work in cement are subject to a poisoning of a very serious character, which has happened repeatedly. In the next place, the work is extremely strenuous; and it occurs to me that if Mr. Lee or yourself, assuming that Mr. Lee is not a plasterer, were called to do that kind of work, you would want not alone $15.75 a day and $20.25 on Saturday, but you would either want $50 a day or you wouldn't work at all. I also call attention to the fact that plasterers do not work every day receiving a daily wage of $15.75. If someone took the time to investigate the record, they would find that plasterers, throughout the year, average approximately between 3 and 4 days a week. For the amount of work done and its character and danger, it certainly is reasonable.

When reference is made to the fact that "our soldiers in uniform are going to be indignant at the exempted boys receiving as much a day as the men in uniform receive a month," that applies to Members of Congress as well as those who do physical as well as mental labor. It is all well enough for people to sit in judgment upon others and condemn just for condemnation's sake because they hate the man who toils. This was the attitude of those who favored slavery and the people who opposed free public schools on the ground that the poor man should not be educated.

The risk of employment, as a plasterer, is astounding if someone would just take the trouble to look up the record and statistics. One of our great troubles is that too many of the Members of Congress make statements motivated by some unseen hatred, prejudice, and bias. These types make the worst Representatives.

I cannot understand that some do not realize and appreciate that plasterers are just as much a part of humanity as any other people. As to the figures given in the said letter, I know nothing about them except to call attention to the fact that at 6 hours the wage would only be $9 and when they work 9 hours they are certainly entitled to time and a half because their lives are being shortened that much quicker and when they are compelled to work 6 days instead of 5 they are likewise decreasing their average length of life. Some contractors are too mean to hire other plasterers because they are either lazy or for some reason don't want to. I know from information given me, that there are contractors who keep hiring the same individual beyond the 6 hours and 5-day week because of the influence of the contractor, thereby taking away a living from someone else.

However, what do our soldiers in uniform think of the following, taken from certain corporate reports filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission: The remuneration for 1940 showed L. B. Mayer, of Loew's, Inc., to be $697,048; Eugene G. Grace, president, Bethlehem Steel Corporation, $478,144; George W. Hill, president, American Tobacco Co., $466,415; Hunt Stromberg, Loew's, Inc., $332,267; Nicholas M. Schenck (whose name recently appeared in the newspapers), Loew's, Inc., $318,881; Charles E. Wilson, General Motors Corporation, $278,324; W. C. Fields, actor, $255,000; Paul M. Hahn, American Tobacco Co., $254,849; Vincent Riggio, American Tobacco Co., $251,849; and Charles T. Kettering, General Motors Corporation, $247,965. Mr. Mayer's salary, while slightly in excess of the $688,369 he received in the fiscal year 1939, was still short of the $1,161,753 he was paid in the fiscal year 1938.

There are others receiving smaller sums, but vastly more than $20.25 for working 9 hours in a dangerous and health-wrecking occupation.

These high-salaried boys are also exempted. They do no more for society, and in fact probably not as much, as the mechanics without whom society could not exist.

It is my hope that you will also publish this letter or cause it to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a matter of fairness and justice.

Respectfully yours,

GEORGE GELDER.

The Present Crisis

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FOSTER STEARNS

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY HENRY T. LUMMUS

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Hon. Henry T. Lummus, associate justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, delivered at a meeting of the Law Society of Massachusetts on Wednesday, May 21, 1941:

In this crisis—the greatest since this country won her freedom at Yorktown—I cannot bring myself to speak to you of the petty affairs of our profession. I refuse to be crushed by the usual smart retort that I am over the age of military service, for if we have war with the Germans civilians will suffer as much as soldiers. The course of American history must be settled, for weal or woe, within a few weeks. Along every possible course lies deadly danger, and along some courses lies national destruction. Yet all around us are people who talk and act as though the war in Europe were not one in which scientific barbarism seeks to destroy civilization, the result of which Hitler declares will determine the future of the world for a thousand years, but were instead some little quarrel between Ecuador and Peru. People dispose of it with some pert phrase parroted from some demagog, and turn their real attention to the baseball scores or the returns from the race tracks.

I intend to appeal, not to your emotions, but to your common sense, your reason and your patriotism—not the patriotism of fireworks and compulsory salutes, but the patriotism that ponders what course will preserve and defend our American way of life, and then holds to that course through privation, suffering, and, if need be, bullets and bombs.

It is the patriotic duty of every American to look at our situation solely from the standpoint of the welfare of America, without thought of the welfare of any other country. If an American, merely because of his English descent or his love of England, or merely to pull England's chestnuts out of the fire, should advocate intervention or even aid to England, he would be guilty of an unpatriotic act. Only national interests can justify a majority in any country in dragging an unwilling minority into war.

It is equally unpatriotic for any American to oppose intervention or aid to England because of hatred of England or love of her enemies. If an American of old Yankee stock still nurses the hatreds of the Revolutionary War, if an American of Irish descent still lives emotionally back in the times when his ancestors were oppressed by the British, if an American of Italian descent feels sympathy with that beautiful land that was the cradle of modern civilization but has now been dragged by its strutting puppet Caesar down to the level of one of Hitler's slave states, such an American has no moral right to let his emotions weigh a particle in his decision of what course America should follow.

There is a strong group in America, led by 10 Members of the Senate, and called the isolationists, that opposes any effective aid to Britain. Originally they were indifferent as to whether Britain or Germany should win the war. Now they say, mildly, that they prefer a British victory. I do not believe that many of them actually hope for a Nazi victory, though Hitler must be pleased with the aid they give him. Any American who is pro-Nazi is a traitor not only to his country but to religion and civilization as well. I know that some of the isolationists are not traitors, for they have already once risked their lives for their country. Their faults are of the mind, not of the heart. But though the mass of the isolationists are not traitors, every traitorous pro-Nazi is an isolationist.

The isolationists address their arguments to the emotions, not to the intellect. I am not sure whether their leaders are themselves confused, or whether, like Hitler, they feel contempt for the reasoning powers of the people. At any rate, their stock argument is that our boys must not be sent again to Europe, to fight and die on European soil, and, as they love to put it, to be "ploughed under." Yet every intelligent American knows that England can use no more men in resisting invasion, and that no expeditionary force can be landed on the continent until the Nazis are practically beaten and on the run. The isolationists set up a man of straw and then knock him down.

Everyone who favors a vigorous defense of American interests is called a warmonger, who delights in sending our boys to death. Isolationists talk as though America had a choice between assured and permanent peace, or willful and needless participation in war. They cannot comprehend that we have no such choice, and that if we let the British Empire lose the war we must fight a victorious Germany alone later, whenever Hitler sees fit to attack us. War next year, or in 5 years, would be fully as bloody as war now, and more disastrous. The isolationists never tell us of the boys who will be killed or the mothers who will be bereaved in the last-ditch war to save America to which their course would condemn us. They give no thought to the morrow and see nothing beyond their noses.

Another favorite isolationist rabble-rouser is to attack the British Empire as imperialistic. It is said that the British built up their Empire by force, and that the Germans are merely doing likewise. I hold no brief for England. Some pages of her history, like some pages of our own, show little cause for pride. But much of the British Empire was won by discovery and colonization, and in much of it Britain has worked for peace and justice and individual rights. Never in the history of the British Empire was there anything like the brutal Nazi aggression of the last few years against peaceful and civilized neighbors after lying assurances of friendship. But the whole accusation of imperialism is beside the point. Our only concern is our own national safety. Though her sins be as scarlet, the British Empire and her domination of the seas constitute no menace to America. On the contrary, Nazi domination of the seas would be a constant menace.

We hear a hullabaloo about British propaganda. Britain needs no propaganda among intelligent Americans. The march of Nazi conquest in Europe, the Near East, and Africa, the ruthless enslavement of civilized and unoffending nations, the crushing of religion, of moral values, and of individual rights, all speak louder than anything either the British or the Germans can say.

The isolationists say that the President is breaking his campaign promise to keep us out of war. I feel under no obligation to defend the President, for I never voted for him. But I may say that I am glad that neither of the first two of his opponents for whom I voted is at the helm of state. The attack upon the President is unjustified. We are not in the war even now. But events are moving swiftly abroad, and must move swiftly here. If the President feels less sure than he did 6 months ago that he can defend America and still keep us out of war, he is only feeling what most intelligent Americans are feeling. And the isolationists have only made his task harder.

The isolationists, however, do offer three legitimate arguments that must be met. These are (1) that the Nazis have no evil designs upon America, (2) that they could not harm America if they would, and (3) that the British Empire is lost and American aid would be useless. Let us consider these in order.

Have the Nazis evil designs upon America? In considering this, let us assume that we have deserted England, as the isolationists wish us to do, and that the British Empire has been destroyed. Any rebellion by the conquered and disarmed European countries is an idle dream. With what could they revolt? People cannot face machine guns with clubs, or dive bombers with brickbats. Japan will have moved south, seizing the Philippines, the East Indies, and very likely Australia and New Zealand. Europe and Africa are controlled by the Nazis. The British Fleet has probably been surrendered, for Churchill has fallen and some British Quisling like Sir Oswald Moseley has made the peace. Dire vengeance would have fallen upon English women and children had the fleet not been surrendered. The British Fleet, added to those of Germany, Italy, France, and Japan, could overwhelm ours.

South America is nearer to Africa than to us. It has a large Nazi population, and no such military power or devotion to democracy as to lead it to resist. It would fall into Nazi control within 3 months. Moreover, the peace terms with England would probably give the Nazis islands off our coasts, if not a foothold on this continent itself. Hemmed in on all sides, a rich and juicy prize, can you believe that the Nazis would not wish to make us the most profitable of their slave states? The Nazis would find it hard to stop and settle down. Demobilization of their great army would disrupt their internal economy. They must go on and levy tribute upon other countries in order that the German people may live as a conquering military caste upon the forced labor of the rest of the world.

We have still more evidence of Nazi designs against America. Former German statesmen, now refugees, tell us that the Nazis plan to conquer the world. Hitler himself, a short time ago, in an attempt to keep America quiet and inactive, told us that the German General Staff, after careful study, had decided that an invasion of America was not feasible. Of course, Hitler may have lied, and the staff may have decided that invasion was feasible. The point is, if an invasion of America was not hoped for, why was the German staff asked to study the matter? No one is simple enough to believe that peaceful inaction would save us, any more than it saved Czechoslovakia, Poland, Norway, Denmark, the Low Countries, or Greece.

The next question is, Can the Nazis harm America? With the British Empire gone, we are hemmed in on all sides. If the Nazis obtain the British Fleet, they preponderate in sea power at once. If not, they will do so in a few years, for they will control almost all the shipyards of the world. South America and all the rest of the world will be forced to trade exclusively with the Nazis, on terms of barter fixed by them, with the threat of invasion to clinch the bargain. America will be cut off from raw materials, as well as markets, and our foreign trade will die. All the gold in Kentucky with be worthless. A depression so deep and so prolonged as to make the last 11 years seem like prosperity will sap our strength and our courage. Our standard of living will inevitably drop. All the time we must keep armed to the teeth, always on the defensive, never knowing when the blitzkrieg will begin. We shall be crushed by the burden of taxation, and made ready for "fifth column" disintegration. To be prepared for instant action, we shall be forced to adopt a dictatorship. Without a single German soldier landed on our shores, we shall be ruined.

Don't take my word for all this. Let an isolationist answer the isolationists. Senator DAVID I. WALSH, on May 15, 1940, submitted a report of his Committee on Naval Affairs, in which he said: "From all the evidence available it appears that the United States can be defeated and conquered without military conquest of continental United States. Without a navy capable of controlling the sea areas against an enemy, an effective blockade against our foreign commerce can be established and maintained at points thousands of miles from our coasts and well beyond aircraft range. Our outlying possessions will be captured and used against us as advance bases. There will be nothing to prevent the establishment of bases, by force if necessary, in this hemisphere, from which, as well as from aircraft carriers, repeated bombing raids can be dispatched against our highly industrialized areas. * * * With the loss of our outlying possessions, our foreign commerce, and subject to continual raids upon our coastal areas, our ultimate defeat is inevitable. It will be only a question of time, depending on how long our national will to further resist will hold out. Without the power to carry the fight to the enemy, there can be no alternative other than subjugation to his wishes." If we lose the aid of Great Britain's Navy, we shall be in the exact position so vividly portrayed by Senator WALSH, for our own Navy will admittedly be inadequate for a two-ocean defense until 1946 or later.

The isolationists spend much time in showing that the Nazis could not send across the ocean airplanes to bomb us or an army on transports to invade us. What of it? The attack will not come in that way. The approach may be through South America and Mexico, or perhaps through Siberia and Alaska. But sooner or later, unless we surrender and become a Nazi slave state, we must fight for our freedom. And then we must fight alone, with the whole world organized against us.

Our only chance to escape war with Nazi Germany is to help England defeat her. There is still a good chance, for Hitler fears to make us a full-fledged enemy and will avoid actual hostilities with us if possible. Only by successfully aiding England to win can we ever return to our old peaceful way of life, with a reasonable Navy and only a small Army. And if we help England and nevertheless she loses, we shall be no worse off than we should have been had we followed the isolationists' advice, for we shall then stand alone face to face with the Nazis, but with an added year or two for preparation.

The third question is raised by the defeatist argument that Britain is lost and American aid useless. The main expounder of this doctrine is Colonel Lindbergh. Ho can he believe that the still powerful British Empire, having full control of the seas, with the active aid of the United States, cannot resist Germany and at the same time believe that after the British Empire has been destroyed and the whole world dominated by the Nazis, the United States alone can successfully resist them? Whether Britain and America can defeat Germany is a military question. Our responsible military leaders say they can. Nothing in Lindbergh's history gives his opinion upon military affairs or international statecraft any greater value than that of "Wrong Way" Corrigan, who duplicated the only feat that ever gave Lindbergh fame. Neither do I consider Herbert Hoover a military authority. If we put earnestly into the cause our great industrial power and furnish England with more and more bombs and bombers, so that she can make life in all Germany the hell that England has borne, I don't believe Germany can take it. The Germans have always been aggressors, and until this war their own country has met no harm since the days of Napoleon. I do not pretend to be any military expert, but though the Germans are brave soldiers I do believe that under that sort of punishment they will quit. I believe they will quit before a single American soldier is asked to land upon the Continent of Europe.

The isolationists are not only defeatists, they are also appeasers. The surprise visit of Rudolf Hess to England has led to new pleas for a "negotiated peace." When did Nazis ever negotiate? When did they ever wish a real peace? When did they ever keep their pledged word? One might as well seek a negotiated peace with a tiger. A peace now would only lead England and America to disband their forces and return to normal life, thus becoming helpless before a new Nazi attack. The Nazi idea of peace is seen in the terms recently proposed by Tokyo. If a peace should be made on any such terms, Germany would be at once the ruler of the world. The only effect of this foolish peace talk is to weaken our morale and help Hitler.

Until recently the only response of the isolationists to the Nazi menace has been a loud snore. But the isolationists have recently taken to shouting that we must arm to the teeth for the defense of America. Theirs is a sudden conversion and baptism into the faith of national defense. But they are new and unwilling converts, embracing the faith only for reasons of political strategy, and are hardly dry behind the ears.

Why should America take their advice in anything? They have been stupidly wrong upon every question ever since the Nazi menace loomed. By international law, for centuries, a citizen of a neutral country may sell munitions to a belligerent and deliver the goods in ships, subject only to the rights of blockade, search, and seizure. The isolationist group all voted for the asinine Neutrality Act, which declared in advance of any war that we surrendered our neutral rights, and forbade any American citizen to sell to any belligerent, even one suddenly and outrageously attacked by a well-prepared aggressor. Instead of a Neutrality Act, it should have been called an act to help bandit nations. Of course such silly legislation could not survive the test of reality, and these restrictions were modified early in the war, but against the protest of all the isolationists. If the isolationists had had their way, we should even now be facing the Nazis alone, without allies or friends, for England would have fallen long ago.

The isolationists opposed the cash-and-carry bill as strongly as they did the lease-lend bill. With two or three exceptions, they opposed enlargement of our Navy, once in 1938 and again in 1940. They opposed the Selective Service Act, which was the only means of raising the necessary large army with speed, fairness, and democracy. Our defenses have been strengthened in the last 2 years, but only against their determined opposition.

Yet these are the men who have the effrontery to assume to direct the course of the American people in this hour of crisis. The real sentiments of the isolationists are expressed by Senator NYE, who told us a few days ago that "the British Empire is done for." And as a dose of soothing sirup for the American people, whom he evidently considers children, he added this, the last word in soporific inanity—"And I don't see how that can hurt the United States particularly."

What is America to do in this crisis? Questions of convoys, of seizing ships and bases, of military and naval aid, are all technical questions which are subordinate to the single main question, which is this: Can the United States afford to let the British Empire be destroyed by the Nazis or the Chinese Republic by the Japanese? Answer that question, and then we shall let our military and naval leaders tell us what must be done to prevent such a disaster. I venture no opinion upon these technical matters, for as to them my opinion is as worthless as that of Senator WHEELER or Colonel Lindbergh. But we must see that Gen. Chang Kai-shek has what he needs, and then he will take care of the half-pint gangsters who fancy that they can conquer the east. And we must see that Britain has whatever it takes, even to the extent of naval and military participation, to make sure that Nazi barbarism does not overwhelm her and then surge against us. Whatever is needed, we must give. America cannot afford, America does not dare, to stand by and see the British Empire overcome by a gang of bandits who morally are savages.

We shall not be depleting our strength by aiding Britain. Our strength lies not in planes and munitions hoarded in warehouses, but in the ever-enlarging productive capacity of factories that turn off planes and bombs from the assembly line every hour of the day. Every bomb dropped on Germany by the British weakens the Nazis and helps our defense.

Let us trust our national leaders, the President and his Cabinet, our admirals and generals around whom are gathered the genuine leaders of the minority party like Wendell Willkie and Col. William J. Donovan. They tell us that we must act quickly and decisively in order to save Britain and thereby to save America. Disunion and apathy are dangerous. They destroyed France and nearly destroyed Britain. The isolationist policy of inaction and stupor would be as fatal to national life as diabetic coma is to individual life. Do we love democracy and the American way of life enough to fight for them? Are we determined to die on our feet rather than live on our knees? If we of 1941 have anything of the spirit of 1776 or 1861 or 1917, there can be but one answer. Have done with this fatuous blindness to obvious danger, this senseless huddling behind our boundaries in shivering hope that the dragon may devour all others and yet pass us by. Let us go forth and meet this Nazi monster, play a man's part in slaying him, and thus bring back to the world peace and decency, religion and civiligation for our children and our children's children.

First- and Second-Class Postmaster Ratings, Fourth District of Alabama

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAM HOBBS

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, more than half of the postmasters serving the offices of the first and second classes in the district I have the honor to represent made grades of over 90 percent on the latest annual inspection.

The Fourth District of Alabama is that district. It has two first- and seven second-class post offices. The postmasters in five out of the nine, earned grades of from 91 to 99.4 percent. With pardonable pride I call the honor roll, as follows:

Piedmont: Harold Sharpe, postmaster, rating 99.4.

Sylacauga: Roe P. Greer, postmaster, rating 95.8.

Talladega: William B. Hardegree, postmaster, and Dexter E. Parks, acting postmaster, rating 95.8.

Jacksonville: J. Thomas Martin, postmaster, rating 91.

Selma: C. Smith Robbins, postmaster, rating 91.

May I challenge any one of you to show such a creditable record made by the postmasters of your district?

It may be that there are other postmasters in the United States with higher records than that earned by Harold Sharpe, but I doubt it. All honor to these excellent servants of the people and their Government, particularly to Harold Sharpe, postmaster of Piedmont, Ala.

Suggested Questionnaire for Poll on the War Issue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ED. V. IZAC

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

LETTER FROM A CONSTITUENT

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks, I include the following letter I received this morning, with its enlightening enclosure:

NEW YORK, May 22, 1941.

Hon. ED. V. IZAC,
United States House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am enclosing you herewith, copy of a letter which I have addressed to Gen. Robert E. Wood, national chairman of the America First Committee, which explains itself.

I sincerely hope that you will at least read this letter through.

Knowing the huge amount of correspondence that you are receiving, this letter calls for no answer, unless you particularly care to respond.

But I do hope that you will at least give its contents careful consideration.

With warm personal regards, believe me,

Sincerely yours,

M. C. MIGEL.

NEW YORK, May 16, 1941.

Gen. ROBERT E. WOOD,
Chairman of the Board, Sears,
Roebuck & Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAR GENERAL WOOD: I happen to be a stockholder in your company, and it also happens that I have two sons of draft age—possibly you will have the patience to read this letter.

I received a communication from your America First Committee, of which you are the national chairman, requesting me to join the committee and to contribute funds for its maintenance—and you emphasize in huge letters the fact that 83 percent of our American people do not want war.

Now, as a matter of fact, nobody in his common senses wants war—if you put the question bluntly to the country, "Do you want war?" You might as well raise your percentage to 100.

However, there are some things worse than war, and more important than physical safety—if life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness means anything—if conscience and humanity and decency mean anything. But, leaving aside our sense of duty and conscience, let us look at the matter from a purely selfish point of view.

It is altogether a matter of presenting the case to the people in a manner that is fair. If you should say to the people of this country, "These are the extreme possibilities as well as the probabilities.

(1) "Hitler and his Axis friends are on record as battling for world domination, and his hatred toward this country is only second to that which he feels toward England.

(2) "'Hitler has adroitly maneuvered to isolate country after country before attacking, and if England falls, the United States would be absolutely isolated—alone and friendless in a Nazi-dominated world—with an almost mathematical certainty of having eventually to battle him or be strangulated economically.

(3) "The present war has demonstrated that mechanized superiority is the controlling factor in winning battles—bravery of a country's people alone being negligible without proper mechanical equipment. The United States having the greatest possible facilities in the world for production of mechanized equipment, does your common sense allow you to believe for a moment that Hitler, astute and conscienceless as he has shown himself to be, would for a moment permit us to continue to produce for years mechanized war equipment that we might use ourselves against him, or make available to other enslaved countries who might endeavor to free themselves?

(4) "If England should fall or we allowed her to fall, her immense shipbuilding facilities, as well as those of France, Germany, Japan, and other dominated countries could, under control of Germany, outbuild the United States in ships in a ratio of two to one (according to experts), which would mean eventually the absolute control of the seas and commerce.

"If Hitler should win this war, no agreement with him as to disarmament or anything else would be worth the paper it is written on.

(5) "Admitting as a fact for argument's sake, that Hitler would or could neither land nor attack us here on our native soil for some years, if we permitted England to fall, with the consequent domination of the seas by the Axis in conjunction with Japan, with full access to raw materials, how long do you suppose it would be before they destroyed the Panama Canal or attacked some South American country, compelling us, through our pledged word to them, or our adherence to the Monroe Doctrine, to engage the Axis away from home to our great disadvantage, and in two oceans at once?

"Even if we did not wish to fight, through their propaganda, hatred, jealousy, and economic attacks, they would eventually so humiliate us that if we had only the backbone of a rabbit, we would resent it with arms—war."

Suppose you or your committee or the Gallup poll put a fair and proper questionnaire to the American people—suppose you say, "although none of us want war, still under the alternatives (as enumerated and based on the foregoing paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5) do you or do you not prefer war, if decided at the proper time by the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States?"

If we know the character and spirit of the American people, you will find that the answer and percentage in the affirmative will astound you and your committee. As a matter of fact, in this connection I might quote from the newsmagazine Time (May 5, 1941) the result of the Gallup poll on the following question:

"If it appeared certain there was no other way to defeat Germany and Italy except for the United States to go to war against them, would you be in favor of the United States going into the war?"

Answer:	Percent
Would favor war	68
Would oppose war	24
Undecided	8

Needless to say, I can neither join your committee nor contribute toward its maintenance.

Very truly yours,

M. C. MIGEL.

P. S.—Kindly take note that this is an open letter.

The Seventy-fifth Anniversary of the National Board of Fire Underwriters

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFFORD DAVIS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow in the city of New York the National Board of Fire Underwriters will celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of its organization. Few people in the country appreciate the far-reaching influence, counsel, service, and usefulness of this national board.

At some later time I expect to outline the help which it has given to the large and small communities in this Nation in the establishment of adequate fire defenses. I shall do this only in order that those interested may know how valuable this service has become. But on today, however, I desire to express my own good wishes to the organization on this important birthday and to speak briefly on its participation in our preparedness program.

A wide variety of problems has naturally arisen in the prosecution of our national-defense program. Problems of industry and of production are acute, but none is more serious than that of conserving the lives of our young men who are called to the service of their country and the materials essential to their training. Solution of problems involving construction and adequate water supply with a proper distribution system and efficient fire-fighting equipment is of the utmost importance in making provision on short notice for housing and training large concentrations of men.

Effective assistance in coping with these problems has been given to the War and Navy Departments by the fire-insurance business through the medium of the National Board of Fire Underwriters. In September 1939 this organization offered its services to the National Government and, upon invitation of the War and Navy Departments, advisory bureaus on fire protection and fire prevention were established in the Construction Division of the War Department and in the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, where engineers taken from the regular staff of the national board are located. Through the National Board of Fire Underwriters, fire-protection engineers employed by fire-insurance boards and bureaus throughout the country are being called upon for service in the field.

Already a large number of Army and Navy properties have been surveyed and reports of conditions found made to the War and Navy Departments with recommendations in respect to fire protection and fire-fighting facilities. This work has not been confined to the continental United States. It has been extended as well to properties in Puerto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands.

In our opinion, it should also be recorded that these services are being performed without cost to the Government. The National Board of Fire Underwriters has undertaken this work under a dollar-a-year contract at considerable expense to the capital stock fire insurance companies that compose its membership, without any wish for reimbursement, but simply a desire to serve the best interests of the country in which we live.

In reciting these facts it should also be said that the action of the National Board of Fire Underwriters at the present time is fully consistent with the record of its services during the first World War. In 1917 it offered its services promptly, as it has done also at this time; in 1917 its services were utilized in the inspection not only of governmental properties, but also private industries that were necessary to the prosecution of the war. It furnished a great deal of industrial data of vital importance. Problems of extraordinary complexity and detail were presented and solved in safeguarding large concentrations of value in foods and other supplies, and as the result of its work the record of that period shows a minimum of disturbance or loss due to fire.

Its recommendations for safeguarding cantonments, supply depots, hospitals, naval properties, warehouses, terminals, and shipyards—its plans for fire protection and prevention were developed with the utmost thoroughness. As a result, when possession of Army cantonments was delivered to those in authority fire losses amounting to less than $3,000 had been sustained in construction valued at more than $100,000,000.

To a greater extent today than ever before wars will be won not alone on the battlefronts, but through the efficiency of services of supply so necessary to our fighting forces. Production of these supplies is of the utmost importance, but unnecessary destruction of production facilities or of supplies that have already come off of the production line may strike a blow at the most vital part of our national-defense program. Conservation of production facilities and supplies is, therefore, a vital part of production itself, and the services in this respect which are being given so freely by the National Board of Fire Underwriters have a value far beyond our ability to estimate.

It is fortunate that we have such an organization to which our country can look in times of stress and which is able to muster its forces so promptly and carry on its work so efficiently for the furtherance of our national-defense program in this time of emergency.

Oregon and 23 Other States of the Union Memorialize Congress To Withdraw From the Field of Gasoline Taxation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER D. ANGELL

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 22, 1941

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks on the subject of Federal taxation of gasoline, I include a resolution adopted recently by the Legislature of my State of Oregon, memorializing the Congress to withdraw from the field of gasoline taxation. Twenty-three other States of the Union have taken similar action. As I have stated to the House on other occasions, Oregon originated the tax on gasoline. We are one of the younger States of the Union and have an extensive road program. We pride ourselves on having constructed and maintained a system of road development equal to any State in the Union, in comparison with our resources and population and territory covered. Unfortunately, the Federal Government owns over 50 percent of the land area of the State of Oregon, which has removed from taxation a very considerable portion of the wealth which otherwise would be available for carrying on State activities.

The tax on gasoline has proven itself to be an admirable tax available to the States and local governments for road construction and maintenance. Many of the States, like my own, have religiously abstained from using any of the tax from gasoline for any purpose other than public highways. Many of the States have incurred large bonded indebtedness on the faith of being able to use tax revenues from gasoline to retire the bonded obligations as well as pay the recurring interest charges. The Federal Government, until recently, held aloof from this field of taxation. There are various tax avenues open to the Federal Government not available to the States and local governments. The Federal Government and the States should, insofar as possible, avoid duplication of taxation upon industries and activities which tend to make the burden inequitable and unjust. The taxes now imposed on gasoline, which is a sales tax, are over 50 percent of the sale price of the commodity, on the average throughout the United States. In some States the burden is considerably heavier. Practically no major industry is as heavily taxed.

This tax falls with particular force upon agricultural communities, because much of the products from the farm must be moved to market by trucks using gasoline. It is true that some of the States in taxing gasoline have given credit to farmers for gasoline used on the farm and not on the highways. No such credit is given by the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I most sincerely urge that we give favorable consideration to the resolution adopted by the State of Oregon, as well as the several other States of the Union, and that not only do we refrain from imposing any additional tax on gasoline, but that steps be taken at once to remove the existing Federal tax thereon so that this one field of taxation so peculiarly available to the States and local governments may be left to them, without interference from the Federal Government.

Under leave heretofore granted, I include as a part of my remarks the resolution adopted by the Oregon Legislature, as well as a statement recently released by the National Grange, bearing upon this whole subject matter.

House Joint Memorial No. 1–XX

Resolution on repeal of Federal gasoline tax

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has imposed a tax upon all sales of gasoline; and

Whereas said tax has been increased rather than removed, as petitioned by this body in previous legislative session; and

Whereas the State of Oregon and the other several States of the Union have already placed as much tax on said gasoline sales as the traffic will legitimately bear, added thereto the Federal tax is untimely and prohibitive and should be immediately removed; and

Whereas the taxation of gasoline sales should logically be left to the exclusive use of the States as a means of providing funds for administration, road building, and relief programs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate jointly concurring therein), That this legislative assembly petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to take immediate steps to remove the Federal gasoline sales tax and that, henceforth, such taxation be left to the exclusive control of the several States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be and he hereby is authorized and directed to forward one copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to each Member of both Houses of Congress, and to the Governors of each of the respective States.

Filed with secretary of state January 30, 1933.

THE FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX—A PENALTY ON THE FARMER'S DILIGENCE

The Federal gasoline tax is not a road tax. It is a general excise, and the revenue it yields is used to finance general governmental functions such as national defense. A fair share of the cost of these general functions, of course, is the responsibility of every citizen throughout the country.

The annual payment toward the cost of general Government made by any individual from this source obviously is measured by the amount of gasoline consumed. Some individuals consume more gasoline than others and consequently their tax payments are greater. Use of the gasoline tax to raise revenue for general Federal governmental purposes accordingly is unsound because the distance a citizen travels on the highways or the extent to which he uses his farm tractor or grain thresher is a very poor measure of his responsibility for the cost of such governmental functions.

A TAX ON TOOLS OF PRODUCTION

Not only have motor vehicles been accepted generally as indispensable to maintenance of an adequate standard of living, but they also are used by a substantial portion of the people in earning their livelihood. To provide themselves with food, clothing, and shelter, salesmen, fishermen, farmers, and others depend upon them. The taxation of their operation through the Federal gasoline tax may be compared to taxation of the carpenter's saw and hammer or taxation of the ribbon clerk's tape measure.

The farmer is the outstanding victim of such discriminatory taxation. It has been estimated by several authorities that the farmers of this Nation account for about one-quarter of its total consumption of motor fuel. The farmer uses gasoline to operate the tractor which he uses extensively for the tilling of the soil, the cultivation and harvesting of his crops, and as the source of motive power for driving other implements. He uses gasoline in the engines that power his thresher and his binder. He uses gasoline in his truck and his automobile to haul products to market. And countless other needs are met through consumption of gasoline in connection with earning a living.

INCREASES FARMER'S COST OF DOING BUSINESS

It is not only the big and prosperous farmers who have mechanized equipment to operate their farms. There is competition among farmers just as there is among businessmen. Each farmer must strive for lower and lower costs of production to compete with his neighbor, and because all of his neighbors have mechanized equipment, he must have it too or abandon his farming. Moreover, the really prosperous farmer is more or less a rarity anyway.

The cost of gasoline, therefore, is an important item in the cost of running a farm, probably more important than it is to nearly any businessman. The increase in the cost of gasoline through the imposition of an additional 1 cent a gallon Federal tax would amount to about 10 percent. The fact that a 10-percent increase in farm production costs is most substantial needs no elaboration to be appreciated by anyone who has even a meager knowledge of farming.

Many States, of course, provide refunds or exemptions in their gasoline tax laws for fuel which is not used on the highways, and the farmers who use gasoline in their agricultural implements therefore need not pay the State taxes. The Federal Government's tax on gasoline, because it is an excise rather than a road tax, makes no provision for such exemptions or refunds. The farmers must pay the Federal tax on every gallon of gasoline they consume irrespective of the purpose for which it is used. Even at the present rate of 1½ cents a gallon, the Federal gasoline tax represents a sales tax of 12 percent. None of the general retail sales taxes in the country, however, exceed 2 percent or 3 percent in rate.

AN EXCESSIVE TAX ON THE FARMER'S GROSS INCOME

In recent years, the Federal Government has been spending hundreds of millions of dollars annually to provide relief for the farmers. In 1941, it is expected such farm subsidies will exceed a billion. The Federal Government thereby has shown an appreciation of the farmer's plight. The 1935 census of agriculture showed that the average gross income per farm in several States was well below $750, and this figure included Government payments to the farmers under farm-relief programs. In these States, an additional 1 cent a gallon gasoline tax on the average farmer using 750 gallons of gasoline a year obviously would be most burdensome. But already he is paying a 1½ cent a gallon Federal gasoline tax, so that an additional 1 cent a gallon tax would increase the burden even further. And the longer and harder the farmer works himself and his machines to improve his income, the more gasoline he consumes and the greater burden of taxation he assumes. Does that sound fair?

States whose legislatures have adopted resolutions memorializing Congress to withdraw from the field of gasoline taxation

State and year resolution adopted:

Alabama	1936
Arkansas	1933
California	1935
Colorado	1935
Connecticut	1937
Delaware	1939
Kentucky	1936
Maine	1935
Maryland	1935
Minnesota	1935, 1937
Montana	1933
Nebraska	1935

States whose legislatures have adopted resolutions memorializing Congress to withdraw from the field of gasoline taxation—Continued

State and year resolution adopted—Con.

New Jersey	1938
New Mexico	1935
New York	1935
North Carolina	1933
Oklahoma	1933
Oregon	1933
Rhode Island	1939
South Carolina	1937
South Dakota	1933, 1935, 1937, 1941
Tennessee	1935
Texas	1935
Virginia	1932

National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. R. E. THOMASON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. R. E. THOMASON, OF TEXAS

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an address delivered by me at the annual convention of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce at Mineral Wells, Tex., on the evening of May 16, 1941:

Mr. Chairman, members of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, and distinguished guests, you have paid me high honor, which I gratefully acknowledge, in inviting me to address you at your annual meeting. It has been my pleasure and privilege to work closely with you before and since I became a Member of the House.

Your chamber is ever awake to the needs of our people and has done inestimable good in bringing to the attention of the State and national legislatures measures designed to benefit not only our section but the country as a whole.

Your letterhead bears the slogan: "West Texas—Raw Materials Capital of the World." This section produces meat, hides, horses, cotton, wool, mohair, oil, grain, potash, quicksilver. One of the first essentials toward national defense is the assembling of stocks of raw materials and strategic minerals. The value of our products cannot be overestimated at any time, and more especially in a period of stress and emergency. I have taken occasion often recently to urge the Federal Government to obtain information on the location of all possible minerals that are needed for defense and to acquire stocks of these materials in quantity.

From year to year you have grown in membership, in influence, in achievement. I predict for you a future of greater attainment in all that is best and highest for the welfare of this Nation.

One of the projects on which we have been working together for the past 6 years is the creation of the Big Bend National Park. In 1935 I introduced a bill in the House authorizing the establishment of this park, which bill was passed the same year.

The Secretary of the Interior and the heads of the National Park Service have been enthusiastic from the first with reference to our getting this area designated as a national park and have rendered willing and valuable cooperation to that end.

For these intervening years we have been trying to raise sufficient funds through private subscription, or the passage of a bill in our Texas Legislature, to purchase the necessary land and have title thereto vested in the United States Government, as the Government has a policy against buying any land for park purposes and could not be prevailed on to deviate from this policy, much as the Interior officials were interested in having the park established.

The passage in the Texas Legislature within the past few days of a bill appropriating $1,500,000 to acquire the land assures, on the signature of the bill by the Governor, the creation of this park as soon as the area is turned over with clear title to the Federal Government. Thereafter the park will be administered by the National Park Service and all necessary improvements made.

I shall ask Congress for necessary funds for this purpose just as soon as title is vested in the Government.

Geologically, as well as botanically, this area offers most unusual interest, and in portions of the park the scenery is outstanding, as the region of the Santa Helena Canyon. I am sure it will bring thousands of tourists to our State every year.

Much credit is due the Big Bend Park Association for its diligence in this cause and the successful outcome.

It is with a feeling of inadequacy to my assignment that I stand here this evening in the place of that great and sincere man who had been asked to make the principal address at this meeting. Morris Sheppard's sudden and untimely death has taken from us a beloved and trusted friend, and from his State and his country a leader who can ill be spared at a time when we face a greater crisis than in 1917. As chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, he piloted important national-defense legislation upon which this country is depending today to lead us safely through the present emergency and to preserve to us those liberties for which our forefathers fought and died.

Senator Sheppard was the dean of Congress, having been elected to the House in 1902. During those nearly 40 years he worked with unflagging industry for all that he conceived to be for the best interests of our people. He was absent from sessions of Congress so seldom during his entire incumbency that we may say his attendance on the Senate floor was 100 percent.

Throughout his long and valuable service, I wonder if anyone can guess how many people he helped individually. No one was too poor or obscure to claim his consideration, and none who came to his door for aid was ever turned aside. While giving himself, his thought, and his time to these activities, which, after all, are more or less incidental to a Senator's legislative work, he gave a full measure of study to the great issues before this country, and cast his vote without fear or favor, in accordance with his most profound convictions.

The memory of his blameless life and lofty ideals will be inspiritation to us he left behind to lead lives of nobler purpose.

In the words of Shakespeare, whom he studied in all his spare time:

"His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that Nature might stand up and say to all the world, 'this was a man.'"

The question today of most vital concern to us is adequate and speedy national defense, with aid to Britain as our first line of defense. We must have an Army, Navy, and Air Corps second to none and able to meet any aggressor anywhere. We do not at this time have the largest Army in the world, but I hope and believe we will soon have the best.

Let it be understood at the outset that I favor not only leasing and lending but, if necessary, giving to England all the munitions and supplies we can spare her that would not weaken our own defense. She is fighting our fight tonight—and what a brave fight she is making.

Under the direction of that very able officer, Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, the War Department is working early and late to meet the emergency. I feel you may be interested in having some of the figures on production and the number of men under arms, and I give these data briefly.

The strength of the Army today is 1,290,400 officers and men, the largest roster we have ever carried in a time of peace. Of these 485,900 are in the Regular Army, 290,500 are in the National Guard, and 469,000 are Selective Service trainees. Some 45,000 Reserve officers are on active duty, distributed among the troops.

The total strength of the Army—men in uniform, equipped and housed—on July 1 will be 1,418,000. That is 5 times the size of the Army we had 1 year ago. When Hitler attacked western Europe we had a bare 213,000 men and 14,000 officers.

The big increase has been in the last few months. In September of last year we had only 380,000 men, but that number jumped to over 1,000,000 in 6 months; and 25,000 new men are coming in every week. The 485,900 of these men in the Regular Army are all volunteer 3-year enlistments.

Texas stands at the very top of the roster of the States in the number of volunteers who have enlisted in the Regular Army during the present emergency. From July 1, 1940, through February 1941, 24,248 Texans have joined the colors, as against 18,432 from Pennsylvania and 17,705 from New York, which States are second and third on the list, both having much greater population than Texas.

Texans in the land and naval forces on April 4, 1941: Army, 50,237; Navy, 12,221; National Guard, 13,708; Marines, 2,761; Coast Guard, 89.

In the selective service Texas has 827,201 registered; number of volunteers in class 1–A, after physical examination, plus volunteers already inducted, 12,832; and number inducted to March 31, 20,936.

More than one-tenth of our great Army is now in our State. By July 1 we will have nearly 200,000 men in Texas. Most of these men are in west and southwest Texas.

Time will not permit a break-down by posts, cantonments, and fields, of which there are 22 in our State. The following figures are given as the approximate number that will be stationed at the camps throughout west Texas on July 1: San Antonio, 30,000; El Paso, 28,000; Mineral Wells, 8,600; Abilene, 19,000; Brownwood, 29,000; San Angelo, 1,100; Marfa, 1,000; and Wichita Falls, 3,000.

Early this month the United States Navy comprised 227,089 enlisted men and 21,644 officers, including Regulars and Reserve officers on active duty. The United States Marine Corps, officers and men, was 51,165 strong. That makes a grand total of 299,898.

I do not believe I should be indulging in excessive exaggeration if I gave it to you as my considered opinion that the Navy and Marine Corps are today 300,000 strong. That figure represents, of course, far and away the largest naval personnel that has ever served the colors in time of peace.

We are building an adequate two-ocean navy. It is second largest of the world's navies and none of us can guess as to how great it will have to become to insure full protection of American rights and interests throughout the world.

We have at Corpus Christi a great and expanding naval air station costing $26,500,000. Destroyers, landing boats, mine sweepers, and wooden and steel submarine chasers are being constructed in Texas shipyards, one order alone, that for destroyers, totaling in excess of $100,000,000.

Defense funds allocated to Texas are as follows:

Estimated value of contracts for matériel awarded to firms having plants in Texas, between July 1, 1940, and February 28, 1941, $133,009,661.

Estimated cost of construction projects to be built in Texas, including equipment of toluol plant, seven camps and one plant make up the total of $126,015,370.

Chief among these are one ordnance plant, 2 aircraft assembly plants, 11 camps or comparable troop-housing developments, 1 harbor-defense project, 2 storage depots, and 7 airfields.

Not included is the amount of money to be spent for food and subsistence by the troops stationed in the State.

Not included is the amount of money to be spent by troops stationed in Texas from their pay and allowances.

Recently I was a guest at the official opening of the new powder plant at Radford, Va. It was ready for operation 3 months ahead of schedule. This plant has a capacity of producing 800,000 pounds of smokeless powder in a single day. This plant will produce in 3 days as much as Hercules Powder Co., one of the largest in the country, produces in a year.

The Charlestown, Ind., plant has begun production and will have a capacity of 400,000 pounds per day.

You have been hearing little but bad news, but I want to tell you something good about the progress of the program.

The War Department is now making a survey to establish an eligible list of 28 more cantonments if and when needed. In making the awards, I feel sure Texas will be given just and fair consideration.

No phase of our defense preparations interests the people more intensely than airplane production. Mr. Knudsen, Chairman of the Office of Production Management, stated recently before my Committee on Military Affairs that 1,214 planes and 3,900 motors were produced in March, and predicted that this figure would be doubled by next year.

The April figures are: Planes manufactured, 1,427; 1,000 machine tools and 10 tanks being produced daily.

There have been awarded 15,000 Army contracts and 100,000 subcontracts.

There are in service at this time in the Army and Navy approximately 9,000 first-line planes of various types.

The production figures for April are 80 percent above those of last December.

I would say that second in public interest are tanks. The light tanks, weighing 13 tons, are being built at the rate of more than 100 per month. The medium tank, which is a very powerful weapon weighing 26 tons, has been redesigned following lessons of war in Flanders and France.

The need for ever larger tanks has been shown by the German campaign in Greece, where 40-ton tanks were used in both mountainous and flat areas. This country is building a supertank of 60 tons. What the limit may be no one can tell, but one thing is sure, no country will excel us in the size, efficiency, or the maneuverability of tanks, which have played such a vital part both in offense and defense in this World War.

We have a relatively small standing army in this country, officered by Regular Army personnel. We have in emergencies always pinned our faith on our great civilian army composed of the National Guard and the Officers' Reserve Corps. I favor amending the National Defense Act so that the National Guard and Reserve officers shall receive the treatment to which they are entitled and also afforded incentive and opportunity for promotions.

The Thomason Act should be amended so that more young Reserve officers would be given opportunity to obtain permanent commissions in the Regular Army. I undertake to say that the great majority of the young officers under this law are equally as fine and capable as those who graduate from West Point.

More than 8,000 young Reserve officers from our senior R. O. T. C. schools will be called to duty on July 1, and I predict that Texas A. and M. College will head the list.

Since the world is rapidly becoming an armed camp, there is no choice but for us to train our boys as soldiers, and it is best to begin early. And since interest in military training is present in almost every high school boy, and each year more schools throughout the country make applications for R. O. T. C. units, I believe we should make arrangements for a material enlargement of our R. O. T. C. program, which would thus become one of the foundation stones of our military strength.

The program right now, instead of being expanded, has been curtailed, for the reason that the Regular Army officers needed to head these units are given other assignments considered more vital to national defense.

There are 529 applications for junior and senior R. O. T. C. units now on file with the War Department, and I have for a long time been urging their approval. Every high school, college, and university in the country that can meet the requirements should have an R. O. T. C. unit, and I shall urge appropriations to that end.

One of the problems now before my committee concerns amendments to the selective-service law. There is a great deal of sentiment throughout the country in favor of reducing the ages from the present limits between 21 and 35 years to a lower entrance limit of 18 years and upper of 25 years, giving the selectee the right to choose the year he will serve.

Perhaps we are not quite ready for this change, and the present law should be given a thorough trial. There have been many inequalities and some injustice in the administration of this act. Draft boards have made different rulings on the same state of facts, and there should be more uniformity.

Since we are to have compulsory military training for 5 years, and probably permanently, so far as we can see at this time, I feel friendly to the suggestion of reducing the age limits. Younger men are more susceptible to discipline and training and make better soldiers. They could get their year's training immediately on leaving school or college and before getting established in a job. Industry would also experience less disturbance.

I am also convinced that medical and dental students should be permitted to finish their school work before being called into service. Skilled workers in munitions plants should be deferred.

I have felt from its inception that the C. C. C. has been one of the most worthy and useful agencies created under this administration. It has built men as well as many enduring works. From the nature of the employment offered, the enrollees were taken into the open country and given out-of-door work. This was especially beneficial to the young men from crowded city areas, many of whom were underweight and came from homes of the underprivileged.

One-sixth of the men now in the C. C. C. are within the draft-age limits. How the draft applies to these men has not as yet been settled but from the best information I can obtain most of these enrollees are given exemption until they have served their allotted term in the C. C. C.

Now that a grave emergency is upon us and our security depends on speediest possible defense, I believe these boys should be immediately put into training that will fit them to take their places in defense industries. On the output of our factories depends the fate of democratic government in the world, and nothing should be left undone to see that maximum production is reached—and reached soon.

Those C. C. C. boys of draft age should not be deferred, but all should be inducted into the service.

The matter of strikes is causing gravest concern among our people, and I have received numerous telegrams and letters advising that the sternest measures be employed to end them.

Well, you and I believe that no individual interest whatsoever should be permitted to slow or hamper this program on which we have embarked, and to the success of which we have dedicated our means and our toil.

It is fitting that mediation and conciliation should be called into the picture and given a fair chance to settle the controversy. This has been done with very satisfactory results quite recently, as with the Allis-Chalmers and the soft-coal miners. There are 400,000 soft-coal miners in the United States. One can then appreciate the magnitude of the accomplishment in realizing what an army has been put back to work in these key industries.

One hesitates to mention legislation to compel a body of workmen to follow a certain procedure or to desist from certain action. The old school maxim that "he who governs himself is governed best" makes strong appeal to all right-thinking people. But where the gravity of the situation confronting this country places speed in production as the price of survival of liberty and democracy, then both labor and capital must settle their differences without stopping that work on which our lives and our safety depend. No personal benefit can be put above our country's welfare.

I feel hopeful, however, that these disputes will lessen. I know that the great rank and file of labor is behind this program, and the labor of Texas has not been encumbered with that reprehensible leadership that has, in many instances, caused righteous resentment among our people, and has cast reflection at times on great bodies of labor in other sections.

The great body of labor is patriotic. They are sending their sons to the service, as well as their employers are. Some of the recent trouble has been provoked by Communist leaders, and they ought to be locked up, and all aliens illegally in this country should be deported, including Harry Bridges and all his ilk. I hope and believe that mediation will solve the problem; but if not, then I favor appropriate legislation along the lines of the railway mediation law, which has worked so successfully. National defense must be paramount to every other consideration, whether it be labor, capital, or agriculture.

Making the tools with which to do the job is the first essential in modern warfare, and it is becoming increasingly apparent that men must be trained in this work by the thousands, to the end that our output of machines, arms, and munitions may reach the point where this Nation leads all nations of the world in production of armament.

I hope and believe it will not be necessary to send an expeditionary force to Europe in this conflict. This war will be won by Britain with the help of American factories, American machines, American labor, American ideas and ideals—provided there is delivery.

One of our businessmen recently declared this a Nation on wheels. A Berlin editor came back with: "But wheels can't cross the ocean." This brings us to the subject of convoys, which is being discussed throughout the length and breadth of the land and in Congress. The question brings bitter divisions among our people, and every day I receive letters and telegrams on both sides of the proposal.

So far Congress has not given the matter consideration, nor has the President made a statement as to whether he deems it necessary that our Navy be used to guard the supplies which we promised Britain to aid her in winning this war. It is possible that patrols the President has ordered to duty may prove sufficiently effective to get these supplies into English hands, and that this plan will be given time to show what results can be accomplished.

The American people have already taxed themselves in the prodigious sum of $7,000,000,000 to help Britain against the dictators, who seek not only destruction of the British Empire but democracy wherever it exists—and that means us, and don't you forget it.

Tremendous as our national debt has become, and heavy as our taxes are at this time, more taxes must be levied and vastly greater hardships endured than have been known in our lifetime. Sacrifice, toil, and unity of purpose can alone achieve the results to which we have set our faces.

I favor material reduction in all nondefense appropriations and a gradual working of such activities into the defense program, so far as it is possible to do so.

The American people will never consent that their sacrifices shall be made in vain and that the ships bearing our supplies shall go to the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean, instead of the shores of that island which bleeds from wounds inflicted by the archcriminal Nazis, but which is resolved to conquer or die.

The matter of convoys then must be left to future determination, and I am frank to say I do not know whether or not the President will recommend this action, or whether Congress will act favorably should he do so.

But the issue is clear—England loses without our help—and not token help, but more and ever more help—and if she is to win, she absolutely must have those things we can send her across the Atlantic. To see that they get there then is our problem, and it must be solved, or our efforts are vain, our money wasted, and we are left with the prospect of facing alone those powers that speak only the language of bombs in dealing with the nations of the world.

If it develops that there is no way to get supplies and munitions to Britain, who is also making our fight, except to convoy, then I say convoy. Regardless of what it costs, it is the best insurance policy we can buy.

If Hitler should win this war—and I disregard Mussolini, for he is but a corpse held up by Hitler's hands—he would be undisputed master of Europe, a large part of Asia, and Africa. His policy of "divide and conquer," which he has applied in every instance to this time when he has attacked a nation, would be directed to this hemisphere, and his propaganda machine—already working overtime here—would go to every length to foment internal strife among the people of the United States, as well as our neighbors to the South.

If we value our way of life, our freedom of speech, freedom of the press, our heritage of liberty which has come down to us from the revered founders of this Government, we will awake from our dream of security and the comfortable idea that isolation is still possible, and prepare to meet the most unscrupulous, the most inhuman, the most deadly enemy that has ever arisen to threaten the safety, if not the life, of every man who dwells under a free government.

We must prepare to meet him and to aid in destroying his power ere it be used to destroy us. For, believe me, he would crush us if he could, as he has crushed under his iron heel of despotism the free peoples of Europe. His puppets have but lately declared that the United States is a 100-percent enemy, and with Herr Hitler this would call for 100-percent extinction.

If England goes down under the merciless blows he rains daily on her women and children, as well as her docks and factories, then we are next, and none of us need turn aside from the prospect, as a chicken that puts his head under his wing in face of danger and believes he is safe.

Aside from our natural and altruistic wish to hold up the hands of all democracies who have defied the totalitarian juggernaut, the necessity of self-preservation demands that we insure final victory for Britain and the brave men of conquered countries who have escaped to fight at her side. If she loses this fight, we shall find ourselves encircled with enemies that know no law but the law of the jungle. We will unite as one man to meet this threat to our lives and our sacred institutions. We will give of our work and our treasure, and if need be, our lives to the end that our Nation may live to fulfill her great destiny among the peoples of the world and that democracy shall not perish. Though now it lies prone in many lands under the lash of the most powerful and ruthless dictator this world has ever known, it shall, with our help and encouragement, live again.

Eighteenth District American Legion of Texas Urges Unhampered Defense Program

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EUGENE WORLEY

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

RESOLUTION BY EIGHTEENTH DISTRICT AMERICAN LEGION OF TEXAS

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have just received a resolution passed by the Eighteenth District American Legion of Texas, recently assembled in convention at Amarillo, Tex., which is set out below.

Because this resolution springs from one of the most loyal and patriotic groups in all America, and because the sentiments expressed therein are shared by many others in the United States, I wish to direct the attention of the Members of Congress to this expression of genuine loyalty and patriotism from men whom I am distinctly proud to represent in the Halls of Congress.

The resolution follows:

Be it remembered that the Eighteenth District American Legion of Texas in convention assembled in the city of Amarillo, Tex., at its spring session, April 19 and 20, 1941, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolution IX

"Whereas this organization is composed of men who know what war means to our Nation, including its horrible details, and are each individually interested in living in a nation where peace, liberty, and the pursuit of individual happiness is our principal wish and desire; that we believe in the principles of democracy as we know it in America; that we believe in the entire principles of free speech, right to handle our own affairs as free men, including the right to operate our own businesses or join together in any organization for the promotion of our mutual welfare as individuals or as collective organization without the interference of Government function so long as we pursue such actions and conduct under the principles for which this Government was founded; that we believe in the sovereignty of the individual, State, and Nation, as we understand the principles of this, the greatest democracy of all time; yet, we as citizens of the United States of America, and as members of the American Legion and of this organization (the Eighteenth District American Legion of Texas), believe that the time has come in America when the sovereignty of the Nation, as such, must be the primary interest of all of us who love the principles this Nation represents; we believe that interest of the individual who is engaged in the production of materials of war, which the National Government has set in motion, is not superior to the rights, liberties, interests, and financial affairs of those young Americans who have been called to the colors of our Nation to prepare to defend the Nation against those who might assault us within the very near future; that the interest of the individual who will gain financially from the production or manufacture of these implements of warfare is not superior to the interest of the Nation and the young manhood of America now training to use such implements; we, therefore, believe that those individuals in labor organization and the ownership of manufacturing industries should be caused to realize the seriousness of the international relations of our Nation and the necessity for the unhampered completion of our defense program as started by Congress and our President; we believe that much of the delay, strikes, and violence that has been evident in recent months is propagated by subversive elements that have been infiltrated into our country for the particular purpose of delaying, hindering, and stopping the production of these implements of warfare and the delay of our other preparatory efforts toward preserving our democracy, which we feel will be facing us in the immediate future; we believe that our public officials should be aroused to the extent of taking over, if necessary, the production of our defense program and to handle harshly those who would interfere; and in this respect we would offer our services to our Nation in any way we might be able to assist properly to handle such necessary action, to the end that we may promote the cause of liberty, justice, freedom, and democracy, all other interests (personal and financial) notwithstanding: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this convention go on record as above indicated, and that as much publicity as possible be given to the matter herein contained in order that the public may be aroused to a realization of the situation as we believe it to be at this time, to the end that action be had without delay as herein indicated, and our public officials responsible for action be delivered copies of this resolution, including our Congressmen, Senators, and our State and national Legion organizations."

Respectfully submitted this date first above mentioned.

LEWIS M. GOODRICH,
Resolutions Committee.
HERSHEL E. MILLER,
MAYNARD DRAKE.

Postal Employees Merit Benefits of Longevity Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, the idea of longevity pay for postal employees is the age-old application of the principle of rewarding faithful and honest service.

It should be distinctly understood that it is in no way a mere increase in salary but is in reality a systematic method of advancing the salary of postal employees according to their length of service.

When it is realized that since 1925 there has been no salary reclassification for postal employees and that meanwhile organized labor has made marked progress in securing pay increases in many trades and crafts, it is only practicing the age-old virtue of being just to the thousands of post-office employees to adopt at this time the longevity legislation providing increases based on faithful service for a stated length of time.

The Post Office Service in the United States has been a criterion for many years. The vast number of postal workers are skilled and educated and are constantly kept alert by the rigid requirements of their work which demand that efficiency ratings must be maintained at a high level.

With postal revenues reaching an all-time high, as evidenced by a recent report of the Postmaster General, it is interesting to note that the total income for January 1941, of $67,882,760, as compared to January 1940, was in excess of $4,000,000. The last fiscal year, according to the Postmaster General, netted a postal surplus of over $18,500,000.

With such an army of faithful and efficient workers as comprises the postal employees of America, I am confident that Congress should give serious consideration to revising pay schedules in view of the fact that for 16 years no attention has been given to this important branch of the Government service.

It is a known fact that the upward trend in living costs has attracted the attention of our Government and that marked increases have occurred in many of the every-day commodities of life.

Postal employees and their families with every other American citizen are feeling the effects of the increase in cost of living and the heavy taxes that are necessary to carry the burden of maintaining an adequate national defense. This is an additional reason among the several advanced in support of the longevity bill.

In conclusion, let us remember that the greatest benefit from this legislation will be reflected in the stimulus to the initiative and the morale of every postal employee who is now facing a stationary pay level after he has reached his highest automatic grade, usually attained in the first 5 or 10 years of service. This rank injustice to the great army of loyal and faithful postal workers in America must be corrected and the remedy is the prompt enactment of the longevity bill.

Florida Ship Canal Again

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALFRED F. BEITER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, the Florida ship-canal project again claims the attention of a few Members of this body, for the Rivers and Harbors Committee voted 11 to 8 in favor of the canal, with several of the majority members reserving the right to oppose it on the floor.

When the Senate in March 1936 rejected the proposal to put up $12,000,000 more for the Florida canal project it was thought that the last had been heard of this enterprise. But here it is up again on a favorable report of the House committee.

The assertion that opposition to the completion of the project is that of selfish interest suggests that some facts rather than fancies relative to the situation may not be amiss.

Since the project was first proposed it has been a subject of sharp controversy in which leading citizens of Florida have been involved. Persons of responsibility have declared the proposed canal economically unjustified; they have asserted that it would impose on the State of Florida burdensome expenses of construction and maintenance of bridges and other adjuncts to the waterway. Geologists have reported that such a canal would contaminate underground water, would make it brackish, and so would destroy sources of potable supply and would have a bad effect on the agriculture of the State. Besides, officials of water transportation have repeated that they would adhere to their earlier declarations that they would not use the completed canal. The Board of Engineers for rivers and harbors reports that the reasonable assured present and prospective benefits from a canal across Florida do not establish the economic justification for the large expenditures necessary for its construction. All these arguments against the canal may be waived and there yet remains one indubitable fact that should condemn the project at this time—the fact that the proposed waterway is not a necessity.

Construction of the canal is desired at this time by three groups—some politicians who would benefit by the patronage it would give them, some contractors and innumerable political hangers-on who would get a bite at huge Federal and smaller State appropriations, and some of that part of the public that has not awakened from the dream that the way to make people prosperous is to throw away their money.

Why divert the $200,000,000 that the canal would cost and labor so vital to the production of items urgently needed for defense to the construction of a project which will not be available until 1947? The United States will need every dollar and every man it has in order to produce the ships, the airplanes, the tanks, the guns, and the food that are now and will be required of it.

If the canal is built, its cost will be paid by men and women who can least afford to pay for it. This every Member of this body knows and against those of them who seek to put the canal project through, not against those who oppose the scheme, will lie a justifiable accusation of selfishness in striving to lay on the backs of an already overtaxed people a still heavier load, merely that there may be created more material for the construction and repair of political fences.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the construction of the canal for two reasons; first, I have never been able to have anyone explain to me the necessity for the canal; and second; I believe there is a great hazard to the fresh-water supply of the Florida Peninsula in this project. I have read with a great deal of interest the testimony presented to the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors back in 1937 and apparently some of the proponents do not understand agricultural conditions and necessities in the Florida Peninsula. They do not seem to realize that while Florida has a heavy annual rainfall, 80 percent of it falls during 4 months of the year, and that it must be stored up in the ground for use during the remaining 8 months. One of the greatest crimes committed in Florida during the past 10 years was the creation of hundreds of drainage districts so that today many areas have been so thoroughly drained that the land is practically valueless for agricultural purposes.

If the traffic through this canal will be as heavy as assured by the proponents, a little simple arithmetic indicates that due to drawbridges being up to allow boats to go through, the main highways and railroads will be closed more than 12 hours out of the 24 to allow the passage of boats. With the heavy traffic to and from Florida, both by rail and road during 6 or 7 months of the year, it seems that this would be a tremendous handicap to both the highways and railroads, if they were blocked over 50 percent of the time due to drawbridges.

One of the most ridiculous features of the canal, which does not seem to have been stressed is the fact that it is proposed to cut 27 miles out into the open

Gulf of Mexico in order to reach a navigable depth in the Gulf of 30 feet. It is proposed to build a breakwater on the south side of this cut, which is the shore side. Inasmuch as the cut would run southwesterly from the mouth of the canal, and the most damaging winds are 3- and 4-day northwesters, which, striking broadside, would fill the cut in very few days. I am reliably informed that it costs the Government $385,000 every 2 years to maintain a short cut at the entrance to Tampa Harbor. Based on these figures, what would it cost to maintain a 27-mile unprotected cut out in the open Gulf? I believe the maintenance of this cut would amount to considerably more than any saving that could ever be made to water-borne commerce at present coming through the Florida Straits.

There are, of course, a few business interests, especially wholesalers who supply towns north of the canal, who were formerly opposed to the canal, who are not expressing themselves publicly, due to the black-listing of these wholesalers for their former canal activities.

I believe that St. Petersburg is the only town in south Florida which has advocated the building of the canal, and they, of course, believe that if the canal is constructed they will attract all of the yachts and tourist traffic from Miami and Palm Beach by having St. Petersburg made accessible to such small craft.

For the privilege of expending $200,000,000 of your money, and your grandchildren's money, in building a canal of no economic or commercial value, they would destroy God's most bountiful gift to Florida; that is, its important water-bearing formation of Ocala limestone. No amount of money could ever replace it. The damage to their growers, municipalities and business houses could be measured only in billions.

Great Lakes–St. Lawrence Seaway

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

RESOLUTION OF THE MICHIGAN TRUCKING ASSOCIATION

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I present for the RECORD the position taken by the common carrier in Michigan, the Michigan Trucking Association, toward the proposed Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway. This great organization, in connection with the transportation of goods as a common carrier, takes the position that the completion of the seaway would be of very great benefit to the entire Middle Western section and the Great Lakes area of the Nation. The extension of commerce, its aid to national defense, its potential reduction in the cost of the transportation of goods both of the farm and of the factory, will stimulate and increase commerce and serve for the benefit of a very large portion of the people of this country.

Those who oppose completion of this seaway on the ground that its cost is prohibitive and that it would amount to $1,000,000,000 are grossly in error and not in accordance with the estimates furnished by the engineers of this Government. The actual cost to the United States will be approximately $200,000,000 when the sale of power generated incident to the construction of the seaway is credited against the total cost.

RESOLUTION TO THE MICHIGAN MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS FROM THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE MICHIGAN TRUCKING ASSOCIATION

Whereas the Congress of the United States is soon to consider enabling legislation to set up machinery which will make possible the deepening of the approximately 48-mile bottleneck in the St. Lawrence River; and

Whereas the construction of the St. Lawrence channel, as proposed by the plans now before Congress, will link the Middle West and the Atlantic, and will enable the Great Lakes States to make their full contribution to the present defense needs of our Nation and to participate in the post-war program of rehabilitation; and

Whereas our national defense requires full utilization of the construction potentialities of our 21 active shipyards on the Great Lakes; and

Whereas a deepening of the St. Lawrence channel could be completed in time to aid the present defense program and reliable engineering surveys have approved the feasibility of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway and forecast a benefit to the entire Nation; and

Whereas a deep waterway from the great industrial State of Michigan and the middle western section of our Nation, which produces more agricultural commodities and more industrial production than any other section of the country, is vital to our Nation; and

Whereas the Great-Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway is not only a defense measure, but also will provide a most economical method of transportation for the industrial, agricultural, and mining commodities of the Middle West to the markets of America and the world: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Board of Governors of the Michigan Trucking Association, representing the operators of thousands of commercial motor vehicles in Michigan, That we respectfully request the Michigan Members in the Congress of the United States to enact legislation enabling the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway project at the earliest possible time; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of the Congress of the United States from the State of Michigan.

Respectfully submitted.

BOARD OF GOVERNORS,
MICHIGAN TRUCKING ASSOCIATION,
By D. B. SMITH, Manager.

Approved May 15, 1941.

Development of the Merchant Marine Vital to National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WINDER R. HARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND, OF VIRGINIA

Mr. HARRIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by the Honorable SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND, Representative in Congress from the First District of Virginia and chairman of the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, on the occasion of the observance of National Maritime Day in Washington, D. C.:

Today, more than ever in the past, America needs ships upon the seas. The World War pointed the way but we learned the lesson only in part. We soon forgot. We allowed our merchant marine to become obsolescent and well-nigh obsolete. For many years we ignored the admonition of President Wilson, who said:

"To speak plainly, we have grossly erred in the way in which we have stunted and hindered the development of our merchant marine. * * * It is necessary for many weighty reasons of national efficiency and development that we should have a great merchant marine. * * * It is high time we repaired our mistake and resumed our commercial independence on the seas."

This message of our last war President was in complete accord with the counsel of our first war President, the great Washington, whose prophetic vision saw far into the future and whose words of wisdom become more hallowed as time rolls on. In one of his first messages to the Congress, he warned us that:

"We should not overlook the tendency of war to abridge the means, and thereby at least enhance the price, of transporting productions to their proper markets."

Washington said:

"I recommend it to your serious reflections how far and in what mode it may be expedient to guard against embarrassments from these contingencies by such encouragement to our own navigation as will render our commerce less dependent on foreign bottoms which may fail us in the very moments most interesting to both these great objects."

Theodore Roosevelt knew the needs of the Nation in times of peace and war. Hear him in one of his messages to Congress:

"To the spread of our trade in peace and the defense of our flag in war a great and prosperous merchant marine is indispensable. We should have ships of our own and seamen of our own to convey our goods to neutral markets, and in case of need, to reinforce our battle line."

Let us invoke the spirit of the martyred McKinley, who knew the humiliation which we suffered in 1898 when we had not American ships or seamen adequate for war, when we had to search the ports of Europe for transports and colliers, when we bought war vessels abroad, when we had to enlist landsmen and foreign seamen to man our ships of war, and when returns show that one-third of our naval crews were foreigners. If the countries of which these foreigners were nationals had favored Spain, we would have been short of men and ships.

President McKinley spoke from the travail of trying hours when he said:

"Our national development will be one-sided and unsatisfactory as long as the remarkable growth of our inland industries remains unaccompanied by progress upon the seas. There is no lack of constitutional authority for legislation which shall give to this country maritime strength commensurate with its industrial achievements and with its rank among the nations of the earth.

"We must encourage our merchant marine. We must have more ships. They must be under the American flag, built and manned and owned by Americans. They will not only be profitable in a commercial sense; they will be messengers of peace and amity wherever they go."

Today the cry is ships, more ships, and yet again more ships. That call comes now from fighting freemen to whom liberty is yet dearer than life, who prefer death to slavery.

That call shall not go unanswered. Freemen shall not forsake the free. Ships shall be sent. The liberties of the world shall yet be saved by ships.

The Congressional Record Should Be in Every High School in America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL T. CURTIS

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, it was back in 1789 that Thomas Jefferson said:

Whenever the people are well-informed, they can be trusted with their own government; whenever things get so far wrong as to attract their notice, they may be relied on to set them right.

I have that thought in mind this afternoon as I introduce a bill to change the number of CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS that Members of Congress are allowed from the present allotment of 68 to one sufficient to enable them to send the RECORD to all high schools and public libraries in their districts, in addition to the number now provided.

I think that it is fair to say that a very, very small percent of the voters of the United States have ever seen the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Yet the people are the stockholders or owners of America. They should be familiar with the proceedings and the actions of their trustees in Washington. The schools of America should not only study about the Government of the United States but they should study the Government of the United States. I contend that it will not only make better schools but it will make a better Government if the students of America are constantly studying the daily record of our proceedings in this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the question may be asked, How can the schools of our country use the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? I have given some thought to that subject, and I am convinced that there are many ways in which the high schools of America can make good use of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Here are some of them:

1. As a geography project, the instructor could have his class chart and classify the votes on important issues over a period of several months on a sectional basis to determine what effect geography has upon the political trends. An example of this would be to prove or disprove that Representatives from coal-producing areas work and vote against hydroelectric projects. Another example would be the charting up of the geographical effect upon political issues, such as our foreign policy and our attitude toward war.

2. Classes in literature might collect and compile the prayers of the Chaplain of the House and of the Senate for their literary value.

3. History students might be assigned the task of checking all speeches in Congress that made any reference to historical documents to determine whether or not the Congressmen were historically correct in their references.

4. Classes in literature could compile, identify, as to title and authorship, all poetry quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

5. Similar activities with reference to prose quotations could be undertaken by the classes in literature.

6. Each student could be required to record and tabulate the votes of his own Congressman and Senators.

7. Various bookkeeping projects could be undertaken by mathematical classes involving appropriation bills passed by the Congress. I realize that this suggestion calls for wisecracks about the impossibility of keeping track of Federal expenditures. The youth of America better keep track of these expenditures because they, and their posterity, are going to have to pay the bills.

8. Classes in government could read and analyze the debate on both sides of the current controversial issues, as the RECORD came to them day by day and then take their own votes based upon their study of the debate.

9. The class could follow the procedure as suggested in paragraph 8, but in taking their vote they would sit as judges of the debate, as to its effectiveness or lack of effectiveness.

10. The classes in government could have a special group that studied the procedure and rules of Congress so that they could interpret to the others the various motions, points of order, ruling of the Chair, and other parliamentarian situations.

11. Classes in literature could prepare news articles, including headlines, of the proceedings in Congress as taken directly from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

12. Another very effective writing project would be the writing of editorials based upon the classes' news stories of the previous day.

13. After an issue had been studied, directly from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, essays might be written on the subject, Why I Believe That My Congressman Voted Correctly, or Why I Believe That My Congressman Voted Incorrectly.

14. As a mathematics project the class could determine the percentage of the votes for and against the bill, the number absent, the number who did not vote, and the number of excused absences.

15. Summaries of the views of students on either side of controversial issues could be written and the best summaries published in local papers.

16. Classes in government could check every reference to the Constitution of the United States made in debates in Congress, refer to that section in the Constitution, and determine whether or not the speaker was correct in his application.

17. After the debate and vote on an issue of wide importance had been studied by a class from its original source, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the class could have an informal discussion on this subject, of whether or not the newspapers gave to the public the most vital and important facts pertaining to the legislation enacted.

18. A similar discussion as suggested in paragraph 17 could be had with reference to the work of the news broadcasters and radio commentators.

19. Students in business and agricultural courses could be required to collect, preserve, and classify all tables published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, such as tables dealing with volume of business done, imports, prices, and the like.

20. On certain occasions students could be requested to challenge the accuracy and fairness of the tables published, referred to in paragraph 19.

21. The history classes could collect and read all speeches in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD made in commemoration of some historical incident or anniversary.

22. Public-speaking classes could be required to study the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for any given date, and they could assume the role of a news broadcaster and give the highlights of the news as taken from its original source.

23. Mathematics classes could follow the proceedings in reference to any legislation and tabulate the percent of amendments offered to a particular bill that carried.

24. All bills, speeches, and references that in any way affect the State wherein the student resides could be cataloged.

25. Without any particular planning or project supervision, the students of America could thumb through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and get a first-hand knowledge of how the Congress of the United States functions.

In order to maintain our form of government in a world so hostile to it at the present time, eternal vigilance is more than ever the price of liberty. This liberty can be retained most securely by knowledge and information of the affairs of our Government and the activities of our Representatives in Congress. The free schools, symbolic of our country's interest in education, can be best maintained if the students are made to become aware of the doings of their lawmakers in all possible phases of governmental service. An intelligent understanding of government is the first prerequisite of good government.

Our young men and women need an opportunity to get facts—facts that are not biased and colored by propaganda or censorship. Certainly such knowledge should be presented more extensively to our citizenry. Too often the toga of citizenship is donned all to nonchalantly by our boys and girls when they become old enough to exercise their American privileges. Too often they lack sufficient background to enable them to exert an intelligent interest in governmental affairs.

Surely in a country where, as Henry Ward Beecher said, every man shall have the liberty "to be what God made him," we should bend our every effort to see that the youth of our country is given an opportunity in our schools and in our libraries to know and become interested in their Government. After all, an uninformed citizenry makes a farce of our Republic. And we must remember that information is the raw material of which public opinion is shaped, and it is public opinion that is the backbone of our governmental system. We cannot hope to have an informed citizenry by teaching people after they have reached maturity and naturally have become less flexible toward instruction. We need to reach them when they are the boys and girls in our public schools, when they are the young men and women crowding into our public libraries to spend their leisure time.

Hundreds of young Americans step from our country's schools each June. From our schools to citizenship—that is our view. What is theirs? From school to what? Youngsters are pragmatic. The proof of anything is in its working, and thank goodness, they will always be that way. But it follows, the convictions of our maturity upon the lasting good of the American way are not bound to be accepted, per se, by the boys and girls born in this lean and difficult period of our Nation's growth. Not automatically—not in the face of great domestic uncertainty—and not in a world torn by fervid exponents of synthetic better philosophies. Not for certain.

As Jefferson said so many years ago:

> Man may be governed by reason and truth. Our first object should therefore be to leave open to him all the avenues of truth.

And, as he always related:

> To introduce the people into every department of Government * * * is the only way to insure a long-continued, and honest administration.

Our only strength in America, our only hope of perpetuity, lies in the revelation of the truth of the democratic process—the fundamentals, if you will, of votes, and policy, and the mechanics of law and welfare. Once these things are comprehensively discovered by young Americans, the vitality of their faith and the keeness of their interest will never slacken. To understand the American way is to reject all currently glamorous substitutes. To help provide an understanding of the American way is not only to discharge an essential duty of the Congress to its people, but also to assure a future America the brave continuation of those principles which it too, in its day, will hold dear.

I ask the House of Representatives to make possible the further dissemination of the RECORD so that we may keep our eternal vigilance and maintain our form of Government in spite of the hatred and bloodshed that is being waged on every side of us.

Let us enable the young men and women of our country to have an opportunity to follow, through the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the American avenue of truth—an avenue which has not been, and may it never be closed.

An Unfounded Attack

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OVERTON BROOKS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE SHREVEPORT TIMES

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Shreveport Times of May 22, 1941:

[From the Shreveport Times of May 22, 1941]

AN UNFOUNDED ATTACK

The statement of Dr. C.-E. A. Winslow, Yale University professor, that America's soldiers are "encamped in Louisiana malarial swamps and adjacent to areas where you will find venereal disease, dysentery, hookworm, and even leprosy" has been knocked down from the malarial standpoint by another Yale professor, H. H. Chapman. Professor Chapman declares that only one illness has been recorded over 24 years among Yale forestry students annually encamped for 3 months in what is now the Central Louisiana Army Training Area.

If that was all there was to it, the matter might be left as merely an academic discussion between two university professors. But Dr. Winslow's charges appeared in a national magazine of especially large circulation among mothers throughout the Nation. It charged that the youths of Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota in training in Louisiana—actually the Thirty-second Division at Camp Livingston and the Thirty-fourth Division at Camp Claiborne—were subjected to these health menaces.

Such statements give an impression directly contrary to the facts and figures of the United States Public Health Service, the Louisiana State Board of Health, the United States War Department, and the Medical and Engineering Departments of the United States Army. To send such false impressions into the homes of thousands of northern boys now in these camps, and the tens of thousands to come into the Louisiana training area on maneuvers, is little less than moral sabotage. No matter how good the intent of Dr. Winslow may be, or how honest he was in believing what he wrote, the effect of his statement on the mothers and fathers of these boys easily might be one of which a "fifth columnist" could be proud.

Instead of being "in malarial swamps," as Dr. Winslow says, Camp Livingston, where the Wisconsin boys referred to are stationed, has just been held up to the world in a 1,000-word eulogy by the War Department as the model of all training camps from every angle, including sanitation, public health, and military training. Every tent area in it is located on a sloping hillside with perfect natural drainage. The United States Public Health Service inspected and approved the campsite before construction. Any lowlands nearby have been or are being drained and throughout the entire Livingston area there is 100 percent activity in sanitation and health control for malaria and all other diseases.

Camp Claiborne, where the boys from Minnesota and the Dakotas, referred to by Dr. Winslow, are stationed, is not so rolling as to terrain. But, again, the United States Public Health Service has given its full approval, every precaution has been installed, and the sanitation system is worthy of any city in the United States double the maximum population of Camp Claiborne.

If Dr. Winslow visited Camp Polk, now under construction for an armored division, he would find Army engineers boasting proudly of the fine, sloping, hilly terrain which is making possible a sewage system operating entirely by gravity—with no pumping system necessary to carry sewage to the big disposal plants. He might remember, in this connection that New York had to drain a marsh (we call them swamps) to build its world's fair, and that Chicago had to make a river run backward to protect itself from its own sewage.

Dr. Winslow boasts of what he calls New York State's "model" public-health system, citing the low venereal-disease record during Army maneuvers there last summer as proof of its efficiency. New York did do a fine job of venereal-disease-control work in those maneuvers, but why did not Dr. Winslow also state that the official Army records show that Louisiana did a much finer job?

Dr. Winslow's figures show venereal disease among all soldiers in the New York maneuvers at the rate of only 1 case in 1,607 men, but he does not mention that the Louisiana maneuver rate was only 1 case in every 1,842 soldiers. He boasts that there was only one case of syphilis per 30,000 men in the New York maneuvers, but forgets that there was only 1 case per 70,000 men in the Louisiana maneuvers. He boasts that in the actual maneuver area in New York venereal disease was at the rate of only 1 case in 7,333, but does not mention that in the actual maneuver area down here the rate was only 1 case in 1,777 soldiers.

Certainly there are malarial breeding places in Louisiana; they exist in almost every State in the Union. But Vernon and Rapides Parishes—the central Louisiana main training area, reported only 19 cases in 1940. Three were in Vernon, 16 in Rapides. All were civilian cases except 1, in Camp Bureaugard. Certainly we have venereal diseases. It existed on the Mayflower, and among Indians before Columbus crossed the ocean.

The point is that we are fighting these things with every State and Federal weapon; that we are constantly on guard in these training areas; and that every mother in the North whose son trains in Louisiana may be certain that he is as well protected as he would be at home. That is what Dr. Winslow should have written.

Food for Small Democracies

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER C. PLOESER
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

RESOLUTION OF MISSOURI HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to extend into the RECORD the following resolution from the House of Representatives of the Sixty-first General Assembly now meeting at Jefferson City, Mo.:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-first General Assembly of Missouri, That the plan and purpose of the National Committee on Food for the Small Democracies be endorsed and approved; that the ideal of the United States of America of aiding the suffering, starving, helpless victims of war's brutalities be reaffirmed; that our Federal Government be urged to use its agencies to encourage cooperation of the warring nations in order that the helpless victims of the small democracies may be saved from suffering, starvation, and death; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to each of our United States Senators and each Member of Congress from our State.

Petition Against Involvement of United States in War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES F. O'CONNOR
OF MONTANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

PETITION OF CITIZENS OF JOPLIN, MONT.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following petition:

Hon. FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States:

Because we still remember the years of 1916–18 when our boys went to Europe to save our Nation from war lords of Europe to find later it was just another war, nothing accomplished for the many lives that were lost, only a debt that we are still paying.

We also remember that in your campaign pledges of last fall, that you promised you would not send our boys across the ocean to fight for other nations. We are hereby asking you to keep your promise to us and keep all our boys on this side of the Atlantic.

Sponsored by the Women's Demonstration Club of Joplin, Mont. Signed by citizens of Joplin, Mont. Copies sent to Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, Representative JAMES O'CONNOR, and Representative JEANNETTE RANKIN.

Mrs. John Lyle, Mrs. Fred Daleen, Laverne Daleen, Thomas H. Jones, F. G. Boucer, Robert B. Warren, Mrs. O. Hagen, Mr. O. Hagen, Mrs. Cal. Olson, Cal. Olson, E. K. Poppler, Mrs. Earl Poppler, Lois Heydon, Blanche Poppler, P. L. Anderson, William Shane, Mrs. Agnes Resnolbreck, Ole E. Halum, Franklin Heydon, Fred Knoper, Gerald F. Stolvig, Mrs. F. T. Knopes, John W. Duncan, R. E. Hansen, J. B. Plummer, C. M. Freeland, Mrs. Emil Nelson, Mrs. James Vincent, M. Swarthout, Fred Wicklund, Mrs. M. O. Farden, M. O. Farden, Mrs. L. N. Amundson, L. N. Amundson, Berger Johnson, Mrs. Berger Johnson, Mrs. Troy Duncan, Troy W. Duncan, Frank Terwolbeck, Maude E. Miller, Roy J. Miller, Theresa Terwolbeck, Alvin Mansfield, Violet Carlson, Carrie Jabes, Mrs. Wm. Meldrum, Sr., Mabel Thorson, Mrs. H. D. Rolph, Mrs. Martin Hietpas, Mrs. Arvid Snudgren, Mrs. E. B. Hovie, Mrs. Ida Anderson, Mrs. Art LaValley, Mrs. Ed Anderson, Mrs. George Thielman, Mrs. P. L. Anderson, Mrs. Lillian James, Mrs. Betsy Groves, Lallie Rovreit, Mrs. Martha Hyle, Mrs. Pete Sponheim, Mrs. Howard Alley, Mrs. Floyd Hanson, H. B. Wolf, H. R. Hansen, E. W. Seidlitz, Mrs. Jerry Stolvig, A. J. Hyle, Fred Daleen, Mrs. Elmer Duncan, L. E. Duncan, Ray S. Rudolph, Hazel V. Rudolph.

Do We Want a Mass Army?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES G. SCRUGHAM
OF NEVADA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ARTICLE BY HON. ROSS A. COLLINS, OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Hon. Ross COLLINS, which was printed in the Reader's Digest for June 1941:

[From the Reader's Digest for June 1941]

DO WE WANT A MASS ARMY?

(By Ross A. COLLINS, member and for many years chairman of the War Department appropriations subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee)

It is now established that the Germans who broke the French line at Sedan, pushed fingers of steel to the sea, cut off British and Belgian forces in Flanders, and almost in one stroke conquered France's Army of 5,000,000 soldiers, did not exceed 150,000 men. The million or more Germans who followed them functioned principally to occupy the conquered territory.

It is also established that German losses in this stupendous victory were fantastically small. Their losses were small, because their men were safeguarded by speed and armor.

These lessons from the Battle of France have been before us for a year. We know now that the mechanized might of only 12 panzer divisions, aided by a few thousand airplane pilots, inflicted staggering losses and swiftly shattered France's old-style mass Army.

And how are America's military leaders profiting by these lessons?

They are building another old-style mass Army.

They are giving outmoded training to the million and a half men we will have in camps this summer. And they seem to be seriously planning an eventual Army of 4,318,000 men. This spring the Chief of Staff requested of our committee funds for the initial equipment of such a force.

This is all wrong. We don't need a vast Army of the World War kind. I don't see how we could make such a hugh Army efficient, or how we could make use of it. Few of our officers understand modern war.

But that isn't the worst of it. We haven't now, and we can't get for months or years, enough modern and essential matériel to train and equip a mass army.

Even that isn't the worst of it. The most frightening fact is that too many of our highest military leaders aren't even thinking in terms of modern war.

As they plan it, the bulk of our new army will be infantry, cavalry, field artillery, etc. Most of the men will travel on foot. Of our 33 divisions, only one is fully motorized—that is, equipped with motor vehicles to transport men and supplies. Only two are armored and mechanized panzer divisions. As this is written (April 30), the War Department's plans call for the creation of two more mechanized divisions. This is a ridiculously small number. The Germans had 14 panzer divisions a year ago. No doubt they now have more. We have two in training—and two to be created. What chance would those 4 have against more than 14 veteran divisions of Nazi armored troops?

Soldiers are of little value unless thoroughly trained in their specialties. Our masses of conscripts are enlisted for only 1 year; their personnel will be turned over every 12 months. The same is true of the Reserve officers. Under such a system we will never get a real army.

We formerly had five old-style Regular Army divisions. Most of their personnel were distributed to form nuclei for new units when we began drafting men. As a result, 60 to 80 percent of all divisions now, including the National Guard, are recruits—and today we have not one division fit for combat.

I wonder if it is good sense to draft more men than we need and then scatter such military power as we had in an effort to give these new men what at best is only partial training? Compare this with the method of the Germans, who manned mechanized units with their best soldiers and trained them for years to operate alone or in cooperation with the air force before supplementing them with mass troops.

Under our present system, too much time is given to traditional close-order drill and practice in the manual of arms. Men who are to be machine gunners, tank drivers, armored-car scouts, antiaircraft gunners, and so on, are wasting precious hours when engaged in parade-ground marching. The Germans spend little time in close-order drill; their men are trained thoroughly in the highly specialized activities of actual combat.

Here, in America, where we make four-fifths of the world's automobiles, and countless trucks, tractors, and other automotive equipment, where almost every boy is a mechanic and where horse collars are curiosities, our Army has two cavalry divisions and is contemplating two more. Vans are being provided for the horses to ride in, and tanks, with which the Germans have been winning battles, will protect the American cavalry's horses while en route in vans to the scene of action.

Eventually the War Department contemplates 6 or 10 tank divisions. Would that it had that many now. Eventually we should have at least 25. And apart from those, instead of having, as we do, only 1 other fully motorized division, able to move on wheels at high speed, why shouldn't we have many?

No democracy can afford both a powerful mechanized army and also such a mass army as the War Department is planning. Since we must choose one or the other, and since a mass army is helpless before a skilled mechanized land force working effectively with planes, I believe we ought to demand that our defense plans be revised at once. We should stop drafting men by the million, and concentrate on providing as swiftly as possible a smaller, more manageable army, with a much larger proportion mechanized and armored.

The Army's complaint that tanks are not available for training no longer holds. We are getting no heavy tanks. But light and medium tanks are now coming off production lines in sufficient numbers to train and equip more mechanized divisions.

A compact, intensely trained motorized and mechanized army would give us more firepower, greater mobility, greater armor protection, a more paralyzing punch—many strategic advantages—wherever it may be called on to fight. If we had to fight beyond our shores, we could transport and supply such a force, and it could face on even terms any force brought against it. But we couldn't transport and supply an army of millions of foot-slogging riflemen. And that army couldn't stand up against an enemy's armored divisions.

Suppose a victorious Germany landed troops or stirred up trouble in South America. Our job would be to get there quickly and stamp out this menace to the security of our hemisphere. We know from every evidence of the war in Europe that a small, easily transported panzer force, supported by an adequate air arm, could turn the trick—and save the Americas. It's equally clear that a huge army of old-fashioned infantrymen couldn't be swiftly sent to South America, and wouldn't have a chance against Nazi tanks when it got there.

Suppose the United States itself should be invaded. Again we would need a mobile, hard-hitting, armored air and ground force. As John T. Flynn has pointed out,[1] it is unlikely that an invader could land even 50,000 men on our shores. To overcome that many, would we need three or four million foot soldiers with rifles? Or would we need a few hundred thousand swift-moving armored troops with concentrated fire-power?

Too many of the dominant figures in our Military Establishment have been resting serenely in the sunset of 1918. When the present defense emergency aroused us, they complacently turned to the old post-World War M-day plans, and dragged into a conscript army hundreds of thousands of our young men whom they could neither train (except to march) nor equip (except with obsolete weapons). This was done at the expense of industrial production, for men marching cannot do their part in making implements of war.

But there our young men are now, in huge cantonments, learning how to fight yesterday's wars, and deprived of realistic battle practice with the tanks and planes of the machine-age warfare of 1941.

An army must be paid, fed, clothed, housed, otherwise cared for. Those of us who handle military budgets know the terrific expense of this. It becomes impossible if the attempt is made to arm millions of men with up-to-date airplanes, tanks, guns, and modern motorized and mechanized equipment. The mere maintenance of the War Department's proposed Army of 4,000,000 men would cost $6,000,000,000 a year—not to mention the cost of carrying it into action or the inevitable pension cost afterward.

To me it is incredible that the policy makers of our War Department and Army have not seen the handwriting on the wall. I am only a civilian, but I like to suppose that the good Lord endowed me with at least some measure of common sense. And I happen to have a son of military age. I would shudder every night if real war came to America and if I knew that he was protected only by khaki, had to walk 80 percent of the time, fight when exhausted, and fight with a rifle against armored air and land machines.

For many years I have been doing all I could in the House of Representatives to pave the way for a compact, highly trained mechanized Army, including, of course, a centralized and unexcelled Air Force. Times without number I have tried to hammer home the idea that the mass army was as dated as bows and arrows. For example, on the floor of the House in 1932 I said:

"Mechanization implies the actual use of automotive machines in combat. The purpose of a mechanized force is to provide a fast-moving weapon, capable of wide maneuverability, which combines fire power, speed, and shock to a much higher degree than now exists. It is ideally organized for mobility and surprise.

"The scheme is simply this: Substitute for the 1½-mile-an-hour infantry masses, or the 6-mile-an-hour cavalry, which lack fire power, a fast-moving armed force capable of striking suddenly from one direction, disappearing, and then repeating the blows from another."

That was in 1932. In 1940 the Germans proved appallingly to the world that this conception of a modern army was the right one. But neither in 1932 nor even now in 1941 have a sufficient number of our own Army policy makers looked sympathetically on such facts and ideas. I cannot understand their reluctance, their lack of initiative in demanding progress in this, their own field.

The Germans have been blasting their way to victory with 105-millimeter guns, mounted on caterpillar-tread bases, and facing forward, ready for instant action. Our War Department was content for years with the weak and old-fashioned French 75-millimeter guns, on wooden wheels, towed backward by horses. It was not the Army that demanded rubber-tired chassis for these 75's. Our committee, without request from the War Department, demanded them.

It was not the Army that demanded tanks. I can show you delay after delay, often of whole years, in the use by the Army of funds that we appropriated for tank development.

It was not the Army that demanded funds for the research out of which emerged the flying fortress, our first long-range bombing plane. I take pride in saying that this was my own idea, as was the appropriation that brought it into being. Nor was it the Army that sought adoption of bomber tail guns. They were neither sought nor adopted by the Army until General Arnold became head of the Air Corps, 2 years ago, and forced their adoption.

The inertia that has brought us to our present plight is evident in the fact that as recently as January 31, 1938, the War Department submitted to the Army Appropriations Subcommittee of the Senate a considered statement of policy whose first paragraph read:

"Recent wars without question show that the bulk of the operations must be carried on by the traditional arms; that well-trained infantry and artillery, modernly equipped, must form the bulk of arms, and air and mechanized troops are valuable auxiliaries."

The truth is almost the exact reverse of that, as is attested by all first-hand observers of the German campaigns. The Battles of Poland, of France, of Greece, corroborate this statement of a Nazi officer quoted in the New York World-Telegram of April 10:

"The French believed the paramount duty of tanks was to support advancing infantry. We considered the panzer force a weapon whose powerful fire, in combination with its protective armor, speed, and mobility, is superior to all others. We attacked in mass and rushed on in an avalanche, often getting 100 kilometers ahead of our mechanized infantry. Without our panzer units the rapid destruction of the enemy would have been impossible in such a short time."

Neither in recent committee hearings nor in the record back through past years is there much to make one believe that our Military Establishment has ever been eager to accept new weapons.

General Sherman describes in his memoirs his wonderment, after graduation from West Point, that the Army had not adopted the new repeating rifle which sportsmen were using. That was in 1840. It was not until 1865, 25 years later, at the Battle of Franklin, one of the last battles of the War between the States, that a brigade of his army was equipped with the Spencer, our first repeating rifle, instead of muskets.

We entered the Spanish-American War with a service rifle inferior to the German and other rifles used by the Spaniards. We were among the first to invent smokeless powder; but the Spaniards had it before our Army, and at San Juan Hill they far outranged the Seventy-first New York Volunteers who were using black powder.

We invented the machine gun—first the Gatling, rejected in 1862 by our Army but used in the Franco-Prussian War in 1870; then the Maxim, the Lewis, the Browning. The British had used machine guns in the Sudan and elsewhere, and the Germans, Japanese and other armies had them before our Army. When we entered the World War we had only 282 old-model Maxim and 148 Browning machine guns; also 353 Lewis guns, made for British ammunition, not ours.

An American invented the Mills grenade which the British used in the World War. When we entered the conflict our Army redesigned it and was getting factories tooled up to make 21,000,000 of them when a cablegram from American Expeditionary Force headquarters brought the effort to a halt—because the newly designed grenade was totally unsatisfactory.

We invented the caterpillar track. The British were the first to use it for tanks. Later on General Williams, Chief of Ordnance, and General Fuqua, Chief of Infantry, told our committee about the great possibilities of the high-speed Christie tank, the invention of an American. The committee appropriated funds for the purchase of five or six for thorough testing. After General Williams' retirement the new Chief of Ordnance decided to buy only one. Disappointed, the inventor sold the patent rights to Great Britain. Let it be remembered that all modern tanks are adaptations of the Christie.

We invented the airplane, as everyone knows, but the Wright brothers had to go to Europe to find military acceptance of it. Despite the indispensable service of aviation in 3 years of the World War, our Army had only four planes when we entered the conflict.

I cannot find a single instance, all through our history, in which our Army has been the first to adopt a weapon new in kind and to have it ready, in sufficient numbers, for use in a crisis. That record is desperately significant to us now, for the same reactionary mentality is still strong in our defense councils.

As a contrast consider how the Germans took our own inventions, including mass production, and evolved a new way to win wars. They discarded old weapons, old ideas, and old men. With a civilian leader not bound to old-line traditions, a revolutionary youth movement to help him, and young officers and scientists doing their part, they created an army with the maximum of fire power per man, unexcelled speed, 360-degree maneuverability and the protection of armor for the men handling their engines of destruction.

[1] See "Can Hitler Invade America?" the Reader's Digest, April 1941.

They did this right before our eyes; indeed, they advertised what they were doing.

And now we know the result.

In Europe the Germans have used planes and tanks which operated together so effectively that when their tanks were delayed as little as 15 minutes, or the flanks of the corridors they opened were threatened, their dive bombers and other planes returned to help. They revealed a coordinated training, a precision of communication between planes, tanks, and motorized troops that has scarcely been attempted at our new Army camps.

It takes young men, or men with youth's progressive spirit, to win wars. Napoleon was only 36 when he defeated the Austrians. Clive, Wolfe, and Wellington were world-famous before 40. Washington was 41 when he took command of the Continental Army. In 1862 Grant was 40, Stuart 30, Sherman 42, Sheridan 31. Today, according to Major Wheeler-Nicholson, the average age of German generals is 45 while that of ours is nearer 60.

If, at this moment of crisis, we have at the top too many old officers clinging to old ideas, it is largely because of our system of automatic promotion by seniority rather than by proved skill of leadership under battle conditions. Young officers who are eager for change and improvement offend the red-tape conservatives above them, and drop out, or are dropped as was Gen. Billy Mitchell, prophetic post-war advocate of a united air service. The plodding, negative type of officer, too lethargic to risk initiative and content to wait for routine promotion, thus emerges into our Army leadership. So now we are drafting young men by the hundred thousands, and proposing the drafting of still younger men, to be sent into battle, if war comes, by officers who are not modern battle leaders and who are resistant to the modern methods that might minimize casualties and increase the chance of victory.

New ways must be made obligatory to expedite in time of peace the advancement of young men who have what it takes to prepare us for war. We should test our officers stringently in realistic battle practice, promoting those who handle men efficiently and retiring the inefficient.

Also, for every good reason of European experience and of common sense, the President should establish a separate Air Department at once, to be directed by men who know aviation. They are, as surely as the job makes the man, a breed as different from old-line Infantry officers as the eagle from the pack mule.[2] The War Department's past resistance to the plain necessity of an Air Department is distressingly parallel to its plans for building a mass army which it can neither train nor equip for modern war.

I have long been strongly of the view that organized ways must be evolved to keep our Army on its toes during times of peace. In peace everything conspires to stagnation and Rip Van Winkle slumber. There is little competitive urge among Army officers. Rarely is one of them intimately sensitized to progress in the competitive and ever-advancing world of industry and research and mass production.

I should like to see the Ordnance, Signal Corps, and other technical branches of our Army put progressively less and less dependence on their own research and manufacturing efforts, more on private industry. To illustrate: I don't believe that the Signal Corps knows quite as much about communications as the Bell and General Electric and similar laboratories, or that the Army's metallurgists can compare with those serving our great industries.

Since the Army is shown by the record to slump into complacent inertia in peacetime, my belief is that there should be a group of highly paid nonpartisan industrialists, scientists, and alert civilian executives continuously assigned, with plenty of authority, to study our Army's technical progress and to keep the Army, the President, the Congress, and the country informed about it. This way we might not be caught unprepared every time a war comes.

To win a war against Germany this country must not be content with a military establishment only as good as Germany's. It must be infinitely superior. This must be our goal.

It seems high time, too, that the fathers and mothers of America give serious thought to this whole question. So long as international disputes can be settled only by resort to arms, they should insist that our Military Establishment embrace all the progress that science and invention have given us. For their own sons will be taken away from them, and many of them will be needlessly sacrificed, unless we are adequately prepared to fight with the weapons of today instead of with an inadequate supply of the weapons of yesterday.

[2] See Why We Must Have a Separate Air Force, the Reader's Digest, March 1941.

Air Superiority Will Insure Victory on Land and Sea

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALFRED F. BEITER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS BY COL. J. E. MYERS, UNITED STATES ARMY, RETIRED

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, on May 19, 1941, Col. J. E. Myers, United States Army, retired, delivered a radio address over station WWDC in Washington, D. C., which I think it so important that I am asking to have his speech reprinted in the Appendix of the RECORD.

I want to thank WWDC for this opportunity of addressing you on the subject of aviation and the necessity for the proper establishment of a Civilian Air Reserve.

Aviation is now in its infancy. It is passing through its growing pains while the hazy minds of men are being slowly and painfully forced, to think, out of the horizontal plane.

The horse-and-buggy cry for a "two-ocean Navy" must now be replaced for the sterner cry for a two-ocean air force as we are made to realize, not through ordinary common-sense deductions, but by the grim reality that no boat can longer float if attacked from the air.

To attain superiority in the air is primarily the function of land-based airplanes, capable of flying thousands of miles. Only in certain situations can airplane carriers supply the planes necessary to obtain any deciding superiority. It is reasonable to expect that bombing ranges will increase to 25,000 miles if the science of flying improves, in the next 5 years, as it has during the past 5-year period, which would make the use of carriers inadvisable, if not impractical. Giant airplanes capable of carrying a regiment of troops may be within the scope of reasonable expectation and it may even be possible that science and invention may yet be the road to peace and prosperity, through the very fearfulness of modern warfare.

Allow me to quote from my testimony before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, given in the summer of 1938. "With our huge airships capable of carrying 24 tons of TNT, our coasts will be amply protected 1,000 miles from our shores. No nation or group of nations would dare attack us from across the sea infested with submarines and torpedo boats, and subject to aerial raids from our shore bases. Why should we build a single $60,000,000 battleship, when a single 10,000-pound bomb might either sink it or cripple its delicate steam system? Are we still to be inert, after witnessing the disgraceful, humiliating experiences of Generals Billy Mitchell, Butler, and Johnson Hagood.

"I am convinced that, if a part of the $2,000,000,000 proposed to be used for building battleships, seacoast-defense guns, forts, etc., were used instead for increasing our fighting aircraft, submarine boats, mobile artillery, antiaircraft batteries, underground hangars, airplane carriers, etc., our country would be better protected and ready for either defensive or aggressive action."

The present invasion of Crete, which was not in itself of prime importance to an advance on Suez, proves the above statements and was probably made to draw the British fleet into a position where it could be destroyed by dive bombers.

Right here I want to emphasize the fact that it is not too late to embark at once on a really effective air program.

First and foremost, we must have a separate air face and a secretary for the air force who will have under his complete control this force, as well as a Civilian Air Reserve.

Time will not permit me to discuss this important matter fully or to take issue with those who would oppose the separate air-force bills submitted in Congress by Representative JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia, and Representative BEITER, of New York. The immediate passage of these bills in Congress, or some form of them, is vital to our national air defense.

The main objective of the Aviation Defense Association of your city, is to create a state of air-mindedness and air appreciation throughout the nations in the Western Hemisphere in order to effect a unified Pan-American Air Command.

It is necessary to sustain this objective, if we are to preserve our liberty and freedom from Nazi domination and despotism. It is up to you and me to talk and think—America first in the air and on the land and sea.

Loss of control of the air spells immediate disaster. A radio commentator in Greece stated that the Nazi dive bombers blew up one tank after another with incredible accuracy. I leave it to your imagination as to what could happen to any ship, unaccompanied by a proper air convoy. The time will surely come when a constant stream of airplane convoys will be required to protect our shipping and war craft in the Atlantic Ocean.

If lack of time to prepare in the air results in the loss of the Suez Canal and the invasion of England, then war will commence between Europe, Asia, and Africa and the Americas because the people of America and Britain will never surrender.

The fall of nation after nation to the Germans and the sinking of the Italian flagship by the British is proof beyond any measure of doubt that superiority in the air will insure victory on land and sea.

Hence the necessity of establishing a strong coalition of all the American democracies by every possible means—by radio, special envoys, and the building of great international superdefense highways, etc. The future of civilization and our American way of life is at stake. The die is cast and we must win this war. This is no time for idle talk—if there is any time left to your day, use it to stop this un-American, unpatriotic criticism of our foreign policies. You have time for that—plenty of time now. But how about a little later? Do you know what is in store for America either from within or without? Spare a moment each day for serious consideration of the awful results being brought about by being always a little too late.

We must have an air force sufficiently powerful to protect our Navy and shipping 1,000 miles from our shores and bases and auxiliary civilian air reserve to help repel any invasion by land. We will require thousands of bases and auxiliary landing fields throughout the Americas.

In the first World War, airplanes were the eyes of the armies and navies—since then they have acquired radio ears and they have been so effectively armed with machine guns, bombs, and cannon that they may well be termed the artillery and infantry of the air. They constitute the most destructive instrument of war ever devised by man.

War in America, when it comes, will be fought in the air, it will be won in the air, and it will be won by our regular air forces with the help of the Civilian Air Reserve. The Air Reserve will be the auxiliary force—it will be a reservoir or pool of experienced volunteer fliers, drawn from every possible source, and trained under governmental supervision on private planes equipped with machine guns and bombing racks.

Swarms of these light planes can be launched from the rear of our armies from numerous small airfields, water ways, or even roadsides, from which no powerful Army or Navy machine could be launched. Placed under a unified pan-American command under the Secretary of the Air Force, hundreds of thousands of these planes could make invasion impossible, and they would help form a sentiment for pan-American understanding and solidarity.

There should be no opposition to program for creating a Civilian Air Reserve when it is remembered that this Nation has always depended upon its civilian population in time of war. Therefore, there is no reasonable ground for contending against the use of the literally hundreds of thousands of experienced pilots, mechanics, and other expert persons who are not so fortunate as to be able to pass the rigid tests at our West Point of the air.

The Civilian Air Reserve of the Aviation Defense Association requests that all persons interested in aviation register at once, including men, women, boys, and girls who, though they may take no active part in actual operation of planes, will support our bills in Congress for the creation of the Reserve.

They can support our other aviation bills in Congress for the proper celebration of National Aviation Day on August 19, and take an active part in participation of this annual event, as proclaimed by the President. They can form clubs for model airplane building, airplane contests, etc. They can celebrate Pan American Aviation Day on December 17, which this association also sponsors.

The Boy Scouts of America and the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association are assisting our efforts to establish safe air travel and supporting our congressional legislation as introduced by Senator PEPPER and Representative J. HARDIN PETERSON for the placement of uniform directional air markers on roofs of buildings. In this connection, Representative J. L. JOHNS, of Wisconsin, has devoted time and effort to produce the results already obtained.

In order to provide for the subsidizing of the Civilian Air Reserve personnel and the installation of war equipment on private planes, our association has placed, through the courtesy of Senator R. R. REYNOLDS and Representatives JENNINGS RANDOLPH, J. HARDIN PETERSON, and others, bills providing for this action, and we have the full support of many Members of Congress and patriotic persons of prominence. The bill provides also for the training of this personnel under Army and Navy officers, and it will be remembered that the Germans secured their air superiority through similar methods.

We ask your active support in the Civilian Air Reserve of this organization. Our squadrons are forming now. Help us to establish them throughout the Americas. Help us to make America first in the air and on the land and sea and insure our liberty through sustained air superiority. Procrastination never won a war. Register now in the Civilian Air Reserve for the cause of civilization and the battle of freedom.

Address by Former Ambassador to Great Britain

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BURTON K. WHEELER

OF MONTANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY JOSEPH P. KENNEDY AT OGLETHORPE UNIVERSITY, ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the following is a very brilliant address by former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, made at the commencement exercises of Oglethorpe University, Atlanta, Ga., on Saturday, May 24, 1941:

Mr. President, distinguished guests, graduates, and friends of Oglethorpe University, when your learned President, Doctor Jacobs, asked me to speak before this gathering I asked him what topic would interest such an audience. He replied, "By all means, tell us about your experiences in London."

Well, my experiences in London seemed a fairly interesting topic a few months ago. But today one's personal history is out of place in a serious gathering. As we reflect upon the dizzy course the world war has taken in the last 60 days, the swift changes daily occurring in our own Nation, what happened to me in London was quite unimportant.

There were interesting events just prior to the outbreak of hostilities. The circumstances of Munich make a good story. There is some color about the story that in London my garage was bombed twice as was the place in which some of my household lived; and there is interest in the tale of a bomb which blew the car in which I was riding up on the sidewalk. In those days such events seemed to me to be the last word in excitement. In comparison with all the stupendous and strange happenings in Europe recently, however, all these experiences become insignificant.

I spent 8 years of my life in the motion-picture business, and one of the principles of that business was to attempt to appeal to the imagination of the audience with an interesting story but never to make the story unbelievable. I am willing to wager that if any motion picture had filmed Hess' flight to England, most of the audience would have called the plot ridiculous.

If anybody had told us before the war that a large enough army could be moved by airplane across land and water to repulse the enemy, we would have said the tale was a madman's. And if anybody had said that an army of three or four million men—reputedly the greatest army in the world—could be routed from behind the Maginot Line in a couple of weeks, we would have tapped our foreheads significantly. And if somebody said that armies could storm mountains with heavy tanks over roads perilous even for horses, we would not have believed him. But I could go on indefinitely with the story of how the impossible has happened.

In the face of this lightning war, which now unmistakably reveals its true revolutionary character, when there seems to be so much heat and so little light, what is there for young Americans entering into adult life to cling to?

The contending disputants range all the way from those who insist that our present American foreign policy is foolish and futile and that the British Empire economically and politically is beyond our assistance and must collapse, to those who advocate immediate intervention on a theory of enlightened selfishness or because they desire that this country embark upon a holy crusade. And while the debate waxes, confusion increases and national unity eludes us.

In one sense this is altogether deplorable because now more than ever America should give an example of the world of a nation resolute and united. In another sense such disagreements are unavoidable and part of the price we pay for enjoying our American freedoms which, in the last analysis, is what we mean by the declaration: I am an American.

As a nation we have announced a foreign policy and the overwhelming majority of our people have approved it. It is to rearm as swiftly as possible, to give every possible aid to Great Britain, but to stay out of war. How to make that aid effective is the present issue. Shall our Navy escort the ships carrying our war materials to Great Britain? On that score the President has made the issue abundantly clear. He thinks convoying means war, and the American people do not want active participation in this struggle. It may be that eventually the American people will conclude that those who advocate the use of our Navy for the purposes of convoying are correct and that even such a great risk must be assumed in the furtherance of America's best interests. Before that step is taken, however, it ought to be the fervent hope of all of us that there will be open debate based on the real facts given us in utmost candor by our leaders.

It is not enough to say that to be truly Americans we must defend to the utmost the right of our fellow citizens to have their say even though we fervently detest them and their words. There must be more than that. Freedom means free choice and free choice should be made on the fullest kind of knowledge. When after that process the American people have spoken, the duty of a patriot is plain.

But I don't think a commencement is the proper occasion for a discussion of the technical aspects of our foreign policy. The details of our effort to help Britain and to limit the scope of the totalitarian menace make a subject difficult and controversial, but not appropriate for this celebration.

All during my service in London I labored for peace. And when the conflagration began I advocated aid to England but not intervention. Upon my return here I urged that we stay out, and when I resigned as Ambassador I said that I hoped to assist the President in his oft-proclaimed desire to stay out of war. I can think of no more patriotic task and one which should more readily enlist the active support of every lover of liberty.

The American people have a deep-seated antagonism for the forces of evil which the totalitarian states signify. They repudiate their philosophy, their silly racism and their nightmare of world domination. It is not at all surprising to find in our country such widespread hatred for nazi-ism because it conflicts utterly with the American way of life. National socialism lays claim to the whole life of man, to his thoughts, loyalties, and devotion no less than to his money, labor, and his vital spark. Our Declaration of Independence and our Bill of Rights, however, assert the very opposite and proclaim that man possesses rights which even the state and its leaders must respect. This new paganism proclaims its own beatitudes, which are not those you read in your prayer book. It says: "Woe unto the weak, woe unto the sick. The strong shall possess the earth." Consequently it is easy to see why the American people want ever so passionately a British victory. But they want also to stay out of war.

There are some among us who sincerely believe that the welfare of the United States requires us to become a belligerent. But they give us slogans. They seek to stir our emotions. We should never take such a grave step just because we hate Hitler and love Churchill. Facts are what the country needs, not slogans. What are the facts? What is the state of our own defense? What can we do if we declare war? Where will we land troops? What about Japan? What will be the result of declaring war in terms of our ability to help England?

The people who must suffer and give up their lives are entitled to know all the facts before their judgment can be won over to the interventionist cause. It is a mockery of liberty to withhold from democratic people the essential facts upon which this, the most awful decision of our times, must be based. We must have the completest candor; we must have the fullest disclosure; we must have the freest debate. At times the withholding of vital information from our citizens may be justified, but only rarely, and the burden is very great on those who would withhold any important facts. The very concept of democracy involves the concept of full knowledge and free choice. I say this sharing with our fellow citizens the hatred of German aggression, but believing that no judgment should be made which does not ultimately rest upon the welfare of our own land.

Let me summon a distinguished statesman of the South who put far more eloquently than I can the case against involvement in war. This United States Senator, speaking on the theme of self-government and civilization, said:

"We make a great mistake in supposing all people capable of self-government. Acting under that impression, many are anxious to force free governments on all the people of this continent, and over the world, if they had the power. It has been lately urged, in a very respectable quarter, that it is the mission of this country to spread civil and religious liberty over all the globe, and especially over this continent, even by force, if necessary. It is a sad delusion. None but a people advanced to a high state of moral and intellectual excellence are capable, in a civilized condition, of forming and maintaining free governments; and among those who are so far advanced, very few, indeed, have had the good fortune to form constitutions capable of endurance. It is a remarkable fact in the political history of man that there is scarcely an instance of a free constitutional government which has been the work exclusively of foresight and wisdom. They have all been the result of a fortunate combination of circumstances. It is a very difficult task to make a constitution worthy of being called so. This admirable Federal Constitution of ours is the result of such a combination. It is superior to the wisdom of any or of all the men by whose agency it was made. The force of circumstances, and not foresight or wisdom, induced them to adopt many of its wisest provisions.

"But of the few nations who have been so fortunate as to adopt a wise constitution, still fewer have had the wisdom long to preserve one. It is harder to preserve than to obtain liberty. After years of prosperity, the tenure by which it is held is but too often forgotten; and I fear, Senators, that such is the case with us. There is no solicitude now for liberty. Who talks of liberty when any great question comes up? Here is a question of the first magnitude as to the conduct of this war; do you hear anybody talk about its effects upon our liberties and our free institutions? No, sir. That was not the case formerly. In the early stages of our Government, the great anxiety was, how to preserve liberty. The great anxiety now is for the attainment of mere military glory. In the one we are forgetting the other. The maxim of former times was, that power is always stealing from the many to give to the few; the price of liberty was perpetual vigilance. They were constantly looking out and watching for danger. Not so now. Is it because there has been any decay of liberty among the people? Not at all. I believe the love of liberty was never more ardent; but they have forgotten the tenure of liberty, by which alone it is preserved.

"We think we may now indulge in everything with impunity, as if we held our charter by 'right divine'—from heaven itself. Under these impressions we plunge into war, we contract heavy debts, we increase the patronage of the Executive, and we talk of a crusade to force our institutions of liberty upon all people. There is no species of extravagance which our people imagine will endanger their liberty in any degree. Sir, the hour is approaching, the day of retribution will come. It will come as certainly as I am now addressing the Senate; and, when it does come, awful will be the reckoning, heavy the responsibility somewhere."

These words, my dear friends, were spoken in 1838 by the famous John C. Calhoun, United States Senator from South Carolina. They are as compelling, as fresh, as convincing, and as timely as though they came over the Washington wire this very morning.

Americans, we all know, would defend with their property and with their lives the institutions they so deeply cherish. They would not care for the security assured by a tyrant, no matter how alluring his promises. Americans are the same patriots today that they were in 1776.

But most Americans say, and rightly so, war will not preserve our liberties. We may, with our eyes on the foreign scene, be insensible to the loss of our liberties right here at home.

I am particularly unimpressed by the hysteria which I suspect is consciously stimulated by the idea that we are in danger of military attack. Let's forget entirely the European balance of power and the world balance of power as factors operating for our safety. The world balance of power should make an adventure in the New World a most dangerous prospect for the axis nations.

No country has ever been more fortunately situated for natural defense than is America. The Atlantic and Pacific oceans constitute impregnable bastions of defense. Let me remind you again of the spectacle of besieged England holding the might of the German war machine, the greatest in the history of the world, with but 20 miles of ocean from the continent—holding Germany at bay even with her bases to the south, east, and northeast of England, and those bases connected by a network of communications with the industrial centers of the continent. Look at us, separated from Europe by 3,000 miles of ocean and from Asia by 5,000 miles. We do not believe that any nation could secure a concentration of bases which would encircle us as Britain is now encircled. Even if a few hostile bases could be established on this hemisphere, how could they be kept in supplies and how could lines of communication be maintained? A direct attack on us would require an armada mightier than the power of man could create. Where is the military expert who would say such an adventure is feasible?

We have another line of defense which no American can afford to ignore, and that is our own will, determination, and might. We have made a commitment that this Nation will become one of the mightiest military and naval powers on the earth. The country is as one "all out for preparedness." Every day that passes makes the prospect of an attack less tenable. Until the world comes to a saner sense of peaceful living, we will have barriers against attack that nothing can destroy. A two-ocean navy, a large army, an incomparable air force—all these are on the way. In a short time they will be ours.

We have gone to the aid of Britain not only because we believe their cause to be just, but because the American stake in the present war is the precious element of time. But as a nation we should not let our aid to Britain become the argument for direct involvement.

Anyone who speaks in terms of imminent military danger is doing his country a disservice. The English should be amused when they think of their confident stand against invasion and the hysteria of their friends 3,000 miles away.

We are, after all, a nation with a great history of courageous and successful fighting. We are young and expanding. We have the greatest mass-production technique and machinery in the world. Regardless of how this war comes out, America has a great destiny because she has youth and she has assets which nature bestowed with a generous hand. I believe that, though I believe we shall have to fight harder and suffer more for that destiny in an Axis-dominated world. Let us not forget the American destiny; let us not be deluded by any claim that self-interest should make us guardians of the peace of the rest of the world. The American people's instincts are sound. They want no part of this war despite their fervent desire that the hated National Socialism be eliminated from the earth.

The crusaders' argument for war is the silliest of all. I have the fullest conviction that few countries of the earth by and large want our kind of democracy. Most of them have neither the training nor the tradition for it—not even a proper understanding of it. Democracy cannot be imposed by force or otherwise. It would not last even if we were able to present them with the most up-to-date constitutional democratic system. In our very attempt at this colossal crusade we would end in failure and disgrace abroad, in disillusionment and bankruptcy at home.

Ideas and ideals are, in the last analysis, more pertinent than slogans, propaganda, or armies. If America can hold firmly to her faith in herself, can continue to build a more permanent system of social, economic, and political justice, such an accomplishment will be far more impressive to the world than speeches, promises, or even armed intervention.

We cannot, my fellow Americans, divert the tides of the mighty revolution now sweeping Asia and Europe. They were not of our making and they will not be subject to our control, no matter how courageously or exhaustingly we strive to subject them.

One of the favorite arguments of those who would have us intervene in this World War is to tell us that unless we enter the conflict our foreign markets will disappear. What a callous and materialistic argument for bloodshed. It is claimed that the Germans will reduce Europe and England to one vast German sweatshop and by cheap production drive us out of the markets of the world.

Surely a British victory would be helpful from the viewpoint of our foreign markets. But it is nonsense to say that an Axis victory spells ruin for us. Must this country go out of business in such an event? The whole history of American progress belies such surrender Nature has blessed us beyond that of any other nation with the real wealth that will remain regardless of what happens to the credit structure of the world. From 90 to 95 percent of our trade is internal. We depend less on foreign markets than any great nation. If worse came to worst, we could gear ourselves to an intelligent self-contained national economy and still enjoy a fair degree of prosperity.

But that "worst" must never be permitted to include Axis domination—social, economic, or military—of any spot in the Western Hemisphere. I have sufficient faith in the vigilance and ability of our Army and Navy staffs to feel confident they stand ready at all times to intercept any move which could lead to such a consummation and to intercept it with all the force that may be necessary. In my definition of the Western Hemisphere I include, I wish to add, any island which is considered by our military experts to be a threat to our security if the Axis nations possess or dominate it.

For the life of me, I cannot see the logic of suggesting a course of action which, beyond the slightest doubt, will bring suffering, injury, death, poverty, and human degradation because of a fear of the future, which is founded on pure speculation. For this argument to have any validity, we would have to suppose that the Nazi government, after an exhausting war, could promptly reorganize into a sound economy a continent it now controls through sheer terror.

It is not at all clear that the dream of the old free-trade system can ever be realized. Forces have been let loose on the world and economic transformations have developed in this machine age which may well require even for this country a radical revision of its foreign-trade technique. This, I suspect, might happen regardless of the outcome of the present war. But going to war can in no event be a solution. It would be a clear case of the cure being worse than the disease.

There is no sound reason for criticizing the great body of Americans who insist upon thinking of their own interests. They cannot be blamed for wanting to know, before they plunge into a crusade, regardless of how holy or sacred it may appear, what are the chances, what are the risks, and what is the probable toll in sacrifice, and what is the final result at the end of the road.

For you young Americans entering adult life in such a distorted time, the usual advice seems hollow. The ancient platitudes sound empty. Of course, you must have the qualities of greatness of heart and soul. But today your generation needs character and faith more than all those who have gone before.

You should affirmatively cultivate a suspicion of phrases, of slogans. Beware of the phrase maker. America is deluged by messages. Budding revolutionaries have been stealing our priceless words—"Americanism," "peace," "democracy," and "progress." What such words conceal is now more important than what they reveal.

Words are but skins of thought, but so counterfeited have some of our words become through the deceit of Communists and the technique of Nazis that beguiling phrases such as "new order," "living room," and even "peace" have to be subjected to the most critical analysis lest we find ourselves marching behind false banners.

For example, the word "liberal" has become entirely suspect because of the grossest sins committed in its name. Today many so-called leaders are professional liberals. They would rather be known as liberal than to be right. They have tortured a great word to cover a false philosophy, to wit, that the end justifies the means. Liberalism, your studies here at Oglethorpe have taught you, has never meant a slavish devotion to a program, but rather did liberalism connote a state of the spirit, a tolerance for the views of others, an attitude of respect for others, and a willingness to learn by experiment, no less in social fields than in the physical sciences. Basically, liberalism predicates that man is a spirit and out of his Godlike qualities can come the triumph over the baser instincts that have made him so many times "vile."

In one respect the graduates of 1941 face a more attractive prospect than their fellow alumni of many years past. You will enter the stream of life at a time when the great machine of war is solving for you, for the time being, at least, your problem of opportunity. Already we see signs of labor shortages, increased wages, and rising price levels, all reflecting the quickened tempo that has followed our program of rearmament and aid to England.

But don't, I beg of you, be deluded into a false sense of security because you quickly find a place in the growing American war machine. When that machine slows down, as inevitably it will, you and your generation must face a staggering task. The dislocation which will follow our war efforts will be like nothing that our Nation has ever experienced. The modern technique of war requires such an increase in Government spending, in tax rates, in regulation and limitation of the private sphere of production and ultimately limitations in consumption itself that a return even to our modified capitalism of today will hardly be feasible.

Unemployment will be a threat on an alarming scale. Although there will no longer be futile debate about States rights and the powers of the Federal Government, the vast problem of the credit of the Federal Government will confound you. The stamina of our system and the loyalty of our citizens will be put to the most severe test. Once more will we be faced with the problem of whether youth shall sell itself into State slave service for a pittance as has happened in the States now running the course of revolution.

When the war machine has run down and the economic shock is being felt by every man, woman, and child, new and sweet-sounding slogans will fill the air. Short cuts to Utopia will be advocated on all sides. But out of those trying days that are to come your generation will find the great opportunity to serve your fellow man, to keep steady the democratic processes. Your generation must solve the next great crisis. Your generation will have the responsibility of insuring that the people, through their elective representatives, will have the courage and the intelligence to provide a new prime mover for our economy so that the young will be absorbed into jobs as they come out of school and our system preserve its record of opportunity for youth.

Not only must you seek to alleviate the economic stress by courageous and forthright action but you must preach anew the gospel that orderly progress can only be made in accordance with those traditions of law obedience which have been America's great heritage.

Even though the more abundant life is a goal ever to be desired, it will be revealed as a mirage and as fool's gold; it will become as ashes in our mouth if we compromise with those personal liberties of action, speech, thought, and religion which alone make human life the dignified process our Creator intended it to be.

Perhaps a century from now there will be agreement among historians as to the principal causes which have made our times the shambles they are—two world-wide conflicts in a little over a quarter of a century.

We have seen progress in mechanical things fantastic in their very brilliance, but in the art of living, in that one field which is the test of civilization and which is the first need of human happiness, our world has been a colossal failure. Why is it? We shall not find the answer in simple causes, but I suspect that basically there is a moral explanation. Intense nationalism, man's greed, and the worship of the machine—yes, a little of all of these and more will be found in the diagnosis. But when the history of these times has been written, I hope and pray it will show that the American lads of 1941 did not pave the way for a radical change by fostering class antagonism, that they recognized that the line between the rich and the poor in this country was vanishing, and properly so, in an ever-increasing standard of living, and that they realized and took vigorous steps to spread the gospel of equality. Then will it be said of them that they contributed mightily to giving to all our people a sounder basis for orderly living and that all this was accomplished with the essential liberties still substantially unchanged.

May you bring honor to your families and to your college by the measure of wisdom you will give to the serious problems of tomorrow and by the degree of self-sacrifice with which you face your solemn obligations.

Benefits for Dependents of Service-Connected Disabled Veterans

REMARKS

OF

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, recently looking over the May 15, 1941, issue of the D. A. V. Semimonthly, the official national publication of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, commonly known as the D. A. V., I ran across a very fine article by this organization's national service director, Mr. Millard W. Rice, most favorably known to my colleagues, which gives very pertinent and complete information as to the benefits available through Federal agencies to the wives, widows, children, and dependent parents of World War veterans, living and dead.

The information and suggestions in this featured article ought to be brought to the attention of all the wives, widows, and parents of World War veterans, and, with the hope that many of them may be enabled to become informed as to their rights under existing laws pertaining to wives and dependent parents, I insert the article in full as follows:

[From the D. A. V Semi-Monthly of May 15, 1941]

BENEFITS FOR DEPENDENTS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

(By Millard W. Rice, National Service Director)

Wives, widows, and children of World War veterans suffering with service-connected disabilities are eligible for certain governmental benefits, rights, and privileges under certain circumstances, as indicated hereinafter.

Wives of World War veterans who receive compensation by reason of service-connected disabilities are entitled to an apportionment of such compensation if they are living separate and apart from the veteran without any fault on their part, in an amount equivalent to 30 percent of the veteran's total compensation where the wife has no minor children, 40 percent with one child, 45 percent with two children, and 50 percent with three or more children. Minor children living separate and apart from their compensated father, without their mother, are entitled to an apportionment of the father's compensation equivalent to 20 percent thereof for one child, 30 percent for two children, and 35 percent for three or more children.

DEPENDENCY ALLOWANCES

Dependency allowances are payable to a World War veteran receiving compensation on the basis of service-connected disability, rated on a temporary basis, but not when rated on a permanent basis, as to his wife, children, and dependent parents. Such dependency allowances are payable to the veterans direct, and not to their dependents, except where an apportionment of the veteran's compensation has been granted by the Veterans' Administration.

Wives of veterans, who receive compensation by reason of service-connected disabilities, or who have some service-connected disability rated as disabling in some measurable degree, even though less than 10 percent, have potential death compensation protection.

It is, therefore, very much to the interest of the wife of a veteran suffering with a service-connected disability to see to it that there is filed, in her husband's case record with the Veterans' Administration, during his lifetime, such evidence as would quickly clear the way for establishing her entitlement to compensation in the event of his death. Such evidence should include a certified copy of the public record of her birth, a certified copy of the public record of the birth of each of her children, a certified copy of the public record of her marriage—as well as certified copies of the public record of all of her previous marriages, and divorces, or deaths of previous husbands, if any, and also of her husband's previous domestic relationships, if any.

Complications, by reason of previous civil and common-law marriages and divorces, too often arise after death, which are very difficult, and, in many cases, impossible to unravel, after death, which could, during the lifetime of both parties have been straightened out, so that the Veterans' Administration would be able to ascertain who was lawfully married to who, and whether an alleged widow is the lawful widow.

Any veteran, who has himself been previously married, or who is married to a woman who has previously been married, should be sure that the woman with whom he is living, and regards as his wife, is actually his lawful wife, and would, in the event of his death, be regarded by the Veterans' Administration as his lawful widow.

COMPENSATION RATES

The widow of a World War veteran who has died by reason of a service-connected disability, if married to the veteran prior to May 13, 1938, and still validly married to and living with him at the time of his death, is entitled to compensation as follows: "Widow, age under 50 years, $38; widow, age 50 years or over, $45; widow with one child, $10 additional for such child up to 10 years of age, increased to $15 from age 10 (with $8 for each additional child up to 10 years of age, increased to $13 from age 10 (subject to apportionment regulations); no widow but one child, $20; no widow but two children, $33 (equally divided); no widow, but three children, $46 (equally divided, with $8 for each additional child, total amount to be equally divided); dependent mother or father, $45 (of both), $25 each, as to the widow, child, or children, the total compensation payable under this section shall not exceed $83." The above amounts of compensation are paid in the event the monthly payment of compensation under Veterans Regulation No. 1 (g) and the monthly payment of yearly renewable term or automatic insurance does not aggregate or exceed the amount of compensation herein authorized, in which the death compensation rates are as follows: Widow, but no child, $15; widow and one child, $20, with $3 monthly for each additional child; no widow but one child, $12; no widow but two children (equally divided), $15; no widow but three children (equally divided), $20 (with $2 monthly for each additional child), total amount to be equally divided. Total pension payable not to exceed $27. Where such benefits would otherwise exceed $27, the amount of $27 could be apportioned as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs might prescribe.

The widow of a World War veteran, who, at time of death, was entitled to receive monetary benefits by reason of a service-connected disability, or who with some service-connected disability (even though less than 10 percent), if she married him before May 13, 1938, and was living with him up to the time of his death—provided that she has an income of not more than $1,000 per year, or, having child or children, has an income of not more than $2,500 per year—is entitled to compensation as follows: "Widow with no child, $30; widow with one child, $38 ($4 for each additional child); no widow but one child, $15; no widow but two children, $22 (equally divided); no widow but three children, $30 (equally divided, with $3 for each additional child; total amount to be equally divided)." The total compensation payable cannot exceed $64. Where such benefits would otherwise exceed $64, the amount of $64 may be apportioned, as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may prescribe.

DISABILITY PROOF

Proof of the existence of a service-connected disability at time of death may be submitted by the widow after his death. Securing evidence of service connection of a disability, after death, is, however, obviously more difficult than while the veteran is living.

It is certain that there are many thousands of World War veterans not now receiving compensation by reason of any service-connected disability who could, if they would, secure factual affidavit evidence to establish the service connection of some disability of measurable degree. Having established that fact, to the satisfaction of the Veterans' Administration, will thereby have provided compensation protection for their wives, who, after all, are all potential widows.

Technically establishing the service connection of a disability, even though not compensable because of being less than 10 percent in degree, is, therefore, equivalent to a paid-up insurance policy, which, during the period of eligibility, will insure a monthly income which might otherwise require an investment of from $4,500 to $19,000, yielding 4 percent interest per year, depending upon the number of dependents and their ages.

This law, Public 198, should be an incentive to every wife of a World War veteran to "stir up" her husband to the point of submitting such fact-giving evidence as might be necessary to establish the service connection of any disability which he thinks was caused by his military service, while he is living, so that both he and she may have the assurance and satisfaction of knowing that she and her minor children, if any, will be eligible for such compensation.

Wives can frequently encourage, advise, and assist their disabled veteran husbands in the prosecution of their equitable claims by helping them to secure factual affidavit evidence to prove the nature, severity, and service origin of their disabilities. Many World War veterans, suffering with disabilities actually caused by their military service, have become too discouraged to prosecute their claims for service connection and compensation. By helping her husband to prove the service connection of one or more of his disabilities, the wife would thereby be guaranteeing compensation protection for herself and children.

If application for compensation is made by a widow, otherwise eligible, within 1 year after date of death of her veteran husband, she would be entitled to receive such compensation payments effective as of the date of his death. If she made the application more than 1 year after his death, she would be entitled to such compensation payments only from the date of application and proof of eligibility therefor.

BURIAL EXPENSES

The widow, or the next of kin, of a deceased World War veteran, is entitled to apply for reimbursement of burial expenses, as to the body of the deceased veteran, in an amount not to exceed $100, and is entitled to receive the United States flag used to drape the casket at the funeral.

The widow may arrange for the body of the veteran to be buried in a national cemetery, and is entitled to receive, from the War Department, a marble, stone, or bronze headstone or marker for the grave of the veteran, provided that application is made therefor, within 2 years after the date of burial of veteran, or within 2 years after October 16, 1940, whichever date may be the later.

CIVIL-SERVICE PREFERENCES

The wife of a World War veteran suffering with a service-connected disability, who, by reason thereof, is himself unable to qualify for a civil-service position, may make application for the 10-point preference on a civil-service examination, and would be entitled to the other civil-service preferences, which includes the right to reopen any active register for an examination, once each half year, which would otherwise go to her husband.

The widow of a deceased World War veteran is entitled to receive 10 points in addition to her earned rating as to a civil-service examination, and to the other preferences granted to veterans as to civil-service examinations, appointments, and retentions.

Wives and widows of disabled veterans cannot help but be interested in problems of their husbands, and ought, therefore, to be intensely interested in the legislative, employment, and service programs of the D. A. V., and should consequently be interested in helping to build up the membership of the D. A. V. itself, and of its service-giving Women's Auxiliary.

"Medical Mussolini"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE E. GEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

LETTER FROM PRESIDENT OF CALIFORNIA OSTEOPATHIC ASSOCIATION, AND A CHART SHOWING CURRICULUM OF AN OSTEOPATH

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, we have always known that the American Medical Association was the strongest union in the United States. We have always known that the health of the public has been used as a football by the leaders of this organization. We know that this group has been convicted of violating the Federal antitrust laws, but what we did not know was the extent of this influence into our armed forces. Surely at a time like this we should all stop, look, and listen. I should like to see a very thorough investigation made as to just the extent of this influence and its effect upon the national defense. If we have qualified, well-trained physicians and surgeons, that are patriotic enough to offer their services to their country, why should any single group deprive this Nation of the services of these men?

We have a few members of this body who are very diligent when it comes to criticism of labor unions for much less than is being done by the American Medical Association. It is my hope that this diligence will extend to the group in question also.

I am including a letter that has a real bearing on this subject. I also include a chart that will set to rest forever the argument that these men lack in training:

CALIFORNIA OSTEOPATHIC ASSOCIATION,
Los Angeles, May 19, 1941.

Congressman LEE E. GEYER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You undoubtedly are aware of the status of the osteopathic physician and surgeon licentiates in California. We enjoy the privileges of an unlimited license under the business and professions code of our State. California osteopathic physicians and surgeons are interested in serving their country in this national emergency.

We have noticed in the public prints that medical officers have repeatedly made statements that the Army was in desperate need of doctors. In view of this information the House of Delegates of the California Osteopathic Association, instructed the writer and Dr. Frank G. Nolan, graduate of the College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, and captain in the medical corps of the California State Guard, to go to Washington to confer with Robert H. Patterson, Under Secretary of War, and Surgeon General Magee of the United States Army concerning commissions for physicians and surgeons holding the degree doctor of osteopathy.

General Magee genially, but flatly, told us that the Army Medical Corps had no place for doctors who hold the degree doctor of osteopathy, regardless of the fact that they are trained, licensed, and practicing physicians and surgeons. We were told that our Government did not want us in our rightful capacity as surgeons, schooled in all phases of medicine, and that those of our men under 36 years of age would be drafted as privates with no opportunity to qualify for commissions as medical officers, administrative officers, or even as technicians. In fact, the Surgeon General referred us to a volunteer organization—the American Medical Association—which is legally comparable to our own, with the statement that the American Medical Association approval would be necessary and tantamount to the opportunity we sought.

To us it does not seem to conform to democratic principles that men who have spent 7 or 8 years or more in qualifying themselves to render a particular service, which at present seems to be greatly needed, should be refused recognition because a volunteer organization (already convicted by the Federal Government of violating the Sherman Antitrust Act) is in position to deprive the Government of the services of eager, capable, physicians (of which there appears to be a reticent supply) because they do not carry a particular brand.

These members appeal to you, Congressman GEYER, through the association I have the honor to represent, to make this a matter of your personal concern, to the end that this situation be reviewed and investigated by an impartial body, and that action in accordance with the found facts be taken in the interest of justice and democracy.

Enclosed is a summary of the educational requirements and curriculum of the College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons in comparision with other educational institutions.

Respectfully,
For the board of trustees,
K. GROSVENOR BAILEY,
A. B., D. O., F. A. C. N.,
President, California Osteopathic Association.

[Enclosure.]

Summary of curriculum requirements taken from current catalogs, 1941

Comparison of hours between the College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons and the University of California School of Medicine, plus the requirements of the California Medical Practice Act and the American Medical Association Council on Education for the physician's and surgeon's certificate]

Subjects	College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons	University of California	California Medical Practice Act	American Medical Association Council on Education
	Hours	Hours	Hours	Hours
Anatomy and histology	715	592	560- 740	560- 740
Physiology	231	224	180- 240	180- 240
Biochemistry	209	256	140- 180	140- 180
Pathology, bacteriology, and immunology	562	496	400- 520	400- 520
Pharmacology, materia medica, and toxicology	198	176	160- 200	160- 200
Preventive medicine, public health, and hygiene	168	144	120- 160	120- 160
General practice, neurology and psychiatry, pediatrics, dermatology, and syphilology	1,381	1,468	800-1,060	800-1,070
Surgery: General surgery, orthopedic surgery, urology, ophthalmology, otology, rhinolaryngology	986	814	520- 700	520- 700
Obstetrics and gynecology	437	282	160- 200	160- 200
Legal medicine	5	16	----------	----------
Medical history and bibliography	11	8	----------	----------
Principles of osteopathy, osteopathic technique, and body mechanics	176	----------	----------	----------
Total	5,079	4,476	3,040-4,000	3,040-4,000

Proof of Service-Connected Disabilities

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOE B. BATES
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. BATES of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that every one of my colleagues has had the experience of trying to help some of his constituents legally to prove, to the satisfaction of the rating agencies of the Veterans' Administration, the service connection of disabilities which claimants conscientiously believe to have been caused by their World War service.

We all know that an equitable claim cannot necessarily be technically established to the satisfaction of the Veterans' Administration. We have all had the feeling that some of our World War veteran constituents have just claims for service connection and compensation as to which we have been unable to be of any real assistance. Most of the claims, which the Veterans' Administration has denied, have had to be denied officially, because of the lack of sufficient evidence to establish the veterans' contention that his disability had originated in, or been aggravated by, his military service.

I realize that the Veteran's Administration cannot be expected to prosecute claims against itself. It already, in effect, acts as both judge and defendant, and it would, therefore, not be proper for it also to act as prosecuting attorney to assist the veteran claimant in securing damages, as it were, in the form of compensation, from the Veterans' Administration.

There are probably several scores of thousands of World War veterans suffering from disabilities which were actually caused by the hardships, and the stress and strain, of their World War service, who have not yet technically established the legal service origin of such disabilities—probably, mostly because of their failure to realize the kind of evidence needed for that purpose.

I have just run across a special article concerning Affidavit Evidence to Prove Service Connection, which appears in the May 15, 1941, issue of the Disabled American Veterans' semimonthly, the official national publication of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, commonly known as the D. A. V.

Written by the D. A. V. national service director, Mr. Millard W. Rice, known to many of us in his previous capacity as national legislative representative for the V. F. W., I think the advice in this article, as to how affidavit evidence ought properly to be prepared, is the best material which I have so far seen on this subject.

Hoping that this will come to the attention of many disabled veterans, who are in need of this information and the pointed suggestions therein, I have requested the special permission of the House to insert such article in full, as part of my remarks, as follows:

[From the Disabled American Veterans' magazine of May 15, 1941]

AFFIDAVIT EVIDENCE TO PROVE SERVICE CONNECTIONS

(By Millard W. Rice, National Service Director)

Adequate affidavit evidence to establish the service connection of a disability is still, I find, the most perplexing problem for the average veteran claimant of the Veterans' Administration.

There are still thousands of World War veterans, in my opinion, who have not yet technically established their entitlement to benefits from the Veterans' Administration to which they may be equitably entitled, on the basis of service-connectable disabilities. Being equitably entitled to a benefit, however, is not at all the same as being legally and technically entitled thereto.

The Veterans' Administration officials and employees must administer the law in accordance with its provisions, as interpreted through regulations, instructions, legal opinions, and service letters issued by the Veterans' Administration, and as applied according to precedents established in claims involving similar facts. Such discretionary power, as rating agencies of the Veterans' Administration may be permitted to exercise, is limited by the various restrictions established by reason of such precedents, service letters, regulations, and legal provisions.

KIND OF CLAIM

A Veterans' Administration claimant should first analyze the type of claim which he or she has made before deciding upon the type of evidence to be submitted as proof of entitlement to such applied-for benefit. As to certain types of claims, it is necessary only to prove certain simple facts, as specified in the forms provided by the Veterans' Administration for such purpose.

Where the best evidence is not obtainable, the claimant should try to secure the "next best" evidence. Thus, for example, if it should prove impossible to secure a certified copy of a needed birth certificate, because the particular county or State did not at the time of such birth keep any vital statistics records, then it might be possible to secure a photostatic or certified copy of an entry in a family Bible as to such birth, or an affidavit from the doctor or midwife who delivered the child, or, if such better evidence be not obtainable, affidavits from neighbors who knew about the fact that such a person was born at about a certain date and lived under a certain name for such a period of time or, if that be not obtainable, proof as to the age set forth by parents during a decennial census, or by the claimant in his application for enlistment into service, or such other "next best" evidence as might be obtainable under the circumstances.

It has been my observation, however, that there are more veterans who have not definitely proven, to the satisfaction of the Veterans' Administration, that certain disabilities were caused by or aggravated by their military service, than as to any other type of denied claim.

If a veteran's honorable discharge certificate, or his official medical records while in military or naval service, fails to show the service incurrence or aggravation of his disabilities, the average veteran claimant is very much puzzled as to how actually to prove the service connection of each of his ailments which he conscientiously believes to have been caused by or aggravated by his military service. From whom shall he secure factual proof thereof? How shall he secure the necessary substantiating evidence? What must such proof of service connection consist of?

Under the provisions of section 200 of the old World War Veterans Act, as reinstated, after the infamous Economy Act, by Public Law Nos. 78, 141, and 196, it was, and still is, possible to establish a presumptive service connection as to active tuberculosis, amoebic dysentery, neuropsychiatric (nervous and mental), encephalitis lethargica (sleeping sickness) and spinal meningitis, upon proof that any such ailment had existed in a disabling degree of at least 10 percent prior to January 1, 1925, if other evidence did not clearly rebut such presumption of service origin. It is very seldom possible, however, now more than 16 years after the expiration of such presumptive period, to establish a presumptive service connection under such law.

It is still possible to secure service connection for certain-named chronic constitutional diseases upon proof that such a disease existed in a disabling degree of at least 10 percent, so medically diagnosed, within 1 year after date of discharge from World War service—the so-called administrative presumption of service connect'on. The schedule of disability ratings lists the following as chronic constitutional diseases:

"Acidosis, anemia, primary (all types); arteriosclerosis; beri-beri; diabetes insipidus; diabetes mellitus; gout; hemochromatosis; hemoglobinuria (paroxysmal); hemophilia; Hodgkins disease; leukemia (all types); obesity; ochronosis; pellagra; polycythemia (erythremia); purpura; rickets, scurvy, endocrinopathies; arthritis, deformans; arthritis, chronic; carcinoma, sarcoma, and other tumors; cardiovascularrenal diseases, including hypertension; cholecystitis, chronic, proceeding to gallstone formation; endocarditis, chronic; leprosy; myocarditis, chronic; nephritis, chronic forms; nephrolithiasis; valvulitis, chronic."

Most service connections now established, more than 22 years after date of discharge from World War service, are either on the basis of official record or on the basis of affidavit evidence establishing direct service connection of any such disability.

CONTENTS OF

Direct service connections can and still are, being established on the basis of fact-giving affidavit evidence.

A claimant of the Veterans' Administration should, in submitting a claim, be sure to state his claim in full, lest his failure to mention some particular disability in his claim afterward be used against him as indicating that he himself did not have any such ailment at the time of submitting such claim, and consequently thereby in effect admitting that he did not then have any such disability.

It has been my experience and observation, during more than the last 20 years of handling claims and legislation pertaining to disabled veterans and their dependents, that it is advisable for the claimant himself to prepare a personal affidavit. Such a personal affidavit by the claimant should set forth all of the facts in the history of his claim, should specifically state just what he believes himself entitled to, together with the reasons therefore in detail, and should tell just why he believes the evidence submitted by him should be regarded as sufficient for the purpose intended. The claimant's own affidavit should very carefully set forth all of the incidents of his military or naval service, including hardships, exposure, long hikes with heavy packs, unusual exhaustion or sleeplessness caused by heavy shell fire or what not over a considerable period of time, concussions or explosions of nearby shells, lack of proper food, etc., as well as a description of any suffering or discomfort which he may have experienced by reason of an injury or ailment, just how it affected him, what he did about it, if anything, and why, if such be the case, he is unable to secure any verifying affidavits from his buddies as to the inception of any such ailment. Then he should proceed to state in detail just what he felt like when he was discharged, and if—as is usually the case—his discharge certificate states, "Physical condition: Good", he ought to explain why his ailment was not noted by the medical examiner when he was discharged. He ought to recall just what his condition was immediately after his discharge from service and what he did about it, if anything, and if not, why not. Then he ought to tell the story of the development of each of his ailments from the time of his discharge up until the time such ailment was medically diagnosed by the Veterans' Administration, indicating its nature and severity, and its handicap to him in securing and retaining and efficiently performing the various jobs which he may have had since the date of his discharge.

By going through the process of preparing such a detailed personal affidavit, a claimant will recall many instances, which he would otherwise not remember, where one or more other persons had the opportunity of observing certain facts indicating that he was suffering with certain ailments, thus possibly enabling him to make contact with such person or persons to secure detailed affidavits concerning such facts.

Inasmuch as the claimant generally knows more about his own ailments than does any other person, he should be able in his own affidavit to relate the facts in the detailed history of the development, chronologically arranged as to approximate dates. Preparation of the claimant's own personal affidavit will generally place him in much better position to revive the memories of his friends concerning detailed symptoms and incidents which they may have overlooked or almost forgotten about, and therefore make it more feasible to secure more factual convincing affidavit evidence from such friends.

The claimant should always remember that his own claim is much more important to him than to any other person. He should therefore be willing to go to much more trouble in his own behalf than he has the right to expect from any friend or acquaintance.

It is permissible for a claimant to remind his former associates, employers, or fellow employees concerning certain incidents which occurred many years ago the recital of which in an affidavit might be helpful to the claimant in proving the service connection of a particular ailment, and in proving the relative severity and handicap of such ailment over the period of time involved.

Each affidavit should state in detail all of the pertinent facts known by the person who signs it, that is, the affiant. Complaints heard and symptoms observed by the affiant should be specifically stated and described in detail. The circumstances under which such symptoms were observed should be carefully outlined. The approximate dates of each particular occurrence or observation should be recorded.

The first few occasions when complaints were heard and symptoms noticed should be stated in much greater detail than observations made at later dates, but all of them should be "tied together," so far as circumstances of the affiant may permit.

The expression of an opinion by the affiant is of absolutely no value to the claimant unless it is backed up by specifically stated factual observations used as the basis for arriving at such stated conclusion. It is important to differentiate between personal observation and hearsay. The recital of detailed facts, sometimes considered to be too small to be important, may be particularly valuable in establishing a link in the chain of evidence to prove the incurrence of a disability during military service, its existence at time of discharge or shortly thereafter, and the continuity of its development from that time up to the time that it was definitely diagnosed by the Veterans' Administration.

Where a claimant has previously handled his claim through some veteran organization or the American Red Cross, and subsequently decides to reopen the claim, it would be well again to contact such service organization to find out if its files contain any evidence which should be filed with the Veterans' Administration, or any copies of affidavits previously submitted, so as to be able to compare same with newly prepared affidavits. Some of the affiants of the affidavits previously considered may be able to prepare new affidavits furnishing more specific, detailed, factual evidence than previously submitted.

FORM OF

It is not necessary, nor even advisable, that a claimant should have his affidavits prepared in legal language. It is more important that the affidavit should state all of the pertinent facts in plain, understandable language. Ordinarily the claimant himself, possibly with some advice from a competent service officer of the D. A. V., or some other veteran organization, can do a better job of preparing convincing affidavit evidence concerning a claim before the Veterans' Administration than can be done for him by an attorney.

Although attorneys generally prepare affidavits in the third person, I consider it better for a claimant, and for those from whom he secures substantiating affidavit evidence, to have each affidavit prepared in the first person. The affiant can tell the story more naturally in the first person than in the third person.

The use of forms furnished by the Veterans' Administration is not, in my opinion, generally advisable, except perhaps in the most simple type of affidavits where only one or two facts can be stated by the affiant.

A person who uses a prepared form is too likely to rely on the suggestions made by the form and consequently does not spend enough time in thinking out the facts which ought to be stated, but merely responds to the suggestions of the form itself. Such prepared forms are nearly always too crowded for space and consequently tend to cause the affiant to tell less than he might have told if he had prepared the statement in his own language without reference to any form.

A good fact-giving affidavit cannot be prepared in 5 or 10 minutes; it requires considerable "thinking back" into old, almost forgotten history. Memories fade with the lapse of time. Frequently the affiant needs to be reminded by the claimant, either by letter or in person, as to certain incidents which might have occurred and which, although more or less inconsequential, so far as the affiant is concerned, might prove to be important in establishing the claimant's contention.

Rather than using prepared forms, it is suggested that the claimant use ordinary white paper. Affidavits should preferably be typewritten, so as to be more easily readable by members of the Claims and Rating Board and therefore more impressive, and so that the claimant may be able to keep copies for future use and reference. It is generally advisable to have the copies notarized, as well as the original.

If the average claimant is at a loss as to how to start with the preparation of an affidavit, the following blank affidavit at least conveys the general idea:

I, John Doe, being first duly sworn, do depose and say that I have known the claimant, George E. Smith, C 1 234 567, during the last ——— years; that prior to his World War service I know that he was working as a ——— for ——— years, and, by personal observation, know that during all of that time he enjoyed good health; that during his military service I met him at ——— on or about ——— at which time he complained to be about ———; I then observed that ———; thereafter I met him about ——— times of each month until and on nearly every one of each of these occasions I heard him complain of ——— and I noticed ———; that on or about ———, after his discharge, I met him, at which time he again complained to me of ——— and I then noticed ———; that on or about ——— I met him again and during our visit I noticed that ———; that from on or about ——— to about ——— I met him on the average of ——— times each month (or each year) and on practically all and each of these occasions I observed ———; also, on practically all and each of these occasions I heard him complain of ———; that because of these several observations on my part, I am convinced that his ailment of ——— was really caused by his military service and that he ought, therefore, to be granted compensation because of such handicapping disability; that etc., etc.

FROM WHOM

If service connection is the end in view, the veteran should obtain at least two affidavits, if possible, from buddies who were in service with him, at least two affidavits from persons who knew him shortly after the date of his discharge and from other persons who have observed his condition, from time to time, since shortly after his discharge.

It may be possible, in some cases, for a claimant to establish the direct service connection of his disability by securing two good affidavits from buddies who served with him, who were discharged with him and who have lived in the same community with him since that time. In other cases, however, it may be necessary to secure many more substantiating affidavits, because of the fact that the claimant shifted around from place to place, and therefore finds it necessary to piece together the evidence obtainable from many different persons who knew him at different periods of time. The important thing is to establish, if at all possible, that the disabilities existed in military service, that they existed within the first few days, or first weeks, or first few months after date of the veteran's discharge, and that they have been developing, with possibly some ups and downs, toward greater severity up until the time of diagnosis by the Veterans' Administration.

The claimant should obtain affidavits from each of his post-war employers and from one or more fellow employees, from his wife, his mother, or other close relatives, and from other persons with whom he may have been closely associated, each of whom may have observed some pertinent facts concerning the nature, severity, and development of his various ailments.

Affidavits should, of course, be obtained from each doctor by whom he may have been examined since he returned from service or, if such medical evidence be not obtainable, from any druggist who may have furnished certain medicines.

All such affidavits should be prepared with the same careful detail as indicated above.

A DOCTOR'S AFFIDAVIT

A doctor's statement should be notarized as assurance of the fact that he is a doctor and that he did sign it, and in order to avoid any suspicion that the statement may have been signed by someone else.

The doctor's statement should include a recital of all of the symptoms, facts, and circumstances and history of the ailments complained of to him by the patient; should include all of the doctor's findings, diagnoses and dates or approximate dates of different examinations, together with other detailed facts indicating the severity of each ailment subsequent to the date of first examination, the type of treatment recommended or provided for, the recommendations made by the doctor to the patient, the doctor's opinion as to the degree of severity of each of the ailments diagnosed by him, his opinion as to their origin and duration, and his opinion as to the effect of each ailment upon the patient's ability to work at his occupation or any other occupation from time to time.

If the doctor does not have a record of his examinations, then his statement should include an explanation of how it happens that he remembers the facts stated in his affidavit, possibly by connecting up approximate dates of examinations by other factors or circumstances mentioned in his affidavit.

The Veterans' Administration frequently sends out an investigator to confer with a doctor who has submitted an affidavit on behalf of the veteran and if the doctor fails to verify what he set forth in the statement which he prepared in behalf of the veteran claimant, the rating agency will very likely completely discount the value of the doctor's statement.

Doctors are prone to submit carelessly prepared affidavits. They should be encouraged to prepare their affidavits carefully, lest a carelessly prepared affidavit jeopardize the claimant's chance to prove the service connection of his disability.

When the claimant asks a doctor to submit a statement or affidavit in his behalf, he ought to explain to him just what he wants and why, and he ought also to explain that the Veterans' Administration cannot take anything for granted and will not even accept the validity of his diagnosis unless the doctor states symptoms and findings in detail on the basis of which he arrived at his diagnoses.

The claimant should remember that the Veterans' Administration can evaluate the affidavits only on the basis of what is specifically stated in each of them, as compared with what is stated in all of the rest of them. The affidavits must be consistent with each other. Contradictory statements in two or more of the affidavits are definitely harmful.

Rating agencies can give no value to opinions, impressions, and conclusions unless they are based upon sufficient facts specifically stated. The value of any given evidence must be determined upon the basis of what it may be considered as proving to the average reasonable man. The claimant should never adopt the attitude that the Veterans' Administration already knows a fact to be true. Each alleged fact must be proven by official record or by evidence which is both material and relevant. A clear word picture should be established in simple, direct language on the basis of actual observations of the affiants.

The claimant's story and his substantiating evidence must sound logical and reasonable and must be such as to be readily regarded as truthful.

If all of the evidence points to the truth of the claimant's contention and if most of the essential facts have been proven, then the Claims and Rating Board members are authorized to give the claimant the benefit of any reasonable doubt which may still exist. The benefit of the doubt cannot be granted if the evidence is only such as points to the possibility of the claimant's contention being true, where the preponderance of the evidence fails to establish the probability of the truth of the facts alleged by the claimant.

It is generally advisable for a claimant to have his affidavit evidence looked over by some service officer of the D. A. V., or of some other veteran organization, before it is finally submitted to the Veterans' Administration. Evidence should not purposely be submitted on a "piece by piece" basis. No pertinent evidence should be held back for later submission. One or more denials of the veteran's claim make it more difficult, than originally, to secure favorable action subsequently on the basis of new evidence. All obtainable pertinent evidence should be submitted at the same time, if at all feasible.

If these suggestions are carefully followed, many more claimants can be enabled to establish the service connection and compensability of their service-connectable disabilities, with direct benefits to themselves, as well as the assurance of pension protection to their wives and children.

If a claimant has been unable to secure a response to a request for a needed substantiating affidavit from someone in another community, he should feel free to request the cooperation of the national or chapter service officer, or other officer, of the D. A. V., the V. F. W., the American Legion, the American Red Cross, or of any other veteran, patriotic, civic, service, or community chest organization—all of whom are ordinarily glad to cooperate in helping deserving disabled veterans to secure equitable adjudications as to their claims.

Address Before Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHAUNCEY W. REED

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ADDRESS OF HON. CHAUNCEY W. REED, OF ILLINOIS

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by me to the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, Hotel Sherman, Chicago, May 15, 1941:

Let me say to you at the beginning of this discussion that I did not come here merely to say pleasant things to you. I gathered from your invitation that you ladies wanted to know the truth about the situation with which we are faced. I surmised that you felt that you were not being told all, and that you wanted to know some of the facts which lie back of the day-by-day developments in the United States and throughout the world. I came to give you those facts as far as I myself know them. I think, as citizens, you are entitled to know all of the facts that can be given you about the foreign situation, the wars on the European Continent and the Far East, and the dangers that confront us from our own unsolved domestic questions.

Since the ratification of the nineteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, women have been accorded equal suffrage with the men. They have been elected and appointed to high offices in the Nation and in their respective States. Certainly women have demonstrated their intelligence, their ability, and their capacity to sit alongside the men in the legislative councils. They are fully competent to help govern, to assist in the making of the laws, and to aid in working out the problems of state. Today eight of them occupy seats in the Congress of the United States. A very distinguished Member of Congress, in commenting on the general tendency on the part of the public to consider as unusual and surprising the success women have achieved in statecraft and politics, recently said, "Many people seem to feel as though this were an accomplishment not to have been expected." Like my distinguished colleague, I find nothing to be surprised about that this has been realized in our political life, and am therefore not inclined to be as enthused therefrom as are some of my gentlemen friends.

I have believed for a long time that women are becoming somewhat resentful, and certainly a bit bored, by being complimented merely as women rather than being treated as equals of men in intelligence, capacity, and ability in the work of politics and government. That is why I said in the beginning of my remarks that I have not come to greet you with pleasantries nor to flatter you with complimentary phrases. It is my desire to explain to you the situation as I see it, to impress upon you the work that needs to be done, and to suggest to you how you with your club organizations, can do your fair share of this work alongside the men. I am one of those who believe that women do not want assignments of simple, easy tasks on the ground that they are women. I believe the women of America are just as ready to work at the hardest tasks as are the men and I believe they will do their share of the difficult work just as ably, just as efficiently, and just as quickly.

I shall endeavor to deal today with more or less nonpartisan problems. It would be impossible to give you any information about the vital situation, which we face or about any phase or factor of that situation without encountering controversial matters, because there is a very great diversity of views as to whether or not we should get into this war at all; what aid we can give to Great Britain and China without actual involvement; whether we need to aid the other nations in their wars in order to strengthen our own defense; whether we are getting a defense as rapidly, as efficiently, and as economically as we should—hardly a single factor is noncontroversial. There are two fundamental points, however, upon which I think a vast majority of the American people are wholeheartedly united.

The first is that our biggest job is to preserve Americanism. We must maintain and perpetuate what we call the American way. We must preserve and safeguard constitutional government. We must see to it that schemes—clever and subtle schemes—of those who would change our form of government into some kind of a centralized absolutism, whether it be communistic, nazistic, fascistic, socialistic, or some mixture of them, must be defeated. Those schemes have been hatched. Those schemers are at work in this country. In their own private circles they speak openly of the form of government they intend, if possible, to bring about in the economic chaos and social bewilderment which, they believe, will follow the war. The form of government they desire is vastly different from our revered and priceless American constitutional representative Republic.

We do face very, very serious questions of an economic nature after this war is over. Just 1 week ago today Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, speaking before one of the House committees of which I am a member, said, "Now we are going forward into times of even greater peril. * * * Economic warfare, as well as military warfare, is now being waged on all sides of us. There is no certainty that even with peace these aggressive economic instruments will be abandoned by other countries. Nobody can say what kind of international economy will emerge from this war."

Recently the Secretary of Commerce, Hon. Jesse Jones, told the United States Chamber of Commerce that our national debt would reach $90,000,000,000 before we were out of this war. Some of the leading economists of the United States say that the debt will go as high as one hundred and ten or one hundred and twenty-five billion dollars.

Now, the truth of the matter is that the debt might go to $150,000,000,000. Nobody, from President Roosevelt down to some obscure farmer working in an Illinois field, can even attempt to guess the gigantic sums of money we will be compelled to spend now that we have gone into this war or are going into it. Not only are we embarking into this new international adventure with a debt 50 times greater than that with which we entered the first World War, but we are now spending on a scale much greater. President Roosevelt has laid down a doctrine that the American Nation and the American people intend to aid every nation everywhere in the world which is resisting the powers of dictatorship. Of course, he does not mean all dictatorships. He means Hitler and Mussolini and Japan. But when we undertake to finance all of these wars we will have embarked upon a course the cost of which no human can at this time possibly foresee.

We do know that following every great war there have been serious and even cataclysmic economic and political disruptions. The economy of every nation in the world—including our own—will be burst asunder after this war. We will have new economic problems which the world never faced before. They will be of a magnitude such as we have never even dreamed. Sums of money in indebtedness will be involved of such gigantic proportions that humans cannot even comprehend them. Therefore it could very easily develop that in seeking to aid other nations in their wars against dictatorships we might lose our liberties at home. Here in America we may, in the not far-distant future, be called upon to sacrifice our American way of government and of life and submit to a rigid dictatorship at home in order to prevent economic chaos, national bankruptcy, and such a despair on the part of the people as might lead them to embrace some alien doctrine of absolutism. God knows, my fellow citizens, we must avoid that fate at all hazards.

The second fundamental point upon which I think there is in America almost universal unity is the necessity for and our intention to achieve an utterly invincible national defense. The best method by which we can attain that defense is subject to controversy, and I am going to speak in a few moments of this question of controversy because I believe disagreement has a very great place in our American scheme of government and of life. But for the moment I want to address myself to this question on which I think there is fundamental unity throughout this Nation. Whatever peril may threaten us from without has arisen since 1933. Throughout the past 8 years some of the nations of the world have been building armament and training men for what they call a total war. Total war as contemplated by the dictators means the conquest of all the other countries of Europe and the Orient. Most of the small European nations have already fallen to the forces of might and their people subjugated to the will of the conquerors. No doubt others will suffer a similar fate.

There has never been a time in human history, of course—and this applies to the European Continent as well as to the Orient—when some nation or some combination of nations has not been trying to enslave other nations and make them economic serfs. The Continent of Europe since history began has been a battleground. It has been torn by strife. It has been rent by racial hatreds and suspicions and conflicts. It has had all sorts of religious wars. Some of the best students of history believe that wars and conflicts and disagreements and strifes will continue on the European Continent for many a century to come. Others believe that historic forces are now operating to cement the small and divided nations of the Continent of Europe into one great union which will be militarily and economically superior to any other nation or combination of nations in the world.

However all this may be, we have come into an era when our agencies of communication, travel, and intelligence have so shortened the distances across the seas and throughout the world that there has come about, particularly since the last World War, a very much more closely knit world economy than ever existed before. As you are well aware, there has been no time in history when some nations weren't having a war. Previous to the first World War, however, the countries were so separated by oceans and land distances and by lack of transportation and communication agencies that the economic structure of the world was very loosely integrated. It was like a very ramblingly constructed building, with so much "give" to all of its parts that if one part was shoved out of plumb for the time being it did not too seriously affect all of the other parts. The modern world economic structure which has been built up through international trade and commerce, travel and education, has become like a solid brick building. If you push one beam of that edifice out of plumb you send a shock, a tremor, and perhaps a collapse throughout the entire structure.

Inasmuch as that has come about, inasmuch as the fast ocean liner and the airplane and the cable and the transoceanic telephone have brought about this situation, we must consider this whole question in the light of this new economic integration or interrelation. This has a military bearing. In other words, if any dictator or dictators can cement all of the nations of Europe and of the Orient, with their vast reservoirs of ignorant labor, into a unit, and can direct the great forces of manpower in those nations, he or they cannot only upset but can paralyze our own achievements. Our own economy will be completely wrecked unless we, too, in the Western Hemisphere cement together the nations of the New World.

Now, of course, to do this would mean not the abolition of war, not the end of conflict, but the creation of two new gigantic economic agencies which would either work in absolute harmony and cooperation or go to war for the purpose of the one annihilating or subjugating the other. In other words, instead of two powers as represented by the British Empire on the one hand and the German Empire or would-be empire on the other, we might have, for instance, an American Empire composed of all the countries of the Western Hemisphere cemented together by their common needs and their common ideals, opposed by another collection of nations on the European continent under the direction of one dominant force, such as Germany, for instance, and perhaps even another economic, social, and military structure in the Far East under the domination and direction, let us say, of Japan. Now, whether or not one or two such combined economic and military organisms arise in the world to threaten us, or whether the world remains divided up into small nations which will continue warring with each other, it has become apparent that the United States must cease to be a complacent Nation, depending wholly on its own internal riches and resources and strength to protect it rather than to have a military mechanism for its defense. We realize now that the close integration of the world economy, that the shortened distances between nations, from the standpoint not only of commerce and trade but of war, has made it necessary, finally, that we should have and must have a national-defense mechanism that will be utterly invincible against the aggressions of any nation or any combination of nations which might in the future seek to commit aggressions against us.

I am not going to attempt for a moment to conceal from you the fact that this very necessity of a new and gigantic military agency of defense is itself going to bring grave new problems into the life of every man, woman, and child in the United States. Not only are defense mechanisms such as we now know we must have, expensive to create, they are exceedingly expensive to maintain. There are social as well as financial implications inherent in this whole question of defense which I have not time today to outline to you beyond saying that where there is a great standing army and where the people are military-minded there is always danger—grave danger—that a military despotism may arise to supplant civil government. However that may be, our most immediate need is for a national defense that will be so complete and so powerful that no nation or combination of nations will dare attack us. That defense must not only be military, it must also be economic. If we are to cement the nations of the Western Hemisphere into one solidarity to maintain our American ideals of free government, free speech, free press, free ballot, and free religious conscience, then we must cement those nations together economically. That means that we must finance the backward nations and direct very largely their efforts at progress. We must try to raise their people somewhat nearer to the living levels and conditions and the working levels and conditions and the cultural levels and conditions of the United States of America—and that, my friends, is the gigantic task of the future.

Many well-meaning but uninformed people believe that our efforts toward such an effectual union will be materially lightened because of the fact that politically we think alike and that the South and Central American nations, being republics, will welcome a combination militarily, economically, commercially, and socially with the greatest and most powerful republic on earth. But let us not be deceived on that point either. I think that situation was aptly described in a speech in the House by Representative Bruce Barton last fall when he said: "We persist in deluding ourselves by referring to these neighboring countries as 'republics' or 'democracies.' As a matter of cold fact, you could take all the democracy that there is south of the Rio Grande and put it in a woman's powder box, and it would rattle around. These countries are dictatorships or family possessions or feudal oligarchies. They are not even as much democracies as Chicago or Jersey City." In spite of many obstacles, the President and Secretary Hull have been and are now making commendable progress in promoting closer, more intimate, and more friendly relationships between the United States and the other countries of the two Americas.

I said a moment ago that the building of this national defense would bring new strains and new sacrifices for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Not long ago Mr. Donald M. Nelson, the director of purchases for the Office of Production Management, declared before the United States Chamber of Commerce that the defense program is so tremendous that in the way we handle it, we shall be shaping our future for many years to come.

Whether we like it or not, he said, the program is an instrument of change. He pointed out that, looking farther ahead, we will build up a terrifically unhealthy situation by creating a whole new series of distress localities—territories that have been bled white and lack the human and industrial resources to face the future. Those territories, Mr. Nelson said, will face a let-down "that will make the experiences of our recent depression look mild."

Personally I am not quite so pessimistic as to the future as Mr. Nelson seems to be. I still have a profound faith in the capacity, the ingenuity, and the courage of the American people. I believe that the sons and daughters of those courageous pioneers who came to this country and carved out this great, powerful, rich, enlightened Nation from the primeval forests and the unwatered plains of the North American Continent can still turn to and do a difficult job if they know what that job is and what needs to be done to accomplish it. I believe the American people can meet this challenge of the present and of the future with the same courage, with the same ingenuity, with the same resourcefulness, with the same energy and ability and capacity that they have met all of our problems in the past, provided only that they are honestly and frankly told what must be done. That is why I am making no effort to minimize any of the harsh aspects of the task which now lies before us to provide ourselves with a modern defense mechanism of naval craft, aircraft, tanks, guns, rifles, and whatever is needed to round out a perfect, modern national defense.

Its expense will be stupendous. It will bring privation to and demand sacrifice from the American people. It will, and already has given rise to sharp controversy. There is certain to be much bitterness over the method of building and using this national defense.

Now let me for a moment discuss this question of controversy. There has been propagandized throughout the length and breadth of this Nation somewhat recently the idea that it is unwise, dangerous, and even traitorous to disagree with the officials of our Government about how much shall be spent in military and nonmilitary operations, or what shall be done about patrolling the seas or convoying ships with American naval vessels, or what we shall do about sending our boys abroad again, not necessarily to the Continent of Europe but to other foreign countries to serve in the armed forces.

When the first colonists came to the shores of the North American Continent they did so because they perceived that the lack of freedom of speech, the lack of a free press which in those days consisted of hand-written pamphlets, the lack of religious liberty, the lack of educational opportunity, were keeping them in involuntary servitude. They left their homes and their relatives and all of the civilization that they knew and came to the wild, undeveloped, trackless forests and waterless plains of this continent because they loved liberty more than they loved any ease of life, or any of the advantages that the civilization of that day accorded them.

Our forefathers were keen students of human nature and also keen students of history. They realized that there were but two known ways by which men, associated together in a society, could reach an approximation of truth and justice. One of those ways was by direct Divine inspiration. The other was by a process of proposals, disagreements, discussion, and compromise. Our forefathers knew from their own experiences and from their reading of history that power feeds on itself. They knew that any despot, any dictator, any absolute ruler, not only might lack the wisdom and the benevolence necessary to make a good ruler, but he might also lack that sense of discrimination by which he could choose as his advisers those who would influence and persuade him to decisions and acts which would be in the interest of all the people. In other words, even though it be granted that theoretically the finest form of government possible in the human family is a benevolent dictatorship, the prerequisites of such a benevolent dictatorship are several.

We would have to find the man who would remain benevolent after he became a dictator and attained absolute power.

We would have to find a man who would have almost omniscience in order for him to be wise enough to be a truly benevolent dictator.

And then we would have to find a man who would have the judgment and the discretion to choose as his advisers those who held the same ideals and had the same motives which actuated him. He would have to have that great power of judgment and insight which would tell him when some of his advisers were leading him astray or were influencing him to depart from those ideals which characterized his rule.

And finally, there would be another very great consideration. His would be the responsibility to find and select as his successor, a despot who would be as benevolent, as wise, as discriminating as he had been. In order to do this he might have to renounce his own sons and daughters, go outside the circle of his own family and of his own relatives, and, in contradiction to every human impulse, select some individual as his successor over the protests and the persuasions of his own loved ones.

Our forefathers saw the impossibility of such a situation. They saw the futility of such a hope. Therefore they arrived at the very wise conclusion that, in building the new North American nation, the next best method by which the people might approximate truth and justice, was through a system of proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise. They were very wise, those founding fathers, in that decision because out of it has evolved what we call the American way of government and of life. Out of that decision has developed what we call, the two-party system in America. That American way, that two-party system, that method of proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise has made us the richest and most enlightened Nation on the face of the globe. It has given our citizens the highest wages and the finest working and living conditions enjoyed by any working people anywhere on the face of this earth. It has made possible for us a religious, an educational and a cultural progress greater than that achieved by any nation or any people on the face of God's green footstool.

We have more luxuries in the United States today—we have finer railroads and highways, we have more automobiles, we have more of everything that makes life worth living—than any other people in the world, and all of it has come to us through the American way. That American way was expressed in the Constitution of the United States which was the organic law and the essence of which was government by the consent of the governed. The Bill of Rights states, in terms, those inalienable rights of the individual and the minorities which must always be considered and respected by the majority. We have achieved all of these vast blessings in a comparatively short period of years as history counts time because we have adhered to our American system of proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise.

It has been within the last 8 years—and this has no reference to any administration or any political party—it has been within the last 8 years that there has been abroad in this Nation powerful propaganda that we should abandon the American way of proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise. There has been preached the doctrine of a greatly centralized power in Washington whose judgments must not be questioned or criticized by the people. I am frank to say to you ladies today that the greatest danger that faces this Nation, the most sinister threat that confronts you and your children and your children's children, is that very propaganda that there should be at Washington a centralized governmental power which would be above and superior to the criticism of the poorest ditch digger or the sweatiest laborer in any Illinois field.

Whenever any political party, be it Republican or Democratic, whenever any Government officials, be they bureaucrats, Cabinet officers, or even President, successfully place themselves above the criticism of the people, that day the American way of life and government has ended in this Nation and dictatorship has begun. The greatest job that you women have—not only as women, not only as wives, not only as mothers, but as citizens—is to preserve the Bill of Rights and constitutional government, with all the blessings of its liberties and privileges, by fighting with every ounce of intelligence and strength that you possess this doctrine which is advanced that there must be no questioning of the Government at Washington; that there must be no criticisms of the methods of the administration; that the Congress and the people must be told nothing about what is being done, but that they must accept the decisions and edicts and the regulations of the bureaucrats without question.

Yes; our greatest task is to preserve the American way. Therefore we must look with disapproval if not grave suspicion upon any attempt of any public officials high in the administration or anywhere else to enter into personal abuse or to try to assassinate the character of anybody who wants to speak his mind freely and fully as an American citizen about how we are to achieve our national defense and whether or not we should go into war. Disagree as we may with the views expressed by anyone, we still must not lose sight of that fundamental right of every individual to annunciate his convictions freely and fearlessly.

I regret—I think everyone in the Nation regrets—that recently there was an exhibition of personal vilification and abuse by high officials of the Government of a very distinguished citizen because he had dared to express his personal sentiments as to our getting into the European war. Every citizen is clearly and wholly within his constitutional rights and privileges in so expressing himself in peacetime. Every good citizen, every citizen who is jealous of the liberties and the privileges of our American way of life should have the right of voicing his opinions freely and courageously about this momentous question, without any apprehension that high and powerful governmental officials with great prestige will assail his character, his motives, his integrity, and his honor. That is not the American way. That is not showing a true regard for the opinions or the rights of a minority. And I want to say to you again, my fellow citizens, that in that day when we depart from the system and the practice and the tradition of the majority according respect and consideration to the views and the rights of the minority, in that day we shall have abandoned the American way of government and of life and we shall have adopted either an autocracy or a despotism.

There has been a deep division among the American people as to whether or not we should go into this war. We were assured, of course, before November 5 by the platforms of both parties and by both major party candidates that America would be kept out of war.

We were going to aid Britain and the other nations by methods short of war. We were going to maintain our sympathies by methods short of war. We haven't heard that statement "short of war" since November 5. We are being taken into this war. There is no use to try to conceal that fact. Admiral Stark, of the Navy, revealed to the United States Chamber of Commerce a few days ago at Washington that American naval ships are patrolling the seas two or three thousand miles off the shores of the United States. There is a grave question at this time as to whether or not the United States Government may use force to dislodge German soldiers from Greenland. The clamor is arising that we get into this war; that we get supplies to England even though we have to take them on our own ships and protect those ships by naval power. The President himself has said that convoying means shooting, and shooting means war. His statement was correct. Convoying does mean shooting, and shooting means war. But we have to come to an era of hair splitting. We have come into an era when the very meaning of words is changed—one might almost call it an era of weasel words—to use a term coined by Theodore Roosevelt in his day. We are told that we are not convoying ships with American naval craft, but that the American naval craft are patrolling the ocean. We are told through the press by the President that American naval ships can be taken anywhere in the combat zones or not as he may desire in his capacity as Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the Nation.

I will say to you frankly that was not the intention of the Congress. When the $7,000,000,000 so-called lease-lend bill was passed it was specifically and solemnly promised by the administration leaders in Congress that the President had no intention of having American boats convoy shipments of munitions to Britain. Now for the moment, disregarding the merits or demerits of the question, the wisdom or the needs of our delivering our aid to Britain, I think you will agree with me that the American people who have to do the fighting, the dying, the suffering and the paying for any war are entitled to know the truth about whether or not they are being taken into that war. The American people are not weaklings. You women are not weaklings. You can stand and they can stand the shock of the news that we must go to war if go to war we must. The great danger is that we will be taken into war without our knowledge and not know how we got there.

It is interesting to note chronologically how we find ourselves where we are today. After the first World War most of the European nations owed us money. Soon all but one defaulted in their repayments. Realizing that Uncle Sam, as partial recompense for the part he had played in the great war, had been elected to the exalted position of holder of the proverbial bag, Congress in 1934 passed and President Roosevelt signed the Johnson Act which denied further loans or credit to such nations until such time as they had made good their existing obligations.

This act still remains on the statute books. Finland, alone, has maintained its credit with us. In 1935 many of the nations of Europe were increasing their armaments and enlarging their military forces to such an extent that war seemed imminent. Being determined to discourage would-be war profiteers from instigating or promoting our involvement in another conflict, the House of Representatives that year passed the McSwain bill, a measure designed to take the profits out of war. The Senate, however, failed to consider it. A year later both Houses passed and President Roosevelt signed a Neutrality Act containing a provision forbidding the sale of arms, ammunitions, or munitions to any nation engaged in war. Later civil war broke out in Spain, and in January of 1937 the Neutrality Act was amended to apply to conflicts of that character as well as wars between nations. The Neutrality Act, in reality, reiterated and put teeth in the admonition of the Father of our Country to keep forever clear of the perpetual age long and never-ending military conflicts of Europe. In 1938–39 war broke forth on the Continent with all its fury. Austria, Czechoslovakia, and Poland were the first victims. France and England declared war upon Germany, and within a short time appealed to the United States for war materials. In the latter part of 1939 the President called a special session of Congress and asked for the repeal of the arms-embargo provision of the Neutrality Act. Congress complied with his request by enacting a statute authorizing the sale of munitions to belligerents on a "cash and carry" basis. In 1940 Hitler seized Denmark and subdued Norway, Holland, Belgium, and France. Italy joined the Axis, and our President made his famous "stab in the back" speech. A conscription law was passed, 50 United States destroyers were turned over to England, the two major political parties declared for "material aid consistent with law and not inconsistent with the requirements of our own national defense" to democracies resisting aggression and our Nation abandoned its position as a neutral and became a "nonbelligerent." This year, so far, Congress has enacted a lend-lease bill placing at the disposal of the President more than $7,000,000,000 for aid to nations resisting aggression, and again, 2 weeks ago, authorized him to seize foreign ships now in our harbors (including German and Italian craft) and dispose of them to Great Britain. Within a matter of weeks, or even days, we will probably be asked to officially authorize the convoying by our Navy of these and other ships loaded with war materials to Great Britain. Without doubt, the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, already possesses that power, but he is reported as having stated that he does not propose to assume that responsibility without the approval of Congress.

Under the convoy system, strictly speaking, a number of merchant vessels loaded with munitions of war or supplies, as the case might be, start to sea with a number of naval craft accompanying, escorting, and protecting them. The naval vessels range ahead of, behind, and on the sides of these merchant craft, searching for submarines, and looking out for airplanes. An enemy submarine cognizant of the presence of the merchant ships and their convoys could, if it dared, dive under the outer fringe of the protecting vessels, torpedo, or attempt to torpedo, the cargo ships, and then run its chance of escaping the depth bombs which would promptly be dropped by the naval craft. Modern warfare has demonstrated that, instead of convoying ships like coveys of quail, it is sometimes safer and more effective to have the merchant vessels zigzag so that they present a target which is always going off the course that it is at any given moment sailing, while the naval craft at the same time are patrolling the waters of the ocean. In thus patrolling, these naval craft bewilder and confuse the submarine commanders, and in many cases the enemy aircraft. A submarine commander cannot bring his submarine to the top of the ocean and hail a ship and say, "Are you an American warship, or a British warship, or an American cruiser, or a British cruiser, or an American destroyer, or a British destroyer, or an American cargo boat, or a British cargo boat?" To do so would be to expose himself and his boat to being blown out of the water. There is no way by which German submarines or Italian submarines, or German air pilots, or Italian air pilots can distinguish between the destroyers, for instance, which we have traded to Britain and the other boats which we are constantly giving to her and the American boats. Consequently, when our naval craft are sent to patrol the ocean two or three thousand miles from home there is an excellent chance that there will be some shooting, and that some German commander of an air squadron or some German commander of a submarine will make a mistake and sink an American boat. That would be the "incident" which would precipitate us into a shooting war. We are courting just that sort of incident.

I would be less than frank with you, ladies, if I permitted any fear of a criticism that I am verging on a partisan discussion to prevent me from saying to you that we are courting armed participation in this conflict by those naval craft being sent out to patrol the seven seas. Neither do I say it in the spirit of condemnation. I merely desire to emphasize that this policy is fraught with danger and we should reflect upon it with full knowledge of its perils and with our eyes open. No matter what may have been our feelings heretofore, our Nation is definitely committed to a policy of "aid to Britain short of war." We must, as loyal Americans, accept that policy and in a constructive manner, try to accomplish that goal. Whether in pursuance of that objective, the responsibility should be ours to deliver to England the supplies, the munitions of war that she must have to survive, is deeply controversial and is a question that frankly I think cannot be decided by any civilians anywhere. It is a problem that the Members of Congress and our military and economic authorities must study out.

Now what can the women of America, what can women such as you who are organized together in federated clubs, do to help their country in this situation? The first thing that you, as citizens as well as women, can do is to insist to your representatives in Congress, to your servants in high places in the Government, and in your own home communities, that the American way of proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise be upheld and maintained and perpetuated. You can insist upon freedom of speech and freedom of press as well as freedom of ballot and freedom of religious views. The late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once said in an opinion—and I am not quoting him literally—that freedom of speech meant freedom of the other fellow to voice ideas which you hate. We can see at once that is easy enough for us to be indulgent and to accord freedom of speech to those with whom we agree or who agree with us. The real test of freedom of speech comes when the other fellow voices opinions which we abhor or despise or with which we intensely disagree.

The first essential of maintaining and perpetuating the American way is that the American people be told the truth insofar as the dissemination of the facts is consonant with the public welfare about what is being done in connection with the participation of this Nation in one way or another in the armed conflict now going on in the world. They should be told the truth about defense production. They are not now getting the facts. It is the American people who must pay for it. It is the American people who must make it operate. It is the American people who, if necessary, must die in their Nation's defense.

You, as citizens, as club women, as wives, and as mothers can, and should, demand through your Representatives in the Congress the truth about defense production. There has been a demand on the part of some of the officials of our Government for a so-called voluntary censorship of the news. One of the points on which one of these officials called for such censorship on the part of the newspapers was the presence of British warships in American ports for repairs. It was but natural that not only the newspapers but the people should consider a bit absurd the objection that was voiced to press accounts concerning the entrance of a British warship into a great American port in broad daylight, on a Sunday, with thousands upon thousands of people watching it come in. Yet this administration official demurred most strenuously because a newspaper printed a picture of the event, as though German, Italian, and Japanese spies and agents were not and would not be in that crowd of thousands of people to see the ship come in, and as though they would not have vantage points from which to photograph with telescopic lenses every detail of that crippled British warship.

A voluntary censorship could not be very effective in concealing from any of our potential enemies, such as Germany, and Italy, and Japan, and Russia, any of the very essential facts about the state of our national defense or preparedness. Those facts are not ascertained through the newspapers by the agents of foreign governments. They are attained by much closer observations and much closer contact—much of it social. Censorship, voluntary or otherwise, at a time when our Nation is not at war, is, it seems to me, a dangerous practice. Aside from its being a violation of our fundamental liberties, it could be exercised to screen from the American people failures in our own national defense which those in charge of building it might desire to conceal. Such a voluntary censorship could very readily lend itself to just such use. It could be made a clever and effective way of veiling the facts, however dangerous or however bad they might be, from the American people and excusing their action in that regard, on the ground that to tell the people the general facts about our national defense would be to reveal information of value to the agents of our potential enemies.

You should demand the truth about defense expenditures. Neither the Members of the Congress nor the people are being told the realities about these expenditures. Recently some inquisitive Congressmen started investigating on their own hook. They found waste and incompetency to the nth degree. Congress was shocked by the revelations and an inquiry is now under way. At Camp Meade, in Maryland, close to Washington, the costs of that cantonment have already risen $21,000,000—more than twice the original estimates. The advice of the most experienced engineers was ignored by a general, now retired, who calmly told a congressional committee recently that he didn't like the arrangement of Camp Meade, that he had assumed that troops were being sent over there to train, and that therefore, regardless of the cost of these many millions of dollars, he had ignored the advice of competent engineers, had thrown economy to the winds, and had followed his own ideas about the cantonment, with the results which I have described. That sort of thing ought not to be tolerated in this country, and must not be tolerated any more. As was recently pointed out by the minority leader of the House of Representatives, a new tax bill, which will shock the Nation when the people learn of the rates, is already on the way to enactment. The exactions in the bills which will follow this first one will make the present tax bill appear to be a very simple, mild measure, indeed. We must not forget that waste and graft and inefficiency must be paid for out of the family pocketbook, the same as the money legitimately and prudently spent.

Public funds squandered or stolen or lost through incompetence must be paid for by you women who do most of the purchasing by taking the dollars from your family purse and appropriating them for taxes. They must be paid for in terms of the milk that the baby can't have, of shoes the other children must do without, of the clothes that the fathers and mothers of America must deny themselves, of many family necessities which must be sacrificed. I say to you here and now that we cannot and we must not for a moment tolerate even the thought that any person or any group may be allowed for one day to prey upon the people through the national defense. You should demand that they be run down, exposed to public scorn and indignation, and, if possible, to the penalties of the criminal law.

You can and you should seek from your representatives in the Congress and from your public servants in the administration the truth about the strikes in the defense industries. We have heard much argument about the comparative figures as to the number of men involved in these strikes, as to the number of man-hours which have been lost in the defense industries as compared with 1917. I must say to you bluntly that conditions today certainly are not as they were in 1917. Some strikes which would have been tolerated then might be fatal to our defense now. Putting it succinctly, if the situation is a half or a third as bad as the President has time and again told the country it is, if our state of defenselessness is anything like it has been described, then there is no time for a single hour's stoppage of the defense work through strikes or any other cause. We do not have the time for one strike, let alone a series of strikes. The Nation's peril and the Nation's imperative need for an adequate national defense ought not to be and must not be made the excuse for employers for taking an undue, unreasonable, or unfair advantage of organized labor. Conversely, the Nation's peril and the imperative need for an adequate national defense must not be made the excuse by leaders of organized labor for unfair or unreasonable demands upon the employers.

The Committee on the Judiciary, of which I am a member, is endeavoring to attain a solution to this perplexing problem. Extensive hearings have been conducted and leaders of industry and labor, Government officials, military and naval experts, and individuals possessing peculiar and extraordinary knowledge of labor conditions both in our own and foreign countries have been called in to give us the benefit of their views. Among these was Hon. William C. Bullitt, recently United States Ambassador to France. I shall read you a couple of pages of his testimony before our committee, and from it you can draw your own conclusions:

"The situation in France which led to the conquest of France by the Germans developed over a period of years, and in reality developed out of the same sentiment that we all share in this country, and that was the very profound desire to have peace.

"The one thing that every Frenchman wanted after the last war was to see a French baby born who could live to the age of 60 without having to pick up a gun to repel a German invasion. And out of that really deep, intense desire for peace came, in the first place, the Maginot line, which the French thought would protect them from all future German invasion and, in the second place, an attitude of mind which was one of not taking any armed action until the last possible moment.

"When Hitler came in on the 30th of January 1933 he began at once his tremendous program of plane construction, which had been planned before he came in by his staff, those members of his staff who were experts in aviation, especially Goering.

"He got the jump by starting in at once at the time on a tremendous program of air expansion. The French, when he came in, had an air force that was completely dominant on the continent. It was a big air force; the planes were somewhat obsolete and were entirely obsolete when put up against the planes that finally started coming out of Hitler's factories.

"In 1933 the Germans began to turn every energy they could into the building of airplanes, but it was not, however, until the end of 1936 that these efforts, great as they were, began to give results. It takes a long time, as we are learning to our cost now in this country, to build up an airplane industry.

"The Germans actually began to get planes in great quantities coming from the factories toward the latter part of 1936. When the German Army entered the Rhineland in March of 1936, the French Army and French air force as well was still much stronger than the Germans, and it could have moved in and destroyed the German air factories which were turning out planes in contravention of the Locarno Treaty.

"They didn't do so largely because of this basic idea not to take up arms and in the hope it was possible eventually to come to some agreement with Hitler.

"That was really their last chance. The moment Hitler had entered the Rhineland and began the construction of the Siegfried line so that France could not invade Germany readily, and the moment a flood of planes began coming from the German factories in the latter part of 1936, it was too late. It was too late to save eastern and central Europe, but this curious illusion existed in France: That they still did not need to turn every energy they had into production because the Maginot line was so strong that Germany could never get across it. The result was they had many manufacturers who did not want to take government orders and contracts for military machines of different kinds; they had a very large series of strikes of different kinds, and French production, at a time when it should have been raised to the greatest possible height to meet the German menace, without anybody noticing particularly, just quietly did not rise at all.

"You had also another element which is often misunderstood, I think—the action of the so-called Popular Front on behalf of the workmen.

"* * * When the Popular Front government came in—I believe, if my memory is not at fault, it was about the month of June or July of the year 1936—there was an enormous number of reforms dealing with wages, hours of labor, paid holidays, a great mass of reforms introduced in one big block, as one big program

"Those reforms were long overdue, and they had the good effect of producing an excellent state of mind on the part of those workmen who were actually loyal Frenchmen. They had no effect in changing the state of mind of the Communists in the factories, whose loyalty was not to France but to a foreign dictator, and who took their orders from that foreign dictator.

"On the other hand, they did reduce enormously French production, because French industry was not organized suddenly to drop hours of labor greatly, and also lots of the manufacturers were very much frightened by these reforms. They said, 'We are not going to expand our factories.' In fact, in some cases they closed their factories.

"The result of this was we had a diminution in production in France just when we needed a greatly increased production to meet this rising German threat.

"There was also another curious development, which was this: That in the factories even working a 40-hour week, in many of the most important factories, especially those around Paris, where there were a great many Communists, that the workmen did not do much work during the 40 hours. They dragged their feet a good deal and did not turn out over so much.

"But that was under the influence of a different sovereign, a sovereign in Moscow, and was not the attitude of the really patriotic Frenchman.

"The result of this whole picture was that without doing anything to produce at war speed when they needed to produce at war speed, the French, because of the existence of the Maginot line, still felt perfectly secure. It was not until 2 months after the war began that the French introduced a Ministry of Munitions which began to organize the production o munitions on a war basis, and had an excellent program for the production of a great many munitions and a great many planes in the year 1942. But France was destroyed in 1940.

"* * * The tragic and almost unbelievable fact is that the French never became really conscious of the common danger until after the Germans had broken through the Maginot line last May. Up to that time they were so certain that the Maginot line was going to keep the Germans off, and there had been so little fighting on that front, that the people were really still asleep. And then came like a thunderclap the realization that the Germans were through the Maginot line; and you then had all the employers, all the employees, workmen who had not been working much, you had them turning to and working incredibly. They worked incredible hours, they would work until they would drop, and they actually produced in the last month, when the Germans already had in their hands a large number of their plane factories, two and a half times as many planes as they had ever produced in a month before from the whole of France, because they suddenly realized that their country was about to be overrun, that their lives were about to be ruined, that they were about to be enslaved, and every Frenchman turned to and did his utmost.

"But it was too late."

What legislation, if any, will result from our committee's hearings which are yet to be concluded, I am not at this time prepared to predict. It is not an easy task to formulate and draft a law that will eliminate strikes. The right of labor to bargain collectively with its employer is a recognized American principle. The right of an employer to discharge disloyal, lazy, or incompetent help is likewise recognized as fundamentally sound.

The right to strike or quit work in unison and collectively because of wages, hours of work, or working conditions has been recognized by our Government and our courts for many years as the legitimate exercise of the only effective weapon that employees possess against unscrupulous and unfair employers. As long as our system of democratic government exists we will continue to have disputes between employers and employees, just as we have disputes between individuals over contracts and accidents and boundary lines. We cannot by legislation eliminate the disputes in either case, but we can set up the proper machinery for their speedy adjudication. One remedy that would go a long way toward reducing unreasonable strikes would be to provide by law for a fair, honest, impartial, and secret vote under supervision of a Government official, whereby every member of a local labor union can, without fear or coercion, express his honest, individual decision as to whether his organization in a given case shall or shall not strike. This would make less potent the influence of gangsters, racketeers, and subversive groups that have all too frequently gained control, through terrorism and intrigue, of organizations made up of honest, loyal, American workingmen. We can outlaw sit-down strikes. They have no place in democratic America and are the product of the type of leadership I have just mentioned. Another practice that has grown up and that has no reasonable justification is the calling of jurisdictional strikes. These are the result of disagreements between a union of a group, such as the American Federation of Labor and one of another group such as the C. I. O. or between two rival unions within the same general organization. Their grievances have nothing whatever to do with wages or hours or working conditions. They are disagreements wholly and solely as to the jurisdiction over certain work between two unions. In some cases strikes have been called, picket lines have been established, and defense work has been stopped because some union member didn't pay his dues into his union.

Such strikes as these are utterly indefensible. You should demand that they cease because it has been demonstrated that only an aroused and determined public opinion will bring the proper action to put a stop to this plague of strikes which is seriously if not fatally injuring or retarding our efforts to achieve a national defense.

The need for an invincible national defense is too great, is too vital, it is too pressing for us to allow any selfishness or even any mistaken zeal on the part of either employers or employees to interfere with the defense progress. We cannot do as France did. The work must go on.

You should, through your Representatives in Congress and through your servants in the administration, demand the maintenance of free speech and free press. As someone recently said, free speech and fearless expression of thought offer the only method by which we may hope to perpetuate the American way of government and of life.

You should demand the maintenance of free ballots. There should be an end to favoritism and discrimination in the awarding of defense contracts. Such discrimination ought not to be tolerated for a moment. You should and you must demand fairness and justice and honesty in the administration of all relief agencies of the Government such as the W. P. A., and in the agricultural payments and in all of the other functions of the Government both military and nonmilitary. Unless we do this, we may lose our government of, for, and by the people.

You can and you should do all in your power to resist the tendency that has been growing by leaps and bounds over a period of many years to delegate arbitrary and far-reaching legislative and judicial power to commissions, bureaus, and boards that are in no way responsible to the people. You should urge your Members of Congress to support some measure like the Walter-Logan bill that will provide uniform procedure before these bodies and accord an appeal to the courts from arbitrary and unjust rulings.

Our forefathers recognized, and history has consistently supported their doctrine, that political bureaucracies tend to become corrupt and wasteful the longer they are in power. We must always keep in mind the fact that our military defense against any dangers which may threaten us from without could be defeated, our liberties could be lost, and our Nation could be wrecked by agencies and causes within. Keeping in mind the statement made to the United States Chamber of Commerce by Secretary Jones, which I quoted earlier in this address, that we can expect the national debt to go to $90,000,000,000 or more, we cannot forget that economic chaos and national bankrupty are just as dangerous to our American form of government and our American way of life, they are just as threatening to freedom and democracy as any danger from over the seas from any armies of any dictators. These internal dangers, dangers of waste, and inefficiency, and graft, and corruption, and a softening of the moral fiber of the people, are vastly more difficult to detect and are very much more subtle than any military danger which might threaten from without.

Therefore it not only becomes your duty, but it is a work which you ladies can very effectively carry out, not only through your clubs but individually, to stamp out in your home communities revolutionary communism and fascism, and every sort of absolutism that may be proposed. Stand earnestly, actively, aggressively against every argument, against every alien doctrine, against every seduction and every threat to our American way of government and life.

To do that, to discourage and to thwart the efforts of revolutionary Communists or Fascists to overthrow or bring about a change in our form of government and our way of life, we must all work together to oppose class and sectional prejudices and suspicions and hatred and frictions and divisions. We must have national unity in this hour of our peril. National unity, I say. What is it? Really, what is it? Unity is not submission. It is intelligent cooperation. Submission is blind yielding to dictation, whether that dictation be bureaucratic, administrative, or whether it be brought about by inflaming the temper of the citizen. Under such submission nobody dares to disagree. Unity is reached through proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise—the American way which I described earlier in this address. We are all unified as to the need for an invincible national defense. We all want it. But we are not all agreed as to methods which have thus far been employed to get it.

Many of us believe that it can be achieved much more economically, much more efficiently, much more quickly under practical military and naval officials, under industrial managers and honest labor leaders, than under political and social theorists, whose chief concern is to keep themselves in power and to maintain their places at the expense of the taxpayers.

You can and you should demand frankness and candor on the part of the administration about these vital matters which involve the lives and happiness, the security, and the property of this generation as well as those generations which are to come after us.

These, ladies, these are purposes you can help to accomplish. This is work you can help to do. These are ends you can help to promote. Thus you can do your part not only in assisting to achieve an adequate national defense, but in preserving the solvency of the Nation, and in maintaining our American form of constitutional republic and our American way of life.

In these dark hours, when war clouds black out the sunlight of freedom and of happiness and of security in so many parts of the world, the greatest task which lies before the American people is to keep the torch of freedom burning in this great, free land of ours so that it will be a beacon of hope in the years to come to those nations which are being prostrated under the blows of war and whose people are being driven frantic by the horrors of armed conflict.

If we permit the torch of liberty to flicker out in this Nation, if we ever abandon our American way of free government and free life and free enterprise, then indeed will darkness have descended upon the world. If democracy cannot be made to work successfully in this great, rich, enlightened Nation of ours, then it cannot be made successfully to work anywhere on the globe. If freedom, if liberty, if education, if political and religious tolerance cannot be made to function in this land of ours, then they will have failed throughout the world and we will indeed be hurled back into another dark age.

Democracy will work. It can be made to work in America. Liberty, religious, and political freedom, educational and cultural advantages, and material progress can all be turned to the blessing of mankind here in America. We can lead the way back to the ways of peace and plenty and security here in America. We can guide the rest of the world away from war and away from the horrors of mass murder and destruction and back to the ways of concord and happiness. It depends upon us. Ours is the task, my fellow citizens, to do this, to hold aloft the torch of liberty and freedom in the world, and to not fear the criticisms of those who would conceal from the people their plans to annihilate constitutional government on this continent. Let us not in our zeal to aid democracies elsewhere lose it at home. Let us pray together, let us work together, let us hope together, let us have faith together in the future of America and our people.

Peerless Novelty Co., Grand Haven, Mich.

REMARKS

OF

HON. BARTEL J. JONKMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, the consummation of our national-defense program, I am sure we all agree, is of the utmost importance, requiring full cooperation on the part of the governmental agencies having jurisdiction, and labor and industry, as well. In my congressional district, in the city of Grand Haven, Mich., among other prime manufacturing concerns, is the Peerless Novelty Co., whose products are of the highest standard and generally recognized as among the best.

This company is desirous of doing its full part in connection with the national-defense program but is handicapped in doing its part by unexplained lack of cooperation on the part of certain governmental agencies.

For instance, the Peerless Novelty Co. received proposals for bids from the Navy purchasing agent, New York, under schedule 5957 exactly 1 hour prior to the time the same were set to be opened. I have brought this case to the attention of the Paymaster General of the Navy who wrote me on May 20 that information had been requested regarding the reported delay.

This case was followed by a second protest by the company, addressed to the Office of Production Management. I read the following letter of the company addressed to that governmental agency:

MAY 22, 1941.

OFFICE OF PRODUCTION MANAGEMENT,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We are manufacturers of electric soldering irons and as such, we are interested in supplying some of the defense needs to the various Army and Navy Departments. On several occasions we have received invitations to bid the same day the bid is to be opened. As an example we are enclosing an invitation to bid from the supply officer at the United States Navy Yard, Philadelphia. You will note the invitation was mailed at 6:30 p. m. on May 19, and the bid was to be opened at 10 a. m. May 21. We received the bid at 9 o'clock May 21.

We have no idea whether your office can do anything about this, but we believe it is a condition which should be called to your attention because there are rumors that invitations to bid are intentionally being held up to some suppliers in the interest of favoring certain other suppliers. We give you this information for whatever it may be worth.

Your very truly,

PEERLESS NOVELTY CO.,
FREDERICK KELLER, Sales Manager.

Mr. Speaker, the company has just called my attention to still a third case and I read the following letter it addressed to the purchasing agent of the Post Office Department:

MAY 23, 1941.

PURCHASING AGENT,
POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We appreciate your invitation No. 195 and we would have liked to submit a quotation for the letter box time cards. However, we could not do this intelligently without a blueprint. We requested this blueprint from your department on May 17 but you failed to send us blueprint No. 101. We cannot tell what printed matter is required merely from the description shown on your invitation No. 195.

We believe we are very well equipped to supply this type material and we hope the next time you extend an invitation to bid you can see your way clear to let us have complete information.

Yours very truly,
PEERLESS NOVELTY CO.,
FREDERICK KELLER, Sales Manager.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this short time this morning to call attention to these cases of apparent lack of cooperation on the part of the Government agencies in question in the hope that the situations referred to will not be permitted to recur from now on.

"We Choose Peace"

REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT F. JONES
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, more than 80 percent of the citizens of the United States wish to keep out of Europe's wars. There are admittedly some of our people who favor intervention and all that it implies—convoys, shooting, bloody war.

In 1936 the President said:

If war should break out again in another continent, let us not blink the fact that we would find in this country thousands of Americans who, seeking immediate riches—fool's gold—would attempt to break down or evade our neutrality.

They will tell you—and, unfortunately, their views would get wide publicity—that if they could produce and ship this and that and the other article to the belligerent nations the unemployed of America would all find work. They would tell you that if they could extend credit to warring nations that credit would be used in the United States to build houses and factories and pay our debts. They would tell you that America once more would capture the trade of the world.

It would be hard to resist that clamor; it would be hard for many Americans, I fear, to look beyond, to realize the inevitable penalties, the inevitable day of reckoning that came from a false prosperity.

To resist the clamor of that greed, if war should come, would require the unswerving support of all Americans who love peace.

If we face the choice of profits or peace, the Nation will answer—must answer—we choose peace.

Mr. Speaker, tonight the President speaks to this Nation and the world. We already know that the credits extended to warring nations have not solved our unemployment problem. On the contrary, our aid so far has cost the American people billions of dollars. Mr. Speaker, if the President will only "look beyond" in his message tonight he will explain the penalties if we enter war in another continent; he will resound the cries of the American people, "We choose peace."

One Man's Opinion

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. STEPHEN A. DAY
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ARTICLE BY GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON

Mr. DAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson:

ONE MAN'S OPINION
(By Hugh S. Johnson)

CHICAGO.—The great American wartime paradox—the baffling bewilderment of the mass of sincere, honest and patriotic people—is so strange, so clearly without precedent, that I think it is the No. 1 news story of our time.

The paradox is that, while eighty-odd percent of our people are in deadly opposition to our mixing in foreign wars, a majority, at least, are complacent to every step of this administration that leads us closer to that inevitable end.

One reason that I took a week off to go to the Pacific coast was that I had been told that, while a great majority of opinion in the Middle West is against our participation and even aganst steps leading in that direction, a much stronger faction in the extreme West, as in the extreme East, is of a contrary mind.

To put it shortly and bluntly, it simply is not true. If anything, the vision on the Pacific coast is as clear, if not clearer, than that here in Chicago—the metropolis of the great valley—and that is clear enough.

Aid to stop Hitler by helping to keep a fight going on between us and him? There is hardly a voice raised in opposition. Going farther to engage in methods not "short of war"—it is my observation that there is hardly a voice raised in support.

Yet it is becoming clearer daily to this great inarticulate popular mind that "methods short of war" that are being used are, as that great palladium of American democracy, Wendell Willkie, described them, "just campaign oratory."

Every day every act of Government daily reveals more clearly that this is the greatest gold brick ever sold to a hick country.

We are "hell-bent for war," not on a wave of public opinion but as an act of administrative legerdemain or sleight of hand.

As were some other cynical triflings by our present Government with the faith and loyalty of American public opinion, which were frustrated by their own guile, this is clever, but "too damned clever"—slick, but "too damned slick."

On what does such grudging success as it has had rest? As far as one man can, I have tried to inquire. Briefly, and perhaps with too much generalization and simplification on three sloganeering propositions:

First. That the peace of the Western Hemisphere has depended on the British Navy.

Second. That the Monroe Doctrine is a gift of the British Empire and has been possible only by reason of our dependence on Britain to support it.

Third. That America cannot live in international trade competition with a Germany dominated by Hitler—that he "will abolish gold" and "establish barter of goods produced by slave labor" as a medium of exchange in international trade.

These three things have been sloganeered by radio to such an extent that they alone seem to be the whole basis for such support as there is to our infinitesimal minority war party.

As has been repeatedly pointed out here, and with greater force elsewhere, the first and second arguments are such perversions of historical fact that the simplest recounting of the record of things past is sufficient to explode them. But the third and most frequently repeated—the "international trade and exchange" argument—is what Mr. Justice Holmes used to call an "inference of the unseen"—a prophecy, a philosophical deduction.

George Peabody

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LAWRENCE J. CONNERY
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, too often do we find that the worthwhile deeds and accomplishments of those who have preceded us down the road of life are soon forgotten. Monuments and other memorials are oftimes erected by appreciative fellow citizens but with the passage of but a few years the reason for and the meaning of these memorials are soon forgotten.

A movement was begun recently by William F. Carlin, of Silver Spring, Md., to revive many of the incidents in the life of the late George Peabody, founder of modern philanthropy, that the great deeds of this great man might be appreciated by his fellow Americans.

Countless Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, including my humble self, have already endorsed the suggestion that a stamp be issued by the Post Office Department in honor of George Peabody, and I am sure many others will join this movement when they read the following condensed biography by William F. Carlin:

George Peabody was born in Danvers (now Peabody) in Essex County in Massachusetts, February 18, 1795. At an early age he moved with his family to Baltimore, Md., where he engaged in business, and attained success as a merchant. Later in life he made an immense fortune as a railroad builder and financier, and his business interests brought him finally to London, where he died November 4, 1869.

Ten feet or so from the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Westminster Abbey is a slab on the floor bearing the name of Mr. Peabody, the only American who was ever interred, even temporarily, in that shrine sacred to England's great dead. Later his remains were taken up and placed aboard a British warship, H. M. S. Monarch, which, escorted by a French and an American naval vessel, bore them across the Atlantic to their final resting place in the town of Peabody (the name having been recently changed to Peabody in honor of that great citizen), the burial taking place February 8, 1870. The Monarch landed at Portland, Maine, and the body was escorted from that city to Peabody by a company of English soldiers, part of the trip being made in a blinding snowstorm.

Such extraordinary honors were bestowed upon a man who was really worthy of the honor, for it can be argued with great plausibility that George Peabody was in a sense the founder of modern philanthropy. It is recorded that he strongly influenced both Johns Hopkins and Enoch Pratt, and his benefactions to education and music throughout the United States are many and far-reaching. His benefactions to Hopkins and Pratt certainly stimulated others. He made gifts to the Peabody Conservatory and Library at Baltimore; to Yale and Harvard Universities for the establishment of museums of natural history, archaeology and ethnology, and his gift to Peabody, Mass., his place of birth was the Peabody Institute and Library. Many other institutions of education in and around his birthplace were the recipients of the benefits of his endowments.

Probably the most important of all of his gifts in the United States was the establishment of the Peabody education fund for the promotion of education in the South, the amount of this gift being in excess of $3,500,000 which prior to the 60's was a fabulous bounty. The principal beneficiary from this endowment was the George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, Tenn., which has grown to be one of the leading institutes of learning in the United States, and which has played an important part in the educational advancement of several of the Southern States.

His success in the financial world led him to London, and while there he made a gift to the city of London of $2,500,000 for the establishment of what was probably the first large-scale slum-clearance project in the world. He also paid for the American exhibition at Crystal Palace in London in 1851, and sent a ship in search of Sir John Franklin, the missing Arctic explorer, at his own expense.

One of his most curious deeds, which stands out as a striking example of his sterling character as a citizen, was in 1835, when the State of Maryland was bankrupt, Mr. Peabody, on his own credit, borrowed $8,000,000 for the State and refused to accept a penny of commission.

Queen Victoria, ruler of the British Empire at the time of Peabody, offered to bestow upon him a baronetcy, but he refused the honor, choosing to remain a plain American citizen, so she had her portrait painted by the celebrated Peal, set in a beautiful frame with gold ornaments and presented it to Mr. Peabody. This painting together with a gold box containing the tender of the freedom of the city of London, a gold box from the Fishmongers' Society of London, and a gold medal and memorial from the United States Congress in recognition of the Southern Educational Fund are on exhibition at the Peabody Institute and Library, in Peabody, Mass. Contained in a letter which accompanied his first gift to his birthplace was the expression of his sentiment toward education: "Education—a debt due from present to future generations." This sentiment has been perpetuated as the motto of every graduation class of Peabody, Mass.

To preserve the memory of this generous and honorable citizen a movement has been started in Baltimore to raise $125,000.

Sixth Assembly of the Descendants of Participants of the Campaign, Siege, and Defense of Vicksburg

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS E. MARTIN

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ADDRESS BY COL. WILLIAM CATTRON RIGBY

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to submit the address made by Col. William Cattron Rigby at Vicksburg, Miss., on the occasion of the Sixth Assembly of the Descendants of the Campaign, Siege, and Defense of Vicksburg, Sunday, May 25, 1941. The meeting was held at the Vicksburg National Military Park and Colonel Rigby's address was made on invitation of the Society of the Descendants of Participants of the Campaign, Siege, and Defense of Vicksburg and in remembrance of the services of his father, the late Capt. William T. Rigby, who served with great distinction in the Civil War and at the siege of Vicksburg as a member of the Twenty-fourth Iowa Voluntary Infantry, and who served also with great distinction as chairman and resident commissioner of the Vicksburg National Military Park Commission.

The State of Iowa is indeed proud of the record of the late Capt. William T. Rigby and his family and Iowa is especially proud of his work to bring harmony between the North and the South throughout his long and useful life of service.

The address follows:

Mr. President, Mrs. Bell, fellow members of the Society of the Descendants of the Campaign, Siege, and Defense of Vicksburg, it is indeed an honor, as well as a very great pleasure, to be permitted to appear before you here today, and to realize that I am here with my brother, former State Senator Charles L. Rigby of Iowa, and my sister Grace, Mrs. Edward R. Cameron, whom many of you know so well, on your invitation in remembrance of the services of our father, Capt. William T. Rigby, as chairman and resident commissioner of the Vicksburg National Military Park Commission.

It is in reality a thing in which we may all justly take pride; and I speak now not only on behalf of our family—because, of course, we do take pride in it—but I speak also, as I think I may, in saying this, on behalf of this community, of the people of the city of Vicksburg, and of this great Commonwealth of Mississippi, and of the whole American people. It is a thing in which not only this city and community, but the whole State and the American people, may take just pride, that a northern soldier who had taken part in the campaign and siege of Vicksburg, in the Northern Army, could come down here to this southern city, only a comparatively few years afterward, and living 30 years in this community could so build up friendships here that in his own lifetime the citizens of this city and community should pay him the rare honor of unveiling his bust, on his eighty-seventh birthday, November 3, 1928, on the spot where his tent had stood during the siege. That could not have happened in many countries in this world. The large-mindedness, the generosity, of a community which could do this, is the sort of thing that is the sure guaranty of the success and of the continuance of free government among the American people. That he and his wife should have lived to see that event, was, as I have said, a rare honor; but it was not an honor to the man alone. It was essentially an honor to the ideals for which, as a part of the Vicksburg National Military Park Commission, he had striven; the ideals which he had prized in common with your—and I want to say "our"—revered Gen. Stephen D. Lee, and with others of this community like Colonel Floweree, General Catchings, Senator John Sharp Williams, and many others, and like Captain Guion of Louisiana, Colonel Everest of Illinois, Capt. John F. Merry, of Iowa, Colonel Kunz, the secretary, and Captain Longley, the assistant secretary of the commission, and a host of others, South and North alike, who worked together in a spirit of mutual good will.

As many of you remember, Lt. Gen. Stephen D. Lee, of the Confederate Army, was the first chairman of the commission. In view of his increasingly heavy duties as president of the Mississippi State Agricultural College and in other directions, General Lee chivalrously asked Captain Rigby to take the chairmanship; and they, with the fullest approval of the third commissioner, Colonel Everest, of Illinois, went to work to carry into effect their motto that the park was not to be regarded as a memorial primarily either for the North or for the South; not a memorial, certainly, to the success of the North, and not a memorial primarily to the valor and the endurance of the South; but that this park should be a lasting memorial to the valor of the American soldier, South and North alike.

In that spirit they worked; in that spirit the park was built; in that spirit contributions were made by legislatures and by patriotic citizens, South and North alike.

In tribute to that spirit the citizens of Vicksburg erected the bust to Captain Rigby, not, as I have said, as a memorial to the man alone but in recognition of the ideals which he shared with them of the healing of the old wounds of the Civil War and of the honor paid in common by all the States of our Union, and by every section of the country, to the gallantry and the valor of the American citizen soldier.

After Captain Rigby's death, the Vicksburg Post-Herald, in an editorial, Sunday, May 12, 1929, reprinted a portion of a speech which he had originally made at Marion, Iowa, September 19, 1899, at a reunion of his old regiment, the Twenty-fourth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and which had already once before been printed by the Vicksburg Herald, only 3 months after its original delivery, in the issue of December 8, 1899. In again reprinting parts of it after his death, the Vicksburg Herald said, editorially, that Capt. William T. Rigby ever labored to bring harmony between the sections, and that it was this spirit that he had infused into the Vicksburg National Military Park. That, and his admiration of bravery among soldiers on both sides of the conflict.

You will, I am sure, bear with me if I read here a portion of that speech, made more than 40 years ago. Captain Rigby said:

"As we remember the stirring 3 years we spent together, we feel that not for wealth to be gathered from all the breweries in the land would we have missed them from our lives. Life, indeed, is measured not by years but my emotion and experience. One moment of that strenuous day at Champion Hill has in it more life, cuts sharper and deeper into the tablet of memory, than years of ordinary existence. Therefore, dear friends, in no spirit of boastfulness, not to make parade of our services, or to found any claim upon them, but with thankfulness for the opportunity improved, with fond remembrance of the experience shared together, we gather in your city to live for a few hours in the past and to pledge again a soldier's fealty to our beloved country. To make that country greater and nobler, its people more united and happy than seen in the fondest dream of our fathers, was the object for which we fought, is now the high aim on which our eyes are fixed. Not till all sectional bitterness is gone from our midst, not till the hatreds of the war are forgotten by both sides, have we fully attained the ends for which we enlisted and were mustered.

"Every word and act that tends to hasten this, our final victory, finds a response in our hearts, and commendation from our lips. In this, as in all things, we follow our great commander: While armed foes confronted us in line of battle, 'unconditional surrender; I propose to move immediately upon your works.' After Appomattox, 'Keep your horses,' he said, 'you will need them to put in your crops.' We fought not for conquest, not for the victor's right to impose hard and humiliating terms upon a vanquished and fallen foe, but that all our land might be filled with the prosperous farms and happy homes of a united and free people.

"In forming the character and shaping the lives of the future citizens of this great Republic, we fondly hope that the unselfish devotion to duty and the unshaken valor of the volunteer soldier will be a potent influence for good; that the heroism will live in song and story, and through all the years a challenge to patriotism, above the din of party strife, ringing loud and clear as bugles that blow for battle. Nor do we forget that our late foes were brave men and gallant soldiers. Their valor, like the valor of the men of the north, illustrates and adorns the character of the American citizen-soldier. This character, tempered and proved in the crucible of battle, is the pledge and sure prophecy of the greatness of our common country. Looking into the future, may we not say of the coming American citizen: 'His shall be the larger manhood because of the heroic example of the men who conquered with Grant and Sherman and the no less heroic examples of the men who surrendered with Lee and Johnson.' Of this coming American may we not predict that where need is he will know that not suffering, but a faint heart, is the worst of woes?

"In the nobler destiny of our country, in the larger and stronger character of its people, will be found the final compensation for all the suffering and all the losses of the war."

That was said more than 40 years ago, in a time of profound peace in this country. The country was feeling the lift of the victorious War with Spain. The time when another test of the valor and the manhood of the American volunteer soldier might come seemed far away, indeed. But the test did come less than 20 years later. It was gloriously met in 1917 and 1918.

Another test may be now at hand today. As we stand here we cannot know how soon our people may again be called upon to defend our ancient ideals of liberty. But we do know that, whenever the crucial test may come, it will be met with all the valor and all the determination that the American citizen-soldier showed in 1861 to 1865 and again in 1917 and 1918. We do know that, to paraphrase Captain Rigby's words of 40 years ago, we may say, not alone the coming American, but of Americans today, men and women alike, that where need is they will know that not suffering but a faint heart is the worst of woes.

On behalf of my brother and my sister as well as myself, I want to thank you again from our hearts for the opportunity to be here today and for your generous hospitality.

Franking Privilege and Prisoners of War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. SHANLEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, we are so accustomed to think of treaties and Executive agreements as coming alone from the Department of State and the White House that we may well forget the part that the Post Office Department plays in international agreements.

Officially, for example, we are told by an article in the American Journal of International Law for April 1941 about the franking privilege for postal communications with prisoners of war, that there has been little publicity about its benefits. We immediately contacted the Post Office and received this reply:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1941.

Hon. JAMES A. SHANLEY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN SHANLEY: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 22, containing extract from an article on the franking privilege for postal communications with prisoners of war from the April 1941 American Journal of International Law. It is noted the article comments that the franking privilege seems to have escaped the notice which it deserves.

The treaty signed at Geneva July 27, 1929 (articles 36 to 38), provides that letters and consignments of money or valuables, as well as parcels by post intended for prisoners of war or dispatched by them, either directly or by the mediation of the information bureaus provided for in the treaty, shall be exempt from all postal duties in the countries of origin and destination, as well as in the countries they pass through; also that each of the belligerents shall periodically determine the number of letters and postal cards per month which prisoners of war of the various classes shall be allowed to send, and shall inform the other belligerent of this number, etc.

The Universal Postal Union Convention (article 49) contains a provision that correspondence (except when it bears C. O. D. charges) addressed to prisoners of war or mailed by them is exempt from all postal charges. That provision appears to be taken from the treaty of Geneva mentioned above.

The Department has given notice with reference to regular mails (section 32, part II of the Postal Guide), that articles addressed to prisoners of war or mailed by them are exempt from all postal charges, not only in the countries of origin and destination, but also in the intermediate countries, and that the same is true of correspondence concerning prisoners of war, sent or received either directly or as intermediary by the information offices which may be established on behalf of such persons in belligerent countries or in neutral countries which have received belligerents on their territory. Notice is given in section 71 of said part II of the Postal Guide, that parcel-post packages addressed to specific individual prisoners of war, either directly or through the intermediary of authorized information offices, shall be exempt from all postal charges, both in the countries of origin and destination and in the intermediary countries, such parcels for prisoners of war to be accepted even though regular parcel-post service for the country of destination may be suspended. Special notices with respect to parcels for prisoners of war were published in the Postal Bulletins of July 12, 1940, and October 4, 1940.

It appears that appropriate publicity has been given by this Department of the availability of service for transmission of articles free of postage for prisoners of war.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK C. WALKER,
Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker, here are some salient facts about our universal union, for which I am indebted to the office of the Postmaster General:

UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION

The first International Postal Conference met at Paris, France, in 1863.

The first International Postal Congress met at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874.

Universal Postal Union Congresses have met subsequently at Paris, France, 1878; Lisbon, Portugal, 1885; Vienna, Austria, 1891; Washington, D. C., 1897; Rome, Italy, 1906; Madrid, Spain, 1920; Stockholm, Sweden, 1924; London, England, 1929; Cairo, Egypt, 1934; Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1939.

The next congress is scheduled to meet at Paris, France, in 1944.

A Victorious Battle—Parity for Farmers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM M. COLMER

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, practically the entire time of this Congress in these days of world chaos is consumed in the urgent importance of preparing this country for a war that exists abroad and which may spread to our own beloved country before the end of strife is seen. With that proposition of preparedness I have no fault to find. On the contrary, for several years I have been among the warmest advocates of such a plan. In fact, Mr. Speaker, during my tenure as a Member of this great legislative body I have advocated, in season and out of season, two principles, as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will reflect. First, since Mr. Hitler became the head of the German Government I have seen, in my humble way, that he was bent upon world domination and have advocated the preparedness of this country to meet the threat of Hitlerism because I believed that the only argument that Messrs. Hitler and Mussolini would listen to would be an armed force and equipment superior to their own. But even prior to the advent of the doctrine of brute force and fascism as advocated by Hitler and Mussolini, I have consistently called the attention of the House to the ever-increasing dilemma of the farmers of this country and the doctrine of parity payments as its cure. And so today, Mr. Speaker, realizing that if the objective of a well-rounded defense program is achieved, it is essential that we also see to it that our domestic problems are met. The two go hand in hand. For the defense program cannot be realized in its fullness without a contented and prosperous people to back it up.

PARITY PAYMENTS

But, Mr. Speaker, those of us in the American Congress who have from day to day continuously advocated the principle of parity payments for the basic crops were delighted and heartened to learn that the President on yesterday signed the bill which has heretofore passed the Congress, providing for mandatory loans up to 85 percent of parity on the basic agricultural commodities of cotton, wheat, corn, rice, and tobacco. This means that another great milestone along the march of progress to full parity payments has been passed. It means that the President of the United States, who has been charged in some quarters with being lukewarm and indifferent to the plight of the American farmer, has realized the necessity for and the logic of the doctrine of parity payments to the farmers of America. But more than that it means that the southern cotton farmer and the western and eastern wheat farmer, as well as the western corn farmer, is assured of at least 85 percent of parity for his crops. But it means more than that. It means that the loan, plus the cash parity payments, plus the soil-conservation payments in cash will assure the southern cotton farmer of full parity of approximately 16 cents per pound for his next year's cotton crop. Mr. Speaker, I know of no news in this day of bad news that has been as heartening as that which flashed over the wires on yesterday, bearing the good tidings to the hard-pressed farmers of America everywhere that the President had signed the bill. It means a day of great rejoicing in the rural sections of this country. It means stabilization of prices, a sense of security to the farmers, and increased purchasing power. It means a revival in business, which is already on the upturn.

PARITY PAYMENTS GOOD ECONOMY

Mr. Speaker, when this legislation was before the Congress the argument was made that this was no time to increase payments to the farmers when we are so busily engaged in spending money on our defense program. But I have already pointed out to you that the one is a part of the other. And while there are still some die-hards who will continue to criticize the Congress for passing the legislation and the President for signing the bill, I maintain that it is still good economy to enact such legislation. It is good economy not alone for the morale of our people in these turbulent times, but it is good economy because it increases the purchasing power of 25 percent of the American people. I believe in economy where economy should properly be practiced. I believe the membership of the House is familiar with my record for advocating economy in the nonessentials of government. And in this connection, Mr. Speaker, if I may digress, it will be recalled by some of you that I was severely criticized and falsely attacked by some newspapers recently because I did object to the Government furnishing such frills as electric stoves, ice boxes, and appliances of a similar nature to defense workers who receive from $5 to $20 a day, such items to be paid for by the Government while the farmers and other citizens of the country had to go down in their own pockets to purchase such articles. But on the other hand, I have never had much patience with those watchdogs of the Treasury in the Congress who are continuously raising the flag of economy every time the question of financial assistance to the farmers of the country arises.

I dislike to bore you with a repetition of the facts, but to you my colleagues who represent the great cities of this country in the House, I hope you will pardon me if I again emphasize for your benefit that if the farmers of Mississippi and other States of the Union cannot get a fair income for the crops which they produce, they cannot purchase the automobiles, the farm machinery, the clothes they wear on their backs and the shoes they wear on their feet—all of which are manufactured in your great cities. If your interest is only in your city constituents, you can still best represent them by going along with us on this farm legislation, because if my people cannot purchase the products which your people manufacture then your people will soon be out of employment.

DEFINITION OF PARITY

But before I proceed further it might not be amiss to again define just what we mean by parity prices for farmers. Parity price, or fair exchange value, has been defined by Congress as a price level that will give agricultural commodities purchasing power in terms of articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the 5 years before World War No. 1. This 5-year period, 1909–14, was taken as the parity period because that was a period in which there was a balanced production on farms, and agriculture was in a fair balance with the rest of the Nation. Or roughly and more briefly speaking, what we intend and mean to do is to place agriculture in a fair and balanced relation with the other industries of the Nation. Parity for cotton today is approximately 16 cents per pound.

For the benefit of all concerned I submit herewith a table furnished by the Department of Agriculture which shows the parity price of the five basic commodities, together with the farm prices of February 15, 1941. This table reflects the fact that cotton is bringing 59.2 percent of parity and gives other interesting data. The table is as follows:

Commodity	Unit	Parity price at Feb. 15, 1941	Farm price 1940 crop	Farm price percent of parity	Farm price, including 1940 A. C. P.	Farm price plus A. C. P. payment, percent of parity
		Cents	Cents	Percent	Cents	Percent
Cotton	Pound	15.87	9.39	59.2	10.83	68.2
Corn	Bushel	82.2	62.4	75.9	71.4	86.0
Wheat	Bushel	113.2	67.0	59.2	75.1	66.9
Rice	Hundredweight	231.3	156.0	67.4	161.85	70.3
Tobacco	Pound	20.0	15.7	78.5	16.6	83.0

OTHER COMMODITY PRICES INCREASING

And in this connection I should like to call your attention to the fact that due to the defense program, the high wages being paid industrial workers, the demand for coal, steel, and other commodities, the price of everything the farmer has to purchase is constantly going higher and higher, and can anyone doubt for a moment that with this increased demand for defense that the prices of commodities other than farm products are bound to rise?

The farmer today is receiving around 10 cents per pound for his cotton, whereas parity would be around 16 cents. Compare the price the farmer receives for his cotton with the price that he must pay for some of the items which he uses in connection with his farm. The following table is furnished by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics:

Parity prices of selected industrial commodities purchased by farmers, Dec. 15, 1940

Commodity	Base retail price to farmers, 1910–14	Parity price Dec. 15, 1940[1]	Actual retail price to farmers, Dec. 15, 1940	Actual as percentage of parity
	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars	Percent
Mower, 5-foot	47.76	48.24	97.14	201
Binder, 7-foot	138.00	139.00	259.00	186
Paint	1.94	1.96	2.85	145
Lumber, rough	24.94	25.19	46.20	183
Kitchen chairs	.81	.82	1.56	190
Horse blanket	2.47	2.49	3.50	141
Work shoes	2.20	2.22	2.59	117
Barbed wire	2.74	2.77	3.54	128
Newspapers	.1–0.2	---	.3	300
Newspaper adv	5.5	5.5	11.5	201

[1] Computed by multiplying base price × index of prices received by farmers, 101 on Dec. 15, 1940 (August 1909–July 1914=100). The term "parity price" has not been officially used in connection with industrial commodities. They are shown here to indicate what prices of industrial commodities would have been on Dec. 15, 1940, if the relationships with prices received by farmers in 1910–14 had been carried through to the present.

Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Based on data from Agricultural Marketing Service.

Thus it will be seen that while the farmer is receiving far less than parity for what he produces, he is paying more than twice parity for the implements and supplies which he must have in order to produce his products. Or, to illustrate more graphically, let me call your attention to the fact that the farmer receives 7 cents for the cotton that goes into a cotton shirt for which he pays $1. Certainly this should shock the conscience of those who claim that the farmers are getting along all right. I say to you very frankly that if it were not for some kind of a farm subsidy the farmer could not exist in this complex and complicated age in which we live.

FARM OUTLOOK NOT PROMISING

I realize that there are those Members of the House who feel that due to the industrial boom as a result of the defense program somehow or other the farmer will be able to get along all right. I contend that this is a very narrow, selfish, and unwarranted position to take. The truth is that this program is helping nearly everybody but the farmer. And it must be borne in mind that in this war, unlike World War I, the price of agricultural commodities is not skyrocketing like the price of labor, materials, and other essentials that go into the industrial program. This is largely due to the fact that in the last war practically all of Europe, in addition to Russia and Japan, was either an ally of this country arrayed against Germany or were neutral. As a result there was a great demand for the products of this country. In this war the situation is entirely different, as practically all of these countries, with the exception of Great Britain, are either allied with the Germans or are under German domination and control. The result is that there is no market abroad, excepting Great Britain, for the wheat, corn, and cotton of the American farmers. So the American farmer who has always depended upon the foreign market for the surplus produced over the domestic market, must now look to the domestic market alone. We all realize that the domestic consumption cannot keep pace with production. And therefore the American farmer has but one source of relief to look to in order that he might receive anything like parity prices for his products, and that is the American Congress.

FARMERS AT LAST SECURING RECOGNITION

Mr. Speaker, those of us in the Congress who represent agricultural districts have been working ceaselessly for years in an effort to secure recognition of the farmers by assuring them of parity payments for their crops; and because of our untiring interest and efforts we were extremely gratified to learn that this bill had become law. In this connection I should like to quote below from a speech which I made in behalf of parity payments on the floor of this House on March 24, 1940:

Mr. Chairman, last fall the President of the United States called the Congress into extraordinary session for the purpose of enacting a neutrality bill that would keep this country out of war so far as it was humanly possible by legislation to do so. The Congress enacted that legislation. You and I were primarily interested in keeping this country out of war. We said by that legislation that we were willing to make substantial economic sacrifices in order to keep out of war. We did make the greatest and most colossal sacrifice that any powerful nation like ours has ever made in an effort to keep out of war and to prevent millions of young Americans from spilling their blood on the altar of the god of war But may I not point out to you that possibly among the chief sufferers and among those who were called upon to make the greatest sacrifices were the farmers of this country when by virtue of this neutrality law we kept our ships from going to the ports of belligerent nations and required cash payments for our products, thereby lessening the opportunity of the farmers of this country to dispose of their surplus agricultural commodities. Shall we now deny them this appropriation to partially offset that sacrifice? The farmers of America have throughout the ages demonstrated their patriotism and their loyalty to this country from the minutemen of '76 down the years through the last great World War. Let us not, in this effort to prevent this country from becoming drawn into this war, turn the back of our hands to the farmers by requiring them to make all of the sacrifices. I hope in common fairness and justice to t hat great class of our patriotic American citizenship—the farmers of America, who number 25 percent of our population—that this House will appropriate these necessary funds for these necessary parity payments.

CONCLUSION

So, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues of the House, and especially those of you who represent the farming interests of this country, I felicitate you and join with you in expressing the appreciation of the American farmer, who is still the backbone of the Nation and the source of all true wealth, that this bill has successfully passed over the rugged path that all controversial legislation must pass. I rejoice in the thought that your and my efforts in behalf of parity payments throughout the battle of the past several years has at least been temporarily won. But it might not be amiss to point out at this time that the necessity for full and not temporary parity payments is as essential as ever. We rejoice in having won this battle. Let us not desist until we have won the war and achieved the goal of a stable and permanent farm economy of not less than 100 percent parity payments.

Aid for England

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES L. GIFFORD

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

LETTER TO HON. CHARLES L. GIFFORD, OF MASSACHUSETTS, FROM HON. JOSEPH A. CONRY, FORMER MEMBER OF CONGRESS

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter received by me from a former Member of Congress, Hon. Joseph A. Conry:

I am appealing to you gentlemen of the House representing liberty-loving constituents to take decisive stand upon this vital matter of securing safe delivery to England of the war material we are now making in our factories, to aid England in its splendid struggle for its own existence and the welfare of humanity. Too often have we heard from well-meaning men the refrain "let us give to England all aid short of war," implying that we are justified in committing every act of war known to the books except making a formal declaration of war. The common enemy of civilization can make war without such antique formality as a declaration of war. We have authorized the expenditure of $7,000,000,000 to be employed in producing war materials for the use of England in carrying on its defense of civilization. Is it a characteristic of our common sense that we will spend all that money watching anxiously for the production of all the material and then when the results of our labor are placed on board a vessel we lose all interest in their final delivery? It is tantalizing, not to say exasperating, to see the result of our effort destroyed by our own negligence. We have promised England to provide a vast supply of arms and airships and other implements of war—a promise going a long way toward upholding the morale of the English people. Was it a qualified promise, indicating that our interest ended when the material was delivered at the dock? An ignoble attitude. All of you gentlemen recall that old phrase "Dead Sea fruit," immortalized by Thomas Moore, the most successful of the brilliant set of Irish literary men of the nineteenth century. In his lovely poem, Lalla Rookh, he wrote of—

"The Dead Sea fruit that tempts the eye
But turns to ashes on the lips."

Are we to liken our supply of war material as so much Dead Sea fruit for England? We are building the weapons to be used in what we believe to be a fight for freedom of conscience, of religion, of speech, and the press. If these words represent the feelings of our soul, we must be vigorous in performance of our promise. Whatever may have been her past failings, perhaps they are plenty in number, England today represents the hopes and aspirations of all free men in carrying on the greatest struggle among people known to recorded history. It is not necessary for me to remind you of the destruction of all the small states of Europe from Norway down to Greece. Their mangled bodies withering in the hot summer sun mean something more than the decay of flesh; they testify to the annihilation of the institutions we love, the church and free school, the right of the individual to regulate his own affairs. And I regret that the subjugated states are not all the small states. There is France, once glorious France, half prostrate by the conqueror's knee, willing to surrender the remnant of her rights, to accept a victor's peace, even if that entails warlike conduct directed at her former allies. In my home State of Massachusetts we are deeply sympathetic with Ireland. It was Captain Gifford, of New Bedford, who effected the rescue of John Boyle O'Reilly, a distinguished Irish-American poet. I believe that 95 percent of the men of Irish ancestry in America are sympathetic with England in this struggle. I am not arguing or even hinting at the matter of Eire turning over any of her ports for the use of England, but I can mention with much satisfaction the reports in the papers this morning of the generous amount of support promised by the President to Eire in ships and food. My purpose in bringing in this matter is to call your attention to the possibility of those ships containing food and medicine intended for the people of Ireland being sunk by Nazi submarines. Are we then to sympathize with Ireland in words, when by acts we could have guaranteed the delivery of all supplies intended for relief? If England, the last bulwark of freedom in the Atlantic, goes down, will the fate of Ireland be at all different from that of Holland or Poland?

W. P. A.—Situation in the State of Washington

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN F. SMITH

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

STATEMENT BY HON. MARTIN F. SMITH, OF WASHINGTON, BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent granted by my colleagues, I desire to insert the statement which I made May 26, 1941, before the Committee on Appropriations.

The statement referred to reads as follows:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I appreciate being granted this privilege of appearing before you in support of increased appropriations for the Work Projects Administration. I favor the request made by Mr. Howard O. Hunter, Acting Commissioner, for an appropriation of $1,250,000,000 instead of the Budget estimate of $886,000,000, which latter sum I fear will prove to be wholly inadequate and result in widespread suffering and distress among our people.

I desire to call your attention to a statement prepared by the Division of Statistics, W. P. A., relating to the State of Washington, bearing date May 14, 1941, which I am inserting at this point.

The statement is as follows:

Month	Estimated employment based on monthly average of 1,000,000 for continental United States	Estimated employment based on monthly average of 1,265,000 for continental United States	Average monthly employment during fiscal year 1941
1941
July	13,500	16,300	23,113
August	11,600	15,800	23,281
September	11,600	15,800	22,287
October	11,600	15,800	22,071
November	11,600	15,800	22,691
December	11,600	16,400	23,877
1942
January	13,500	17,500	24,604
February	13,500	17,500	25,109
March	12,100	16,800	22,097
April	11,600	16,300	[1]21,000
May	11,100	16,000	[1]18,300
June	10,400	16,000	[2]16,590
Average for fiscal year	[3]11,900	[3]16,300	22,085

[1] Based on employment authorization.
[2] Based on tentative employment authorization.
[3] Estimated.

Estimated need as of May 1, 1941, 24,185.

Employment on W. P. A. projects[1] in Washington by congressional districts,[2] Apr. 30, 1940

Congressional district number:	Number of persons
All districts	20,082
Undistributed by district	2,596
Districts 1, 2, and 6	10,764
District 3	3,064
District 4	1,803
District 5	1,855

[1] Includes W. P. A. projects operated by other Federal agencies and financed by allocation of W. P. A. funds.

[2] As the county is the smallest governmental subdivision for which W. P. A. employment is available, congressional districts are combined where a county is located in more than 1 congressional district.

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY,
WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION,
DIVISION OF STATISTICS.

MAY 14, 1941.

Gentlemen, as shown by this statement, in my State of Washington the average monthly employment on the W. P. A. for the fiscal year 1941 is estimated at 22,805 persons, and the estimated average for the fiscal year, if only $886,000,000 is made available for the entire Nation, will be 11,900 persons, a reduction of nearly 50 percent. This is too drastic a cut and will throw these people out of employment without any means of obtaining jobs or financial assistance of any kind. Many of these men and women are past the age when they can secure employment, most of them are unskilled, and the national-defense program is of no benefit to them. I have received vigorous protests against this action from the county commissioners of Thurston, Cowlitz, and Grays Harbor Counties, among the largest counties in my district, and, in fact, from all my 9 counties.

Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to a fact of great importance. I am advised that 60 percent of those who are employed on W. P. A. in the State of Washington are working on projects which have been certified as essential to national defense—airports, cantonments, barracks, and projects classified as being related to national defense directly or indirectly. I am told that this percentage of 60 percent in the State of Washington is the highest in any State in the Nation and is due to the vast national-defense program in our State; but it is already an established fact that the persons employed on these W. P. A. projects have not been and will not be employed on the national-defense program—either they are too old or they do not possess the technical skill. To throw so many of these worthy citizens into the streets is certainly not good for our national morale at a time when we should seek to keep our people contented and united and prove to them that democratic processes do function in the interests of their social and economic welfare. I question very seriously the soundness and wisdom of such a short-sighted policy as that, and I question whether it is sound economy. It appears to me to be the very contrary of that, and I do not hesitate to condemn such a policy as undemocratic, un-American, and detrimental to the spirit of our entire national-defense objective.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I therefore urge that you fix the appropriation for W. P. A. for the ensuing fiscal year at $1,250,000,000, the amount which Mr. Hunter states is necessary and needed to give this meager employment to the unemployed men and women of our country, who will otherwise have no source of income whatsoever and face starvation, destitution, and want, which would be criminal folly at this critical juncture in our national history.

Must Clear Up Confusion About Money and Wealth

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BEN F. JENSEN
OF IOWA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE SIOUX CITY (IOWA) TRIBUNE

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Sioux City (Iowa) Tribune:

[From the Sioux City (Iowa) Tribune]

MUST CLEAR UP CONFUSION ABOUT MONEY AND WEALTH

Acting under the authority of a concurrent resolution adopted by the Iowa General Assembly, Gov. George A. Wilson soon will appoint a committee of five members of the Iowa State Senate and five members of the Iowa Lower House to conduct an investigation of the economic situation of this good State.

The resolution was inspired by the fact that Iowa, along with the other 47 States of this Union, achieved an all-time peak of income in 1929 which it has not since been able to duplicate. The Iowa legislators want to know how that 1929 peak was achieved and why it has been impossible to duplicate it in the 11 years that have elapsed since 1929.

The statistical record of Iowa's income, like that of the Nation as a whole, reveals some rather startling facts. The 12-year record follows:

Year:	Iowa income
1929	$1,227,000,000
1930	1,153,000,000
1931	883,000,000
1932	622,000,000
1933	594,000,000
1934	731,000,000
1935	937,000,000
1936	1,058,000,000
1937	1,090,000,000
1938	900,000,000
1939	986,000,000
1940	1,050,000,000

Had the 1929 level of income been maintained during the 11 years 1930-40, inclusive, Iowa's total for that period would have been $13,497,000,000 as against the $9,782,000,000 actually received, a difference of $3,705,000,000.

That $3,705,000,000, representing the difference between what Iowans actually received in the 11 years from 1930 to 1940, inclusive, and what they would have received in those 11 years had income been maintained at the 1929 level, amounts to about $7,000 for each of Iowa's 550,000 families—say, $5,000 for a home, $1,000 for furniture, and $1,000 for a new car.

Not that each family would have received that exact amount, but the equivalent of that amount would have been received and spent or saved or reinvested by Iowa people.

When we turn to the production and work records of Iowa for the same period, it is discovered that throughout the 12 years under discussion, Iowans produced about the same number of bushels of corn, wheat, oats, and other farm crops, hogs, cattle, and other farm animals, and about the same number of units of factory goods each year. There was some variation in the annual production, but it was not sufficient to account for the vast variation in income. In other words, Iowans have been producing steadily about the same amount of wealth, year in and year out, but they have not been receiving a stable return for their labor.

Clearly, then, the fault does not lie in the production record nor in the amount of labor performed. The variation in the return for our labor and upon our investments must be charged to the pricing system under which Iowans, like all Americans, have been required to operate.

A pricing system which yields such variable and—too often—inadequate results must be the product of misunderstanding of and confusion concerning the fundamentals of money and wealth. It certainly is not the will of society at large that our collective business should yield such variable returns.

Money in itself is not wealth—merely an evidence of wealth, a stored-up order or demand upon the labor of others or goods produced by others. Wealth—real wealth—consists of things, such as crops, goods, land, buildings, etc.

Income is determined by multiplying the units of wealth produced by the price per unit thereof. We thereby arrive at the amount of money due us individually—or collectively—for the products of our labor, investments, etc.

Extraneous matters, such as gold, silver, greenbackism, credit, inflation, deflation, foreign trade, etc., have been permitted to dictate prices which have no direct relationship to values. These have confused the people and probably have prevented them from solving their price problems.

The Iowa legislative committee which Governor Wilson will appoint will have a great opportunity to perform an enduring service for society by discovering the cause—or causes—of price fluctuations and the means to put prices on a sound and adequate basis and sustain them at that level.

That must be done before Iowans or other Americans can achieve stable and enduring prosperity. The fact that it never has been done is not proof that it cannot be done. To say that it cannot be done is an indictment of American initiative and intelligence.

Faith in the intellectual ability and integrity of Iowans inspires belief that this committee can, and probably will, measure up to the responsibility which will be imposed upon it. Certainly the facts in our situation constitute a challenge to the best efforts of those whom the Governor will appoint.

Blood on the Tiger's Tongue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD W. CREAL

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 18, an editorial appeared in the Washington Post suggesting that the President veto the parity loan bill. In one statement it said this administration has already done more for the farmer than any administration in history. With that statement all will agree but it should be remembered that at the time such aid was rendered the farm conditions had dropped to its lowest ebb in history and it took a great deal to get partly back to the place from which the farmer took his long plunge downward.

In another paragraph of the National Capital paper it says:

"To give more subsidies to agriculture would have about the same effect as putting blood on the tongue of a tiger in the hope of satisfying his appetite."

Parity is only another name for equality, and I presume no one would be so bold as to say that he was opposed to equality. It is a fine theory to say that all men are created free and equal, but that is useless unless we help to maintain equality after created. When more than one-fourth of our population—in fact, nearly one-third—receive 8 percent of the national income, what has become of equality?

But the farmer asks now for 85 percent of equality while others receive 100 percent, and for this asking he is compared with a bloodthirsty tiger. From 1909 to 1914 farm prices were nearer on an equality with the prices of things the farmer had to buy. It is this period of time which is used as the base for parity prices, all except tobacco, which has a different date.

Everyone knows that every strike we read about these days is settled by granting higher wages to labor. We also know that these articles made by labor will increase the cost to the farmer. He also pays for the voluntary raises made by capital when they want more profits. Both of these kinds of raises have been recently made, and to leave the farmer without a corresponding raise is just the same as reducing his present farm prices.

It really does not matter about prices, whether they be high or low, so long as there is equality of value in the exchange. If 5 bushels of corn buys a pair of shoes, the price of either does not matter, but when it takes 7 or 10 bushels to buy the same shoes, then we are out of parity and there is no fair exchange of values. The factory gets its parity by reason of the tariff shielding it from outside competition and then, unhampered, it fixes its own price. Labor secured parity by superior organization. The farmer cannot organize like labor and demand his price and the tariff is only of scant benefit.

Alexander Hamilton, the leading exponent of tariff for industry, said the farmer should have from the Government the equivalent of the tariff. In other words, he believed in what we now call parity. However, no move was made to give parity until very recently.

The estimated average return for labor on the farm is 18 cents per hour. How does that compare with labor, no more skilled and no harder work, which receives $1 per hour for an 8-hour day with a rate of $1.50 per hour for overtime?

The editorial also complains that Members from farm districts lug in some angle of the farm question on all sorts of legislation. If they did not, who would? Who is a Member from a farm district supposed to represent? Other interests have their own champions and own spokesmen. When big business got into deep trouble in 1932 and 1933 they came flocking to Washington to get all sorts of relief and received it. When the farmer in equal distress comes to the same place it is regarded as "Putting blood on the tongue of a tiger," so says the editorial.

The farmer gets $3.50 for the wheat that makes a barrel of flour; when it goes into bread by the loaf it retails for $23.60. The same comparison goes with nearly ever other farm product. Now a lot of the finished product of the factory reaches the consumer with only 20 to 30 percent increase for middlemen.

All the metropolitan papers mention the rise in food prices if the farmer gets parity. None ever suggests that any of the many profits of the middlemen could be reduced a fraction of a cent. If the consumer of farm products pays only the percent of raise received by the farmer it will be very slight. His pay is the smallest item in the article bought by the consumer. It is claimed by those in position to know that the parity program will require a loan between two and three hundred millions of dollars. Suppose the latter figure is nearer correct. This program is for corn, wheat, cotton, and tobacco linked together. The Federal Treasury collected last year from tobacco taxes $609,000,000—more than double the amount to finance the whole program.

Thirty to forty cents of every dollar spent by the farmer is for the tariff to protect the article bought. Now comes higher wages to be added to that cost. We want the factory to remain protected; we want labor to have a fair price, but why ask the farmer to bear both these items of added cost. All that is asked is that he too may stand on equality in trading values. He cannot sit around the council table like big industry and decide how much will be produced and at what price. He cannot strike and get his price. His only refuge is Congress and by such legislation as the parity-price bill.

The amount loaned by the Government is not lost even if there should be some loss. The Government has the products on which the loan was made. Of course, the Government could not make loans and allow unlimited production. When the parity program is fully organized the Government loans will be very light because the purchaser of the commodity will have to pay at least the parity price to get it, as this only serves as a price booster compelling a minimum price equal to the loan value.

It must always be remembered that all sources of new wealth come from the ground. Look yourself over from head to foot, walk in any store and scan the articles in it and see if you can find even one that did not come from mother earth directly or indirectly. Of course, the shoe is made of leather but the animal it came from fed on the product of the soil. Now the farm products make up the greatest bulk of things from the soil and the farm is therefore the greatest source of new wealth we have.

After this dollar of new wealth is once made and pitched into the stream of commerce this other two-thirds of the population fight over it, some grabbing more and more grabbing less. Capitalists, great financiers, and governments who fail to make ample provision for the fair protection of the producer of the new wealth are penny wise and pound foolish.

God made the country, man made the cities long afterward, when the farms became sufficiently prosperous to support the cities.

No truer statement was ever uttered when W. J. Bryan said:

If you destroy the cities the farms will soon rebuild them, but destroy the farm and within 6 months grass will grow in the streets of every city in the land.

Towns in rural areas fully appreciate this and their leading businessmen cooperate in every way to help farm organizations. The big city is just as dependent but so far removed from the source of their existence that they forget the farmer and his problems.

If we had received even 60 percent of parity prices most farms lost would still have been in the hands of their owners. If we had received parity, soil depletion would not have been so great and land could have been rested and restored by soil-building crops. The Government is now paying for the shortsightedness of long years of neglect.

The Government is not spending any millions running down Communists and Fascists among the farm population. It is not spending to put down strikes among farmers nor paying for mediation boards to settle the farmer's grievances.

The farmer has been patient, even too patient, in demanding equality or parity. He has accepted his declining conditions in silence; he has seen the farm which his father left him sold under foreclosure and he became a part of the unemployed. Because of these conditions the farm population flocked to the overcrowded cities. Then the Government spent millions for W. P. A. city projects to give him labor. He would not have been there had he shared equality or parity.

It is to the best interest of this Nation that the people on the farms stay there and the tide to the city cease.

Failure to have parity prices in the past cost the Government more later in various forms of relief. More rural electrification and rural road building will help wonderfully to keep folks on the farm; but even that will not solve it until parity price, equality in exchange of commodities, is the law of the land.

Having been booted about and made the economic goat, the farmer asks for equality or parity, and for his appeal to justice for a square deal he is likened unto a tiger with blood on his tongue to inflame his appetite—so says the editor of a great national daily paper in the Capital City.

Now the bears and bulls of the stock market that grow fat on manipulating the markets of farm products may have blood on their tongues to influence their appetite, but not the tiger spoken of. If the tiger is hungry, it is because all the other boys left him shut up so long in the cage of narrow opportunity while they rode the band wagons, enjoying more of life and receiving their parity prices. Equality for all, special privileges to none, must become more of a reality and not a mere slogan. Parity for the farmer is the most needed step now.

Can anyone, anywhere, offer any sound reason why the farming portion of the population is entitled to less pay for his day's work than similar work in other occupations?

Is a man in Congress who stands up and fights for these rights for his people asking equality of opportunity a tiger with blood on his tongue? The farm people do not think so and the farmer does not regard himself as such in asking to be placed on an equality with his fellow man in other walks of life.

For my part I shall always look back with great consolation and pleasure in being on the Committee on Agriculture at the time this long-delayed appeal for justice was heard and granted, notwithstanding the sharp criticisms and epithets of any editors of metropolitan papers.

If we had to wait for some metropolitan papers to raise a voice on our behalf the farmer would sink into total obscurity. I congratulate my farmer friends in at last being able to stand together and secure equality, parity, and common justice. It explodes the old theory that farmers cannot get together and that they neither remember nor appreciate their friends. This may have been the case in the past but not today.

The program is of equal importance to every businessman residing in a farm area.

St. Lawrence Seaway Project Draws Fire

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALFRED F. BEITER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ARTICLE FROM BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I would like to insert the following article from the Buffalo Courier Express which draws attention to an article in the May 22 issue of the Engineering News-Record. This is a weekly periodical with a circulation of over 32,000. Their statements must necessarily be up to date and authoritative. They have recently made a survey of the St. Lawrence seaway proposal and this article quotes from that survey, indicating that such a construction should not be considered at this time when all attention and materials should be devoted to defense work.

The article follows:

NEW YORK, May 22.—Declaring that the St. Lawrence seaway cannot be completed in time for use as a defense measure, the Engineering News-Record said today the project should not be started while this country and Canada are devoted to defense work.

The publication, after a survey of the project, asserts "that because Canada did not want to start the St. Lawrence project while engaged in defense work, the Roosevelt administration, in writing the agreement, made it attractive to Canada by failing to insist on equalization of the diversions of water for power at Niagara and by not calling for international control over the large amount of power that Canada now exports to this country."

The survey showed that export of grain, claimed to be the chief commodity that would move through the canal, had declined steadily since 1928 "and probably will continue to decline" due to the war, the magazine said.

The weekly added that the 27-foot seaway might be outdated before completion due to changes taking place in commerce vessels—as the result of "the sinking of so many ships." Most of the 500 craft being built by the United States Maritime Commission will require more than a 27-foot depth when loaded with bulky commodities.

Mr. Speaker, further objection to the St. Lawrence seaway construction is voiced in the resolution of the United Irish-American Societies of New York, which is also included herewith for insertion in the RECORD. This was forwarded to me by the committee on resolutions for this society and represents a vast number of American citizens and taxpayers who are thoroughly aroused over the exorbitant, extravagant expenditure of Federal funds for the construction of this unnecessary seaway project:

THE UNITED IRISH-AMERICAN SOCIETIES OF NEW YORK,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote of the delegates who attended a meeting of the United Irish-American Societies of New York at Eighty-sixth Street Garden, 160 East Eighty-sixth Street, New York, on Wednesday evening, March 26, 1941:

Resolved, That we, delegates to the United Irish-American Societies of New York, renew our opposition to the St. Lawrence waterway treaty or agreement with Canada, which the President has submitted to Congress with a request that it be approved by a concurrent resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, instead of by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, as section 2 of article II of the Constitution requires. We oppose the treaty in whatever form it may be considered by Congress for these reasons:

Because it would internationalize United States inland waters, over which it would give a foreign government joint control; because the executive department of our Government has agreed to spend at least three and a half times as much on the project as Canada; because the St. Lawrence waterway scheme, if carried through, would ruin industry and commerce in New York and other United States maritime cities by diverting from them a large part of their ocean traffic, and would wreck established transportation agencies and cause widespread unemployment and consequent distress in several United States cities; because the waterway, under dual control, would increase and complicate the problems of national defense and would build up, by a vast expenditure of the money of the taxpayers of this country, a Canadian electric power subsidy, which would enable Dominion industry to get electricity for about half the price which would have to be paid for it in New York State.

For the foregoing reasons, we, delegates to the United Irish-American Societies of New York, opposed the St. Lawrence waterway treaty or agreement, and we request the Members of both Houses of Congress, particularly those who represent the city and State of New York, to vote against ratification or approval of it and against the colossal appropriation which is asked for the project.

P. QUINN,
For the Committee on Resolutions.

Tree Losses in the Northwest

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER M. PIERCE

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ARTICLE BY RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Richard L. Neuberger:

TREE LOSSES STIR NORTHWEST—CITIZENS, STATE, AND FEDERAL GROUPS UNITE AGAINST LOGGING WASTE AND FIRES

(By Richard L. Neuberger)

PORTLAND, OREG., May 3.—With the national-defense program calling for immense quantities of lumber, the people of the Pacific Northwest are seeking improved methods of preserving and maintaining the region's basic resource—fir and pine trees. Conservation has become a major issue in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana, which lock in their upland fastnesses half the timber of the United States.

An endless supply of planks and boards is needed for American cantonments, airplane hangars, barracks, and ship frames and fittings. Beleaguered England, too, requires forest products. Logging camps and sawmills are operating far into the dusk. Fly-by-night outfits have sprung up in countless groves. Defense orders take precedence over regular demands. Piles of lumber stretch for miles along docks and railroad sidings, waiting shipment to distant military posts and bases.

Because of this heavy new drain on the woodlands, State governments, private citizens, and Federal agencies have begun a vigorous campaign to check forest fires and indiscriminate, wasteful logging. "Forest defense is national defense" is the slogan of a committee just formed by Governor Sprague of Oregon. "Keep Washington green" is the motto of a similar organization to the north.

GOVERNMENT'S WARNING

Although power from Bonneville Dam has made possible huge new electrochemical industries on the Columbia River, lumber is still the principal pay roll of the Northwest. Drastic thinning out of the trees might result in severe economic dislocations, according to the United States Forest Service, which has warned that certain mill communities will become ghost towns unless the annual rate of timber cutting is brought into balance with the process of new growth

The Oregon Legislature recently enacted the first forest reseeding law ever adopted in the Nation. On lumber companies it imposes what Governor Sprague describes as "sharp but fair restrictions." All pine trees less than 16 inches in diameter must be spared, and in fir logging at least 5 percent of the original timber must be left standing. This is to prevent "cut-out-and-get-out" operations which leave hillsides gutted and bare.

At the present time sawmills, fires, and insects claim 14,000,000,000 board-feet of lumber in the Northwest each year. The annual growth is less than half this, 6,000,000,000 board feet. Although the region is a vast woodland storehouse which contains 900,000,000,000 board feet of timber, not all this is by any means marketable and axes and saws are constantly cutting deeper into the green carpet of the wilderness. Some mills, once stockaded by trees, are now hundreds of miles from their supply.

BASIC REMEDY

As a basic remedy, the Forest Service and the National Resources Committee have proposed that the lumber industry be placed under a program of sustained yield. This would mean that the cut would have to match the growth. Now before Congress is a bill sponsored by Representative WALTER M. PIERCE, of Oregon, authorizing the Forest Service to purchase $60,000,000 worth of the best timber in the Northwest. The timber then would be sold, stick by stick, on a sustained-yield basis.

Some lumber companies and State officials have condemned the Pierce bill as an imperfect solution and an arbitrary extension of Federal authority. However, E. B. MacNaughton, prominent Portland banker and chairman of the Oregon economic council, believes its passage is necessary "to insure continuation of the timber industry during the generations to come."

Crusades against forest fires have been accelerated in all the States of the Northwest. Authorities fear that the dry, sultry days of the mountain summer may furnish opportunity for sabotage. Lyle F. Watts, regional United States forester, has ordered rangers and wardens to redouble their vigilance, and new lookout stations have been built. A survey has been started on how best to safeguard the strategic Puget Sound and Columbia River areas against blazes set by saboteurs.

Ten Thousand Americans of Polish Extraction Pledge Support to President Roosevelt in War Crisis

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALFRED F. BEITER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

RESOLUTIONS BY AMERICANS OF POLISH EXTRACTION ASSEMBLED IN BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following resolutions adopted by an assembly of over 10,000 Americans of Polish extraction gathered at Humboldt Park in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., on May 25, 1941, in celebration of the anniversary of the Polish Constitution:

Whereas we celebrate today the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption by the Polish Diet in 1791 of the world-famous Polish Constitution of May 3, the first liberal constitution based on sound democratic principles in all Europe; and

Whereas we hold in common with our friends and relatives in Poland, scattered today to all parts of the world, the priceless "blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity" guaranteed to us as citizens of these United States by the American Constitution of 1789 and the Bill of Rights; and

Whereas in this hour of momentous decisions and national problems threatening the continuance of our democratic way of life we stand united and ready to defend and preserve for the world these fundamental blessings of liberty and justice; and

Whereas we appreciate and enjoy religious freedom while, according to reports compiled by the office of Cardinal Hlond, the primate of Poland and the archbishop of Gniezno and Poznan, our unfortunate brothers suffer indescribable persecution and suppression of all religious life in Poland; and

Whereas communistic Russia continues her systematic deportation into Siberia of thousands of destitute men, women, and children who are unable to survive the rigor of hard labor and severe cold; and

Whereas Nazi Germany continues its plan of extermination of the Polish Nation by mass arrests, imprisonments, concentration camps, and execution of national leaders, priests, and nuns, professional men, and young students; also by expropriating and evicting hundreds of thousands of Poles from their land and settling thereon Germans from the Baltic States and the Balkans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this assembly of over 10,000 loyal Americans of Polish extraction gathered at Humboldt Park in Buffalo, N. Y., for the purpose of celebrating the anniversary of the Polish Constitution of May 3, rededicate itself to the cause of freedom and human rights based on "the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God"; and be it further

Resolved, That we pledge our loyal support to whatever plan of action shall be deemed necessary by our President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, as the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States of America and by the Congress to employ every means necessary to insure the prompt and uninterrupted delivery to Great Britain and her allies of the material they need from our "arsenal of democracy" for the defense of Christian civilization and the safety of this Nation; and be it further

Resolved, That we, as liberty-loving Americans, are willing to make such sacrifices as may be required for the defense of our liberty and the perpetuation of human rights in this world; and be it further

Resolved, That we solemnly pledge our continued aid for the relief of the suffering and the needy, wherever they be in this historic emergency; and finally be it

Resolved, That these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the Senators and to our Representatives in the Congress from the State of New York.

Date: May 25, 1941.

Signed:

Rt. Rev. Msgr. ALEXANDER PITASS.
Dr. FRANCIS E. FRONCZAK.
STAN. SIELSKI.
STAN. TURKIEWICZ.
WLAD. KOSZTOWNIAK.
MARTA MAZUROWSKA.

U. S. S. "American Seaman"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT C. BONNER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ADDRESS BY COMMANDER W. N. DERBY, OF THE UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Commander W. N. Derby, United States Coast Guard, on the U. S. S. American Seaman, May 22, 1941:

Mr. Chairman, distinguished guests, ladies, and gentlemen, you who are gathered on the deck of this large oceangoing training ship, the American Seaman, will bear witness, I am sure, that she is worthy of the flag she flies. The ladies will note with approval the clean orderly living quarters and the immaculate galley. Those of us with seagoing experience see in the gleaming white paint, the shining bright work, and the shipshape maintenance an evidence of the pride and spirit of the ship's personnel.

This vessel may be regarded as a symbol of the transformation that is occurring in the American merchant marine under the magic touch of the Maritime Commission. Three years ago she was a rusty relic of the last war—a disreputable looking cargo vessel—abandoned, little more than a hulk. Now she's almost a glamor girl with all modern fixings; and I assure you that the transformation is more than skin deep. A corresponding change has occurred in the merchant marine as a whole. From a down-at-the-heel industry, carrying on mainly with weary vessels left over from the last war, it has changed to an energetic and fast-growing part of our national economy and national defense.

But I would emphasize particularly the personnel as dintinguished from the matériel phase of this maritime renaissance. You are familiar with the new ships that are sliding down the ways. Well, how about the crews who are to man those ships?

The American Seaman is a fair representative of the training units administered for the Maritime Commission by the Coast Guard. Other units are located at Boston, New London, New York, St. Petersburg, and Alameda. By August another station will open at Hueneme, Calif., and the American Seaman will be joined by two other training vessels of the same type—the American Sailor and the Empire State. Training facilities are provided for officers, radio operators, sailors, engine-room men, and personnel of the steward's department.

I ask you now to go back with me to a clear May day, 17 years ago. At that time I greeted a tall, clean-cut youth just out of high school on his arrival at a training ship in New London. Today he greeted me on my arrival on this training ship and I called him "captain." The recruit of 17 years ago is today Lieutenant Commander Vetterick, commanding the American Seaman.

With only slight variations I could repeat the same story relative to the chief engineer of this vessel, Lieutenant Braswell. Looking into the future we may reasonably foresee positions of leadership in the merchant marine for the apprentice seamen on this vessel—today they provide for our expanding maritime personnel—tomorrow they will lead it.

The mission of the maritime service is to provide trained and efficient personnel for our merchant marine. To accomplish that mission we must recruit healthy, vigorous, alert, young Americans of good character—train them in the operation of merchant vessels—and see that they find places in our merchant marine. These young men must be prepared to go aboard ship with a sound fundamental knowledge of their duties, and with a healthy, buoyant attitude toward their job and their country.

In the past 2 years this vessel has received on board hundreds of youths from all sections of the country and has sent them out to the ships of the Great Lakes and the seven seas. With the expansion now in progress thousands of these apprentices will be graduated to man our new merchant fleet. We have numerous letters from ship operators commending our graduates, and we have quantities of letters from the graduates telling of their good jobs at sea in skilled work. They have been trained for that work and they enter into it with a background of discipline, self-respect, and patriotism.

In conclusion, I offer you a familiar quotation from the Bible, from the 107th psalm:

"They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord and His wonders in the deep."

What Is Wrong With Our World?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ARTICLE BY HON. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article by myself appearing in the Philadelphia Inquirer of Sunday, May 25, under the heading, "What Is Wrong With Our World?":

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of May 25, 1941]

WHAT IS WRONG WITH OUR WORLD?

(By HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., Member of Congress, Seventh District, Pennsylvania)

In the relationship of humankind, man's violence toward his fellow man is surely foremost among his besetting sins. Not so long ago the Kellogg Pact outlawed "war as an instrument of national policy." Before the ink was dry, most of the signatories to that pact were preparing for the next conflict. Nowadays, like Mark Twain's famous remark about the weather, everybody talks about war, and nobody appears to be doing anything about it, other than to enlarge the scope of war's ruin and desolation.

As a nation we have made much of what we call national planning We project vast schemes for new housing. We plan broad, modern highways, new transportation systems, new methods of traffic control; we have new economic schemes for the more abundant life, new plans for scientific and technological advancement. We even plan for war—some say too little and too late, but we make our plans. What about plans for peace; surely that is worth planning for, too, yet in our recent history but one man has ever launched a comprehensive plan for peace, and his broad vision was thwarted by scheming tricksters abroad, and at home by men of little vision.

At a college commencement in June 1938 I said:

"What can you and I do? Remembering that these United States have never seen more than 33 consecutive years of peace at any time; that the war years come at an average of 25 years apart; that if the future is but a mirror of the past we shall resort again to the 'dread arbitrament of war.' (I was called a pessimist; it seems like optimism now.) * * * Wars are not won. If wars are won, then it is a bitter victory we have been celebrating through the last two depressions.

"So raise your voice against the chauvinist, against the jingo, against the parlor pink or the lecture-hall Fascist These and their kind are the enemies of peace. They can be rendered less harmful by an enlightened, fearless public opinion. And public opinion, never forget, is but the lengthened shadow of enlightened, fearless leadership. For that leadership in the next two decades, this Nation and the world will look in one direction: to the generation now coming of age."

The generation now coming of age. They are 3 years older now and they are registered in the draft. Many of them are already in service, and we are compelled to require that they be taught the arts of war, with the necessary brutalization of mind and heart attendant upon such teaching. I do not say for a moment that we should not be impregnably defended against the aggression of dictators now ranging over most of the face of the earth. On the contrary, such preparation is now unavoidable. In the not too distant future such practice for war may become participation.

But the ironic tragedy of the past two decades has been the absence of enlightened and of fearless leadership, lost opportunities, neglect to take steps in time to forestall the happening of occurrences which, unchecked, have piled up one upon another like the successive scenes of a Greek tragedy played upon a colossal stage.

So once again we are coming face to face with the dread arbitrament of war. No man knows and no man can foresee the outcome. The moving finger of history comes briefly to rest, poised to write of what we said, of what we did, in this hour. The great test of leadership—of American leadership—is near at hand One hopes and wishes and prays that the great moral forces which do certainly exist here and in England and in other democratic bastions of the world may somehow achieve at long last a more endurable and a more worthy future for mankind.

Our confusion ought to be resolved, through free discussion, into a workable pattern for a world at peace; a pattern upon which Americans united can stand.

We cannot dismiss our hopes as mere futile expressions of unattainable idealism; for if these ideals are not worth our devotion and our faith, what is?

Progress Made by Borrowers of the Fifth Kansas District From the Farm Security Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. HOUSTON

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

LETTER FROM THE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, the Farm Security Administration, through its rehabilitation program for the Nation's rural needy, has arrested much of the physical deterioration that had made serious inroads among our farm population, and has rebuilt and preserved human resources for the Nation's production needs.

Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from the Administrator in reporting the progress made by borrowers of the Fifth Kansas District from the Farm Security Administration:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, May 22, 1941.

Hon. JOHN M. HOUSTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HOUSTON: Since the beginning of the present emergency it has been generally recognized that the health, welfare, and morale of our people are vitally important to national defense. Providing for these needs among low-income farm families has been one of the essential contributions of the Farm Security Administration to the Nation's defense efforts during the past year.

We have just completed a special survey undertaken last winter to measure the progress being made by borrowers from the Farm Security Administration. It indicates the gains in terms of money, living standards, and capacity for self-support which have been made during 1940 by handicapped and low-income farm people all over the country. It occurred to me that you might be interested in seeing the figures for your district.

In the Fifth District of Kansas there were 461 active standard rehabilitation borrowers at the end of 1940. The survey showed that the average borrower earned a net income of $676 during the year, as compared with $587 in the year before he borrowed from Farm Security. In other words, the typical family increased its annual net income by 15 percent.

Also significant are the gains which these people made in net worth, since that is one of the best measures of permanent improvement in living standards. Borrowers in your district increased their average net worth—over and above all debts, including their obligations to the Government—from $1,059 before they came into the Farm Security program to $1,330 at the close of the 1940 crop year. This is a gain of 26 percent.

These figures mean that that Farm Security borrowers in the Fifth District have added a total of $124,908 to the wealth of their communities, and have increased their total annual incomes by $41,070. Naturally this growth in prosperity and purchasing power has been reflected on the books of merchants and other businessmen of the district.

We were pleased to find that borrowers in your district are rapidly repaying their rehabilitation loans. Already $127,723 has been repaid on loans totaling $502,911, although much of the money does not fall due for 4 or 5 years. Throughout the entire country, rehabilitation loans totaling $420,865,050 had been made as of December 31, 1940, and $149,626,442 of this sum had been repaid. As you know, loan funds currently are advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, instead of coming from direct appropriations.

In view of the fact that none of the borrowers from Farm Security was able to get adequate credit anywhere else, and that many of them formerly were on relief, we feel that this repayment record is a tribute to the honesty and industry of these needy farm people. There is ample evidence that the great majority of them are getting back on their feet and becoming permanently self-supporting. In large measure, this progress is due to the advice and technical guidance in sound farm and home management which accompanies each Farm Security loan.

For example, we encourage our borrowers to get away from one-crop farming—particularly of surplus crops, such as cotton, tobacco, and wheat—and to raise as much as possible of their own food and feed for their livestock. During 1940, the average Farm Security family in your district produced $226 worth of goods for home consumption, as compared with $152 before they came into the F. S. A. program. This produce for home use included 450 gallons of milk per family; 439 pounds of meat; and 235 quarts of vegetables and fruit canned for the winter. This increased production of food did not, of course, add to the supply in the commercial markets, since virtually none of it was offered for sale. It simply meant a better diet, better health, and a rising standard of living for these families.

Often it has been necessary to work out an adjustment of the family's old debts, before rehabilitation could be successful. Local farm-debt adjustment committees have been set up for this purpose. They have no legal authority to compel adjustments, but by bringing the farmer and his creditors together for a friendly discussion, they usually are able to arrange a scale-down of the obligations, reduced interest rates, or extension of the payment period. Such adjustments frequently save the farmer from foreclosure, and at the same time enable the creditors to get substantial payments on what might otherwise have been bad debts.

This service is available to all farmers, whether or not they are rehabilitation borrowers. Altogether debt reductions totaling $543,977 have been negotiated for the farmers in your district. This represents a scale-down of 43.3 percent. As a direct result of these adjustments, $8,589 in back taxes has been paid to local governmental agencies.

In making this special survey our field employees reported that there are 580 families in your district who are eligible and in need of rehabilitation loans, but have been unable to get them because of the limited funds available.

In addition to the rehabilitation program, Farm Security is carrying out the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, which provides a limited number of loans to competent tenants to enable them to buy family type farms.

During the first 3 years of this program, we made 17 such loans in your district, totaling $170,684. This year we expect to make about 6 Bankhead-Jones loans in the fifth district, amounting to approximately $53,130. Throughout the country, delinquencies of these loans have amounted so far to only 2.6 percent, or $23,658; and this has been more than offset by the fact that other borrowers have been able to make advance payments totaling $196,765, as the result of good crops and management.

I am hopeful that this rather detailed report may be useful to you, and if you would like to have any further facts about our program, I shall, of course, be glad to supply them. Sometime during the year I hope that you may find an opportunity to visit some of the borrowers from F. S. A. in your district and see for yourself the efforts they are making to get a new start as independent, taxpaying citizens.

Sincerely,

C. B. BALDWIN,
Administrator.

The Trona Case

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEE E. GEYER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

LETTER FROM ALKALINE SALT WORKERS OF TRONA, CALIF.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I include a letter from the Alkaline Salt Workers of Trona, Calif. This is interesting reading:

ALKALINE SALT WORKERS,
LOCAL NO. 414,
Trona, Calif., May 24, 1941.

Hon. LEE E. GEYER,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On May 21, 1941, our union, Alkaline Salt Workers, Local 414, International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, Trona, Calif., mailed to you a resolution calling upon the Government of the United States to take over and operate the strike-bound plant of the American Potash & Chemical Corporation, at Trona, Calif., in the interests of national defense.

As stated in that resolution, the plant has been on strike since March 14 as the result of the company's failure to bargain in good faith and observe Federal labor laws. The strike is being continued because of the company's continued failure to bargain in good faith and continued refusal to even meet with representatives of the union.

Company officials have not met with representatives of the union for the past 3 weeks in spite of the fact that they were instructed to do so by the National Defense Mediation Board, May 3, 1941, and agreed at that time to do so, in spite of the fact that the Mediation Board has several times since that time again instructed the company to resume negotiations, and in spite of repeated requests by the union that negotiations be reopened.

On May 23, 1941, the company sent to you and others a wire in answer to our resolution This wire states, among other things, that the company is not, at this time, selling any of its products to Japan. This fact is due entirely to the effectiveness of the current strike, since the company has, at all times, and, up to the time of the strike, shipped substantial quantities of its products to Japan

The wire also states that the entire matter of this labor dispute is in the hands of the Defense Mediation Board at Washington and has been for some time. This statement is only intended to cover up the company's failure to resume negotiations in accordance with the instructions of the National Defense Mediation Board The wire further states that the only issue between the company and the union is one of preferential hiring and of the closed shop.

This is untrue since there have, at all times, been other important issues and since the union has never asked for a closed shop as that term is commonly understood. The union has asked for nothing more than union security against a conduction of unfair labor practices which have been carried on by the company for the past 6 years, and which have been continued up to the present time, in spite of the National Labor Relations Board orders and court orders and injunctions.

The union has maintained that it required something more in the contract than affirmation by the company that it would obey the Wagner Act. We believe that the Mediation Board is in agreement with this position in view of the company's past labor record.

The issue of wages remains far from solution with the company refusing to grant a wage scale commensurate with local conditions and living costs, commensurate with its ability to pay, and commensurate with basic rates being paid in the better paying large industries.

The company states in its wire that it is willing that a complete investigation be made of the management of the plant, the structure, ownership, business of the corporation, physical conditions of the village of Trona, management of the village and living conditions of its employees; and that the union also submit to an investigation in order to fix the responsibility for the cause and continuation of the strike.

In view of these developments, the union, at this time, requests that a searching investigation of this situation be made by an impartial senatorial committee. The union is confident that such an investigation will reveal that the company, the Merchants & Manufacturers Association, Mr. Paul Shoup, and Mr. J. Stewart Neary are responsible for this strike and for its continuation.

The union has had new unfair labor practices charges pending with the National Labor Relations Board for the past 7 weeks. No investigation of these charges has yet been made by the National Labor Relations Board and we respectfully request that that body be instructed to make an immediate and full investigation of these charges. In view of the company's flagrant disregard of Federal labor laws and Federal agencies, and in view of the company's foreign control and in view of the certification of this case as a national-defense industry, we renew the request of our original resolution that this plant be taken over and operated by the Government.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT O. LAMSON,
President, Alkaline Salt Workers, Local 414, International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers.

Inland to Alaska—Puget Sound-Columbia River Canal Project—Land-Protected Route to North Seen as Defense Aid

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN F. SMITH

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ARTICLE BY MR. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent granted by my colleagues, I am glad to place in the RECORD an article by Richard L. Neuberger, which was published in the Sunday Oregonian, Portland, Oreg., May 18, 1941. It is pointed out in this article that the proposed inland Puget Sound-Grays Harbor-Willapa Harbor-Columbia River Canal which is being resurveyed by the Corps of Army engineers, in accordance with my resolution adopted by the House Rivers and Harbors Committee on March 16, 1941, would stretch from Alaska to a considerable distance up the Snake River in Idaho. It would be the longest such inland-waterway passage on earth, extending a distance of nearly 1,800 miles, and would possess enormous national-defense and commercial advantages. The article referred to discusses the project in detail and reads as follows:

A 64-mile navigation canal connecting the mouth of the Columbia River with the southern tip of Puget Sound. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has just directed the Corps of Army Engineers to review the possibilities of such a project Col. Richard Park, division engineer, announces that the field survey will begin shortly.

"This canal is clearly essential to our national defense," maintains Congressman MARTIN F. SMITH, of the Third Washington District, in which the waterway would be located. "It also would be a great aid to commerce and shipping, but first and foremost it is of real strategic military importance. It would materially strengthen defense of the entire Pacific Northwest."

Money counts for little these days where considerations of defense are concerned, so congressional observers believe there is a possibility the Government may go ahead with a canal which would link the region's two greatest pools of navigation. An inland waterway thus would stretch from Alaska to far up the Snake River in Idaho. It would be the longest such passage on earth, extending a distance of nearly 1,800 miles.

ROUTE COVERED IN FAMILIAR A. A. A. MOTORLOG CAR

Exactly where would the canal go? What territory would it traverse? How would it get between the Columbia and the sound? With these questions in mind, The Oregonian and the Oregon State Motor Association conducted over the proposed route one of the motorlogs which annually feature the travel season. The trip was made in the white-painted A. A. A. car that has become a familiar sight in virtually every county of the Pacific Northwest.

The canal has been ingeniously devised to take advantage of every bit of help the Almighty has offered. Wherever possible it uses inlets, bays, lakes, and other natural props. On its main section, that between Puget Sound and Grays Harbor, the Chehalis River provides the principal artery. All that man must do is deepen the channel and put in locks, but the river furnishes the bulk of the effort.

The proposed canal is in three sections, beginning at Puget Sound and extending southward to the mouth of the Columbia:

1. The canal route leaves the sound at Budd Inlet in Olympia and goes along Percival Creek to Black Lake. Black Lake, long and narrow, then takes up the route. The Black River is the outlet of the lake and the canal extends down this stream to its junction with the Chehalis River at Rochester. The canal then follows the Chehalis in a northwesterly direction through the town of Elma and into Grays Harbor in the vicinity of Hoquiam and Aberdeen. This is by far the bulk of the waterway covering 50 miles.

2. Grays Harbor is the next lap, but the sea and the earth's convolutions of long ago have done the work here and no additional effort on the part of man is necessary. From South Bay in Grays Harbor the canal stretches for 9 miles along the seacoast and enters Willapa Bay near the Tokeland Peninsula.

3. Here again nature is a willing collaborator. Willapa Bay is 25 miles long. Only 5 miles separate it from the Columbia River. Through this last 5 miles the canal route cuts and opens into the river at Baker Bay, not far from Ilwaco. This makes the total distance of the inland waterway approximately 64 miles.

TRIP CAN BE COVERED IN SINGLE WEEK END

Motorlogging this route is an interesting drive and the roads are good all the way. The trip can be covered on a wide rectangle. It starts from Portland to Olympia over the conventional route, and from Olympia westward to Grays Harbor, then down the Washington coast and across the mouth of the Columbia by ferry. Seaside is an inviting all-night stop, and after a game of golf or a sunbath on the ocean's strands, the Wolf Creek highway is an easy 2-hour drive back to Portland. The journey can be conveniently made on a week end, and combines recreation with some sociological research into what may be the Northwest's next big Government project.

The Washington seaboard from Grays Harbor to the Columbia River is not grim and rock-bound like the Oregon coast farther south. Neither is it mountain-barricaded like the Washington coast farther north on the Olympic Peninsula. Its slopes are soft and gentle, and the forests stretch upward in pleasant swales.

LUMBER HAULED MANY MILES TO HARBOR DOCKS

The entire drive from Olympia to the mouth of the Columbia presents a broad picture of the logging industry. On the docks along Grays Harbor and Willapa Bay huge piles of lumber are stacked, waiting shipment to military barracks and Army outposts. Once this lumber was brought in from groves which stretched to the water's edge. Today it is hauled many miles, by truck, by sea, and by mountain railroad. Fire, disease, and the logger's ax have wrought vast havoc in the forests of western Washington.

Once Grays Harbor County, in Washington, was the center of the American lumber industry. Today that center has shifted southward to the fir belt of Oregon. Saw and ax have done their worst in this neighborhood, and the region's best hope is the second growth—the trees which will mature in the future.

Yet there still is hope. As the motorist drives along, he sees new firs beginning to nudge their way into the swath which the ax has cut. In the lush rainfall of the seacoast these trees grow with tropical speed. Soon they will be able to rehabilitate the industry. Already groves of second growth are throwing a carpet of green over patches of burn.

The proposed canal is very much an issue in the region traversed by the motorlog. Scandinavian loggers, Dutch farmers, ferryboat skippers, and owners of little restaurants all take a mutual interest in the undertaking. They believe that it would give their counties new prominence and importance. They look at the project from a recreational as well as an economic perspective, pointing out that owners of small pleasure boats could navigate between Portland and Seattle without having to brave the perils of the open sea.

RIVER IMPROVEMENTS FIT INTO WATERWAY PLANS

The possibilities of the waterway are prodigious. An inside passage already stretches from Alaska's capital at Juneau to Puget Sound. Then the Puget Sound-Columbia River Canal would get boats and barges to Astoria. Bonneville's locks and pool are making navigation feasible all the way to Umatilla and Attalia, particularly since the Celilo Canal was improved early this year. Should Congress approve the Umatilla Dam, as the House Rivers and Harbors Committee recently recommended, boats would be able to twist off up the Snake River past Lewiston, all the way to Johnson's Bar.

This would mean a navigable waterway from almost the Continental Divide to Alaska. Johnson's Bar is at the lower end of Hell's Canyon and is directly below Hat Point in the Wallowa Mountains of Oregon. The canal between the Columbia and Puget Sound would cost $33,921,638. The bulk of this amount would be spent on the stretch connecting Grays Harbor with Olympia, for here 12 locks would be required with a total lift of 90 feet. This would be necessary to get boats back and forth over the passes through the coastal mountain range. The canals along the coast, between Willapa Bay and the Columbia, and between Willapa Bay and Grays Harbor, would be comparatively inexpensive.

Rear Admiral Luther E. Gregory, United States Navy, retired, claims that the project has national-defense aspects which the country cannot afford to ignore. The waterway, he says, would be large enough for half the vessels of the American Fleet. Only the dreadnaughts and cruisers could not use it. Submarines, destroyers, torpedo boats, and other craft would be able to travel inland between the Columbia and the Sound, protected from any enemy force by the shore batteries at Fort Stevens, Fort Columbia, and other strategic military posts.

NAVY WOULD BE GIVEN GREATER MOBILITY

"The canals," says Admiral Gregory, "would allow submarines to operate through either Grays Harbor, Willapa Bay, and Puget Sound, in addition to the Columbia River entrance, and come to the relief or support of any naval unit engaged in battle at the Straits of Juan de Fuca. Vessels moving from Puget Sound would have three other exits into the ocean if the canal was constructed. The cost of one battleship would build the canal, and in time of national danger the existence of the new waterway might easily be worth a fleet of battleships in strategic value."

Two recent developments, according to Admiral Gregory, add to the stature of the canal as a national-defense enterprise. One is the immense expansion of the Bremerton navy yards at Puget Sound. "The proposed waterway would enhance Bremerton's value to the Nation," he declares. The other development is the construction of two huge aluminum plants along the Columbia River. Material from these plants could be transported speedily and cheaply by water to the vast Boeing aircraft factory in Seattle.

NEW DITCH WOULD GIVE NATION LONGEST WATERWAY

At the present time the greatest inland waterway in the world is the 1,000-mile link along America's Atlantic seaboard between Delaware Bay and Miami. By connecting the Columbia River with Puget Sound and the inland passage to Alaska, the proposed canal would top that route by 800 miles. National defense strategists in the United States have started paying increased attention to canals and waterways. That is why the St. Lawrence seaway, linking the Great Lakes with the sea, is now a major issue before Congress.

An article in the New York Times recently pointed out that part of Germany's military efficiency is due to a vast system of canals and locks. More than 20 percent of the goods of the Reich are carried over inland waters. The Times stated that Royal Air Force bombers have tried for weeks to put these routes out of commission, but that they were not nearly as vulnerable as railroads.

What about the commercial importance of the canal hitching the Columbia and the sound? Is its sole significance from a military standpoint? As the motorlog car wound through the coastal dips and inlets, one could see the products which the waterway would carry.

LUMBER—PRINCIPAL PRODUCT IN CANAL VICINITY

Lumber would be the principal product originating in the vicinity of the canal. In 1933, when the project was first discussed, the Washington State Canal Commission made a survey and announced that 800,000,000 board-feet of logs, 125,000,000 feet of lumber, and 130,000 cords of pulpwood would pass through the waterway annually. Admiral Gregory declares that a 20-mile haul by rail costs $2.50 for 1,000 feet of logs; the same haul by water, he maintains, would be in the neighborhood of 55 cents.

The vast navigation boom on the upper Columbia, coupled with the national-defense emergency, has centered new attention on the contemplated canal. Once the upper Columbia was virtually untraveled. Now the locks at Celilo and Bonneville are busy night and day. Loads of oil are shoved up the river and wheat barges brought down from the inland empire. Much of this traffic, if the canal is built, would originate and end at Puget Sound, and there would be uninterrupted barge traffic all the way from Seattle to the inland empire.

The Army engineers are reviewing the proposed project now, and probably will report soon to the House of Representatives. In the meanwhile the drive along the canal route, via Olympia and Seaside, starting at either end, offers a pleasant and varied week-end excursion Perhaps in the not-so-distant future it can be negotiated by launch as well as by car.

National Taxation of Motor Transportation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT L. RODGERS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ADDRESS BY FRED BRENCKMAN, WASHINGTON REPRESENTATIVE, THE NATIONAL GRANGE

Mr. RODGERS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address by Fred Brenckman, Washington representative, the National Grange, over stations of the National Broadcasting Co., on the Grange Hour, from Washington, D. C., May 17, 1941:

The Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives has for several weeks been holding hearings preparatory to the introduction of a revenue bill that is intended to raise several billion dollars a year in new or additional taxes to meet the cost of national defense. Roughly speaking, it is estimated that during the coming fiscal year the total appropriations of the Government will amount to $20,000,000,000.

The administration plans to raise about two-thirds of this sum by current taxation and to borrow the other third. It is estimated that existing taxes will produce revenues aggregating $9,000,000,000, while about $3,600,000,000 is to be raised by additional taxation.

We are all aware of the fact that our national-defense program calls for heavy increases in taxation. As the National Grange sees it, such new taxes as may be imposed should be levied as fairly and equitably as possible. These levies should be of such a character as not to destroy our system of private enterprise, upon which the security and well-being of the Nation so greatly depends in the emergency with which we are confronted. On the other hand, no person should be allowed to make any inordinate profits, nor should taxes be levied purely for punitive purposes.

The Grange has long been opposed to a general Federal sales tax, on the ground that it is a tax on the necessities of the people and violates the principle of ability to pay. However, we believe that excise taxes upon a carefully selected list of commodities are justified under prevailing conditions.

One of the proposals pending before the Ways and Means Committee calls for the imposition of another cent per gallon on gasoline, making the total Federal tax 2½ cents per gallon, instead of 1½ cents as at present. The National Grange is not in favor of this proposal.

The highway users of the country are already paying their full and proportionate share of all taxes. In addition to that, they are contributing, in round figures, about $2,000,000,000 per year in special highway taxes of various kinds—Federal, State, and local. This sum is equal to approximately 14 percent of the total revenues accruing to all the units of government in the United States. State and local taxes on highway transportation amount to about $1,500,000,000 a year, while the Federal Government is collecting approximately $500,000,000 a year from this source.

Federal and State taxes combined on gasoline now average nearly 6 cents per gallon. At the present retail price of gasoline, this represents a sales tax of nearly 50 percent.

VITAL TO AGRICULTURE

So far as agriculture is concerned, motor transportation, under modern conditions, is not a luxury but an absolute necessity. More than 1,000,000 motortrucks, or about one-fourth of the country's total, are owned and operated by farmers. A recent survey discloses the fact that with the abandonment of many branch lines of railroads that are no longer profitable, there are about 48,000 communities throughout the United States that are entirely dependent upon highway transportation.

The farmer must have his motor-vehicle facilities, and he does not feel that his use of the highways is a proper and adequate measure by which to determine his contribution toward the cost of national defense.

Some idea of the importance of the motor vehicle to the American farmer may be gained from the records of the United States Department of Agriculture, which show that approximately 27 percent of the butter, 39 percent of the eggs, 65 percent of the poultry, 40 percent of the fruit and vegetables, 62 percent of the cattle, 61 percent of the calves, 68 percent of the hogs, 29 percent of the sheep and lambs, and 50 percent of the mules and horses are now moved from farm to market by truck.

When the revenues derived from gasoline taxes are expended in improving and maintaining the highways there can be no legitimate criticism. However, it must be kept in mind that much of the gasoline purchased by farmers is used as a fuel in plowing, harrowing, threshing, filling silos, pumping water, operating spraying machinery, sawing wood, grinding feed, and for other purposes that do not involve any use of the highways. Many States properly refund the tax to farmers on gasoline used in such ways as have been enumerated. Other States do not make these refunds. So far as the Federal tax on gasoline is concerned, no refunds whatsoever are made. To increase the Federal gasoline tax would, therefore, result in increasing the farmer's cost of production.

COST OF TRANSPORTATION

The cost of transportation constitutes the biggest single service charge that agriculture has to pay. The imposition of an additional Federal tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline would make present excessive transportation costs on farm commodities just that much higher. This would be true of the more than 1,000,000 trucks operated by farmers themselves. It would likewise be true of common- and contract-carrier trucks that transport the products of the farm and which haul supplies consumed on the farm.

The owners of common- and contract-carrier trucks will naturally speak for themselves. But it is only fair to say with respect to them that they are engaged in a highly competitive business. The exhaustive study made by former Federal Coordinator of Transportation Joseph B. Eastman shows that highway users are paying their fair share of highway costs and more. The Eastman report, made public about 2 years ago, indicates that trucks as distinguished from passenger cars are paying more than their share of the cost of improving and maintaining our highways. Assuming the correctness of these findings, it would be just as logical to place a special tax for defense purposes on the coal consumed by the railroads as it would be to place a special tax for defense purposes on gasoline.

The intrusion of the Federal Government into the gasoline tax field cannot be regarded as legitimate. Such appropriations as the Federal Government has made for highways can all be justified from the standpoint of national defense, to facilitate the transportation of the mails, and for other purposes benefiting all the people alike.

SOURCE OF HIGHWAY FUNDS

By far the major portion of the funds that have been expended for the improvement of our highways has come from State, county, and local sources. From 1917, when the Federal-Aid Highway Act took effect, until 1939, the States and their minor subdivisions, excluding cities, spent a total of $29,675,397,000 on roads.

During the years in question, Federal expenditures on highways, which were supervised by the Bureau of Public Roads, now the Public Roads Administration, amounted to a little more than three billions. It should be noted that this includes the money spent for the elimination of grade crossings, forest roads and trails, and the national-park highways.

In addition to the regular Federal-aid appropriations for highways, the Government has also expended large sums for roads through P. W. A. and W. P. A. Lumping all these Federal appropriations for roads together gives us a total of about $6,797,000,000, of which more than $4,757,000,000 was for relief.

The primary purpose of the relief expenditures was to supply work for the unemployed. In fact, in appropriating emergency relief funds for roads, Congress expressly stipulated that in awarding contracts, provision should be made for the employment of as much hand labor as possible.

In support of the proposition that the gasoline tax properly belongs to the States, it should be kept in mind that under the Federal-Aid Highway Act, the funds appropriated by Congress all go for construction. The cost of maintaining these roads devolves upon the States.

Further than that, the States and their minor subdivisions have issued highway bonds in large amounts, and they are depending principally upon the revenue which is derived from the gasoline tax to pay off these bonds as they mature. The total outstanding highway bonds of the States and their minor subdivisions, not counting the cities, amount to nearly $3,000,000,000. These figures prove conclusively that the gasoline tax belongs to the States.

STATES MEMORIALIZE CONGRESS

The legislatures of half the States, fearing that the intrusion of the Federal Government into a sphere of taxation developed by the States to provide funds for road improvement may have serious consequences on State financing, have memorialized Congress to withdraw from the field of motor-fuel taxation. Congress should certainly heed the voice of the elected representatives of the States in this matter, because they speak for the majority of the people of the Nation.

While everybody recognizes that the revenues of the Federal Government must be greatly increased to meet the cost of national defense, we cannot lose sight of the fact that our State and local governments must likewise be supported and maintained. That the tax policies pursued by the Federal Government during recent years constitute nothing less than a threat to the sovereignty and independence of the States, drying up the sources of revenue upon which they must depend to finance their activities cannot be denied.

The best hope of preserving our democracy lies in maintaining the independence and sovereignty of the States, and this cannot be done by pursuing policies of taxation that will gradually reduce them to impotency and bankruptcy.

In considering ways and means of raising by current taxation as large a proportion as possible of the funds needed to defray the cost of national defense, it appears to be necessary to broaden the tax base and to fairly and judiciously lower the exemption on incomes. As I have already indicated, the Grange believes that no one should be allowed to make any undue profits, whether from defense contracts or in the regular line of business. We do not want another crop of millionaires such as was spawned by the first World War. Congress can take care of this situation by properly graduating the tax on personal incomes, the corporation-income tax, and the excess-profits tax.

In view of the situation with which we are faced, the nondefense expenditures of the Government should be held to the lowest possible minimum without sacrificing any really essential public service. It would be grossly improper and unfair to impose back-breaking taxes upon the people, with the Government squandering public funds to maintain supernumerary employees on the pay roll or in promoting projects that are nonessential and which do not contribute in any way whatsoever to the cause of national defense.

Valley Forge

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 26, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN E. RANKIN, OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. RANKIN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me at the eighteenth annual Mississippi State Sunday at Valley Forge, Washington Memorial Chapel, Sunday, May 25, 1941:

Rev. JOHN ROBBINS HART. I suppose you all know this is Mississippi Day at Valley Forge, and, as you know, Governor Johnson, of Mississippi, has sent to us one of our national leaders, a Member of Congress, Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN, Congressman from Mississippi. I think it means more and more to us to know about the men who are leading our country today, and we feel secure in this leadership. I want to assure Mr. RANKIN that he is most welcome to Valley Forge, and, as one of the leaders of the administration, I know he will try to help us in our present world troubles, just as we are trying to help them.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, it is indeed a pleasure to be here today to represent the Governor of my State in these patriotic exercises. In doing so, I feel as if it would not be out of place to call attention to the fact that my ancestors once lived in Pennsylvania. That was 200 years ago. Many years since, some of my people attempted to pay you a visit, or perhaps I had better say a visitation. They had a little misunderstanding over around Gettysburg and had to postpone the visit until a later day.

We are gathered today on holy ground. Here in these sacred precincts, by their sacrifices and their devotions, George Washington and his patriotic band of American heroes laid the foundation for free institutions throughout the world.

Someone has said that Shakespeare was an intellectual ocean that touched all the shores of thought. Washington's life might be called an ocean of inspiration for liberty which has stirred mankind to struggle upward to the nearest perfection in governments that civilization has ever attained.

Victor Hugo once said that nothing dies harder or more thoroughly than an old regime. Tennyson put it a little more mildly, a little more poetically when he said:

"The old order changeth, yielding place to new;
And God fulfills himself in many ways,
Lest one good custom should corrupt the world."

Throughout the centuries the old orders have been changing, and old opinions and old systems have been giving way to new.

Runnymede was one step on the long, hard road toward that freedom and liberty which Washington and his followers were striving for.

The American Revolution brought the greatest changes in government, and in the recognition of human rights, the world had ever known.

All changes have not been made by the sword. In fact, few changes have been made by the force of arms that could not have been made by some other method. Perhaps one of the greatest changes has been made largely by one man—Thomas A. Edison, the man who virtually gave us this electric age.

We are today witnessing another change, from an old order to a new. We are in the twilight, the deepening twilight, of sea power. The day of the domination of floating navies is fading away as a result of the development of the airplane, which is bringing about a new change in world affairs, so momentous that we stand appalled in a changing world.

With this vast change comes America's challenge to her destiny. We do not know what effect this change will have, but I am of the opinion that it will strengthen rather than weaken our country's position in world affairs. Bordered by its two great oceans, with the Gulf of Mexico on the south and blessed with a friendly nation to the north, boundless in its vast resources, it is the strongest and most powerful nation on the face of the earth.

We were told that in the last war a generation of young men were destroyed. I am chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and I have probably witnessed more of the aftermath of that war than any man in public life. While all of the young men who engaged in that war were not destroyed, we find that hundreds of thousands of them have broken down, and are still breaking down, due to their war services, and millions never got adjusted to post-war conditions. So I am inclined to believe with the author of the book on that subject that the World War practically destroyed a generation of young men.

We are now witnessing a conflict that is going far beyond the World War. It is destroying a generation of women and children.

A few years ago there was a boat load of Spanish refugee children brought to this country who had gone through the civil war in that country. I was told by people who saw them that when they heard the buzzing of an airplane they went into paroxysms of fear.

What is to be the life of the children who are now under constant bombardment day and night? They will probably suffer the same terrors. For that reason I have appealed, and I shall continue to appeal, to the leaders of the country who are, by the way, the leaders of my own party, to use their offices to try to bring about at least a truce that will enable them to explore the possibility of peace based upon the five points laid down the other night by Cordell Hull, our great Secretary of State, with whom I served in Congress for many years. These points are as follows:

"1. Extreme nationalism must not again be permitted to express itself in excessive trade restrictions."

I am sure you realize that many wars have been brought about by trade restrictions.

"2. Nondiscrimination in international commercial relations must be the rule, so that international trade may grow and prosper."

The discriminations in international trade have done more to bring about ill feeling and ill will, than almost any other one element that has entered into world affairs in recent years.

"3. Raw material supplies must be available to all nations without discrimination."

If all nations are to live and prosper and work out their own destinies we must not deny to them access to the raw materials of the world.

"4. International agreements regulating the supply of commodities must be so handled as to protect fully the interests of the consuming countries and their people."

If we are going to be fair with the smaller nations we must see that they are protected in their rights, just the same as the larger nations of the earth.

"5. The institutions and arrangements of international finance must be so set up that they lend aid to the essential enterprises and the continuous development of all countries, and permit the payment through processes of trade consonant with the welfare of all countries."

In other words, we do not propose in the future to have our international affairs dominated by a small group of international bankers, or by the large oil interests, or by large industrial institutions that have their investments in every country in the world.

If they will ask for a truce and the opportunity to explore the possibility of peace based upon these five points, they stand a chance to bring about peace among the warring nations—"a consummation devoutly to be wished." I am afraid if this is not done we may witness a collapse of the British Empire, which would be a world disaster.

Let me remind you also that the best friend we had when we needed one was France. France is now in a most embarrassing position. It was the assistance of France that made it possible for us to gain our independence. We feel toward her as the father did toward his prodigal son, and will be glad to welcome her back into the democratic fold.

I agree with Washington in his expressions with reference to Christianity. You are not going to have peace in this world based upon fear. You are not going to have peace based upon the force of arms. We will have peace, if and when it comes, based upon those great fundamental principles laid down by Washington and Jefferson and which constitute the bedrock of American institutions.

We are told in Holy Writ that the Saviour was once asleep upon the Sea of Galilee when there burst forth a great storm. It seemed for a time as if heaven and earth and sea and sky were mingled in one implacable chaos. The Disciples awoke the sleeping Saviour and told him they were lost. He addressed the troubled elements and said, "Peace; be still." The Bible tells us that "the wind ceased and there was a great calm." That is the only force that can bring permanent peace to this world today. It cannot be enforced by military power.

Throughout the centuries past men like Caesar, Napoleon, Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, and others have risen to power, flourished, and passed away, but not one has been able to force his will even upon his own people long at a time. When peace comes the dictator fades away. When we can muster the public opinion of the world behind the ideas of peace we can lead the nations of the earth into a new day of peace and international understanding.

When we can say to the Hitlers, the Mussolinis, and the Stalins, "You are not running things"; say to the large oil companies, financial overlords, and to all the other selfish interests, "You are not running this earth," then we may emerge from this conflict and restore peace to a troubled world.

I would hate to think I am going to live the rest of my life in a world that will have a crepe on practically every doorknob; that will have every park and public place filled with the maimed, the blind, the wounded, and disabled victims of another conflict. These young men, these boy scouts who sit before me, will have other issues to settle, other problems to solve in building a greater country and promoting a finer life. I believe with Ella Wheeler Wilcox when she said:

"Weep not for vanished ages, with their great heroic men,
Who live on history's pages or dwell in the poet's pen;
For the grandest times are before us, and the world is yet to see
The noblest worth of this old earth in the men that are to be."

It may be that the airplane is the harbinger of world peace; that it will put an end to wars between nations that are separated by bodies of water. Let us hope it may help to usher in that golden age of which Tennyson dreamed when he said:

"I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonders that would be;

"Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

"Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew
For the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

"Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging thro' the thunderstorm;

"Till the war drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle flags were furl'd
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world;

"There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapt in universal law."

Explanation of War Resolution Adopted by International Convention of Disciples of Christ

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ORVILLE ZIMMERMAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

LETTER FROM I. R. KELSO, MEMBER OF COMMITTEE ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following explanation of the resolution adopted by the international convention of the Disciples of Christ at St. Louis, Mo., May 7, 1941:

CAPE GIRARDEAU, MO., May 13, 1941.

Hon. ORVILLE ZIMMERMAN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ZIMMERMAN: Newspaper stories regarding the adoption of a resolution on war, by the International Convention of Disciples of Christ, at St. Louis, Mo., on May 7, are very misleading unless the reader is familiar with all of the facts and circumstances attending the alleged action of the convention in adopting said so-called resolution on war.

The facts relative to the alleged adoption of said so-called resolution on war, by the International Convention of Disciples of Christ at St. Louis, Mo., on May 7, 1941, may be stated substantially as follows:

1. That the International Convention of Disciples of Christ, is not a delegate convention. That ministers of Christ, and other Christian leaders, have the right to freely and fully discuss all great questions that affect the lives of the people, of a community, of the Nation, or of the world, in the light of Christian principles, but they do not have the right to ask for a vote in support of the views of any individual or group of individuals, and when such a vote is taken, it means nothing more than the expression of the opinion of those actually voting in favor of or against the proposition. That the International Convention of Disciples of Christ is not authorized to do anything which might be construed as intending to interfere in any way with the congregational autonomy of the Disciples of Christ.

2. That approximately 1½ percent of the 6,250 persons registered at said St. Louis convention voted in favor of adopting said so-called resolution on war; and that approximately the same percentage of the number of persons registered voted against said so-called resolution on war. That the vote on said so-called resolution was so close that the president of the convention, of his own motion, called for a division, and upon a rising vote of those in favor of the adoption of said so-called resolution, and those against said motion, declared the motion carried.

3. That said so-called resolution on war, was submitted to and acted on by the convention, contrary to and in violation of section 2 article V of the constitution printed at page 209 of the convention program, copy of which is marked "Exhibit A" and hereto attached for convenience and ease of reference.

4. That said so-called resolution was submitted to and acted on by the convention contrary to and in violation of the rules and practice of the convention in the matter of handling of resolutions in the St. Louis convention, printed at page 37 of the Convention Program, copy of which is marked exhibit "B" and hereto attached for convenience and ease of reference.

5. That said so-called resolution on war was acted on contrary to the constitution and rules governing the handling of resolutions in the St. Louis convention (exhibits "A" and "B"), in this:

(a) That said so-called resolution on war was not submitted within the 24-hour limit fixed by the International Convention of Disciples of Christ for the handling of resolutions and other matters of business coming before the convention. That said so-called resolution on war was not submitted until after the subcommittees of the committee on recommendations had completed their work and most of the members of the committee on recommendations had gone home.

(b) That only 24 of the 84 members who had participated in the work of the committee on recommendations were present at the meeting which was held about 5 o'clock in the afternoon on May 6. That said 24 members present at said meeting had remained at the convention after all of the business submitted to the committee on recommendations had been completed in conformity with the constitution and practice of the convention, to take care of matters of emergency, in compliance with the provisions of section 2, article V of the constitution (exhibit "A") hereto attached.

(c) That the president of the convention was never requested to rule, and did not rule, that the subject matter of said so-called resolution was to be handled by the skeleton committee on recommendations as an emergency within the meaning of the constitution of the convention, prior to its submission to said skeleton committee on recommendations.

(d) That the skeleton committee of only 24 members received said alleged resolution about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of May 6, long after the expiration of the 24-hour limit, and after most of the members of the committee on recommendations had gone home. That 17 of said skeleton committee voted in favor of recommending said so-called resolution, and 7 voted against recommending said so-called resolution, sometimes referred to as a petition and sometimes referred to as a resolution.

(e) That the President of the convention was never permitted to rule that said so-called resolution should be handled as an emergency resolution.

6. That copy of said so-called resolution on war which was submitted to and acted on contrary to and in violation of the constitution, rules, and practices of the International Convention of Disciples of Christ, as aforesaid, is marked "Exhibit C" and hereto attached for convenience and ease of reference.

That pursuant to the direction of those voting in favor of adopting said resolution, the general secretary of the international convention wired the President of the United States calling attention to said resolution and the action thereon.

7. That on May 8, 1941, the writer, as a member of the committee on recommendations at the St. Louis convention of the International Convention of Disciples of Christ, sent a night letter to Hon. Stephen T. Early relative to the above matters, copy of which is marked "Exhibit D" and hereto attached as a matter of information to be considered in connection with the telegram sent by the general secretary of the convention to the President of the United States.

8. That in the light of all of the attending facts and circumstances, it is clear that, in the closing hour of the last business session of the International Convention of Disciples of Christ at St. Louis on May 7, approximately 1½ percent of the number registered at said convention did, contrary to and in violation of the constitution, rules, and practices of said convention vote in favor of said so-called resolution on war, and that the same was adopted by a narrow margin; that said vote is merely the expression of an opinion of approximately 100 individuals who voted in favor of said so-called resolution, and the expression of an opinion of approximately the same number who voted against the adoption of said resolution.

The above and foregoing facts are respectfully submitted for consideration in connection with the telegram sent to the President of the United States by the general secretary of the convention relative to the action of the convention on the question of war.

Yours truly,

I. R. KELSO,
Member of Committee on Recommendations at the St. Louis Convention of the International Convention of Disciples of Christ.

EXHIBIT A CONSTITUTION

Article V—Committees

SEC. 2. Committee on Recommendations.—Throughout the annual assembly there shall sit from day to day, with power to appoint subcommittees, a Committee on Recommendations, which shall receive such reports of the various general agencies as may be submitted to it by the convention; shall analyze and scrutinize such reports; shall make such recommendations regarding said boards as it deems wise; and shall submit the same to the convention. To such committee all resolutions and other business shall be referred without debate. It is ordered, however, that no resolution or matter of business, except matters of emergency, shall be considered by the international convention unless it has been presented to the convention in time to reach the Committee on Recommendations at least 24 hours before the last business session of the convention is scheduled to begin. The presiding officer shall rule whether the resolution proposed is an emergency resolution or not. It shall report at each daily business session of the convention; and each item of business so reported shall be approved or disapproved, or recommitted to it by the convention to be revised and again reported.

EXHIBIT B

HANDLING OF RESOLUTIONS IN THE ST. LOUIS CONVENTION

The Denver International Convention adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That no resolution or matter of business except matters of emergency will be considered by the international convention unless it has been presented to the convention in time to reach the committee on recommendations at least 24 hours before the last business session of the convention is scheduled to begin."

In conformity with this resolution and the practice followed subsequently, all organizations or individuals desiring to submit resolutions for the consideration of the St. Louis international convention were requested to reduce same to writing and file the resolution with the undersigned on or before April 21.

Resolutions which may arise after April 21 must be filed by Tuesday, May 6, to prevent such resolution being carried over until next year's convention without action thereon.

As last year, the text of each resolution to be considered by the convention will be placed in the hands of each delegate attending the business sessions.

GRAHAM FRANK,
General Secretary, International Convention of Disciples of Christ.

EXHIBIT C

LXVIII. Resolution regarding America's participation in the war, reading as follows:

"The international convention of Disciples of Christ respectfully and earnestly petition the President of the United States to use the great powers of his office to keep this Nation out of the war now raging in Europe, Asia, and Africa. We make bold to present this petition in view of the President's repeated and solemn pledges assuring the country that the armed forces of the United States would not become involved in the war.

"We note with anxious apprehension that the policy of aid to Britain has carried the Nation to the brink of belligerent participation, and that the country and the President now face a crucial and irrevocable decision which will profoundly affect the destiny of America. We believe that this is not America's war. We affirm our conviction that America's responsibility to the civilization of the future requires maintenance of her own peace and the preservation of her democratic way of life.

"The embroilment of our country in the conflict which is itself devastating civilization will only add fuel to the flames by spreading and cruelly prolonging the war and inviting to our own land the chaos in which the war will surely leave the nations which are participating in it. We implore the President to revive the role of mediator for himself and our Nation, and to adopt no further policy in aid to Britain which will carry the hazard of involvement in the war. The American people are overwhelmingly opposed to belligerent participation, and we look with grave foreboding upon any action by the Government which will plunge a divided Nation into a war which is not America's war."

The committee on recommendations recommends that the resolution be approved with the following words deleted, "We believe that this is not America's war" and (at the close) "which is not America's war"; and further recommends that the resolution be telegraphed to President Roosevelt immediately by the secretary of the convention.

Prepare To Meet the Tax Collector

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES S. DEWEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ADDRESS OF HON. CHARLES S. DEWEY, OF ILLINOIS

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to revise and extend my remarks, I submit a speech entitled "Prepare To Meet the Tax Collector," which I delivered before the Women's Finance Forum, on May 22, at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.:

Madam President, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, it has always been my belief that, fundamentally, the soundest economists in the United States are the women folk. Ours has always been a country of homes. And the budget director-treasurer of practically every home is the housewife. The husband may be the breadwinner, but it is the wife who generally determines how the income can be spent with the maximum possible benefits for the entire family.

She budgets the income, however small, to pay the rent or to pay on a mortgage, to buy the food and other necessities of life, and to see that the children are clad and educated. She is realistic. She knows that over a long period of time expenditures cannot exceed income. She realizes that one must be adjusted to the other. The American standard of living and the thousands of happy homes in our great country are evidence abundant that the American women have succeeded in their tasks.

With this belief in mind, I am particularly happy to have an opportunity of talking to a group of women who are studying the broader fields of finance, and particularly so at a time when the people are about to be burdened with unprecedented taxes to support unprecedented Federal expenditures.

I do not intend to make a partisan speech, but I cannot help but state I have not been in agreement with many of the financial policies of the present administration. Our Government has been extravagant and wasteful. Large appropriations have been made with little or no thought as to how the money might be raised. We are just beginning to face realities. The "blank check" era may have been glorious, but we must now prepare to meet the tax collector. Your Government will shortly be asking you to pay the heaviest taxes in all our history.

Even though Congress enacts the pending tax legislation to raise $3,500,000,000 in additional revenue, the $12,700,000,000 of tax revenue in 1942 will still be $6,300,000,000 short of the estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year.

I believe that today, when our national defense needs are tremendous, deliberate efforts should be made to eliminate or substantially reduce expenditures for items not essential for our defense. If the Government shows a willingness to economize, the American people will gladly make sacrifices in tax payments for the security of our free country.

It is very rare indeed that any politician recommends a reduction in the appropriation for his department or bureau. Time and again they appear before the committees of Congress to recommend an increase in this item or that item in the appropriation bill for their particular department. Congress does not need to invite them. They will come voluntarily. But, unfortunately, they do not voluntarily come to suggest possible reductions. In fact, Congress finds it difficult to get any cooperation from the executive branch of the Government for reducing expenditures.

When the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Ways and Means Committee he stated that he believed approximately $1,000,000,000 could be saved in the nonessential expenditures. He was asked to recommend specific items for elimination or reduction. It was a legitimate request, particularly inasmuch as the executive branch of the Government prepares the Budget and Congress acts on the Budget recommendations. But, as you may know, the Secretary of the Treasury refused to make any specific Budget reduction recommendations.

It is most unfortunate when we have officials of Government always ready and willing—all too ready and willing—to make recommendations to Congress as to where more money can be spent, but never ready and willing to make any recommendations where money may be saved. The only possible way to obtain economies is for you, the people, to demand it and when your demand becomes loud enough it will be heeded. You are dealing with politicians who, in the last analysis, are subject to your will.

I do not think anyone will seriously contend that our national financial condition is sound, considering that our public debt approaches $50,000,000,000 and that we find it necessary today to build up and maintain a large defense machinery. We could have been more economical during these last several years, and I think we would have been had the people themselves taken a greater interest in the Government's financial affairs and had we had balanced representation in Congress. These two factors: (1) absence of balanced representation in Congress, and (2) lack of public interest in sound governmental financial policies are, in my opinion, the two basic causes for our present-day situation.

As you know, during the last several years and even today, the minority party in Congress is numerically weak. I could point out innumerable instances where the minority party endeavored to eliminate or reduce items of appropriation. The Department of the Interior appropriation bill, which passed the House last week, is the most recent example. Amendments were repeatedly offered from the floor to reduce appropriations only to be defeated by the overwhelming majority. The minority does not have sufficient votes even to force a compromise.

In a two-party system of government, such as exists in the United States, the best interests of the people are served when there is a balanced representation in Congress. The very best results are obtained when there is almost an equality in both the House and Senate, or when one of the Houses is Democratic and the other Republican.

Today there are only 28 Republican Senators out of a total of 96, and 162 Republican Congressmen out of 435. The numerical strength of the minority is such that it can seldom, if ever, block any proposed legislation which is not for the best interests of the constituency. I do not mean to imply that the minority is powerless. It has done much for informing the people on issues and for molding public opinion. I merely wish to point out how an overwhelming majority operates to the disadvantage of the people. Moreover, it must be admitted that on a percentage basis the membership in Congress is not an accurate measure of the public will as expressed in the last election, when the Democratic Party polled 27,000,000 votes and the Republican Party 22,000,000. On a basis of that vote, the minority interests of the country as a whole do not really have the representation in Congress to which they are entitled.

It is more or less inevitable that when a majority is overwhelming that it tends to throw discretion to the winds. It ignores the wishes of the minority. It refuses to listen to its warnings and gives no consideration to its recommendations. Such a majority does what it wishes, when it wishes, and how it wishes. And, I think you will agree, this factor explains why we are today faced with a large public debt and why we have been without a long-range fiscal policy.

The other contributing factor has been the lack of interest on the part of the people themselves. If you think back twoscore years, there was a time that our forebears gave some part of their life to public service. Titles of some sort—"Judge," "Senator," "Congressman," or "Sheriff"—were quite common among businessmen. They entered public service at a personal sacrifice and out of a high sense of duty. They realized the necessity of helping to guide their local and national governments if their own affairs and private interests as citizens were to be safeguarded. In those days men and women of stature, ability, and high purpose made their contribution to the running of the Government.

With the advent of the great industrial revolution during the latter part of the last century, interest in politics ceased to exist. The industrial revolution produced opportunities to amass private wealth. The public mind turned to business affairs, and a regrettable indifference to the affairs of government developed. The people were not concerned about such things as taxes, because at that time the normal growth of the country provided such great income that even low taxes produced sufficient revenue.

The last war brought a tax consciousness among certain groups of our people. The costs of war necessitated new and additional taxes. During the prosperous 1920's, as you will recall, some relief in taxation was given.

Since 1930 the tax burden has been gradually growing. I regret to be the bearer of bad tidings, but, to use a slang expression, insofar as taxes are concerned, "you ain't seen nothing yet." The 1941 tax measure, now under consideration in Congress, introduces an unprecedented tax burden on the people. It will bring a tax consciousness to thousands of our people who formerly had neither conception nor interest in how the Federal Government and local governments obtained their revenue.

As I talk to you the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives is in executive session, writing a tax bill which will be levied on the national income gained this year, 1941. Their studies will result in a bill for taxes which will reach many of us on March 15, 1942. That will be a painful day. And it behooves every man and woman to commence now making preparation to meet the tax collector. For most of us these new taxes will necessitate a substantial readjustment in our standard of living. and we cannot wait until March 15, 1942, when the tax collector knocks at the door for his cash, to make that readjustment.

Before turning to the various proposals for embodiment in this new tax bill it would probably be of some interest to examine the legislative procedure by which this bill will reach final enactment. As most of you are aware, the Treasury Department, after budgeting the financial requirements for the ensuing years, drafts a tentative tax bill and sends it to the House of Representatives for consideration and study. The Senate cannot consider a tax bill until the House has acted.

Our Constitution significantly provides that all revenue measures must originate in the House of Representatives, which body is closest to the people. This provision in our Constitution indicates that the founding fathers recognized that "the power to tax is," as Chief Justice Marshall at one time stated it, "the power to destroy."

When the proposed tax legislation reaches the House from the Treasury Department, the Speaker of the House immediately assigns the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, which is probably the most important committee of the House. The committee then proceeds to hold public hearings. Witnesses appear before the committee to express their views on the different items of the proposed bill and to make their respective recommendations.

If any of you visit Washington when Congress is in session and the Ways and Means Committee is holding hearings, it would be well worth your time to spend several hours listening to these proceedings. The committee is composed of 25 members—15 Democrats and 10 Republicans. They sit like judges behind a long, curved bar in the beautiful room belonging to that committee. The witnesses are called and stand before the members, and, with great formality, present their case.

A witness is generally permitted to proceed without interruption, but any member of the committee may request the chairman for permission to stop the witness in the course of his statement in order to ask him a question. After the witness' statement is concluded, the actual questioning begins. Each member of the committee is given the opportunity to examine the witness.

Not only private citizens appear as witnesses. Members of the Cabinet appear, as well as representatives from the different executive departments and other Members of Congress. These hearings may continue daily for several weeks. When the committee is satisfied it has obtained all the information it needs and that all interests have been given an opportunity to present their case it goes into executive session from which the public is excluded. In executive session the members vote on the items to be put into the bill and the real work of writing the bill commences.

When the bill is completed and reported to the House, the Ways and Means Committee appears before the Committee on Rules to request a special rule for the consideration of the bill on the floor of the House. The Rules Committee is the legislative traffic officer. It determines the program for the House, and it naturally gives priority to bills having the greatest political, economic, and social significance.

The resolution reported by the Rules Committee determines the conditions under which a bill will be debated and considered on the floor. It will report what is known as a closed rule or an open rule. An open rule is one which permits amendments to be offered from the floor by the individual Members, to be approved or rejected by the entire membership. A closed rule, on the other hand, is one which precludes any amendments being offered by individual Members, although it generally permits amendments to be offered by the Ways and Means Committee itself. This rule is sometimes known as the gag rule, in that the House is obliged to accept or reject a bill reported by a committee in its entirety. It can make no changes.

In all probability the rule which the Rules Committee will report for consideration of the pending tax legislation will be a closed rule. That seems to have been the practice in connection with previous tax measures. This procedure is justified by the House leadership on the grounds that any tax bill is extremely technical, with many interdependent provisions, and that an attempt to write into the bill new provisions when it is being debated on the floor may serve to destroy whole sections of the measure.

After the bill has passed the House it then goes to the Senate Finance Committee for consideration. That committee will again hold hearings and report the bill to the Senate. It may substantially amend the House bill, but it is a fair assumption that at the most only minor changes will be made.

While I am not a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I have attended many of its sessions. Three methods of raising almost $13,000,000,000 from the citizens and businesses of the United States are being considered: (1) heavy taxes on business, (2) hidden taxes on commodities, commonly known as excise taxes, and (3) personal income and estate taxes.

I will not go into a detailed explanation of the tax on business. It is of interest, however, that the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board and Mr. Leon Henderson, of the Price Stabilization Committee, both of whom appeared as witnesses, are strong advocates of this form of tax. They believe that most industries will be exceptionally prosperous because of the national-defense orders, and that by taxing away all but an insignificant portion of their profits they believe huge sums of tax revenue will be obtained with a minimum of effort and expense of collection.

One readily appreciates the merit of the suggestion, for no one of us believes that industries should be permitted to make enormous war profits. On the other hand, in applying this tax great care must be exercised in writing the formula and fixing the rate that the tax does not operate to hinder the normal growth of small businesses in the United States. And, I am frank to say, I am most interested in encouraging small business. It is the "little businessman" who is the backbone of our economy. He suffered from the very unwise undistributed profits tax, you will recall, and I insist that the business-tax formulas be arrived at in such a manner so as not to hinder small-business development.

A second group advocate a broadening of the Federal excise taxes. They believe that because of high wages and intense industrial activity induced by the national-defense program, the American public will go on a spending spree and cause an inflation through their demands for consumption goods. Therefore, this group advocates a high tax on luxury items, automobiles, radios, refrigerators. They contend that through this system not only will the Government collect a large amount of revenue but the tax will also operate to curtail the public demand for these articles. It was also pointed out to the committee that this tax can be made to serve as a brake on the ordinary consumption of articles made from materials, such as aluminum and steel, necessary for defense purposes.

Let me say a word or two about excise taxes. As you know, our existing law provides for excise taxes on a number of commodities, such as gasoline, tobacco, automobiles, telegrams, etc. These taxes bring in a larger revenue than any other single tax, and they are easy to collect.

However, the excise tax has two very important disadvantages. One is that the people do not realize they pay it, for the tax is hidden in the price of the article purchased. When the politician is finally forced to levy new taxes, this type of tax is invariably the type he likes. In the words of one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, "this form of taxation is always useful as it gets the feathers out of the goose with the least squawking." As I stated a little while ago, the only way we are ever going to eliminate Government extravagance is by the people squawking. I am inclined to believe that the people should know exactly how much they must contribute to the expense of government. If they were "tax conscious," the politicians in Washington would be less generous in the appropriations.

The excise tax has another disadvantage which I think should be taken into account, and that is that it is not based upon the ability to pay principle but rather falls heaviest on the lower and middle income groups. In other words, the average citizen is the consumer. And I am very much concerned lest the taxes become more than he can possibly bear. Moreover, I want the average citizen to know he pays taxes rather than have them hidden in his articles of purchase.

A third group recommends that the Committee on Ways and Means use a combination of taxes: (1) a tax on business sufficient to take from this branch of our economy all excess war profits; (2) a moderately heavy tax on a limited number of consumption items, the manufacture of which might seriously interfere with national-defense production; and (3) a broadening of the personal income tax base by reducing the exemptions and by increasing the tax rates themselves on personal income and estates. It is urged that by a combination of these three the best balanced system of obtaining tax revenue will be afforded. It is really an extension of our present tax system, and it is my personal belief that the theories of this last group will prevail when the bill is finally written.

But no matter what system is finally decided upon, the administration intends to collect $13,000,000,000, or more, out of the national income of 1941. Our people must now prepare to meet the tax collector. I cannot emphasize this too strongly and too often. The effect of these new taxes, whatever system is adopted, is certain to compel each and every one of us to pay to the tax collector sums of money, directly or indirectly, which we have heretofore set aside as savings for a vacation or for some other family purpose. It might just as well be understood today that our whole psychology of living must undergo a change. The tax burden will be such that all of us must make a readjustment in our standard of living.

I do not intend to bother you with too many figures, but in order to give you an idea of what may be expected I will quote a few taxes that those of ordinary income will have to meet under the proposal the committee is presently considering.

Let us take as an example a single person and a married couple without children. Serious consideration is being given to reducing the present exemption of a married couple from $2,000 to $1,600, and to reducing the exemption of a single person from $800 to $600. This is advocated on the theory of broadening the taxable base.

Under the present law a married man without children who receives a total salary of $3,000, pays $31 income tax. Under the Treasury Department proposal, he would pay $152. If he should decide to set aside a sufficient sum each month, beginning with his next pay in June, in order to pay this tax when it becomes due on March 15, he would have to put aside around $16 each month.

If he is a married man with no children with a salary of $4,000, under existing law he pays an income tax of $70. Under the proposed law he will have to be prepared to meet the tax collector next March with $312. If he begins next month to set aside enough money to satisfy the collector, whom you will find anything but agreeable, he must save approximately $35 a month.

For those who have advanced to an executive position and receiving a salary of $6,000, his tax will be increased from $150 to $700. His monthly saving for the eventful day of March 15 next must be around $77 a month. Even Congress will not be sparing of itself under the new tax proposal. Under existing law a Member of Congress, married, with no children, pays $528. Under the pending proposal he will be obliged to pay $1,628. And he must save at least $180 a month between now and next March.

While it is only of academic interest to most of us, let us take the case of a married man whose income is $20,000 a year. Under the Treasury's recommendation he will pay $4,800 personal income tax and must set aside around $533 each month between now and next March.

The point I have been endeavoring to emphasize is that when the pending tax bill is finally passed and the exact rates are known, each individual should forecast what his income tax will be and begin immediately to accumulate monthly reserves for the purpose. The Government is a hard tax collector. It will demand that payment be made on the dot, and will charge you a 6-percent penalty if you delay in meeting this obligation. I believe the Treasury Department will, in due course, put on a campaign of information and instruction to taxpayers. But what I fear is that our good fellow citizens, many of whom have never been tax conscious, will be shocked and surprised when the tax collector submits his bill and will not be prepared, with cash on hand, to make payment.

This new tax bill will require sacrifices of all of us. It will usher in a tax consciousness. The American people will again take an interest in national affairs. Demands for economy will be stimulated. While we must now pay the costs of our mistakes of yesterday and go through this painful period of sacrifice, I have faith in the American people and our system of government and firmly believe that we will pass through this era of upset world conditions and emerge an even greater nation, purified and strengthened by our experience.

While we are preparing to meet the tax collector, let us also demand that the administration itself sacrifice many of its expenditures not essential in this hour of crisis for our defense.

California National Youth Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

COMMENTS FROM VARIOUS NEWSPAPERS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the California National Youth Administration has earned widespread public support because of its sane, level-headed administration, its splendid program, and its vital contribution to national defense. The newspapers of California have been among the first to recognize the able and sincere efforts of State Administrator Robert Wayne Burns and his staff to provide the youth of California with work experience which will enable them to get jobs in private industry. From among the hundreds of newspaper comments available I have selected a few which follow:

Long Beach Press Telegram, January 2, 1941, by James Arden Allen: A vital factor in Long Beach's national defense preparation is the National Youth Administration, which is giving young persons an opportunity to acquire experience in various branches of defense-related industries, without competing with private enterprise.

To the average person the N. Y. A. long has been thought of as a program carried out only in the schools.

But the program in the schools is only a part of the National Youth Administration's work here.

Slightly more than 500 students in Long Beach schools are working under N. Y. A., while 876 youths are engaged in the program outside the schools.

Young men in this program are being trained so that they can step into vital defense work—which a great number are now doing.

Young women are receiving experience in mass production methods in sewing and cooking, and are being trained in Red Cross work. Many are engaged in stenographic and clerical work in various offices here.

San Luis Obispo Telegram-Tribune, March 29, 1941: New dormitories and mess halls, together with additional administrative offices, are rapidly nearing completion at the N. Y. A. Resident Training Center situated on the California Polytechnic School campus. These additions will accommodate 120 new youth trainees and will bring the total enrollment of the project to 230 boys. Arrivals will start April 1, and April 15 should see all units completely filled.

Classes in aircraft sheet metal, welding, machine shop, radio, and drafting are offered by the school under the direction of Charles Knott, Dean of Industry, for 4 hours a day, 5 days a week.

Boys are selected on the basis of their aptitude and desire for one of these courses, while the instructors furnished by the school are men selected not only for their teaching ability but because of their past experience in industry and their knowledge of the exact type of training that industry requires. Length of time necessary to complete these courses ranges from 6 months in welding to 18 months in machine shop, with the ability of the individual youth lengthening or shortening the time required, as the case may be.

Thus, the youths assigned to this project are given a chance to develop good work habits on actual jobs at the same time that they are being trained for employment in industry. Their enthusiasm and appreciation of what is being offered them is clearly shown by the fact that more than half of the present group are attending classes from 4 a. m. to 8 a. m. and every one volunteered willingly for this early morning training.

Sacramento Bee, March 29, 1941, by Leland Elam: A dual-purpose program—one that is "going to bat" for national defense in two ways at the same time—has been under way for sometime at the State's forest-service station near Davis. Here, in cooperation with the State department of natural resources, the National Youth Administration is giving 213 superior California youths work experience so that they can obtain jobs in defense industries. At the same time these young men are building equipment for actual use in defense operations.

There are dozens of boys who a few weeks before hunted for a job—any kind of a job—and now they have one each day in the shops at the Davis project. From here, after a few months' training, they are placed in defense-industry positions or take up work in private local firms. * * * Thus the National Youth workers at Davis are turning out a large amount of equipment which the State division of forestry will use to fight fires in the State forests—and that is important also because our State of California defense plan calls for proper forest protection. * * *

All the time these boys are gaining experience to take such jobs in national-defense work or private industry, they are turning out hundreds of jobs for the division of forestry.

Stockton Record, March 12, 1941: A new contribution to national defense—giving young men work experience in metal trades—has been undertaken here by the National Youth Administration and went into operation this week with the establishment of a sheet-metal shop at 625 East Market Street. * * * Representing an investment by the Government of $700, mostly in new machinery, the shop will provide sheet-metal-work experience, and related training in such subjects as blueprint reading, layout work, shop mathematics and the use and operation of power machines. Aircraft sheet metal and welding also are subjects for training in the shop.

Sacramento Union, February 9, 1941: Col. Fred C. Nelson, commanding Sacramento Army air depot, who thought the N. Y. A. out-of-school program "worth trying" in the engineering department on the field, now is "completely sold" on the plan of operation. He said yesterday, "I'll admit I expected quite a few hitches, but so far everything has gone off smoothly and as a consequence, a tremendous problem has been taken off our hands."

Nelson explained: "You see, there is such a heavy demand for airplane mechanics in Government projects and private industry, that the supply simply is not forthcoming. We can't get trained men and we can't get apprentices, because civil service sets up requirements that cannot be met without previous training.

"If this N. Y. A. program had not been inaugurated it would have been necessary for us to open a special employment bureau and a training school. We have other things to do that I deem more important, so you can understand why I'm so appreciative of the N. Y. A.'s handling the job for us—both the hiring and preparation of boys for future positions."

Colonel Nelson, who is a friendly human being rather than the stern military type one might expect, has recommended to Washington, that in order to keep production at the depot up to requirements, the program should be expanded to take in 500 boys and that, during the emergency, these young men should be hired as soon as they have satisfied the mechanics of their ability to take over regular jobs.

Calexico Chronicle, March 14, 1941, by Dorian Stout: No one can complain that the present administration has not achieved major progress in the field of prevention against a second lost generation. Its most conspicuous success has been the operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the National Youth Administration. * * * Calexico has reason to know that the N. Y. A. is sound in purpose and sound in application. Broadly, it is devised to train youth in the mechanical arts, to enable ambitious youngsters to learn a trade or profession, or to pursue an education. N. Y. A. boys and girls contributed effort to many phases of the Desert Cavalcade; before that its enrollees performed many of the smaller jobs about the city. * * * And while the city benefits, so will the boys. They will be learning a trade, or trades, and will be more valuable to themselves and to prospective employers. Here is a splendid opportunity extended by N. Y. A. that must be exploited.

San Francisco Call-Bulletin, March 22, 1941: Seven boys bent over a table in the center of the room, seven boys whose fingers worked swiftly and surely and nimbly for * * * national defense.

There were photographs on that table, overlapping aerial photographs of bay area terrain. When patterned together with the necessary hairbreadth exactness, those pictures would form a detailed map for the Engineer Corps of the United States Army.

Here is a brief glimpse of one of the activities of San Francisco headquarters of the National Youth Administration, where practical work experience available to young people in a dozen different fields has been geared today toward national defense.

* * * Throughout the Nation, throughout the State, as well as here in San Francisco young people are working to the end that eventually they may fit into the national-defense program, that some day soon they may be called upon to fill in potential shortages in national-defense industries. * * *

Sacramento Union, February 9, 1941: "You couldn't write anything that would overstate my approval of this N. Y. A. project in which the Army air depot and Grant Union High School are cooperating." William Rutherford, principal of the school, made that statement while discussing the out-of-school program that has put approximately 125 boys into preparatory jobs at the depot and into residence at the school.

"My chief interest is in benefiting youth—in making boys and girls fit into the life of the community as self-supporting, energetic people. While this program is designed only for boys, it is exactly the type I hope schools everywhere will be adopting some day to prepare people for jobs."

Sacramento Bee, March 3, 1941: National Youth Administration workers on the Placer Junior College campus made higher grades last semester than the average attained by the student body as a whole.

The men and women who earned a portion of their expenses on projects set up by Federal authorities had a grade point average of 1.256 against a general student body average of 1.198.

Santa Rosa Press Democrat, February 26, 1941: * * * But jobs are scarce for boys of that age. Changing conditions in industry, business, and even agriculture have made it harder for the youngster to get a foothold.

Our school system is already acting to meet this problem in part by expanding its educational work in the vocational field, and another valuable contribution is being made by the N. Y. A. in its vocational guidance and apprenticeship training.

Atascadero News, February 14, 1941, from Judge Ray Lyon, of San Luis Obispo, superior court, address to the A. A. U. W. (North Cuesta branch): Judge Lyon feels that America's real danger today lies within, in the idleness of youth; so that we need to fear a broken nation and a weakened democracy. We must have leaders in this rehabilitation of youth, and we must attack the problem on every front.

The program offered by the schools, C. C. C., and N. Y. A. should be expanded to afford good work habits.

"It is a big problem," said Judge Lyon in conclusion, "and challenges the best in all of us. The strength and future of our country depends on how we save our youth."

Riverside Press, January 2, 1941: A survey of college enrollment shows no drop in attendance following the increase in military service. The peak reached in 1930 has not been lowered much in 1940.

University presidents attribute this result to two factors. One is the provision of the 1940 Selective Training and Service Act which permits drafted students to defer the beginning of service until the close of the present academic year. The other is the continuance of N. Y. A. payments. The National Youth Administration enables needy students to stay in school by paying them for a large variety of useful work.

Susanville, Lassen Advocate, May 3, 1940: Operated in conjunction with Lassen Junior College, youths enrolled in the National Youth Administration are given practical forestry experience at the residential project in Susanville.

The college is a forestry school and those boys who otherwise could not afford to attend without some assistance are given the opportunity by working for the N. Y. A.

Virtually all of the boys stand high in scholarship and participate in school activities. Their actual forestry experience assures them of a better than average chance for jobs with the Forest Service when they are through school.

Fresno Bee and Republican, March 12, 1940: The old truism about adversity being the mother of success finds a modern application in the report of a California junior college that students employed on projects of the National Youth Administration make better grades than the average student.

The N. Y. A. is one of the New Deal plans conceived by President Roosevelt to help deserving youths without means to obtain a college education. Projects are provided permitting them to work part time and earn enough to pay board, tuition, and other expenses.

The report finds—as indeed many others have found—that students working their way through college are more conscious of the value of an education and more eager to embrace their opportunities.

Los Angeles Times, October 10, 1939—statement by Father Flanagan: The United States would be wise to increase the activity of the National Youth Administration. To do so means a saving of money in the long run since it is cheaper to make these boys reliable, productive citizens than criminals who are public charges.

San Francisco Call-Bulletin, July 18, 1940: Today, when the youth of other lands is being sacrificed in war, this Nation recognizes the full value of the sound youth program established by the administration. The National Youth Administration and Civilian Conservation Corps have enabled our youths to complete their education, have maintained their health, trained them for useful citizenship, and aided them to secure employment.

Our public works have modernized and greatly expanded the Nation's schools. We have increased Federal aid for vocational education and rehabilitation, and undertaken a comprehensive program of defense-industry training. We shall continue to bring to millions of children, youths, and adults, the educational and economic opportunities otherwise beyond their reach.

Los Angeles Neighborhood News, November 4, 1940: The New Deal has helped to conserve Afro-American youth equally along with the other youth of America as no other social agency among us. In a very short time it has reached out all over the country to bring under its protecting wings these youths who otherwise would never have gotten their opportunity.

One hundred and twenty thousand high-school students have been assisted by N. Y. A. during the past 5 years. They have received an average of $6 per month for furthering their education. In nearly every other community in the country are ambitious young Afro-Americans who never would have seen inside of a high school except for N. Y. A.

Los Angeles Examiner, August 15, 1940, by Virginia Hamilton, vice president of Thomas Jefferson Young Democratic Club: There are certain values which cannot be judged from a material standpoint. The idle youths who frequented the pool halls were fast becoming recruits for subversive organizations. The C. C. C. took these boys off the streets and made them into good citizens who frequently have found work in private industry. The N. Y. A. has served a similar purpose and has made possible through educational grants the development of much human ability and skill which is of value to the Nation.

San Francisco Chronicle, June 2, 1940: One of the most laudable projects in operation in the San Francisco community is the toy loan activity of the National Youth Administration and the coordinating council of the city and county, a project described at length on this page a few weeks back.

The work is laudable, primarily, because it has a double benefit. It provides toys for children on a lending plan; and it provides work for somewhat older children—for that part of the Nation's youth one hears so much about, the unemployed part.

Visalia Times-Delta, October 1, 1940: Young men who have been under the wing of the National Youth Administration will be better workmen after they have completed the building the city is to construct for use of the State employment bureau.

All the work on the 60-by-50-foot structure is to be done by N. Y. A. youths under the watchful eye of an experienced supervisor of the organization.

After viewing so much that is done for the benefit of those being assisted by various governmental agencies and units, it is a pleasure to see a practical demonstration of real work which should mean a saving in money to the city and an addition of practical knowledge for those doing the job.

San Francisco News, September 6, 1940: The kid has paint running down his elbow and a smudge of it in his hair. But the older man just laughs and says, "Here, watch me." He paints a wide swath of gray in a single gesture where the kid had left a hesitant streak.

Or—another lad's two hands aren't enough, with the valves to watch in the powerhouse and the temperature indicators shifting, and a pressure gage reading to be taken.

"You do it this way," directs an engineer, and shows a short cut to an easy handling of the job.

In the sheet-metal shop two boys bend over a cutting machine, while an old timer shows them how to operate it.

All over the place, where steamfitters, plumbers, painters, electricians, carpenters are at work, a little knot of boys tag along. Maybe they're a nuisance the first week, but after that they slip aptly into the role of assistant. And soon they are learning how to do a man's work. * * *

This is the National Youth Administration program, as it is working today in San Francisco.

And these hard-working lads who are learning the trades under the guidance of experts on N. Y. A. projects are forerunners of the annual 2,000,000 President Roosevelt hopes to enlist in an immense program of industrial training for the youth of this country. N. Y. A., which has trained young puppeteers and artists, scholars, and musicians, has heard the national cry for preparedness and is slanting its program in this new direction.

The Letterman General Hospital project is the newest under N. Y. A. Here, directly under Army supervision, boys are being taught the exact craftsmanship this country so directly needs.

San Fernando Sun, November 7, 1939 (reprinted in Lancaster Ledger Gazette): During a time when mental-relief and social-aid agencies are being generally and bitterly criticized—and in many cases justly so—it is a pleasant thing to find one agency which is really shooting at its mark, if not hitting it every time. In our estimation, the cleanest and most smoothly functioning of all the Federal agencies is the still new National Youth Administration, which has delivered such excellent local results.

Bob Burns, for years a ranking official in Y. M. C. A. work and at one time the publisher of a country newspaper on which we worked, has varied his strange career still further by recently taking over the State administration of the N. Y. A. * * *

Knowing the kind of work the N. Y. A. has done here so far, and knowing its State administrator for the kind of a man he is, we are able to feel happy about one branch of the governmental relief set-up anyway.

Americans of Jewish Extraction Do Not Act and Think en Bloc—To Charge Them With Doing So Is Unfair

---

REMARKS

OF

HON. M. MICHAEL EDELSTEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, there are forces abroad in the world today seeking to enslave all humanity. One of the methods consistently used by the Nazis has been to attack the Jews as the source of all evil. To defend their war to dominate the world they claim that they are fighting against warmongers, egged on by the Jews. Even today they have not abandoned this tone. I refer to the May 21 issue of Facts In Review, an official Nazi publication, which contains the authorized English translation of Hitler's speech to his puppets on the Greco-Serbian battles.

On the plains of Kansas, where John Brown led the battle to keep Kansas free, the Nazi virus has established a serious infection. It manifested itself in Gerald Winrod, who sought election to the Congress of the United States. It finds expression in those who assert that the defense program of this country has been instigated by the Jews. Yesterday on the floor of this House, according to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a Member charged that the opponents of C. A. Lindbergh, ex-mail pilot, ex-Reserve colonel, and ex-hero, but not ex-Nazi medalist, were the Jews. I quote:

Mr. Speaker, it is noteworthy that Col. Charles A. Lindbergh is getting under the hide of the war crowd. An attempt is being made to overshadow his Philadelphia speech for Thursday night with a LaGuardia meeting for tomorrow, Wednesday night.

Dr. Leon Levy, the president of WCAU, Philadelphia, denied time on the radio to Lindbergh. Samuel R. Rosenbaum, the head of WFIL, also denied him time. David Stern, of the Philadelphia Record, is one of the main sponsors of the LaGuardia meeting. Moe Annenberg, of the Philadelphia Inquirer, who is serving time in jail, is one of the promoters of the war crowd in Philadelphia.

The two men who have helped write the President's speech for tonight are Judge Rosenman and Editor Sulzburger.

It may not be amiss to point out that the chief publicity man for the America First Committee, for which Lindbergh speaks, is Sidney Hertzberg, a Jew who was born and raised in New York City. Before that he was the editor of Uncensored, a mimeographed antiwar publication. Lessing Rosenwald formerly contributed heavy sums to that committee. Rabbi Sidney E. Goldstein is scheduled to speak on Friday, May 30, in a big antiwar rally at which Senators TAFT and WHEELER will speak. The executive secretary of the War Registers League, a pacifist organization, is Abraham Kaufman. Other prominent Jews who oppose the present program are Rabbi Solomon Goldman, of Chicago; Rabbi Isidore B. Hoffman, counselor to Jewish students at Columbia University; and Rabbi De Sola Poole, of the Portuguese Spanish Congregation in New York City, all members of the War Registers League, and in addition Abraham Kaufman, executive secretary of the league. I might also add the name of Dr. Henry Newman, of the Brooklyn Ethical Culture School, who spoke at a large mass meeting in New York recently. The New York offices of the America First Committee are manned almost exclusively by Jews. I could continue the catalog but I think the point is obvious. The Jews are no more unanimous in support of this war than they were in supporting President Roosevelt in the last election. At the last session of Congress I had occasion to stress the fact that there was no Jewish vote, as some people suggested. There is likewise no unanimous opinion among Jews as to the present policy of the Government. Anyone who suggests, or seeks to suggest, that there is a unanimous Jewish opinion with respect to war is serving, however unconsciously, the interests of the Nazis.

Americans of Jewish faith have a constitutional right to think freely both pro and con on any subject. I hope their right to do so is not made the basis of intolerance.

Mother's Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK E. HOOK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

ADDRESS BY THOMAS J. CULHANE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Thomas J. Culhane at Mother's Day breakfast, Sunday, May 11, 1941, at Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

If memory serves me right I believe it was former Governor Groesbeck, of Michigan, who once said, "If mother love ruled the world today, there would be no conflicts, no destruction of human life because of greed, no sorrow because of unrighteous designs," and I am sure you mothers of Washington will agree with me that truer words never fell from the lips of mortal man.

Today we turn back in memory to the days of youth, away from the turmoil of modern life, and reverently bow our heads at the shrine of motherhood. A widespread prayer, a white carnation, a silent tribute to mothers, dead and living—these are the tokens of America's sons and daughters, irrespective of social, racial, or religious distinction, to the sublime influence of the home.

The observance of Mother's Day originated in the mind and heart of Miss Anna Jarvis, a daughter of the State of West Virginia, who thought it would be a beautiful tribute to all mothers if their children would unite on one day in the year and wear a simple white flower in evidence of filial honor and love. As Miss Jarvis expresses it she chose the white carnation "Because its color typifies purity, its form beauty, its fragrance love, its wide field of growth charity, and its lasting quality faithfulness—all virtues of true motherhood."

It was back in 1907 when Miss Jarvis said, on the first anniversary of the death of her mother, "We do so little to help and brighten the lives of mothers that it seems to me the least we can do is to make them universal queens of the May." And it was on the second Sunday in May of that year the first Mother's Day was celebrated in the pretty little town of Grafton in West Virginia.

The following year Philadelphia joined with Grafton in honoring mother on the second Sunday in May and from that day on the thought spread like wildfire throughout the Nation, as Miss Jarvis, in a systematic manner, wrote to the Governors of States, the mayors of our large cities, chambers of commerce, clergymen, Government officials, and heads of institutions and succeeded in arousing their interest to such an extent that in 1909, 45 States, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, Canada, and Mexico joined in observing the day by appropriate services and the wearing of the white carnation.

It then became Miss Jarvis' fondest hope that Mother's Day might be declared a national holiday. To this end she worked unceasingly for 4 long years, during which period she met with many disappointments. But on May 9, 1914, her efforts were gloriously rewarded. On that date President Wilson signed a joint resolution, which had been introduced and sponsored in Congress by the late Senator Sheppard, of Texas, and Representative Heflin, setting aside the second Sunday in May as a national holiday. On the same day the President issued a proclamation requesting that the flag be displayed throughout the United States in observance of the occasion "as a public expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country."

Each year since then Old Glory has been displayed on Mother's Day from our National Capitol, American consulates, homes, and churches.

With the aid of General Pershing, Secretary Daniels, Admiral Sims, General Foch, and Ambassador Sharp, Miss Jarvis successfully planned the official observance of Mother's Day for the Allied forces of the Army and the Navy during the World War. The largest mail to leave one port for another within a week's time is said to have been the Mother's Day letters in 1918.

Today the celebration is world wide. In far-off Japan, South Africa, Australia, and the British Isles honor is paid to the "patient saint of the hearthstone."

"The people in Mexico City have a wonderful time on Mother's Day," Miss Jarvis tells me. "The Pope sends an official message and much is done there through the church to keep alive the tender sentiment and enthusiasm for mother on her day."

Just this week Miss Jarvis received a letter from Ambassador Daniels from Mexico City in which he comments on the splendid effect the growth of Mother's Day has had upon the lives of our citizens.

The purpose of Mother's Day cannot be otherwise than fulfilled for it will always carry the mind back to a wholesome atmosphere. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Lakes to the Gulf Stream, millions of absent sons and daughters will take this opportunity to visit mother back home, or where such a visit is impossible, will send a tender message of love and greeting.

Those of us whose mothers have gone before will tread lightly the corridors of memory and, although the vision of a gentle presence will return, perhaps to awaken sorrow anew, it will carry with it the power to comfort and endure.

Great men of the world have traced their success to their mothers. Men whose characters have been examples, whose tongues or pens have wrought the battles of righteousness, whose learning has enlightened generations coming after, have always given credit to their mothers.

"A kiss from my mother made me a painter," said the famous artist, Benjamin West, after he had won fame and his pictures hung in royal academies. "When she gazed at my first silly sketch, she praised it and gave me encouragement with a tender kiss. She might well have said, 'Foolish child, why waste your time on such daub?' and so quenched the first spark of ambition."

The mother of Robert E. Lee was once declared dead and was buried in the family vault in Virginia. The next day the old sexton was placing fresh flowers on her casket when he heard a faint cry for help from within. Summoning aid, she was rescued from a living death. Fifteen months later she gave birth to a son who was destined to become commander in chief of the Confederate Army during the Civil War. Many years after, the beloved general said, "I had a most wonderful mother, in wisdom, in love, and in inspiration. God rescued her from the tomb that I might have such a mother."

From earliest memory I can recall the simple tributes of Washington and Lincoln to their mothers. "All that I am or ever hope to be I owe to my darling mother," said Lincoln. Washington wrote in his Memoirs, "My mother was the most beautiful woman I ever saw. I owe everything in life to her."

Thomas Edison once said, "My mother was the making of me. She was so true, so sure of me, and I felt that I had someone to live for, someone I must not disappoint."

An Army officer just yesterday told me a true story that brought to mind the fact that mother is never far away. A doughboy lay dying on a battlefield in France. As the officer gently placed a coat over him, the soldier, through feverish lips, murmured, "Thank you, mother dear, I was so cold. I'm glad you came and tucked me in better."

It was during those dark days of 1917–18 that Augustus Thomas, distinguished playwright, made the solemn statement: "Any war will always mean more to the mothers. It's easy to fight and easy enough to die. Stayin' behind with yer stummick empty and yer hands tied and yer hearts sore and a-breakin' is the perfect torment."

The immortal Beethoven, in speaking of his mother, said: "Ah, who was happier than I when I could still utter the name of mother and it was heard by her?"

These are but a few of the many thousands of tender tributes paid to mother by great men in history.

This year special Mother's Day features will be held behind gray prison walls when various societies will distribute carnations to the inmates of these institutions. Hundreds of thousands of white carnations will also be distributed to patients in hospitals and some railroad companies will present the Mother's Day flower to their dining-car passengers. A corporation in Philadelphia gives a flower to each of its 2,000 employees on the Saturday preceding Mother's Day to be worn the following day.

So you can readily see how Miss Jarvis' lovely dream came true. It has swept over the land and touched a responsive chord in humanity.

Speaking of the early days of her work, she told me how Mother's Day was misunderstood for a time and became the subject for joke makers, who suggested a day for mothers-in-law, old maids, and other pleasantries.

When she commenced her labor of love and reverence for the Nation's mothers she possessed no resources in the way of wealth or influence. She merely had an overpowering enthusiasm for her idea and her enthusiasm won the world. And with the passing years her ardor has not diminished in the least. Through the Mother's Day Association, founded by her, she is planning the erection of a monument in Washington in commemoration of the mothers and homes of America. In this connection she is leaving no stone unturned to keep her ideal from becoming a "racket." In a letter I received from her this week she said:

"Mother's Day in past decades of my work has grown with you and thousands of other sons and daughters into a cherished, personal, sacred day. Therefore I have always aimed to keep it free from money taint or charity greed, but have not been entirely successful."

Some years ago I asked her how she had accomplished such a great work and she replied: "I simply dropped a beautiful thought out into the world as one drops a pebble into the pool, and the ripples of sentiment and sacred homage have widened until they have reached the edges of the earth itself."

On this beautiful May morning, when dead things of nature have become delightfully alive and old things have grown new, this group has met here to pay tribute to Anna Jarvis, founder of Mother's Day, and to all mothers everywhere, for there is no other who can ever take their place, from everlasting to everlasting.

And now, may I thank you for the privilege of addressing you. To my dying day I shall always cherish as one of my priceless memories the fact that this honor was accorded me.

Taxation of Luxuries Versus Taxation of Necessities

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAN R. McGEHEE

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

STATEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI AUTOMOBILE CLUB

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I beg to attach herewith statement of the Mississippi Automobile Club in reference to increased taxation on gasoline, which statement meets with my unqualified approval:

It is true that considerable sums of money today are being spent upon nonessentials and luxuries. If these items are taxed, such expenditures might be curtailed with no harm, and perhaps even with some positive good, to the consumer. If taxation of such items did not result in curtailment of their consumption, the taxpayer would not be in a position to complain of such taxation since it may be avoided so readily and harmlessly.

There are two kinds of nonessential expenditures. One is expenditure for goods and services purchased only or mainly by the rich and the other is for goods and services which may be purchased in considerable quantities at present, but without which the consumer could get along somehow if necessary. Pleasure telephoning, social-club admissions, personal servants, and the like are examples of the first type. Liquor, tobacco, moving pictures, and cosmetics are examples of the second.

It is the second type of nonessential expenditure that has been taxed most generally, for such taxation has been found to produce substantial revenue without harmful effects upon the general public. One man may spend all his money on goods and services which are socially desirable, while another may spend his money for goods and services which are not so socially desirable. Under such circumstances, it is argued that there is some justification for the Government's prevention of as much waste on the part of the latter as is possible and practicable through taxation of his consumption of the less socially desirable goods and services.

Consumption of liquor, for example, is regarded by many as evidence of an ability to support the Government according to the degree to which liquor is purchased. It is accepted generally that a certain percentage of what a consumer spends for this commodity should go to the Government, even though the consumer's income is not sufficient to purchase other articles which are regarded generally as necessities. Unlike food, or some other such essential commodity, whose consumption is indispensable to life itself, the tax upon liquor can be avoided without sacrifice through the consumer's foregoing the pleasure of its enjoyment.

The tobacco tax likewise is predicated on a similar principle. No matter to what degree tobacco may enter into the standard of living, it does not possess the characteristics of a necessity and therefore is the proper object of such a tax. The revenue yield from the taxation of tobacco is sufficiently high and stable to make it one of the most important items in the governmental fiscal structure.

To be equitable and sound, however, the taxing system should draw a line definitely between the consumption of essentials and nonessentials such as those cited above. The consumption of those goods and services which are fundamental elements in the standard of living may be considered essential. Since taxation may discourage the consumption of such essentials, taxes on such goods and services may serve as obstacles to the maintenance of accepted living standards.

Some years ago, when the automobile was a toy of the rich, it was an ideal subject for taxation as a nonessential, as also was the motor fuel used in its operation. Today, however, the automobile is owned and operated by those in the lower income brackets as an essential part of their everyday living habits. In many households, transportation by automobile occupies a place among the necessities of life, ranking close behind food, clothing, and shelter.

Surveys conducted under the supervision of the Federal Public Roads Administration, reveal that approximately 55 percent of the travel in passenger cars is strictly for business purposes. Merchants, farmers, and salesmen are but a few of the classes of motor vehicle operators that depend almost entirely on their vehicles for a livelihood. Moreover, motor trucks account for approximately one-quarter of all the motor fuel consumed in this country in providing the Nation with the superior economies of this essential form of transportation.

In connection with the national-defense program the automobile has become wholly indispensable. Shortage of housing and labor in centers engaged in production of defense materials is requiring assembly of skilled workers from outside areas. Transportation of these workers to their jobs has been facilitated by the private automobile to a degree possible by no other means. Instances of workers consuming 4 hours daily in driving back and forth to work are not unknown.

Ownership and operation of automobiles long ago shed the characteristics that made it an appropriate subject for taxation as a nonessential. Automobile use now is a fundamental element in the accepted standard of living and should be distinguished clearly, therefore, from the consumption of nonessential goods and services for purposes of taxation.

TRANSPORTATION AND DEFENSE TAXES

The American today has four media from which to choose in pursuing his travels. The airplane, the train, the steamboat, and the automobile are available to convey him to any point that he may wish to reach within the Nation's confines. It is due in no small way to the wise policy of public development and encouragement that this great transportation system—the finest and most comprehensive in the world—is available for his use. For the American people long have expressed their interest in all four media and at various times have promoted the development of one or another. They appreciate the place of each in the Nation's economic order, the way that one form supplements another, and they realize, too, that absence or discouragement of any one, regardless of the possible adequacy of the other three, would result in a transportation system which would be quite incomplete.

It is for this reason that in considering an economic sanction upon one form, whether it be regulation, subsidy, or taxation, proper deliberation should be given to the dynamic equilibrium that prevails among the various components of the Nation's transport network. For to favor or penalize one media without regard for the others would not only be discriminatory but contrary to the public interest which has been manifested actively since the formation of the Union. In matters of taxation especially it is imperative that proper consideration be given to the relationship of a levy on a single form of transportation to operating economy and to the effect upon the dynamics of transport.

TAXES ON HIGHWAY TRANSPORTATION

Consider highway transportation, for illustration. It is beyond dispute that private and commercial motor-vehicle owners now are paying far more than their equitable share of the cost of highways in the form of State gasoline taxes, registration fees, and other special levies. They also pay all the general taxes paid by other citizens for the upkeep of government—local, State, and Federal—through the normal channels of taxation, i. e., assessments on property, income, business, various commodities, and the like. And in addition each highway user today is paying an average of $15 annually toward the cost of national defense through the Federal tax of 1½ cents on gasoline and the various Federal levies on automotive equipment.

These payments, which are over and above the road use levies imposed by the States and the normal taxes for all branches of government, are now providing some $450,000,000 annually toward the development of adequate armed forces. Of the four existing media, highway transportation is the only form which has been called upon thus far to bear a particular portion of this defense-tax burden.

A brief analysis of the operating costs of motor vehicles illustrates the effect of these levies upon their operations. The out-of-pocket costs involved in operating a truck, which include driver's wages, gasoline, lubricating oil, tires, and repairs average about 10 cents per mile. Approximately 15 percent of this is expended upon mileage taxes, i. e., levies on gasoline, lube oil, and tires which vary directly with the number of miles operated. This does not include registration fees, special permit levies, nor other imposts which truck operators charge to fixed costs, along with garage, insurance, etc.

The existing defense taxes alone represent about 5 percent of these operating charges. Anyone familiar with the keenness of the competition which prevails among carriers today will appreciate the material advantage which this margin affords to the competitors of highway transportation.

If all motor vehicles are considered, the effect of these levies becomes even more significant. The mileage costs of the composite motor vehicle average around $150 per year, more than $40 of which goes for operating taxes. National-defense taxes, paid to the Federal Government, alone amount to about $15, or 10 percent of the total operating expenses. In order to effect equality of taxation throughout the entire transportation system, it would be necessary either to eliminate the existing defense levies or place corresponding taxes upon the operations of other transport media.

MOTOR VEHICLE TAXES AND HIGHWAY COSTS

It is claimed sometimes that motor-vehicle taxes are offset by highway expenses incurred by various units of government, and that highway users are enjoying a public subsidy. As previously mentioned, the defense taxes under discussion herein are in addition to the special road levies which highway users contribute for the development of road facilities. Inasmuch as these taxes are for development of an adequate Army and Navy, any consideration of road costs and their relation to motor-vehicle taxes is extraneous. It is worthy of mention, however, in this connection that Chairman Joseph B. Eastman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in his comprehensive study of public aids to transportation, found that highway users pay more than their equitable share of costs, while rail, water, and air transport are enjoying sizeable public subsidies.

THE DECLARED POLICY OF THE CONGRESS

The welfare of the Nation's transportation system today depends upon equality of treatment toward all forms of transport and the maintenance of equal opportunity among them. A national policy embracing this attitude was declared by Congress only a year ago in the Transportation Act of 1940.

"It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation * * * so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, adequate, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices."

Considering this policy, does it seem proper that highway transportation should pay, as it now is paying, a defense tax amounting to 10 percent of motor vehicle running expenses, while other transport media go scot free? Highway users are not adverse to bearing a proportionate share of defense costs, but they do feel that it is discriminatory and in violation of principles of equity and justice to place them under such a handicap in the competitive market.

HIGHWAY TRANSPORTATION INDISPENSABLE TO NATIONAL DEFENSE

Approximately one-quarter of all the gasoline is consumed in motor trucking, which certainly is indispensable to the defense program. The superior economies of such transportation unquestionably are playing an ever more important role in the current defense effort, so that any increased tax upon the gasoline consumed for this purpose merely would increase the cost of transportation of materials essential to defense and hence seriously handicap such effort. Even in normal times, studies by the Federal Public Roads Administration indicate, approximately two-thirds of the operation of private automobiles owned by farmers is for business purposes. This group of the population incidentally accounts for approximately 30 percent of all the passenger cars. Obviously the farmer will play an indispensable role in the provision of adequate foodstuffs in any defense effort. But he would be penalized heavily through increased Federal taxation of the gasoline which he consumes.

Even in the case of residents of urban areas, these same studies show, in normal times slightly more than half of the operation of passenger cars represents business pursuits. There is compelling evidence, furthermore, that this percentage is increasing rapidly as a result of defense needs. One of the chief obstacles to satisfactory progress of the defense effort, it is known quite generally, has been the serious shortage of adequate housing facilities in the vicinity of industrial areas upon which there is the greatest dependence for fulfillment of the defense program. In New York, for example, widespread newspaper publicity has been accorded 200 skilled workers who drive back and forth daily to Bridgeport, Conn., the round trip consuming 4 hours. Only recently there has been considerable discussion of a projected public housing project in New Jersey which is being constructed especially for occupancy by defense workers and which, for physical and economic reasons, must be located some 17 miles from the plants in which its prospective residents are employed.

The same general trend is being shown in similar highly industrialized areas in other parts of the country. Certain specific illustrations might be cited. It appears, for example, that 82 percent of all the workers in Youngstown, Ohio, a steel center, drive to work in their own cars or ride with fellow workers. In Midland, Mich., a chemical center, the figure is 92 percent, and in Glendale, Calif., an aircraft center, it is 87 percent.

Of the 3,442 municipalities in this country with a population in excess of 2,500, it has been found that 2,130, or approximately two-thirds of the total, possess no system of mass transportation whatever. Their residents are required, therefore, to rely for transportation solely upon their own private automobiles.

This definite proof of the direct dependence of industrial workers upon their own automobiles for transportation to and from their work seems to check quite closely with known facts concerning the ownership of automobiles by income groups. In normal times approximately 52 percent of all the car owners have a weekly income of less than $30, and a cumulative total of 70 percent have a weekly income of less than $40. Only 12 percent have an income of more than $60 per week.

It seems quite clear that higher taxes upon the gasoline consumed in such traveling would cause a serious disruption in the existing transportation facilities upon which defense workers must depend in moving to and from their work. In fact, it is not too difficult to envisage how such added costs would contribute to the current agitation for higher wages to offset the effect of the increased tax. Such taxation, therefore, probably would tend to nullify directly much of the effort which is being expended currently in attempting to stimulate progress of the defense program.

ADDITIONAL DEFENSE TAXES

The additional levy on gasoline now being considered by the Congress would widen the tax differential between highway and other transport agencies. Such a levy would have a most adverse effect upon highway transport, therefore, and only could be detrimental to the welfare of the transportation system as a whole.

If equality of treatment is to be maintained, it would seem proper to place similar levies on other transport so as to produce approximately equivalent revenue from those sources before any further increase in highway levies is considered. Actually, such taxes would have far less impact upon the operating economy because of the broader traffic base over which they could be distributed.

Not only would this accomplish the desired aim of the Congress to produce a tax yield commensurate with the cost of national defense, but it would be in accordance with the declared congressional policy of fair and impartial treatment to all transport agencies. Such a step also would be in the best interests of the shipping public, for it would maintain stability in the transportation field and preserve the status of the motor-transport industry, a public convenience and a necessity.

Labor and the Defense Program

REMARKS

OF

HON. LELAND M. FORD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the President's speech last night with great interest. After thinking it over, however, I am somewhat confused as to just what he means or just what he wants Congress and the country to do. I say this absolutely without any criticism of any kind, but am simply seeking information. I believe I am in the same position as millions of our people in this country. We try to be good Americans; we are willing to forget partisanship and party lines, for the first consideration of the safety and welfare of this Nation above everything else.

I wish the speech had been more specific, and I think many of my people feel the same.

I hope, under the unlimited emergency, the President means that from now on he will not permit the unscrupulous, subversive labor leaders, who have never had the welfare of the average worker at heart, much less the welfare of the country, to destroy our defense program by continued strikes. I hope, further, that he means that the average workman, whom I believe to be as patriotic as the President or myself, will no longer be exploited by these same subversive interests. I hope also that he will send an order down the line to his executives who are handling the defense program with instructions that will stiffen their backs and will cause them to cease dilly-dallying, cease compromising those things that are wrong which have resulted in the loss of over 2,000,000 workdays in our defense program.

I hope that he will point out to these same executives that there is a tremendous difference between that which constitutes real diplomacy and moral cowardice. Too many of his executives have given in on principles that were right and have delayed our defense program, and then have sought to hide under the cloak of diplomacy, saying they were diplomatic when in reality it was simply moral cowardice. This line of action has been the greatest aid to those who would sabotage our program, and I, as one American representing many, call for a cessation of such procedure.

I hope this is accepted in the spirit in which it is meant, and that is to be helpful, but I do believe that there are some things that should be no longer tolerated in this country.

Air Power Superiority Over Sea Power

REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

Mr. RANKIN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt's speech last night did not contradict my contention that instead of convoying these vessels under our own flag we should transfer them to British or Canadian registry and let the convoying be done under the British or the Canadian flag.

I rose, however, to call your attention to the fact that another contention I have made for the last 18 years was confirmed on yesterday, when British air power proved its superiority over sea power in the sinking of the German battleship Bismarck. Ever since Billy Mitchell sank the Ostfriesland in Hampton Roads in 1922, I have contended that we needed the strongest air force on earth and that the time was approaching when domination by sea power would be a thing of the past. That time has arrived, and I hope this administration will do what the President suggested last night, and that is to put a stop to these strikes and speed up production for our defense industries and build the greatest air force on earth.

In one of its leading editorials headed The Lesson of the Bismarck, the New York Times this morning says:

> But though the destruction of the Bismarck is a great triumph for the British, it is far from a triumph for traditional sea power. For this brilliant stroke would obviously not have been possible without the air arm. It was aircraft that sought out and found the Bismarck after pursuing warships had lost her. It was aircraft that delivered the fatal torpedo blows that slowed the Bismarck down, sent her spinning helplessly in circles, and made the business of finishing her off by torpedoes from a cruiser almost a perfunctory matter.

What we have been witnessing on the island of Crete further, and tragically, emphasizes the superiority of air power over sea power.

Under permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I am inserting an article by Maj. Alexander P. de Seversky, one of the best informed men on aviation in the world, entitled "The Twilight of Sea Power."

The matter referred to follows:

[From the American Mercury of June 1941]

THE TWILIGHT OF SEA POWER

(By Maj. Alexander P. de Seversky)

Our great two-ocean multibillion-dollar Navy, now in construction, should be completed 5 or 6 years from now, just in time to have all of its battleships scrapped. The smaller and swifter units and the undersea craft may continue their auxiliary tasks under the shielding wings of air power; the rest will be consigned to the museums of outlived weapons along with the bow and arrow and the blunderbuss. As a primary, self-sufficient branch of national defense, fleets will be finished. References to naval might as our "outer defense" or "first line of defense" will seem echoes of a far-off past. The complacency with which we once relied on such slogans will seem as tragic and incredible to Americans as reliance on Maginot Lines must now seem to Frenchmen.

To those who have not caught up with the revolution in war strategy brought about by the advent of air power, this may sound like exaggeration; to naval die-hards it will sound like blasphemy. Yet, a little patient consideration of facts already in high relief on the landscape of the present war will reveal that I am merely setting down the inescapable conclusion we must draw from recent experience. As we approach the end of the second year of the second World War, it is startlingly clear that the navies of all nations have already and irretrievably lost their function of strategic offensive action. They still play a defensive role, against other navies, but only in waters as yet beyond the reach of aviation. As that reach is extended, with the rapid enlargement of air-power range, the margin of defensive usefulness shrinks, and it is quite possible to foresee the inevitable vanishing point.

The moment when air power can reach across oceans as easily as it now bridges narrower waters will mark the final elimination of sea power as a primary element in warfare. The rate at which aviation is expanding its range under the impetus of the war leaves no doubt in the minds of aeronautical experts that the Atlantic will be wide open to the full fury of aerial assaults from one shore to the other within 2 or 3 years. It is generally conceded that technically it is already possible to bomb America—or for America to bomb an enemy—across the ocean. Our own Douglas B-19, with its range of nearly 8,000 miles, and the Martin flying boat now being designed for far greater distances, hint at the potentialities of massive long-range bombing in the near future.

In my own carefully considered view, the ultimate round-the-world range of 25,000 miles, enabling a nation to strike at any point of the globe in any direction, is, at most, 5 years away. When that is achieved, there will remain no major tactical task heretofore entrusted to navies which has not been swallowed up by aviation.

The lessons of the war now in progress cannot be shouted down by rhetoric invoking the glories of naval history. It is a matter of sense, not of sentiment. The towering fact is that fleets can no longer approach hostile shores which are guarded by first-class aviation forces. For centuries the chief job of navies was to carry war to the enemy; to attack the outer ramparts of a country, its coastlines and harbors and fortresses. Now that job has been taken over almost entirely by air power. In the last 2 years enemy shores have been entirely denied to fleets, except on a hit-and-miss basis that merely emphasized the new state of affairs. We have seen dramatic naval attacks recently on Genoa, Brest, Tripoli, and other harbors. In every case, however, the attacking battleships simply took advantage of poor visibility or advance information that enemy aviation at that point was inadequate, exploiting the element of surprise. There is nothing in common between such surprise raids and the bold, continuous naval seiges of the past.

In Norway, after a costly baptism of aerial fire, the great British fleet, for all its overwhelming superiority, withdrew and stood by helpless—at a safe distance—while Nazi invaders, shielded by their air force, crossed the Skagerrak into Norway. After a costly attempt to land and maintain expeditionary troops on the North Sea coast of the Scandinavian Peninsula, the fleet retired to escape aerial destruction. Since then it has not been able, despite Germany's naval weakness, to take offensive measures against any portion of the Nazi-held Continent. Except where the R. A. F. is powerful enough to control the air overhead, the British Fleet must maintain a respectful distance from hostile shores—that distance being determined by the range of the enemy's aviation.

The fateful point of the story is that the picture would not be materially different if the British Navy were a dozen times bigger, and if Hitler did not possess a single battleship. So far as direct, offensive initiative against enemy soil is concerned, the role of navies has not merely been diminished—it has been ended. Only nations and regions without proper air defenses are still in any measure vulnerable to naval attack.

The "miracle of Dunkirk" has been credited by some superficial enthusiasts to the British Navy, because the physical transport of the evacuated troops was made on barges, ships, and other surface craft. Though himself essentially naval minded, Winston Churchill does not make this egregious mistake. Soon after the event, he acknowledged that "in the fighting over Dunkirk * * * we undoubtedly gained a local mastery of the air" and that "this embarkation would not have been possible unless the enemy had resigned all hope of air superiority at that point." It was, as Mr. Churchill specifically admitted, the reverse side of the situation in the invasion of Norway, where Nazi aviation held control. The sharp contrast between Hitler's mastery at the Skagerrak and his frustration at the English Channel indicates that air strength, rather than naval strength, has become the yardstick of a nation's might.

The most impressive fact about the long Battle of England, from a purely tactical point of view, has been the virtual elimination of the armies and navies of both adversaries. It has been an all-air battle, with the elder services immobilized and reduced to mere spectators. Single-handed, the R. A. F. has fought off the air invasion. Not all the power and courage of the fleet could have saved the British Isles from aerial annihilation had the air force been unequal to the task. The R. A. F. has fought the battle in English skies, and by carrying the war to the enemy objectives on the Continent. Even the systematic bombardment of Hitler's so-called invasion ports and air bases near the coast—targets easily within reach of naval guns—has been carried on exclusively by British air power. Thus it is neither the army nor the navy, but the R. A. F., which has dammed the flood tide of millions of mechanized German troops.

The grip of cliches on the mind of man is not easy to break. In England, as in our own country, the notion that "the country's chief defense is its navy" has acquired the force of a commandment handed down from Mount Sinai. Doubtless it is being repeated through sheer habit in the British Isles now, even while air power is so strikingly their main reliance at this juncture. But we need only imagine the R. A. F. out of commission—not a ship could then reach England, for all that the Admiralty could do. The approaches would be as Nazi-dominated from the air as the Skagerrak and Kattegat Straits. Not a battleship could survive under the roof of enemy aviation long enough to interfere with German plans for invasion or for unhampered annihilation of England without benefit of invasion.

II

In the Mediterranean the fleet has chalked up some spectacular operations. On analysis it appears, however, that naval activities in the old style were possible only because of the dismal inferiority of Italian airplanes. British units were able to take the offensive because even their airplane-carrier aviation was a match for Italian land-based planes, whereas normally land-based aviation easily vanquishes ship-based planes. But the whole picture began to change as soon as genuine air power was brought into play with the arrival of Hitler's luftwaffe in the Mediterranean. The Nazi aviation debut in that theater of war was made with the memorable assault in the Straits of Sicily, where a British cruiser was sunk, a destroyer damaged, and the aircraft carrier Illustrious put out of action. It signalized a new phase. Thereafter the British Fleet could function only in places outside the range of Nazi aviation or under the protection of adequate R. A. F. aircraft.

British sea power has been practically eliminated from the North Sea. Whether it can remain in the Mediterranean depends not at all on its own size or skill but on whether British or Axis air power will dominate the Mediterranean skies. Whatever its value in terms of national morale, tactically the destruction of the Italian Navy means little under present-day conditions. Assume that the last Italian ship has been sent to the bottom of the Mediterranean, but that Hitler's aviation has captured full domination of the air overhead. That sea would then be utterly untenable for the "victorious" British Navy which would have to retreat from the aerial menace even as it did in the North Sea.

Let us enlarge the focus of this picture to the breadth of the Atlantic. Already the western portion, within the range of German air power, has been made a no man's land by long-range airplanes, though Germany has as yet an extremely inadequate number of this type. The proportion of British tonnage sunk from the skies grows with every week, and in the area under the Nazi air threat the R. A. F., rather than surface convoys, provide the only real protection to commerce.

Now imagine the range of air power expanded three to five times—as it inevitably will be in the next few years. The Atlantic then becomes another Skagerrak, every bit as vulnerable as the North Sea. Unless they have land-based aviation better than the foe's, navies must then escape from the Atlantic—even if that foe were entirely without a navy. America will then be in precisely the same strategic position as the British Isles today, with the Atlantic Ocean equivalent to the English Channel, and its control, like control of the Channel today, depending on relative aviation strengths.

There will no longer be any warrant in common sense for carrying striking power across the ocean to an enemy slowly, by battleship, when it can be carried faster, more cheaply, and more effectively by battleplane. In any case the battleship would be unable to perform this strategic errand unless and until air power cleared the skies over the ocean of enemy planes and maintained a canopy of overhead protection for the fleet. The latest capital ships being built by our Navy cost about $100,000,000 each—a sum that could pay for the construction of 250 bombers capable of flying to a European target, dropping their explosive loads, and returning. Since each of the 250 could carry at least 20 tons of explosives—as much as 40 German Stuka dive bombers now deliver—their striking power would be equal to 10,000 Stukas. Since the raid on Coventry or the worst single raid on London involved only some 500 bombers, this in turn is roughly equivalent to nearly a month of such raids. Such, in simple arithmetic, is the economic equivalent in air power of a single capital ship.

I am not minimizing the actual part played at the present moment by the British Navy in keeping open supply lines to the British Isles from the outside world. It functions freely and fully—both in blockading the enemy and defending its own merchantmen—beyond the reach of aviation. But the Navy is able to do so only by reason of the insufficiency of that reach, and is consequently being more and more restricted in these functions. Obviously reflecting official opinion based on close-up official information, Mark Sullivan recently stated in a Washington dispatch on wartime shipping: "But submarines are not now the only enemy; they are not the major enemy. The major enemy now is bombing planes."

Moreover, it needs pointing out that the vital, if passive, defensive task of keeping shipping lanes open has been placed on the Navy by the special and peculiar situation of the battle area. A comparatively small island, lacking essential natural resources and foodstuffs, England must rely on its foreign trade. If the British Isles were self-sustaining—in the measure, let us say, that the United States is self-sustaining—the British Navy would lose also this vital present-day function.

The statement is often made that though sea power may have been canceled out in part in the British Isles, it is paramount for America on account of our geographical location. Exactly the reverse happens to be the case. Think of the British Isles expanded to the size of the United States and economically self-sustained, no longer in life-and-death dependence on overseas supplies. With the passive job of protecting ocean commerce reduced to the vanishing point, our Navy, no matter how colossal in size, would then remain unemployed while mastery of the air—the battle of the United States of America, parallel to the battle of Britain—was being decided.

One of the ablest of our military commentators, Hanson W. Baldwin, in a recent magazine article defending traditional naval ideas, points out that "today an insular power like Britain, close to a hostile or potentially hostile continent, cannot provide that secure base which is the one indispensable requirement of sea power." He credits the change to "a world made narrow by the plane." From this he argues that the United States, surrounded by oceans, "can and does provide such a base," and that therefore "our future greatness lies upon the great waters."

The flaw in this typically naval-minded reasoning is that it assumes aviation will remain frozen at roughly its present stage. It does not recognize that the world is being further "narrowed by the plane" every day, so that American insularity is as doomed as Britain's insularity. In 2 or 3 years, if not sooner, that doom will be a fact on our Atlantic shore and within 5 years on the Pacific shore as well; just about the time, that is, when the new two-ocean Navy on which men like Mr. Baldwin pin their faith will have been completed. It is the inadequate range of air power which still makes America "that secure base which is the one indispensable requirement of sea power." This minimal condition for the very existence of sea power, obviously, will fade out as soon as the range has become adequate.

Perhaps you have seen a lake being drained, crowding the fish into its contracting center where fishermen can scoop them up without effort. Even thus the progress of air power is "draining" water areas from the periphery inward, driving navies to the ever more shrunken center, seeking desperately to evade the tightening ring of doom. Soon it will be all "dry," with no margin of escape from air power. Today we are witnessing the twilight of sea power. Tomorrow the whole epoch of modern history conditioned by that weapon will be ended.

III

A number of basic claims made by aviation strategists have been so emphatically confirmed that they may now be set down as axioms of war science in the new air-power age:

1. That surface forces, including naval units, cannot operate if the sky above is in enemy control. This, as we have noted, was made startlingly evident in the Skagerrak and in the North Sea. It is a principle vividly on view in a European continent practically without naval defenses, yet inaccessible to the powerful British Navy because of a Nazi ring of air power.

2. That aviation carried along by the fleet itself is ineffectual against hostile land-based aircraft. It has been repeatedly demonstrated that land-based planes, type for type, are superior to aviation based on ships. The latter are necessarily encumbered with special gadgets for taking off and landing, paid for in quality of performance. (A portable "umbrella" of their own aerial protection, of course, does enhance the strength of naval units for action against other naval units.) The attempt of the British Fleet to meet Hitler's land-based Luftwaffe off Norway with ship-borne aviation proved so disastrous that it was not repeated, except against inferior Italian aviation. The spectacle of the crippled Illustrious limping off from Malta for sanctuary in Alexandria, soon after Nazi aerial strength entrenched itself in Sicily, is almost a symbolic representation of this principle.

3. That only air power can effectively fight air power. Antiaircraft artillery is unequal to the task; at best it provides an additional hazard by confining the attackers to a higher altitude, thus interfering with the accuracy of their aim.

Taken together, these principles spell finis for sea power. They mean that fleets can exercise their old domination only in the rapidly narrowing areas still beyond the grasp of air power. Elsewhere they are barred by hostile aviation. They cannot depend on their own ship-borne airplanes, which are foredoomed to defeat by land-based planes acting independently. The whole consoling theory of sea power supplemented by aviation thus collapses; air power reduced to an accessory position, harnessed to an older and slower and no longer self-sufficient weapon, is certain to be defeated by genuine untrammeled air power. These principles mean that the destruction of harbors and the covering of troop landings on enemy shores, until now prime functions of the Navy, have become primarily the province of aviation. They mean that even the convoying of ship-borne commerce is continually more limited to stretches of sea beyond the reach of aerial forces. The direction, as well as the extermination of submarines, is a job now increasingly taken over by aviation; undersea craft thus tend to become an auxiliary of air power rather than of navies.

An ever larger portion of sea commerce is likely in the near future to be carried by airplanes, not by vessels. In intrinsic value, if not in weight, transoceanic air commerce is destined in the nature of the case to surpass surface commerce. Even now most bombers are delivered across the ocean on their own power, and pursuits could readily have been built to do likewise. One of our foremost aviation engineers, Grover Loening, in a recent article in National Aeronautics, shares the writer's view that transoceanic commerce is destined to go increasingly through the air. "In the immediately 'predictable future,'" he wrote, "transportation of most armament materials, of all troops and personnel, and practically all light or heavy loads of destructive munitions, will have to be transported and deposited by air in order to win a war across the Atlantic."

It has been estimated that the British Isles need 25,000 tons of imported foodstuffs daily. Five hundred planes like the B-19 modified for transport, designed to carry 50 tons each, could keep the islands supplied more expeditiously than any surface ships and would, moreover, be accompanied by their own defenses against raiders. The inexcusable fact that mass aviation transports are not available can be traced primarily to the ingrained intolerance of the naval mind in Britain, as elsewhere, against encroachments on its traditional functions.

But even transport by slow surface ships can be protected against enemy attack far more efficiently from the air than by surface convoy. Once the water highways are policed by friendly air power, commerce will be able to move under those canopies of aviation. The offhand assumption that ships must be protected by ships, trains by other trains, etc., is at bottom absurd. There is no better form of defense for traffic on any surface, land or sea, than a strong roof of aerial might overhead.

The type of strategic thinking which continues, through inertia, to rest on the old assumptions of sea power—though they belong to an epoch that is coming quickly to an end—constitutes a brake on the full growth of the new first line of defense—air power. Minds that have not caught up with this reality are incapable of grappling with the problems of national defense in the real modern world. No matter how brilliant their strategy, it is earth-bound at a time when war has soared into a new dimension.

Modern military aviation, having clipped sea power of its offensive functions, leaves it strategically crippled. This represents a fateful milestone in the history of war making and therefore a turning point in the power relations of the major nations. The implications of the event add up to a fundamental change in the history of the immediate future.

Previously, sprawling world empires rested in the first place upon superior naval might. Neither the governments nor the admirals of the world have as yet conceded openly that there has been a revolution in this respect. Nevertheless, that revolution is in full tide. Already neither the home grounds nor far-off colonies can be considered impregnable, or even defensible, merely because a nation possesses magnificent sea power. If those areas are within bombing distance of the enemy, they are vulnerable, regardless of how large a fleet theoretically guards them.

Only air power capable of meeting the potential assailant's aviation can guarantee safety. That means, in effect, that every outpost of empire, if it is to survive, must be given the protection of aviation that can be reinforced instantaneously so that it will match the air power of the nearest enemy. And what is true today will be a hundredfold more important tomorrow, when the reach of the air weapon will be enlarged to cover territories now comparatively immune. By the unequivocal logic of this new situation, the empires of the near future will rest not on sea power, as heretofore, but on air power.

By the same token, existing empires, including that of the United States, will no longer be able to rest back on blind faith in adequate navies, unless they are equipped to conquer and to hold the skies under which fleets can move. These empires are like great edifices, outwardly strong and impressive. Those familiar with their interior structures, however, know that they are built with wooden beams which in time have become dry-rotted and termite-eaten. If we want to save the structures, there is no alternative but to replace the old-fashioned and outlived wooden beams with powerful steel beams. The wooden beams—which is to say naval strength—are unequal to the new tensions put upon them, and the steel beams of air power must be substituted.

The work of replacement is frantically under way in Britain under pressure of the war. In America, the urgency of the problem is not so apparent to military leaders wearing the blinders of traditional strategic ideas; in addition, we are lulled into a false sense of safety by broad oceans. But we, too, must speed up the work of replacement. We must relinquish the illusion of safety and accept the reality of the changed conditions. And the time to start is now. The major European nations have been too preoccupied with immediate short-range needs to devote themselves to the long-range air power of especial significance in relation to America. So far as that type of equipment is concerned, therefore, we will be starting from scratch with those nations if we start now in the race for air power supremacy.

Always, through history, new instruments of war making have changed the balance of power in the world. Those who possessed gunpowder while their neighbors still depended on bows and arrows had the decisive advantage. No amount of protest or weeping on the part of bow-and-arrow traditionalists could alter the situation. The advent of air power likewise must change a world where force is still the basic ingredient of international relations. The changes which it dictates, indeed, will become manifest sooner and over a wider area because the latest weapon is swifter, farther reaching, and more deadly.

The lesson of the story in relation to our own national security is too obvious to need laboring. Aviation has already wiped out the strategic offensive potentialities of sea power and is itself taking over the offensive. At the same time the remaining defensive functions of sea power are being restricted as the progress of aeronautics goes forward. For the moment, it is true, military aviation has made the United States defensively stronger, since it has made us inaccessible to the navies of other nations. We all wish it could be true forever. But we dare not shut our eyes to the fact that this is a highly temporary advantage—a transition stage.

Our temporary immunity is crumbling. The threat of enemy air power acting as a long-distance offensive weapon, holding the menace of total destruction for its targets, is emerging. Only our own air power—strong, truly independent, built in conformity with the new strategic realities—can offer us adequate protection.

I am not arguing for the immediate scrapping or limitation of naval strength. While naval utility has been seriously restricted it has not yet been entirely wiped out. In the transfer of reliance from one weapon to another there is a transition stage where overlapping is not only natural but necessary. Navies can still fight other navies, and there are other nations whose strategic thinking and planning, perhaps in fatuous imitation of American procedure, remains naval-minded.

What I am arguing for is a broader, more modern approach to the whole problem of America's national security; one that recognizes the changes in the science of war making enforced by the growth of military aviation. With recognition of the deepening twilight of sea power no longer avoidable, it seems to me suicidal to make navies and an outmoded naval strategy the foundation of American national defense. Those who insist upon leading America in that direction are heading us for military disaster. They assume a fearsome responsibility before the judgment of history.

City of Worcester Municipal Auditorium

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PEHR G. HOLMES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

ADDRESS OF HON. PEHR G. HOLMES, OF MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech to be delivered by me this evening on the occasion of the presentation to the city of Worcester, Mass., of the murals in the memorial chamber of the Worcester Municipal Auditorium:

Mr. Chairman and fellow Americans, this is a memorable occasion for the people of Worcester in that it marks the culmination of a long campaign to establish a memorial worthy of the memory of those who went forth from our beautiful city in times of great national danger to battle for the cause of human liberty and the American way of life. Sons of Worcester have fought, bled, and died on the battlefields of every war, beginning with the one to establish American independence, and in all of them displayed great bravery.

It is indeed a high honor to be invited to take part in the exercises here today. None of us realized back in January 1917—when, in my first inaugural address as mayor of Worcester, I recommended to the city council the need for a municipal auditorium—that war was so close at hand.

With the far greater problems which the outbreak of the World War imposed upon us, the matter of a municipal auditorium for Worcester was laid aside for the time being, but it was my pleasure to revive the project shortly after the armistice of November 11, 1918, when I again addressed the city council in my capacity as mayor, and recommended that we build a memorial auditorium in memory of the men and women of Worcester who had laid down their lives in defense of that sacred emblem whose stars and stripes have been baptized in the best blood of American manhood.

This noble edifice is an enduring monument to our heroic dead, to the people of Worcester, and also to the memory of those who have at various times served on the Worcester World War Memorial Commission, of which our distinguished and respected fellow citizen, Mr. George F. Booth, is now chairman.

I have seen something of the horrors of war from the time when the first two boatloads of casualties from the bloody battlefields of France landed at Ellis Island in 1918, to be nursed back to health by the loving hands of a grateful people. The late Carl Bonney, who was chairman of the Worcester war chest fund, accompanied me on that trip, and he, too, was shocked at what we saw. We came away depressed by the sad sight, and both of us then expressed the fervent hope that America never again might be called upon to take part in such a bloody and devastating war. Nothing can erase that picture of misery and suffering from my memory.

In common with every city, village, and hamlet in the land, Worcester had sons who returned badly wounded, gassed, and mentally sick.

It is sad to contemplate that some did not return but now sleep the long last sleep in the poppy-clad fields of Flanders. As Americans we take comfort in the knowledge that a grateful people have erected suitable memorials where they fell, to commemorate their heroism and self-sacrifice. They died that America might live, and we can never forget the sacrifice they made for us. Theirs was the supreme test of loyalty and love of country.

This auditorium perpetuates the memory of those who bravely went forth from Worcester and did not return. You will observe that on these marble walls are carved and lettered in gold the names of the men and women of Worcester who made the supreme sacrifice in the late war. They were placed there for coming generations to see that those who went on before were not afraid to fight and, if need be, to lay down their lives for American ideals and American traditions, thus fulfilling the legend which appears above their names, "They ventured far in the cause of liberty." Their memory is enshrined in letters of living light and will live so long as there is a spoken and a written language.

The beautiful murals which adorn the walls of this memorial chamber depict the purpose and strength of America; our willingness to suffer and sacrifice for the land we all love. There comes to us a feeling of pride and inspiration as our eyes rest upon the large mural in the center, which depicts a united people and portrays the great resources that have made us the mightiest nation on earth. I am particularly struck with the scene in the center, where stands a young American—healthy, robust, vigorous, unafraid—holding aloft the beloved flag of our land. There he stands, confidently facing the future, willing to make any sacrifice to preserve the American way of life.

That, my fellow citizens, typifies the spirit that is America—the spirit that is not afraid to venture, to suffer, and to achieve. It was such as he, and that noble young American woman standing at his side, who made possible the pacification and development of the great country we all love. They came from a great and hardy stock, who in the centuries gone by left their homes in the old lands and bravely set sail on uncharted seas, gladly braving the hidden dangers of the deep that they might go to the New World to help establish a new order of things, where there was to be equality of opportunity for all, where despotism and tyranny were to be unknown, where they were to be free to follow the dictates of their conscience.

And how gloriously they builded, upon a foundation that is as enduring as time. From the first boatload that landed on Plymouth Rock a little more than 3 centuries ago we have expanded into a Nation of 132,000,000 free Americans, whose accomplishments are the marvel of mankind. Today there are millions in the oppressed and war-torn countries of Europe who would gladly come here and cast their lot with us if they but could.

We, as custodians, hold the great land that is America in trust for future generations and it is incumbent upon us to hand that precious heritage down to those who are to follow after us, a better and a stronger nation, if that is possible. Let us today, on this great occasion, rededicate and reconsecrate ourselves to the preservation of the American way of life, to the maintenance of constitutional government, and to the perpetuity of the greatest free republic of which there is recorded history.

St. Lawrence Seaway

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALFRED F. BEITER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

RESOLUTION OF THE CENTRAL RAILWAY CLUB, OF BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolution. This group comprises some 1,300 members who oppose the St. Lawrence seaway project on the grounds that it is uneconomical; that it is not necessary for national defense; that power needs could be filled more quickly and cheaply than through this proposal; that existing transportation facilities are adequate; that savings in transportation costs are not truly represented; and that the plan should be handled as a treaty and not as an agreement.

Whereas there has been presented to the Congress of the United States a proposed agreement between the United States and the King of Great Britain on behalf of the Dominion of Canada, to provide for the construction of a channel from the head of the Great Lakes to the Gulf of St. Lawrence for the use of ocean-going vessels, also the construction of dams, power plants, and other appurtenances necessary thereto. This plan is known as the St. Lawrence seaway and power project; and

Whereas proponents of the subject estimate that the total cost will be $457,000,000, of which the taxpayers of the United States will be called upon to pay $284,000,000 and those of Canada $173,000,000. This estimate is wholly inadequate in that sufficient allowance has not been made for interest during construction on the money borrowed to build the seaway; no allowance is made for deepening and other work necessary for ocean vessels to use harbors of Great Lakes ports and that the estimate does not allow enough for contingencies. Furthermore, attention is called to estimates and actual construction costs of similar projects; viz, Chicago drainage canal, estimated, $16,000,000; actual cost, $53,000,000; Suez Canal, estimated $30,000,000; actual cost, $80,000,000; Panama Canal, estimated, $160,000,000; actual cost, $375,000,000; and

Whereas proponents of the project contend that it is necessary for national defense. The proposed agreement calls for the project to be completed not later than December 31, 1948. If this project is so necessary for national defense, certainly 7 years hence will be too late for any effective use to be made of the seaway for this purpose. Furthermore, if this project were undertaken at this time, it would divert material, money, and labor, both skilled and unskilled, from the defense program. There is also the feature of the vulnerability of the seaway to sabotage; and

Whereas it is stated that the power to be derived from the project is urgently needed for defense industries. Attention is called to the fact that steam generating plants could be constructed quicker and cheaper than the power development phase of the project; and

Whereas existing transportation agencies are adequate to handle present and additional traffic produced by the national-defense program; and

Whereas the proposed agreement is not in keeping with the spirit or intent of the Constitution in that it is without doubt a treaty and should be so introduced into Congress; and

Whereas the Central Railway Club, of Buffalo, N. Y., composed of 1,321 members, oppose this proposed seaway and power project on the grounds that it is uneconomical; it is not necessary for national defense; the power needs could be filled quicker and cheaper than proposed; existing transportation facilities are adequate and the savings in transportation costs are not truly represented, and that the plan should be handled as a treaty and not as an agreement: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Central Railway Club, of Buffalo, N. Y., assembled at executive meeting this 17th day of April in the year 1941, respectfully request that our Senators, Representatives, and members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs take cognizance of the above statements and all other evidence heretofore produced and any other evidence produced in opposition to the St. Lawrence seaway and power project and defeat the proposed agreement when it is voted upon: And be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Senator JAMES M. MEAD, Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, Representatives WALTER G. ANDREWS, ALFRED F. BEITER, members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

We, the undersigned, hereby certify that the above resolution was duly adopted at a regular executive meeting of the Central Railway Club, of Buffalo, N. Y., on the 8th day of May 1941.

J. G. ROHLMAN,
President.
M. D. REED,
Secretary.

Renominating an Able Judge

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Members of the House an editorial which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune on May 15, 1941, as a personal tribute to Mr. Justice Alfred H. Townley, of the New York State Supreme Court, who is now completing his fifteenth year as a member of that tribunal.

Justice Townley, whose friendship I have enjoyed for many years, is one of the most distinguished jurists of the State of New York, and I take great pleasure in bringing this editorial to the attention of my colleagues. As a member of the appellate division of the supreme court of my State, he presides with rare grace and brilliance. He has earned the greatest tribute that can be bestowed upon a public servant by two major political parties—their mutual nomination—and I sincerely hope that the recommendation of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York in this respect will be carried out.

On the facade of the New York State Supreme Court Building there appears the following quotation:

The true administration of justice is the firm pillar of our Government.

Mr. Justice Townley truly eptomizes the spirit of this quotation and the administration of justice in our State may well be entrusted to the hands of such an honorable and distinguished citizen for many years to come.

The editorial follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of May 15, 1941]

RENOMINATING AN ABLE JUDGE

The lawyers' associations that have urged the renomination on both tickets of Mr. Justice Alfred H. Townley, of the New York State Supreme Court, are at the same time paying tribute to an individual and furthering a principle. Judge Townley is finishing his fifteenth year on the Supreme Court. He has shown himself to be reliable, intelligent, and straightforward. A Democrat originally appointed by Governor Smith to fill the place of Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER when the latter resigned from the bench to go into the United States Senate, he was subsequently nominated by the Republicans as well as by the Democrats in the election that took place in 1927. His independence and high character have won him the approval of both parties.

The principle that the bar associations are furthering is that a judge of the supreme court who has served a term with distinction shall be nominated by both parties to succeed himself. In this manner he is freed from party obligations and his independence is still further assured. The term on the State supreme court is 14 years, with the proviso that the retirement age is 70. In Mr. Justice Townley's case he would, if endorsed by both parties, continue in office until his retirement. The advantages of this when the man's record has been excellent are so obvious as to need little elaboration. It is to be hoped that he will receive the renominations he has so well learned, and that in this manner the precedent will be still further strengthened of continuing the services of such men without regard to party politics.

The Conflagration Nears

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EVAN HOWELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

ARTICLE BY RAYMOND CLAPPER

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Raymond Clapper from the Washington Daily News of May 27, 1941:

[From the Washington Daily News of May 27, 1941]

THE CONFLAGRATION NEARS

(By Raymond Clapper)

We say good-bye now to the land we have known. Like lovers about to be separated by a long journey, we sit in this hour of mellow twilight, thinking fondly of the past, wondering. Words seem almost an intrusion.

What tomorrow will bring we do not know. We only know that this golden day is slipping inevitably from us, clutch at it as we will. We have had our troubles. Sometimes we were poorly clothed and poorly fed. But always tomorrow was full of promise. Hardship would diminish. Happiness would grow. Progress was the fixed law of life. We never doubted it, even when the going was rough.

As I write this, President Roosevelt is preparing his fireside talk. From England comes the call for help, a desperate call for more and more and more. Most of the men now looking over Mr Roosevelt's shoulder as he writes want him to answer that call. Germany's naval chief warns us that already we are engaged in warlike actions with our naval patrol. He warns us to go no further. Laval, that dark stooge of Berlin, warns us to stay out. Japan, sensing that we may go in, begins to wriggle to find some way of escaping the Axis bargain to go in if we do. I don't know what Mr Roosevelt has decided to say. But we are moving toward war, not away from from it. The only uncertainty is how much faster we shall move from now on.

Whether we go to war or not, we shall act more and more as if we were going to war. Our lives will all be affected by this. Our ways will change drastically, whether or not a drop of blood is lost.

Habits must be changed. Peacetime ways have to be sacrificed. For years dozens of materials will be almost completely monopolized by war needs and there will be little left for civilian purposes. Even Senators and Congressmen in some instances may have to give up their automobiles and move to small living quarters, for taxes are going to rip sharply into the lives of every family above the very lowest level of living. For this year and next we have set aside $40,000,000,000 for war production. More may be added to that. Already we are planning to spend far more than we spent in the last war. Labor, still living in a dream world of constantly rising wages and constantly shorter hours, is going to wake up very soon with a terrific shock.

I mention only the more pleasant aspects of the future and pass over the heavy hearts, the separated families, the young careers that will have to wait, those inward wounds which are more numerous than the wounds of the battlefield.

Regimented people. Regimented trade. The waste of war. The millions of days of human labor to make the guns, the shells, the planes, the tanks, and the ships. The huge plants useful only to manufacture weapons of slaughter. That's our future. It will be the same whether we go into the war or not.

It's been a grand life in America. We have had to work hard. But usually there was good reward. We have had poverty, but also the hope that if the individual man threw in enough struggle and labor he could find his place. Man has gained steadily in security and dignity, in hours of leisure, in those things that made his family comfortable and gave lift to his spirit. Under his feet, however rough the road, he felt the firm security of a nation fundamentally strong, safe from any enemy, able to live at peace by wishing to. In every one of us lived the promise of America.

Now we see the distant fire rolling toward us. It is not being put out. It still is some distance away, but the evil wind blows it toward us.

So ends our reverie in the twilight over the dear, dead days.

Defense to the Utmost

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OVERTON BROOKS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 20, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS OF HON. OVERTON BROOKS, OF LOUISIANA

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address made by me in the city of Shreveport, La., over radio station KRMD:

I have just returned to Louisiana and I have sought this opportunity to speak to you again on the question of national defense. It was about a year ago that Congress embarked upon the present great national-defense expansion program. During this time we have appropriated some $24,000,000,000 for this purpose and we have summoned the utmost energies of the Nation to the completion of this one accomplishment—that of giving to America its fullest protection in this dark hour of peril. At this point it is appropriate for you to ask what progress has been made and are we satisfied with what has been accomplished in this time?

The Nation now has 1,200,000 men under arms in camps scattered throughout the length and breadth of the country. We are now approaching the time when all camps presently authorized will soon be completed and men will be properly housed in them. Your Congress has provided proper clothing and equipment for these 1,200,000 men in the Army and at least has provided guns and munitions sufficient to carry on the basic training of modern defense. As far then as the actual building of camps and the induction of men into service with clothing and equipment, the national-defense program is nearing the completion of its first phase.

Industrially, the program has not made such good progress. It is true that industrial plants have been established and have been built in this defense program during the past year, but much yet remains to be done in the way of providing the necessary munition plants, powder plants, and airplane factories. It was my pleasure, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, to attend recently the dedication of the great smokeless powder plant just completed by the War Department at Radford, Va. In this great arsenal of democracy 300,000 pounds of smokeless powder will be manufactured each day, and in the making of this powder it is interesting to know that 150,000 pounds of cotton linters obtained from the cotton fields of the South will be used. In the great plant approaching completion at Charleston, Ind., it is planned to make 600,000 pounds of gunpowder each day and to use 300,000 pounds each day of cotton linters taken from the fields of the South.

You may ask, "Are you satisfied with this progress?" No I am not satisfied; the War Department is not satisfied, and the Navy Department is not satisfied. None of the national-defense officials are satisfied with the progress, for we are attempting to do in 1 year what it has required Hitler 8 years to accomplish. And during the time we have used in getting ready, the international situation has turned incredibly worse. It is dark and the question arises in the minds of all of us as to whether or not in spite of all of the aid which this country is giving (and this aid should be increased in every way possible) can England survive the present year of German blitzkrieg warfare.

Before I left Washington the other day the talk was current that there should be a further expansion of our defense program, even to the point of providing an army of 4,000,000 men. They say that more cantonments, more munition plants, and more implements of defense are needed because of the growing crisis which has placed the greatest dictator of all times in control of the whole of the continent of Europe, with England groggy and taking the worst punishment that ever a great nation has been forced to receive; and Congress may be called upon before adjournment to vote upon such a program.

About 10 days ago the House of Representatives passed a resolution—Resolution No. 162—authorizing the Military Affairs Committee to thoroughly investigate every part of our Army preparedness program. During the 10-day recess which we Congressmen were supposed to use to rest up this Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, held daily hearings examining into the progress being made. For this purpose the committee has been divided into three subcommittees, namely: (1) On aviation, upon which it is my privilege to serve; (2) on real estate and construction; and (3) on ordnance equipment, guns, and ammunition. The committee itself as a whole has been taking evidence on the question of seeing how far the defense program has been injured by industrial unrest. We should complete these hearings soon, but I promise you that before they are completed no phase of the national-defense program shall fail to receive the most searching and yet patriotic investigation of our committee.

During the course of these hearings which I have just mentioned one of the witnesses testified regarding the Allis-Chalmers strike. He referred to the fact that after many days of strike, during which the factory was closed down and all of the efforts of the Labor Department had failed and the Mediation Board seemed not to be making much progress, the War Department and the Navy Department sent a telegram to both the management and the workingmen of this plant urging them to reopen the factory immediately and warning them in event it failed to reopen that the War Department would take over and operate this plant. In closing this telegram a quotation from the Bible was used. It was, "Agree quickly with thine adversary." I do not know what effect this quotation taken from the Bible may have had upon the sober-thinking judgment of management and labor, but I do know that the strike was settled and the plant reopened within 4 days. Old laws and old rules are often the best, and this verse, although first spoken 2,000 years ago, has all the vitality and power that it possessed then.

My campaign slogan for reelection was, as you know, "Defense to the utmost." I believe it is just as full of meaning today as it was when I used it in that campaign. These are dark days—perhaps the most critical which you and I, my friends, will ever live to see—and if we are to survive as a democracy with our cherished institutions which millions of us have already fought to preserve, the defense program must continue without interruption. Before the turn of the century a great President—President Cleveland—used the words in reference to the Postal Service that, in spite of all troubles rain, sunshine, business or economic, "the mails must go through." This statement applies with even more force to the national-defense program, and everything which serves to hinder, retard, or stop this program must be eliminated in our God-given desire to put our Nation in position to weather this terrible storm.

I am reminded of the old adage of the father who handed his son a bundle of twigs and asked him to break them. The son struggled and struggled but could not break this bundle. The father then handed the son each twig, one by one, and the son easily broke them in many parts. In unity there is strength. One by one the great dictator, Adolf Hitler, has taken the nations and broken them as that son did those little twigs. Had these nations stood together, they may have resisted the armed might of that pagan emperor. Now he is in control of all Europe, and Greece will most probably surrender in a few days. It would not be surprising to see the British withdraw from the Mediterranean as they fight to preserve their supplies of ammunition and food in the British Isles.

I sometimes think that some of our people do not fully realize how desperate is the plight of the world today. The period of time when we can continue "business as usual" is about at an end and we must all be prepared now to make vital sacrifices which really hurt if we are going to preserve our Nation free from attack and our homes and our families safe and inviolate. At this critical hour in the affairs of this Nation there is no place for dissension and discord within the Nation. There is no place for communism, fascism, or the bund. These things must be stamped out as we would stamp down a rattlesnake. We must be united and present a united front in solving easily the most important problem that confronts us—national defense. As one therefore who is familiar with our national affairs I call upon you, my friends, you the people of Louisiana and of the United States to join together with one thought and one voice of patriotically preserving the United States of America by giving us the national defense which will guarantee that Hitler, although successful in Europe, must fail when he enters the Western Hemisphere.

Subversive Activities in the Government

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH J. O'BRIEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS OF HON. ROBERT F. JONES, OF OHIO

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of the Member of Congress from the Fourth Ohio District, Hon. ROBERT F. JONES, over station WRC Monday, May 26, 1941:

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. We know there are people in the United States who seek to undermine the allegiance of the American people to their country and their faith in its institutions.

We are determined that they shall not overthrow our form of government. Wherever we find them we must resolve with all of the will and action at our command that we shall expose and suppress their insidious campaign among a free people.

Our common enemy believes in the exaltation of the state over the people. Their leaders are trained in Moscow, Berlin, and Rome, at the feet of the masters who have blacked out the four freedoms in Europe. Their political beliefs are a religion; their activity a fanaticism; their tools are hatred; and their weapons revolution. Their skill is street warfare and their accomplishment confusion and frustration.

Before coming to Washington I had never expected that these wild-eyed zealots of a new order in America would be found in the shadow of the Washington Monument or the Lincoln Memorial. Yet, in January 1939, the Dies committee found them in Washington, D. C. Yes; found them on the pay rolls of your Government and mine.

The Dies committee published their names, their salaries, and the departments in which they worked. Their salaries from $10,000 a year down can leave no doubt that they occupy positions of power in the Federal Government.

The telltale of their philosophy was the membership list of the American League for Peace and Democracy—a Communist-controlled organization. Do you remember the publication of the list was labeled a "sordid procedure"? The officers of the league quickly denied that it was controlled by Communists. Many Federal employees claimed they were innocents taken for a ride in this communistic vehicle.

I am sorry for those innocently duped by their superiors on the pay roll. We owe a solemn duty to the innocent to separate the sheep from the goats. Remember the Dies exposé of the American League for Peace and Democracy was in January of 1939, and soon this Communist-front organization folded up.

Since that time Federal employees have been approached by Communists or their fellow travelers to join new organizations. They are solicited during working hours. Small-salaried clerks and stenographers are urged by those in the higher brackets to join new communistic organizations. The membership campaign is so open that it may be assumed there is approval higher up.

Some members of the press have attended meetings of these organizations. In many instances the speakers have sought public office on the Communist ticket. In one meeting the speaker exhorted the growth of communism in China amid frequent applause. In one of these organizations to which many of the Federal employees belong, 10 members of the executive committee signed a letter published in the Daily Worker asking for closer cooperation with the Soviet Government. They approve the "purge trials" of Russia and they seek permission to place the Communist Party column on the American ballot.

After the Dies committee exposed the Federal employee members of the American League for Peace and Democracy, Congress passed a law to separate from the pay roll those who advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence. The law provides if a person denies by affidavit that he is such an enemy, he is absolved from guilt unless other evidence is adduced against him.

Convinced that Communists and members of subversive Communist-controlled organizations are still on the pay roll, I drafted an amendment to the Department of Justice appropriation bill earmarking $100,000 of F. B. I. funds to be used by them to ferret out the Federal employees who advocate or belong to groups who advocate the overthrow of the Federal Government by force. The amendment passed the House with only one vote against it, on April 3, 1941.

On April 5 I wrote to J. Edgar Hoover, asking for his support of the Jones amendment.

On April 11 J. Edgar Hoover wrote the following letter to me, which I quote:

"MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I received your letter of April 5, 1941, with which you enclosed a copy of the speech which you made in the House of Representatives on April 3, 1941, in offering an amendment to the Department of Justice appropriation bill, making available from the Bureau's appropriation for 1942 the sum of $100,000 for investigation of Federal employees in all departments.

"In view of the fact that the handling of all matters pertaining to the Department of Justice appropriations before the Senate Committee on Appropriations will be in charge of Mr. Matthew F. McGuire, the assistant to the Attorney General, I am taking the liberty of transmitting to him a copy of your letter to me.

"With expressions of my best regards, I am

"Cordially yours,

"J. EDGAR HOOVER."

I have received no communication from Mr. McGuire, Assistant to the Attorney General, to date. On last Friday I tried to reach him on the phone and left my telephone number for him to call me. On Saturday I again tried to reach him by phone, and I have received no word from him at this time.

However, on May 5, Mr. McGuire appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee. He was asked, after the substance of the Jones amendment was recited to him:

"Now, I just want to ask someone here whether or not that item is necessary for the work which it specifies shall be done?"

Mr. McGuire answered, "No, sir; it seems to me that that suggested amendment is really covered by section 504 of the Appropriation Act which reads as follows. Then he read the congressional act I have already discussed.

Has this congressional act eliminated the enemies of the American way of life from the Federal pay roll? Let us see how effective it is in the Department of the Interior.

Secretary Ickes and E. K. Burlew appeared before the Appropriations Committee of the House on April 16, 1941. I read from the hearings:

"Mr. JONES. Are there any employees reported by the Dies committee to belong to un-American organizations or subversive groups who are still employed in your several departments and agencies of the Interior Department?

"Mr. BURLEW. Yes.

"Mr. JONES. Please explain what disposition you have made of the accusations against those reported by the Dies committee?

"Mr. BURLEW. In one instance, where there were sufficient charges of the Dies committee on which to make an investigation, the former First Assistant Solicitor of the Department of the Interior personally reviewed all the allegations and concluded that they were not supported by facts.

"Every employee in the Department has been required to state whether or not he or she belongs to a subversive group.

"All the emergency employees under the Relief Act have answered 'No' to the following questions: 1. Are you a Communist? 2. Are you a member of any Nazi bund organization?

"All the employees on the regular rolls have answered 'No' to the following question: Do you have membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States?"

What efforts has Mr. Ickes' department spent to search out our enemies? They were not elected, they are on the pay roll as long as he wishes them. He absolves himself by asking them questions. He discharges his obligation to his country after his solicitor investigated one. Thirty-three others apparently were never investigated by his department.

Communists are encouraged by Stalin to deny they are Communists. They are urged to lie when asked. They are told to perjure themselves in court. When Mr. Ickes or any other Cabinet Member is dealing with Communists, he must know that their word is as useless as a broomstick to a soldier.

After hearing Mr. Ickes' assistant's answer to my questions, you will not be surprised to know that last Saturday morning, the clerk of the Dies committee told me 80 percent of the original 1939 list are on the revised Dies list.

One Federal employee drawing a $4,000 annual salary on the original Dies list, owns several thousand dollars worth of Soviet bonds, and draws dividends from them. To their knowledge, he owns no United States Government bonds.

I am informed further the general counsel of the Bookshop, another Communist-dominated organization, owns Soviet bonds. He is assistant general counsel of one of the independent establishments of the Government.

No; the congressional act is not effective when Cabinet members are satisfied with a Communist's "No." When there is a lapse of patriotism to discover and relentlessly pursue the Trojan horses on the Federal pay roll, this work of the Dies committee is nullified.

The Jones amendment provides that the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall investigate these enemies and report to Congress. The untiring public service, the outstanding accomplishments and the unquestioned patriotism of J. Edgar Hoover commands the respect of every American.

I am compelled to believe J. Edgar Hoover does not now have the funds to make such an investigation. Again I refer you to the Interior Department hearings.

I asked:

"Has the F. B. I. made a report to you of the truth of charges against them, or any of them?" referring to the Dies list.

"Mr. BURLEW. No."

Two years ago the list was published and on April 16, 1941, no report from the F. B. I. to the Interior Department. J. Edgar Hoover just does not have the funds, or he is stopped by his superiors.

If communism is so far entrenched in the Federal Government that the Department of Justice must oppose the Jones amendment and stop Edgar Hoover from searching out the common enemy on the public pay roll, may God spare us.

I oppose nazi-ism, fascism, and communism. Their philosophies are equally dangerous to America. Paying them public funds is a contemptible thwarting of the Dies committee, in whose work an overwhelming majority of 130,000,000 Americans have faith and confidence.

We dare not let the administration appeasers of the Communists appoint and keep communistic organization members on the public pay roll.

Tomorrow the President may take another step toward war. If he sends our boys to Europe and we win, as win we must, once we are in the war, what an injustice to the boys whose blood we spill in the European meat grinder, should an American, Otto Kuusinen, organize these communistic cells and attempt to overthrow our Government by force, while the second A. E. F. is away.

The Jones amendment will again be voted on in the House.

If you are convinced that J. Edgar Hoover and his men can help to cut away this cancerous growth in our Government, will you please write your Representatives now to vote for the Jones amendment to the Justice Department appropriation bill?

Coast Guard Academy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that at the recent annual meeting of the Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy, May 3, 1941, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], appointed by me from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, was elected chairman.

The Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy came into being as a result of the act of April 16, 1937, and to date four successive Boards have functioned. In the first effective year, 1939, Senator Royal S. Copeland was chairman. The year following, I served in such capacity, and last year Senator JOSIAH W. BAILEY was chairman. The membership of the Board of Visitors is composed entirely of Members of Congress. The Vice President of the Senate appoints one Senator, three Senators are derived from the Senate Committee on Commerce, the Speaker of the House appoints two members, while the remaining four members are designated from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives. The chairmen of the respective House and Senate committees are ex officio members, but if unable to serve may appoint others in their stead.

From its inception every recommendation made by the Board of Visitors, which in its annual meeting has obtained first-hand information regarding the academy, have been approved. In a number of instances these recommendations have caused appropriations for necessary expenditures sometimes of considerable extent to better existing facilities.

The Board has always found itself enthusiastically supporting the Coast Guard Academy because of the excellence of its curriculum which has been sponsored by an advisory committee consisting of leaders in the field of education, of the administration of the academy, its instruction staff, of the splendid and well-kept physical plant and on account of the democratic and efficient system of obtaining cadets after a competitive examination open to all qualified young men between the ages of 17 and 22 throughout the United States.

A cadetship in the academy leads to a bachelor of science degree and a commission as ensign in the United States Coast Guard.

Due to the present emergency, entering classes have been increased to include 150 cadets. This enlargement of the cadet enrollment has of necessity caused a certain amount of new construction, for the original building plans did not contemplate a cadet corps in excess of 200.

The corps of cadets is composed of youths of high scholastic and physical standing from which will be selected the future officers of the Service. As a school for a military service, the system of administration and discipline at the academy is accordingly military in character. Its purpose is to develop the qualities of leadership upon which the success of the Service largely depends. For this, two instruments are available—the cadet battalion ashore, and the cadet practice cruise at sea. The 4 years' course of instruction is basically scientific and engineering in character, and in addition to classroom and shop, and instruction at the academy in the various military drills, cadets are sent to sea on practice cruises on cutters before graduation. Upon graduation, the cadets are commissioned as ensigns and assigned to active duty at sea and thus begin their career in the Coast Guard.

The officers of the first revenue cutters, as the Service was then known as the Revenue Marine, were commissioned from the merchant service and many of these had served in the Continental Navy during the Revolution. For a period of 85 years officers were obtained from the Navy and the merchant marine, but finally the Secretary of the Treasury, John Sherman, in 1876 secured passage of the law establishing the cadet system, and the first examinations for cadetship were held in Washington that year. For a number of years training of cadets was conducted upon training ships. Later a school of instruction was located at Arundel Cove, near Baltimore, and in 1910 the school was transferred to Fort Trumbull, New London, Conn. In 1932 the present academy was completed at a cost of some $2,750,000 and is on a scenic location on the Thames River at New London, Conn., opposite the submarine base of the United States Navy.

Upon graduation the cadet is commissioned as an ensign and is launched on a career in a Service dating from 1790 when Alexander Hamilton, recognizing the need for protection of the revenue, secured the passage of a bill to authorize the building of 10 cutters at a cost of about $10,000. It was easy for Hamilton to recognize the need for protection of the revenue, because from the earliest colonial days shipbuilding, shipping, and fisheries were important factors in the development of the Colonies. The colonists were seafaring people by nature, and the forests had provided unlimited shipbuilding material, and the shipping trade offered large profits. It is realized that the War for Independence almost destroyed the American merchant marine; however, the new United States Government faced with the practical nonexistence of treasury and a large debt, needed the restoration of a merchant marine and the establishment of a tariff which could be enforced.

Since the collection of the revenue was a function of the Treasury Department, it was logical for the cutters built by Alexander Hamilton, and the service founded by him to be an arm of that Department. Its close ties with the Customs Service has bound it with the Treasury ever since.

As time went on the saving of life and property became a collateral duty with the Coast Guard, for this is a natural function of any police agency, especially at sea, where the obligation to rescue those in peril has become traditional. The Coast Guard has grown and its duties have expanded, however, its function has become that of the Federal maritime police force which is to enforce all Federal laws on navigable and territorial waters of the United States and to promote safety and security to vessels which use our waters for legitimate commerce and pleasure; to have all Coast Guard stations and vessels prepared for active war duty with the Navy and to organize yachts and small craft, and to train their crews for duty in case of national emergency.

The Service, which at its inception had 10 small cutters, has grown to its present size where it is composed of a fleet of some 260 cutters, consisting of vessels over 65 feet in length to the largest cutters of 327 feet in length, carrying 5-inch broadside batteries, a large number of picket boats, lightships, and other auxiliary craft, with an aviation wing comprising 10 air stations encircling our coasts, 197 active Coast Guard life-saving stations, and requisite training stations, repair and supply depots, and with facilities for the maintenance of approximately 31,000 lighthouses, buoys, and other aids to navigation.

To operate this fleet and shore establishments, the Coast Guard consists of a personnel at the present date of some 22,000, divided between commissioned officers, chief warrant and warrant officers, enlisted men, and civilian personnel.

Progress Made by Farm Security Administration Borrowers of the Twenty-Second District of Pennsylvania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY L. HAINES

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

LETTER FROM THE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I insert a letter received by me from the Administrator of the Farm Security Administration, Mr. C. B. Baldwin, reporting the very fine record of the farmers I have the honor to represent in meeting their obligations and because of the aid given to them, enabling them to make gains in their net worth, all of which indicated the value of this service to our people.

The letter follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, May 21, 1941.

Hon. HARRY L. HAINES,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HAINES: Since the beginning of the present emergency, it has been generally recognized that the health, welfare, and morale of our people are vitally important to national defense. Providing for these needs among low-income farm families has been one of the essential contributions of the Farm Security Administration to the Nation's defense efforts during the past year.

We have just completed a special survey undertaken last winter to measure the progress being made by borrowers from the Farm Security Administration. It indicates the gains in terms of money, living standards, and capacity for self-support which have been made during 1940 by handicapped and low-income farm people all over the country. It occurred to me that you might be interested in seeing the figures for your district.

In the twenty-second district of Pennsylvania there were 173 active standard rehabilitation borrowers at the end of 1940. The survey showed that the average borrower earned a net income of $959 during the year, as compared with $736 in the year before he borrowed from Farm Security. In other words, the typical family increased its annual net income by 30 percent.

Also significant are the gains which these people made in net worth, since that is one of the best measures of permanent improvement in living standards. Borrowers in your district increased their average net worth—over and above all debts, including their obligations to the Government—by $554, or 41 percent, since coming on the program.

These figures mean that Farm Security borrowers in the twenty-second district have added a total of $95,830 to the wealth of their communities, and have increased their total annual incomes by $38,685. Naturally, this growth in prosperity and purchasing power has been reflected on the books of merchants and other businessmen of the district.

We were pleased to find that borrowers in your district are rapidly repaying their rehabilitation loans. Already $69,173 has been repaid on loans totaling $173,781, although much of the money does not fall due for 4 or 5 years. Throughout the entire country, rehabilitation loans totaling $420,865,050 had been made as of December 31, 1940, and $149,626,442 of this sum had been repaid. As you know, loan funds currently are advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, instead of coming from direct appropriations.

In view of the fact that none of the borrowers from Farm Security was able to get adequate credit anywhere else, and that many of them formerly were on relief, we feel that this repayment record is a tribute to the honesty and industry of these needy farm people. There is ample evidence that the great majority of them are getting back on their feet and becoming permanently self-supporting. In large measure, this progress is due to the advice and technical guidance in sound farm and home management which accompanies each Farm Security loan.

For example, we encourage our borrowers to get away from one-crop farming—particularly of surplus crops, such as cotton, tobacco, and wheat—and to raise as much as possible of their own food and feed for their livestock. During 1940, the average Farm Security family in your district produced $351 worth of goods for home consumption, as compared with $248 before they came into the F. S. A. program. This produce for home use included 411 gallons of milk per family; 539 pounds of meat; and 393 quarts of vegetables and fruit canned for the winter. This increased production of food did not, of course, add to the supply in the commercial markets, since virtually none of it was offered for sale. It simply meant a better diet, better health, and a rising standard of living for these families.

Often it has been necessary to work out an adjustment of the family's old debts, before rehabilitation could be successful. Local farm-debt adjustment committees have been set up for this purpose. They have no legal authority to compel adjustments, but by bringing the farmer and his creditors together for a friendly discussion, they usually are able to arrange a scale-down of the obligations, reduced interest rates, or extension of the payment period. Such adjustments frequently save the farmer from foreclosure, and at the same time enable the creditors to get substantial payments on what might otherwise have been bad debts.

This service is available to all farmers, whether or not they are rehabilitation borrowers. Altogether, debt reductions totaling $154,956 have been negotiated for the farmers in your district. This represents a scale-down of 20.3 percent. As a direct result of these adjustments, $7,820 in back taxes has been paid to local governmental agencies.

In making this special survey, our field employees reported that there are 1,187 families in your district who are eligible and in need of rehabilitation loans, but have been unable to get them because of the limited funds available.

In addition to the rehabilitation program, Farm Security is carrying out the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, which provides a limited number of loans to competent tenants to enable them to buy family-type farms.

During the first 3 years of this program, we made nine such loans in your district, totaling $65,274. This year we expect to make about four Bankhead-Jones loans in the Twenty-second District, amounting to approximately $25,307. Throughout the country, delinquencies of these loans have amounted so far to only 2.6 percent, or $23,658; and this has been more than offset by the fact that other borrowers have been able to make advance payments totaling $196,765, as the result of good crops and management.

I am hopeful that this rather detailed report may be useful to you; and if you would like to have any further facts about our program, I shall, of course, be glad to supply them. Sometime during the year, I hope that you may find an opportunity to visit some of the borrowers from F. S. A. in your district and see for yourself the efforts they are making to get a new start as independent, tax-paying citizens.

Sincerely,

C. B. BALDWIN,
Administrator.

President Roosevelt's Radio Speech

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LUTHER A. JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted, I submit herewith an editorial appearing in the New York Times today. The editorial is entitled "A Call to Action," and is in commendation of the radio address delivered by President Roosevelt last night on the world crisis.

This address was perhaps heard by more people in the United States and throughout the world than any other address delivered in history, and the able editorial of the New York Times, I think, reflects the sentiment of the majority of the American people with reference thereto.

The editorial follows:

[From the New York Times of Wednesday, May 28, 1941]

A CALL TO ACTION

President Roosevelt struck a mighty blow last night for freedom. In an address that will take its place among the great state papers of this country he summoned the American people to resolve their doubts and dedicate themselves to action. The words he spoke will ring around the world. They will echo in the Axis Nations. They will serve notice on these enemies of our democratic institutions that no threats of a German admiral, no risks of involvement in this war, no possible combination of power that the Axis can bring against us, will swerve us from the course on which we have embarked. We are determined to put in the hands of our loyal friends the weapons of self-defense. To those loyal friends, wherever they are fighting—and above all, to the men and women of Great Britain, now engaged in a heroic defense of their own island, and, no less, of our own way of life—the President's words will bring fresh strength and added courage. For the message they carry is that the great democracy of the United States does not stand aloof from this fight for freedom—remote, disinterested, and indecisive. Instead we say, in the words of Mr. Roosevelt, that the time has come to declare at home "that an unlimited national emergency exists" and, on the broad Atlantic, that we intend to "reassert the ancient American doctrine of freedom of the seas."

By whatever standard it is judged, this is sound and necessary policy for the United States. The declaration of a state of unlimited national emergency will cut a short way through problems which have seemed insoluble; it will facilitate the mobilization of the full creative force of the Nation—its immense productive genius, its inexhaustible resources, its reserves of capital and labor—for the supreme effort that lies before us. The determination of the President to reassert the traditional American doctrine of freedom of the seas pledges us to see that the supplies which we produce actually reach the battle lines for which they are intended. These policies put us squarely on the side of those who are fighting our own battles. They discard, as utterly unrealistic, all faith in Hitler's broken word, all hope of a "negotiated" peace which would in fact make Hitler master of the world. They reaffirm our steadfast policy of all-out aid to the democracies—a policy based not only on the saving faith of American idealism but "on hard-headed concern for our own security and for the kind of safe and civilized world in which we wish to live."

We believe that the course to which Mr. Roosevelt pledged this country last night, and the action he has taken, will have the endorsement of the vast majority of our people. There has been no division of opinion among Americans on any fundamental question. Except for a handful of spiritual aliens so small as to be utterly negligible in a nation of 130,000,000 people, the whole country is united in its deep desire to preserve our democratic way of life. It is united in believing that this way of life is now in danger, our desperate haste to arm is proof of that. It is united in believing that the source of this danger lies exclusively in the ambitions of the Axis Powers. It is united in its passionate hope for a British victory. These are the articles of our faith, the fundamentals of our policy. Our only disagreement has been on ways and means of using our great strength to best advantage, and this disagreement itself must now be resolved in the light of the President's powerful portrayal of the alternatives that lie before us.

Mr. Roosevelt has seized a great moment in history to speak to his countrymen with candor and courage. His words carry a confession of faith, a summons to duty, and a call to action.

The Automobile in National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

DATA COMPILED BY THE NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE DEALERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include the following data compiled by the National Automobile Dealers Association, which shows the part the automobile is taking in national defense:

THE AUTOMOBILE IS UNCLE SAM'S BIGGEST TAX PRODUCER

The automobile industry, which has been the most dominant influence in raising the standard of living in this country, is also the Nation's largest producer of tax revenue. Statistics on the widespread use of the automobile industry to raise taxes furnish the basis of the fourth study made by the National Automobile Dealers Association in its series to show the importance of the automobile in the national economy and national defense.

"The automobile is a source of huge tax revenues for both the Federal and State governments," the N. A. D. A. study points out. "The Federal Government imposes taxes on the automobile itself, and the parts and accessories that go with it. In addition, both the Federal and State governments derive taxes from gasoline, and many States add a sales tax to the automobile purchased, while all of them charge registration fees.

"With the exception of 1938, taxes on the automobile have increased every year since it was first singled out for government revenue. In the last 10 years, taxes per motor vehicle in use have increased 50 percent, so that today the percentage of motor user taxes to all taxes, from all sources, is 11 percent.

"Based on the increased activity of the automobile last year over 1939, when a new record was set, estimates of tax collections in 1940 are made as follows:

State gasoline tax	$868,000,000
State registration receipts	450,000,000
Federal gasoline taxes	248,000,000
Federal excise taxes	134,000,000
Personal property and tolls	56,000,000
Municipal and county taxes	16,000,000

"These separate sources aggregate the record-making sum of $1,772,000,000 without including an estimated amount of $105,000,000 in general retail sales taxes in 25 States.

When compared with the 1939 automobile tax bill of $1,636,549,000, the 1940 estimate appears surprisingly conservative.

"Thirty-eight percent of all tax revenue of the 48 States is paid by motor-car operators, and gasoline taxes constitute the largest single item of revenue. Originally, the State gasoline tax was imposed to help bear the burden of building roads, but the huge amounts obtainable from this source supplied the first opportunity to use motor-car taxes for general purposes. Thus about 16 percent of these taxes are diverted by the States.

"When the United States entered the first World War, Congress utilized the revenue-producing possibilites of the automobile by imposing an excise tax. This was discontinued in 1929, restored again as an emergency measure in 1932, and the rate boosted for defense purposes in 1940.

"Thus an emergency automobile tax remained as a permanent tax for 9 years, producing approximately $1,000,000,000. Proposals to increase it from 7 to 25 percent seek to continue it in effect as a source of revenue for defense expenditures.

"What does taxation of automobile transportation mean to the motorist? It means that on a per-car basis, the average new-car purchaser has to pay $40 in taxes of various kinds before he is allowed to use his car on the highways.

"Add to that, 32 cents of every dollar he spends for gasoline, together with taxes on any accessories he may install in his car, or parts replaced, and he may be near or well over the $55.83, which has been estimated as the average tax for the 31,800,000 cars in operation in 1940.

"To the tax-producing value of the automobile industry should be included more than 40,000 automobile dealers, thousands of gasoline stations and suppliers, all paying substantial sums from their business operations."

America in a World at War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. NORRIS

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 29 (legislative day of Monday, May 26), 1941

ADDRESS BY CHESTER C. DAVIS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address by Chester C. Davis, member of the National Defense Advisory Commission, on the subject America in a World at War. This address was delivered on April 7, 1941.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I do not know what gift of foresight or understanding it was that inspired the leaders of the Military Order of the World War who founded Army Day. Their action was particularly remarkable because of the times during which it was taken. The year 1928 witnessed the first formal observance of Army Day. That year also marked the approximate center of two decades during which the thought of the United States was of peace, not war; when every suggestion of planning or preparation for war stood hopelessly discredited.

I think that point will bear elaboration. An eminent contemporary authority wrote: "The year 1928 saw more practical progress toward the elimination of war as a factor in international relations than had ever before been made." In August of that year the Kellogg-Briand peace treaty calling for the renunciation of war was signed at Paris by 15 world powers. These high contracting parties solemnly declared "in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another." In January of the year following, the United States Senate ratified the peace pact by a vote of 85 to 1. In July the treaty was proclaimed at Paris with 62 nations as adherents.

So I say it is indeed remarkable that a group of men, in a year that marked the apex of our blind trust in international good will, successfully dramatized a gesture of respectful attention to the Army of the United States. I pay tribute to those leaders of the Military Order of the World War through their representatives here tonight. Their instincts were truer or they saw the world more clearly than did most of us.

It is essential that we take this background into account in attempting to appraise the position of the United States on the international scene today. We meet tonight on the twenty-fourth anniversary of the day on which the United States entered "the war to end all wars." Twenty years ago this Nation turned its back upon Europe and its difficulties in what appeared to be resolute renunciation of any responsibility for what happened there in the future. We withdrew from Europe and all her works at a time when our staying in might have altered the history of the world; when farsighted leadership rising above the hatreds of the World War might have resulted in progressive adjustments which would have rendered Hitler impossible and might have averted the present world catastrophe.

I do not say that this is so. What might have happened had our course been other than it was lies in a field of speculation where no man can be positive or dogmatic. This much, however, we now know—those superficial gestures of peace, overlaid upon seething pressure against the restrictions and rigidities of the post-war order, were meaningless and nonrealistic.

During those two decades, we, as a people, were certain of many things. But hindsight is an humbling teacher—we now can see that we knew too many things that weren't true. We lived in a world that we now realize did not exist at all.

Since then, one by one, the foundation stones of our thinking in international affairs have crumbled. One of the last to go was our conviction that a nation which minded its own business and respected the rights of its neighbors would be left free to develop and enjoy its own way of life unmolested.

That rule hasn't worked in Europe or Asia. Few can be found who are certain that it will work here. The rule of ruthless force and power which replaced it is being exercised throughout the world. There is no limit to the application of the new rule except the limit imposed by fear of another and a greater force.

This, then, is the lesson current history teaches the United States: Wealth and resources, mountains of gold, and millions of acres of factories are not power in the equation that is known over three-quarters of the world today. They can be organized into power—until then they are nothing but bait.

We can honestly disagree over the early likelihood of serious war being launched against the United States at home from either Europe or Asia, but we cannot disagree with the proposition that the likelihood recedes as our armament advances.

This is a new concept for many of us. It calls for the adjustment of individual lives to national effort on a scale we have never before dreamed of. A colossal horror is astride the world compared with which our individual problems and troubles become petty. Its swift growth did more than blot out the peaceful Scandinavian democracies and the well-ordered life of the Low Countries. It inevitably has changed the pattern of our own existence now and for the future. The stark fact stands out that we are an important part of a world which is at war. We are holding cards in a game in which our whole industrial and agricultural life is involved.

The nature of war has changed. Before Napoleon, wars were fought by relatively small and usually professional armies as a side issue while life and business in a country at war went on pretty much as usual. Beginning with the Napoleonic Wars this easy-going conception of limited professionalized conflict began to change. Each successive war has witnessed a greater concentration of the human and material resources of the belligerents back of the army and navy. But it remained for Germany during the decade of the twenties to evolve and during the thirties to effect the idea of total mobilization for total war.

Let us stop for a moment and reflect on what this thing called "total war" means. It means that no dividing line exists between military operations in the field and civilian life behind the lines. It establishes one national goal and one goal only—that of victory. It is prepared to sacrifice everything that does not contribute to that objective. It assumes that the modern army is no stronger than the industry which equips it with the complex machinery of modern conflict, or than the farms which feed it. It places all of these on a war footing. It subjects management, labor, and farmers to military discipline—and military rations. I suppose it is logical, therefore, that modern war considers the civil population just as fair game for military attack as soldiers in the trenches.

There is much in the idea of total war which Americans unconditionally reject. Total war, as the dictator states define it, means the complete and utter sacrifice of individual freedom and individual rights. But the preservation of the right of the individual to think, speak, and worship as he chooses is the heart of the principle this Nation is arming to defend. We have the same task as the dictator nations of welding our economy to the building of defense machinery. We are challenged therefore to demonstrate that we can make full use of our manpower and our material resources and at the same time preserve the essential rights of the individual and the institutions which we value.

I believe we can do this job and do it as a democracy. We can organize and execute an armament program beyond anything the world has ever seen in any country, and preserve the essentials of our freedom for posterity to enjoy. But we cannot do it without sacrifice, and we cannot do it without changing our viewpoint on many things. Let me mention some of them.

Industrial management must expand capacity to produce essential materials for defense and civilian requirements notwithstanding its quite understandable apprehension over the peacetime use of the new facilities.

Labor must supply the manpower which this effort requires, and do it without contributing substantially to the vicious spiral of rising wages, costs, profits, and prices which could work deadly impairment of national efficiency in the job at hand.

Both industrial management and the leaders of organized labor must be prevented from taking advantage of this national crisis as an opportunity to try to increase their comparative advantages one over the other. The Nation must not and will not permit their disputes to stop the vital flow of production.

If we are to do this job well and to preserve the basis for our future freedom, no participant in production can be permitted to enrich himself as a result of this national effort and the expenditures that go into it. If we make extraordinary profits we must expect to turn them back to the Government through taxation. We must expect to divert our savings by whatever extent is required to the financing of this program.

This whole subject is too vast and the time is too short to treat it adequately. I can only hope in this talk to throw a flashlight over the scene and perhaps illuminate for a moment some of the aspects that have interested me particularly.

In the remainder of my time I want to talk briefly about three things: First, the problem of the location of our defense industries so as to make full use of our labor and physical resources where they are; next, the effort that is being made to spread throughout the country the work arising from defense contracts which in the first instance are concentrated in the hands of the very few; and finally, some principles that arise in connection with financing our international effort.

When the National Defense Advisory Commission was organized last summer I expressed the view that new industries required under the defense program should not be located in areas where existing industries essential to defense are now concentrated when there was any possibility of placing them elsewhere without sacrifice of speed and efficiency. It was clear that this was the only way in which new reservoirs of unemployed labor and resources would be tapped without uprooting families and shifting them thousands of miles into communities where ebbing of the armament effort would leave them stranded.

The plans for war production which had been made prior to the emergency were not based on such a principle In carrying out the program up to date some progress toward decentralization has been made, but I am afraid that on the whole we have followed the same pattern of regional concentration that was followed in 1917 and 1918. Then we handicapped our effort by shortages of labor and transport and left an aftermath of overconcentrated industry. I am afraid that we will again reap some of the same harvest of economic and social consequences.

New facilities and new production are now being authorized for the United States and for aid to England. I am hopeful that the armed services and the defense authorities will do a better job with these than has been done heretofore. I do not mean that the plants and facilities that have already been located will not produce efficiently the materials and the implements they are designed to turn out. By a better job I mean that the additional units yet to come will be located where they can tap resources of materials, facilities, and men heretofore untouched.

On the human side and to minimize the aftermath, it is important that we avoid so far as possible drawing men from the mountains and the prairie, from farms and interior cities and towns to crowd them into industrial centers hundreds of miles away. It is far better to leave as many as possible on farms and in the villages but give those with low incomes opportunities for employment in industry. This would lessen the immediate need for housing and provide a measure of security when the emergency has passed.

That the location of defense plants up to date has in many respects been unsatisfactorily done from the standpoint of industrial decentralization is not due to any lack of interest or sympathy on the part of the Army or the Navy or the national-defense authorities. The trouble lies in the lack of planning for this national crisis. That is not surprising. For 22 years the business of the United States has been peace, not war. Now the whip of speed has forced decisions which might have been avoided if this country had had an understanding of what lay ahead, and the organization to make its survey and its plans in advance.

My experience with plant locations on the Defense Commission has convinced me of one thing: As a nation we had never planned for a national job of these dimensions. The very organization of the Army itself had been based upon conceptions of warfare that were shown to be obsolete by the blitzkriegs of less than a year ago.

Modern warfare is no longer only a question of numbers of men and numbers of guns. It is also, to an ever-increasing extent, a question of industrial organization, of technical and scientific skill. Private industry naturally develops on lines applicable to present-day manufacturing and commerce that do not necessarily meet the needs of modern armament. The Army at its arsenals has carried on limited experimental work in peacetime devoted mainly to the old type of warfare. There is an ever-widening gap between them which needs to be filled. Humbly, as a layman, I risk the suggestion that to direct this work the Army needs within its own organization a large number of the best men who can be drawn from civilian life into its service, a strong and permanent body of technically trained men who know the problems that have arisen in this new kind of warfare even though they haven't been trained to direct men to march and shoot. I believe provision should be made now and never abandoned for such a dignified career branch of the Army with adequate rank and compensation to work in advance on problems of this character so that the country need not again be caught with inadequate plans.

Speaking to the southern Governors at New Orleans a few weeks ago I made reference to the fact that out of eleven and one-half billions of prime contracts for war materials awarded between June 13 of last year and February 15 of this year 80 percent had gone to 62 companies or interrelated groups of companies; between 40 and 45 percent had gone to 6 closely interconnected groups; and between one-fifth and one-quarter had gone to 2 groups of companies of closely connected ownership.

These are the companies that were best equipped with experience and management to attempt the different phases of the colossal job we have on hand. But the defense authorities clearly recognize that if the manpower and the facilities of the country are to be brought fully to bear on the job of production, the corporations and firms holding these prime contracts must spread the task of production through subcontracts as widely as possible over the land. As most of you know, an organization is being perfected under the direction of the Office of Production Management through which the Army and the Navy and the other defense authorities are going to try to do an effective job of spreading the work covered by these contracts. This is going to require a lot of attention and a lot of work from all of us. In one way or another the end must be accomplished.

I have stressed the fact that our primary problem is the immediate mobilization of our physical resources and manpower for the maximum production of the things necessary for our own defense and to aid the democracies that are resisting aggression. The subsidiary problem is to mobilize our dollars to meet the huge costs of these efforts. I say "subsidiary" because it is easy for the financial community to overemphasize the financial aspects of the program.

There need be no serious difficulty in raising the funds that are needed and I hope there will be none. All classes of our population are anxious and willing to bear their fair share of the financial burden with the same spirit of sacrifice and patriotism displayed by those who have entered the armed services.

The program will be financed partly by funds raised by taxation and partly by funds that are borrowed. These two methods should be looked at together; they are parts of the same problem. In each, from the standpoint of our general welfare, there are good ways and there are bad ways of raising the required money.

The methods that are chosen should be such as will restrain tendencies toward inflation now; and they should contribute toward the continued full use of our labor and resources when the time comes that our defense expenditures may be curtailed.

It is possible to pay much, perhaps far more than we think, of our defense costs by taxing as we go. I believe thinking people everywhere have applauded the announcement by the Secretary of the Treasury that he will strive for a program that will raise through current taxation a very high proportion of our defense expenditures.

The choice of methods of additional taxation is enormously important from the standpoint of economic consequences. If we are willing to act courageously, much can still be done to increase income-tax revenue by increasing rates and by spreading the base to reach new and numerous income groups. These changes can be made without departing from the principle of the ability to pay. It seems to me that it is important to avoid heavy consumption and sales taxes at this time. The country may have to come to them when it approaches a condition of full employment, but the general sales tax is an inflexible and not a selective way to raise money. It hits consumption that should be expanded as well as that which should be contracted. Another trouble, it may be difficult to modify or get rid of consumer taxes in the post-defense period when it becomes desirable to expand rather than contract consumption.

Notwithstanding all that may be done to meet defense costs through taxation, a great deal of new borrowing is going to be necessary. The lag in tax collections would require heavy borrowing for the immediate future even if theoretically we could levy taxes heavy enough to pay all defense costs. Here, too, there are right ways and wrong ways to raise money. The borrowing should be in such form as to reach and attract savings of individuals and institutions; it should discourage, so far as possible, further loans or investments by commercial banks.

The Secretary of the Treasury has announced the new program of savings issues carefully devised to appeal to practically all levels of income and occupation. These new securities are ideal to meet the general objectives I have mentioned for the borrowing program. I am sure that the country will respond wholeheartedly to these offerings and that the people of the Eighth Federal Reserve District will be in the forefront when the lines form.

In conclusion, I wish, with your permission, to turn to a more personal note. I meet you tonight as one who hopes to sink his roots in the rich soil of the Mississippi Valley and stay. While I have never before established my residence in what is known as the Eighth Federal Reserve District, I have always—except for my temporary sojourn in Washington—lived on the rivers whose waters flow past your door. This is the heart of the agrarian economy of the United States. Almost any agricultural product can be grown and nearly every agricultural problem can be found within its boundaries. It is a privilege to be asked to share in the promising future which its soil, its climate, its mineral and transportation resources, and its splendid people combine to guarantee.

In the critical times that are ahead of us there are tasks which everyone of us can help to do. I am glad I am going to have the opportunity to work with you in meeting them.

Intervention In War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENNETT CHAMP CLARK

OF MISSOURI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 29 (legislative day of Monday, May 26), 1941

ADDRESS BY ROBERT A. TAFT, OF OHIO

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the very able address delivered last night over the radio by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Americans of 1941, the people of the United States face today one of the greatest issues in their history—the question whether or not they shall intervene in the war now proceeding between Germany and the British Empire. It is a question which will affect the peace and happiness of our children and our grandchildren for many years to come. On that question there is a great difference of opinion among the people of the United States. The war party—and I do not mean to identify this with either political party—believes that we must join now with England to destroy Hitler for fear that Hitler may destroy the United States. The peace party believes that the only way to insure peace is to build a defense so adequate that no one will even consider an attack on this country across the broad wastes of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. They believe that intervention in the European war is futile, and will involve us for years to come in the utter confusion of European conflicts.

There is only one way in which this question ought to be determined under a democratic form of government. The Constitution provides that only Congress can declare war, and rightly so, because the Members of Congress are the most direct representatives of the people whose vital interest is at stake; rightly so, because no nation should go to war unless a majority of the people approve that action. The President has no right to declare war whether a national emergency exists or not. It follows inevitably that he has no right to engage deliberately in military or naval action equivalent to war except when the country is attacked.

There is another reason why this great issue today must be submitted to the people. Less than 7 months ago the President gave his pledge, "We will not send our Army, naval and air forces to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas except in case of attack." The Republican candidate was equally emphatic. He said, "The American people do not want war. They have no idea whatever of joining in any conflict whether on the Atlantic or the Pacific. They are determined to keep America at peace. In this determination I stand with them. I am for keeping out of war." We now face the fundamental question whether we shall abandon the position of both political parties in the last election. Surely that cannot be done without submitting the question directly to the representatives of the people.

The President's broadcast last night was a disappointment to millions of people because it still avoided the basic issue. It still indicated an intention on his part to push further and further toward war without consulting the people. In recent months there has been a tremendous growth of public sentiment against war and against convoys. Because the President sensed that feeling, he carefully avoided any direct advocacy of convoys or of war. He talked of patrols and defense and freedom of the seas. His arguments with regard to Hitler, if they are valid at all, are arguments for war, but he did not dare to advocate war itself because the people are opposed to it. His speech contains vague threats of aggressive, warlike action to be undertaken in his sole discretion. He hints that the term "defense" will be interpreted by him to mean the occupation of islands 3,000 miles from our eastern shore, within 400 miles of Africa, belonging to a neutral nation. In short, he is suggesting that he may, in dictator style, take warlike action without submitting to the people whose vital welfare is concerned the question whether or not we shall go to war. That is not democratic procedure.

The President's broadcast, as usual, contained an attempt to smear those who honestly disagree with him in principle on questions of vital policy. It was accompanied by a declaration of unlimited national emergency, which is already being used by the war party in an attempt to silence the voices of those who are convinced that war would be a terrible mistake. As a matter of fact, the so-called declaration of unlimited national emergency has no legal effect whatever. It does not enlarge his powers in any way. The President has the right to state his opinion that such an emergency exists, and to appeal to all groups of the people to cooperate in the national-defense program. But there is nothing in the Constitution or the statutes which give him the authority to declare such an emergency, and his proclamation gives him absolutely no powers which he did not have a month ago, or in fact, a year ago.

There are a number of statutes which give certain powers to the President in time of war, such as the authority to take over the railroads. Those powers cannot be brought into existence by any declaration of national emergency by the President. There are various other statutes authorizing the President to do certain acts under various emergency conditions, and many of these he has already exercised, as in the case of the neutrality proclamation and the enlargement of the Army. The few that have not been exercised, such as the possibility of taking over the radio, could have been exercised on a simple Executive order months ago, without any declaration of unlimited national emergency. It is said that he can now confiscate the industrial plants, but this power was given to him in the Selective Service Act without any necessity of his declaring an emergency. It is suggested that he can now extend the time of the draftees beyond a year, but this extension can only be made by Congress. He cannot now give Leon Henderson power to fix prices any more than he could before the proclamation was issued.

I hope that the declaration of unlimited national emergency may be of some assistance to the morale of the defense program, but the idea that it is a declaration of war, or anything like a declaration of war, or causes any suspension of civil rights, is an hallucination. The question of war and peace is still before the people of the United States. The President has shown his unwillingness openly to flout their desires. It is still the solemn duty of those who believe as I do to urge upon the people the reasons why this country should keep out of the European war and avoid any action of its military or naval forces which amounts to war.

Two reasons have been used by the war party during the past year to justify our going to war with a nation that has not attacked us, in violation of the principles which every political party has advocated since the World War. The first is that if Britain should fall, Hitler would overwhelm the United States. The second is that Hitler would destroy our trade. The President denounces Hitler and all his views with his usual effective eloquence; and I agree with him entirely about Mr. Hitler and his views, except that I think that Hitler's own self-interest would deter him from undertaking any attack on the United States. But I notice that the President does not claim, as do Secretary Knox and Secretary Stimson, that this country would be helpless against a Hitler attack. He knows that our Navy is twice as strong as the Italian and German Navies combined, and that the Italian Navy is not suited for action in the Atlantic. He knows that a navy, to attack successfully across 3,000 miles of water, must be twice as strong as the defending navy. He knows that the navies of Europe are steadily decreasing in power as the war proceeds, through the sinking of powerful ships, and that we are rapidly increasing the strength of our Navy. He knows that our Navy is today the most powerful navy in the world, and will be for years to come. The whole argument of the war party that Hitler can conquer the United States or dominate the seas that surround us has just about faded into the discard.

But the President now lays more stress on the danger to our trade. He says that Hitler would fasten an economic strangle hold upon us. He threatens the American workman that his wages and hours would be fixed by Hitler. The whole argument is an effort to frighten people into an emotional war fury. To anyone who sits down and examines calmly the real facts relating to our foreign trade the conclusions of the President are wholly unjustified.

During the 2 or 3 years before the war, our total exports amounted to approximately $3,000,000,000, while our national income was approximately $60,000,000,000. This amounts to about 5 percent of our national income. The other 95 percent arose from sales and services within the United States. Of the total exports, less than one-tenth, or approximately $300,000,000, one-half of 1 percent of our national income, went to South America.

Between seven and eight hundred million dollars went to North America, mostly to Canada, and it is somewhat difficult to see how this is going to be cut down by the Nazis. It is utterly ridiculous to suppose that our trade with South America or Asia, or even Europe, will be wiped out. In spite of our hostility to Japan, she has been one of our best customers. What will Japan do with her silk except sell it to us? We take over half of the Brazilian coffee crop. What is Brazil going to do if she does not sell it to us and take our goods in return? Even if the Nazis dominated the Dutch East Indies, there is no way for them to dispose of the rubber produced there except to sell it to us.

People who talk of trade interference confuse the conditions of war and peace. Of course, if we are at war with Germany, our trade will be interfered with, as it already is, and as it will be in the event of any war. That is one of the bad things about war. But so long as the Germans make war on us, they will hardly be in a position to build up the permanent trade connections which are necessary to injure our peacetime trade. On the other hand, if they wish to compete with us for trade, they will have completely to make over their war economy, which now absorbs the greater percentage of their industrial activity, and tool up their factories for peacetime production.

Undoubtedly when peace is made they will be dangerous competitors in the world markets. But let us face the facts with regard to our foreign trade. It will not be destroyed, but no matter who wins this war it will not prosper for many years. In any event, the impoverished peoples of Europe will have to work for starvation wages for a long time. Those people will have very little with which to buy our goods. They will undersell us in many countries and with relation to many articles. But that is the result of war, not of German victory. If the British win, there will be the same competition from the British, and from the Germans as well, for surely we aren't going to prohibit German exports.

Let us look at the condition which will exist after the war. We will have the largest Navy in the world, entirely able to see that our ships can go anywhere they wish to go. We have many means by which we can promote our trade. Outside of price competition, we are infinitely better equipped than the Germans will be. We will have more wealth and more gold. If the Germans infiltrate, we can infiltrate.

The people who talk about the destruction of trade are utterly inconsistent. Sometimes it is claimed that the Germans will marshal all the buying power of Europe, and approach the Argentineans, for example, with the demand that they sell their wheat for 2 cents a bushel. Of course, that assumes a control over the buying power of England and France and other European countries which is simply impossible to imagine. But it is the situation imagined by those who favor the South American cartel. Some of the war crowd use just the opposite and inconsistent argument. They say that the Germans will be so kind to the Argentineans that they will sell them German goods for practically nothing, with a government subsidy. Frankly, if it is worth our while, we can do the same. There are hundreds of ways in which to promote our trade after the war. I do not think the American people, calmly considering the alternatives, will ever go to war against a country which has not attacked us because some day that country may be a successful competitor for foreign trade. We will lose more in 2 years of modern war than we will gain in 20 years of foreign trade.

The President says we could not dispose of our agricultural surpluses. That can hardly be due to Hitler, however, because we have not been able to dispose of those surpluses for a number of years. It is much more due to the A. A. A. policy than it is to Hitler. It is said that Hitler will insist on buying our surpluses for a low price. Why under the New Deal we are already paying export bounties on wheat and cotton, and selling them far below our market. Many farmers feel that a two-price system, maintaining the domestic price at parity, and selling the surplus for anything you can get for it, is a sound solution of the surplus problem.

I believe that because of the war, and regardless who wins, our foreign trade may fall off by as much as half a billion dollars. That will make very little difference indeed to the general prosperity of the United States. But suppose our imports of rubber are cut off. Today we can manufacture synthetic rubber. It will cost more, but it will put thousands of men to work in a new industry to replace those who can no longer work in the corresponding export industries. New markets in this country would replace foreign markets, not quite so profitable perhaps, but approximately the same. We import large quantities of vegetable oils. Suppose they were cut off. All of them can be produced in the United States, and will replace on many farms the surpluses of wheat and cotton which it is not profitable for us to raise today. The President says that we do not burn all the petroleum we can pump, that our oil exports will be cut off. Of course, they won't be, but Secretary Ickes has repeatedly urged that we cut down the production of petroleum and save some of it for future generations of Americans. If we could not import silk we could get on with rayon, and increase the number of men working in that industry. I certainly do not advocate any trade isolation, and I regard any such reduction of trade as wholly improbable, but I say the loss would be largely compensated. That loss would not be an important factor in the prosperity of this country, compared to the loss which can result from unsound fiscal and economic policies within the country, like those we have seen in recent years.

Undoubtedly a British defeat would require us to spend more on the Army and Navy, but, as far as I can judge, a completely adequate defense could be maintained at a cost of $3,000,000,000 a year more than we were spending on the Army and Navy before the war. That is less than the annual New Deal deficit was for many years. The elimination of waste in nondefense expenditures would take care of a good part of it. In any event, we face a considerable part of the additional expense. We are going to have a two-ocean navy and a large air force no matter who wins the war.

This is not today a pleasant world. It will be less pleasant if the British are defeated, but there is not the slightest reason why, with sound domestic financial and humanitarian policies, we should not be a great and prosperous democracy. We certainly shall be infinitely better off than we shall be if we undertake the task of maintaining the balance of power in Europe, of policing all the small democracies of Europe, and engaging in every war which arises in that distant Continent.

The President's broadcast introduces into the picture two new conceptions. He says, "We reassert the ancient American doctrine of freedom of the seas." He says that all our history has been tied up with those words, and that we have striven and fought in defense of freedom of the seas. I am afraid he would not pass a history examination. Apparently he interprets this doctrine to mean that we can insist that our war supplies and materials on belligerent and neutral vessels shall freely go to England.

But the doctrine of freedom of the seas was something very different. Originally it applied to freedom of the seas in time of peace as against the claim of various nations that they had a special proprietorship in various seas and oceans. No one disputes that freedom of the seas today in time of peace. In time of war, however, the freedom of the seas was always substantially modified. Belligerent vessels were always subject to capture and destruction by the other belligerent. Neutral vessels were subject to capture if they were carrying to a belligerent contraband of war, such as our lease-lend materials. On the other hand, any goods could be shipped from one neutral country to another, and foodstuffs could be shipped in neutral vessels even to belligerent countries without being subject to capture.

The old doctrine of freedom of the seas practically came to an end, however, during the World War, and it came to an end through the establishment of the British blockade. We had violent arguments with the British about the seizure of food ships en route to Belgium and Holland. Finally we yielded, and recognized the right of a belligerent to prevent in any way possible the delivery of any materials to its enemies. We are assisting today the British blockade of all Europe, including enemy, neutral, and occupied countries, in complete violation of this good old American doctrine of freedom of the seas. The President apparently is using this attractive phrase as a justification for convoys or patrols, because the people have turned "thumbs down" on convoys, and freedom of the seas sounds more palatable. It means to him only the freedom of the United States to send munitions of war to Great Britain on British ships, something it never meant at any time in our history. On the other hand, if he is going to back up the real doctrine, he will have to insist on the right of American ships to carry foodstuffs to Spain and Portugal and France, and even to the occupied democracies of Europe. Up to this time, he has refused to insist on our right—yes, and our duty—to take such shipments to starving peoples.

The other term which is freely used in his broadcast is the word "defense". It is well settled that the President has the right to defend the United States without action by Congress, but that he has no right to undertake aggressive warfare. The broadcast shows an intention on his part to stretch the word defense to acts which are clearly acts of aggression. Again he is apparently trying to avoid the necessity of consulting Congress on the fundamental question of war and peace. He suggests that he is pushing patrols into the Eastern Atlantic, and that he might find it necessary to seize the Azores and Cape Verde Islands as a measure of defense. He is prepared to interpret any German occupation of these islands as an attack on the United States, and even suggests that German activity against British shipping off Africa is an attack on the Americas. He doesn't mention Dakar, but rumors that we are about to occupy Dakar are floating about freely in Washington.

If I understand English, it is perfectly foolish to say that Germany has attacked us. If there is one thing Hitler is carefully avoiding at the present moment, it is an attack on the United States. It does not make sense to say that a seizure by us of the Azores, 2,500 miles from this country, or of the Cape Verde Islands, 3,000 miles from this country, is defense of the United States. Think what defense can be made to mean under this definition. Having occupied the Cape Verde Islands, we would then have to occupy Dakar in order to defend the Cape Verde Islands. To defend Dakar we would have to push on into French Africa. In order to defend the Azores we would have to seize Lisbon. The whole argument sounds to me very much like the Russian allegation when they attacked Finland, that the great Soviet Empire was acting in self-defense.

Conditions may arise if we should enter the war, under which the seizure of the Azores or Cape Verde Islands might be a wise policy, but let us not deceive ourselves into regarding it as defense. It is an aggressive act of war, and it is one which cannot possibly be taken under our Constitution without the approval of the people of the United States in Congress assembled.

All of this talk of defense and freedom of the seas is an effort to circumvent the feeling against convoys. The President himself has said, "Convoys mean shooting, and shooting means war," and our people do not want war. Our patrols may mean shooting, and the seizures of islands may mean shooting, and that shooting would mean war. The issue before the people is the same as it has been: Shall we or shall we not enter the war against Germany? It is no longer an issue of aid to Britain. We are aiding Britain to the extent of our ability, short of joining in the war. Our lease-lend materials are today arriving satisfactorily in Britain. Less than 4 percent of those materials have been sunk.

The President says that ships are being destroyed faster than they are being reconstructed, and that this presents a great threat to British safety. The British at the beginning of this war had 17,000,000 tons of merchant shipping. They acquired 8,000,000 tons of neutral and allied shipping. Today they have left in the neighborhood of 20,000,000 tons. Recently that shipping has been destroyed at the rate of about 5,000,000 tons a year, but the British and American replacements, according to the President, amount to half of that destruction. That means a net loss of 2,500,000 tons a year. After 3 years more the British will still have 12,500,000 tons of merchant shipping, which is sufficient to keep open the trade routes to Great Britain. The amount of materials and airplanes and guns which are supplied to England depends much more on increasing our production in the United States, and reorganizing our Government, and checking strikes than it does on convoys. The advocates of convoys, like the advocates of freedom of the seas and of aggressive defense, are not so much concerned with seeing that England gets our supplies as they are with taking steps which will inevitably involve us in the war.

I have heretofore explained at length the reasons why I feel we should not become involved in Europe. That involvement is utterly futile. It must be years before we can hope to invade the European Continent and defeat Hitler. It must be years before we can obtain the air bases from which we can bomb Berlin. By supplying the British with bombers, I hope they can in time do to the German cities what Hitler has been doing to the English cities. When that time comes, no doubt, Britain can make a more satisfactory peace than she could today. But if we declare our goal to be the crushing of Hitler, the setting up of the independence of all the small countries of Europe, it will take untold lives and untold fortunes. Even if we are successful, we will have to police all Europe if Germany is not to rise again. Europe has been engaged in war for thousands of years, and will be so engaged for thousands of years to come. We cannot settle their problems, if we would. They must work out their own salvation.

Our interference in 1917 did not solve their problems, largely because we did not understand them. Our recent interference in the Balkans did not solve their problems. We encouraged the Yugoslavs to oppose their Government and defy the Germans, with the sad result that their country was invaded and their capital, and thousands of their citizens, destroyed. We encouraged the Greeks to refuse to consider any peace with Italy and Germany. When we said we would help those peoples, they thought we meant what we said, and had the power. They took the promises of the American Minister literally and expected to see guns and tanks and American soldiers to help in their defense. What part did our Government play in the ill-fated British expedition to Greece? Surely that was not undertaken without the approval of the President. Was our General Staff consulted, and did it advise the support of such an expedition? Or was it approved on the amateur advice of unofficial representatives? When the lease-lend bill was being considered, Senator VANDENBERG pointed out that it would make the President power politician No. 1 throughout the world. How far are we responsible for the death of 15,000 gallant British and Anzacs who never left the soil of Greece? We in America can't understand the problems of Europe. Our interference is not only futile, it is almost inevitably stupid and more likely to hurt our friends than our enemies.

It is all very well for the President to announce that "we will accept only a world consecrated to freedom of speech and expression, freedom to every person to worship God his own way, freedom from want and freedom from terrorism." If he means that we will send our ships and our boys to every country in the world to insure those freedoms, then he is announcing an impossible policy and one which can only lead to the destruction of America.

There is only one way in which we can insure peace and happiness to the people of this country for years to come. That is to defend the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans against every aggressor and build a defense so strong that no one will even dare to attack. As long as peace prevails in this country we can steadily improve the prosperity and standard of living of our people, as we have been doing for a hundred and fifty years. We can do it through democratic processes. We can show the people of the world that our four freedoms are possible in the United States even with the world at war; and that they are not inconsistent with national strength and power. It is entirely consistent with that policy that we extend in every possible way, short of war, aid and assistance to those nations which are unjustly attacked and to those nations whose ideals are close to ours.

By such a policy we could unite today all of the groups and interests of this Nation. National unity would be easy to achieve if the demand for an aggressive war is abandoned. I am convinced that if the question is submitted to the people by referendum, or if it is submitted to Congress, a great majority will speak for peace and aid to Britain, but against war. If I am mistaken, I am quite prepared to support without stint or qualification the wishes of the majority of the people declared by Congress; but I deny the right of the President to take us into war against the wishes of the men and the women and the children in the cities, in the towns, and on the farms of America.

Commemorating Annual Plum Creek Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN THOMAS

OF IDAHO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 29 (legislative day of Monday, May 26), 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. HUGH A. BUTLER, OF NEBRASKA, AT LEXINGTON, NEBR.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered today by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] at Lexington, Nebr., commemorating annual Plum Creek Day.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and fellow citizens, it is a genuine pleasure to be with you today and to join in this memorial to those sturdy pioneers who made Plum Creek their trading point during the early days of the opening of this part of Nebraska and adjoining territory. Most of these early settlers have gone to their reward, but it is fortunate for us that there are still a few of those early pioneers who are still among us to give us inspiration to meet the issues of today like they faced what seemed impossible tasks when they came to settle these prairies and rich valleys. Their hardships were severe and many lives were shortened because of the severity of those early experiences. My own mother was taken in her early thirties, leaving father and four youngsters to fight it out alone. Many of the old neighbors around Cambridge, over on the Republican River to the south, are here today and recall those bitter experiences. My greatest pride today comes from the ownership of one of the homestead places near Cambridge, where the first home was a dugout, later to be replaced with a sod house, and where now is located a model home with all modern conveniences. We, today, have our joys, our happiness, our liberties, and our homes because of the great sacrifices of the early pioneer, because each individual did his part in building up a great nation. He made his contribution by working for the best interests of his community—his family. He wasn't quite so inclined to take on all the troubles of the whole world as we seem to be today. I am inclined to believe it's going to require the same kind of old-fashioned devotion to duty to one's own community and family today to get ourselves back on the road to normalcy as was required in the pioneer days to overcome the great problems facing the early settler. Devotion and sacrifice. This community developed because of the loyalty and devotion of its citizens. Likewise other communities grew strong because of their sturdy manhood and womanhood. Thus our State became strong and our Nation grew to its marvelous stature among the nations of the world. But it all came from the devotion, sacrifice, and loyalty of the individual citizen to his community, his home, his own.

I mention briefly these lessons we learn from the experiences of the pioneer because I want to apply them to problems facing us today.

Conditions may change; but principles never. We will be a strong Nation when our States are strong; the States are strong when their towns like Lexington are strong; and communities like this are strong when their citizens are loyal to all their civic and family obligations.

Rather than lose sleep because of a madman ravaging in Europe, I would be concerned because both the civil and economic liberties of our towns and our individuals here in America and right here in Nebraska are threatened, threatened not by foreigners but by bureaucrats within our own country. Within the Halls of Congress today there are discussions on matters that affect us seriously as individuals and, naturally, the decisions arrived at will affect our strength as a Nation. I don't like to talk in riddles or in the abstract; I like to illustrate what I am driving at by calling your attention to what's happening to another community right here in the fertile Platte River Valley.

A few days ago, I received the following telegram from the citizens of Minatare, Nebr., reading as follows:

Hon. HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

Great Western Sugar Co. definitely announced today Minatare factory will not operate this year due to acreage curtailment. This makes a large, modern factory idle and many men out of employment. Naturally a serious blow to our community. We offer suggestion that the Government commandeer the set-up for defense purpose; for instance, it would make an ideal munitions factory. Ample floor space, fireproof warehouses, and could be converted without disturbing the sugar equipment. The factory is equipped with ample steam boilers, engines, and generators capable of 2,100 horsepower with a completely equipped machine shop. All buildings on Burlington spurs. Ample water supply and coal-storage facilities. Many houses will be vacated as well as large dormitory. Please place these facts before proper authorities for early investigation. We believe this lay-out avails the Government of a real opportunity for manufacture of munitions at minimum cost with little delay in starting operations.

L. P. LUPHER.

MINATARE, NEBR. May 8, 1941.

I have read the entire message to you, but, frankly, I am not greatly concerned about trying to convert a sugar factory into one to manufacture munitions of war. I am far more anxious to endeavor to alter the conditions that require the factory to be closed down. Doesn't it seem to you the height of folly to reduce sugar-beet acreage to the point where factories have to close down, when as a matter of fact we don't produce more than one-third of our own requirements. If pushed to the utmost, we couldn't produce more than one-half of our needs. Then, why the restrictions? Why not be as practical in this national policy as we must be as individuals if we are to succeed?

Minatare, Nebr., has a population of some 1,100 upstanding Americans. It is distinctly a rural community, not unlike hundreds of other towns in Nebraska and the West, except that Minatare fortunately has been able to offer employment to a substantial number of its residents at a beet-sugar factory established there 15 years ago. To a degree, which it is difficult to realize in the industrial and more thickly populated East, Minatare and the community surrounding is entirely and completely dependent on agriculture and the beet-sugar industry for its well-being and livelihood. Not only are the workers in the factory and sugar-beet farmers concerned, but merchants, professional men, and businessmen have a direct stake in its successful operation. The company which operates the factory is the largest single taxpayer in the town of Minatare, and the largest single taxpayer in Scotts Bluff County, which is Nebraska's third county in population. The factory operation, therefore, is directly related to the group activities of the community, such as the maintenance of schools, roads, and public health.

Recently, the company which operates the factory reluctantly announced that it was going to be shut down, that it could not operate in 1941 as it has in each of the years since 1926. It will not run this year because efficient operation has become impossible under the conditions imposed by the Secretary of Agriculture under the Sugar Act of 1937. The acreage of sugar beets which the Secretary has decreed may be grown this year is so restricted and the prospective supply of sugar beets is so small that the operation of the factory cannot be justified. As a consequence of the Secretary's decision, workers, farmers, merchants, and the community generally must suffer, and this at a time when America is in the throes of a vital all-out national-defense program.

Here is an anomalous situation. Because of drastically reduced acreage, a factory in Nebraska must be closed, with resulting unemployment, while at the same time the Government of the United States, through the Export-Import Bank is lending $11,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to finance the production of an additional 400,000 tons of sugar in Cuba, a foreign country. And Minatare is not alone, for the acreage restrictions which are being imposed on the beet-sugar industry this year undoubtedly will force the closing of other factories in western States. This certainly is "hemispheric solidarity" with a vengeance. American workers in Nebraska are to be thrown out of employment and greater employment opportunities are to be created for peon labor in the tropics.

Last year farmers of the United States planted 979,000 acres of sugar beets. This year their plantings, under Secretary Wickard's ruling, must not exceed more than 820,000 acres, a reduction of more than 16 percent. This cut in acreage was ordered, to quote the announcement of the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture, "because excessive stocks of beet sugar have accumulated following record production in the domestic beet areas during the last 3 years." Yet it is necessary to point out that these stocks accumulated during years in which the acreage planted to beets was under the direct control of the Secretary of Agriculture. They were not created through overplanting, or because of any violation of the provisions of the Sugar Act. On the contrary, they were accumulated in strict compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

When the Secretary of Agriculture announced last December that he intended to reduce sugar-beet plantings to 820,000 acres, the West arose in vigorous protest. Beet-sugar growers and processors, businessmen, chambers of commerce, and Members of the Senate and the House objected that the reduction was unnecessarily harsh, that it would force the closing of factories, cause unemployment, and otherwise dislocate the economy of the beet-producing States. Their arguments went unheeded until a growing shortage of shipping space and rising prices brought some members of the administration to a realization that it would be wise and sound to free sugar-beet acreage and to encourage the largest possible production in 1941. Various agencies of the Government considered this proposal for weeks, but it was finally rejected on April 19, for a reason or reasons not made public, the drastic restrictive limitations were continued, and the beet growers and the beet-growing West were left without relief and precisely where they were 4 months before.

In recent years a great deal has been said about the expansion of the beet-sugar industry in the United States, but in this instance there is no question of expansion. The question is not whether a factory which has been running for 15 years shall be permitted to produce more sugar, but whether it will be permitted to produce at all. The Department of Agriculture has forced the answer to that question, for the factory wheels will be motionless and the skilled factory labor idle. And this in a period of the gravest national stress and emergency. Diversion of fertile acres from the production of an essential foodstuff like sugar to surplus crops like potatoes, corn, and wheat is neither sensible nor wise, and in no sense compatible with an all-out national defense. Skilled and satisfied workers enjoying splendid living conditions under full American living standards are to be summarily thrown out of employment.

That some such situation as the present one would eventually arise was foreseen 2 years ago by my colleague, Nebraska's senior Senator [Mr. NORRIS], when speaking in the United States Senate March 23, 1939, with respect to the quota for the beet-sugar industry, he said:

"Fundamentally, Mr. President, I think it is wrong to have a quota on an agricultural product of which we cannot produce enough to supply home consumption. That is true of all sugar, both cane and beet sugar. We cannot produce enough sugar to satisfy the American people. Why should we have a quota in a case of that kind which prevents the production in America of that agricultural product in order that we may take in the quota of some foreign country? I understand that we have quotas for Ecuador, Brazil, and Cuba, and that we are not permitted to produce sugar in the United States if our production conflicts with the production of sugar from those other countries.

"Mr. President, I cannot see any justice in that theory. Fundamentally, it seems to me it is absolutely wrong to deny to our people the right to produce a product when the consumption of that product is always greater than the amount we can possibly produce. It seems to me that that theory cannot be defended on any fundamental ground of reason or logic."

I agree entirely with the position of my colleague. There can be no sane reason for restricting the production of a nonsurplus commodity at home, particularly at a time when we are encouraging and even financing the production of the same commodity in overseas Latin America. Least of all can there be any justification for restricting and reducing this production in the face of an ever-increasing lack of shipping space to bring sugar to our consumers from foreign overseas producing areas.

The United States has embarked on an all-out national-defense program. Farmers in Nebraska and throughout the land, all our agricultural citizenry, will cooperate if soundly encouraged and if opportunity is given them in this great program. There will be no national unity in an all-out national defense without the wholehearted and full cooperation of the 25 percent of our population who live on our farms. The Sugar Act should be reviewed by Congress without delay. The basic continental sugar quotas should be increased at least to the point that our farmers can produce and our industries can process beet and cane sugar approximating their respective capacities. A fair treatment of agricultural producers requires this. The all-out national defense of America demands it.

And so it is. To have a strong America we must ever recall the spirit of the pioneer. In their fights against the elements of this prairie country no man dreamed of depending upon someone else for his protection. Each man did his part, and together they built this great America. With each of us doing our part patriotically, with loyalty, devotion, and sincerity, we must of a necessity have a strong community like Lexington which followed the early Plum Creek days. With strong communities we will have a strong Nation, doing its part in building the peace of the world.

The Sundown Patrol

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. NORRIS

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 29 (legislative day of Monday, May 26), 1941

ARTICLE BY RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by Richard Neuberger on the subject The Sundown Patrol.

There being no objection, the article was order to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SUNDOWN PATROL

(By Richard L. Neuberger)

In these dark and troubled times there is very little news that is encouraging. However, in the Pacific Northwest there is a story to tell which should bolster our spirits. It is the story of the development of the Columbia River and how it has panned out.

The development actually began in 1933, but got its original impetus in September of 1932, when Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, campaigning for the Presidency, declared at Portland, Oreg., that "the next great hydroelectric development undertaken by the Federal Government must be that on the Columbia River."

As a result of this, Grand Coulee and Bonneville Dams were authorized. Immediately there were howls of protest. Congressmen from metropolitan districts in the East cried out that countless millions were to be wasted in the wilderness. The Treasury would be raided for worthless monuments. Private utility companies began a campaign of propaganda, a campaign claiming that these dams were utterly useless and unnecessary.

MORE LIGHT FOR LESS MONEY

"Let's look at the record," Al Smith once said. That is pretty good advice here. Bonneville Dam is now completed. Transmission lines fan out from its powerhouse like the rays of the sun. Grand Coulee will be finished as soon as workmen lay the parapet.

Already the huge structure, most massive edifice ever reared by man, is three times the bulk of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Within a few weeks a generator spinning out 108,000 kilowatts, the biggest piece of machinery in the world, will be in operation at Coulee.

Today, dozens of communities in the Pacific Northwest have reduced light and power rates because of these dams. Some of the communities have enjoyed huge reductions because their municipal plants purchased juice from Bonneville.

In other communities private power companies have reduced rates to forestall the purchase of Bonneville power. And in still others, the people have voted to replace utility corporations with public systems using Bonneville energy.

AIDING NATIONAL DEFENSE

When the colossal dams first were proposed by President Roosevelt, Senator George W. Norris, Senator Charles L. McNary, and other public-power advocates, critics immediately shouted that there would be no one to purchase the hydroelectricity. They said it would go begging; that the big dams would be as valueless as the Egyptian pyramids they were surpassing in size.

These arguments have been refuted a dozen times. New aluminum plants just completed along the Columbia River are producing a third of the Nation's aluminum. These plants use Bonneville and Grand Coulee power, and their output is relieving a serious shortage in the vital airplane industry. Were it not for the aluminum factories on the Columbia—the first such factories, incidentally, west of the Mississippi—American military planes would be greatly retarded in both quality and quantity.

DEVELOPING A "PROMISED LAND"

Grand Coulee will irrigate and reclaim 1,200,000 acres of land. At present this soil is arid and barren. When the immense project first was authorized, a Congressman said there would never be the slightest use for this new agricultural area.

Since that time a dreadful series of droughts has seared the Dust Bowl. Thousands of men and women from Oklahoma, Nebraska, the Dakotas, and Kansas have had to move westward in search of new homes. A few weeks ago Secretary of Agriculture Wickard told a Senate committee that the farms to be irrigated at Grand Coulee were among the few places these wanderers could settle.

Improved water transportation has long been the hope of many Americans—military experts, farmers, and tourists. The military men want routes which cannot be bombed. The farmers want low freight rates. Tourists want picturesque ways of travel. Bonneville Dam has turned the Columbia River into a great navigable artery.

Big barges loaded with oil now reach Attalia, 300 miles from the Pacific, and come back downstream crammed to the gunwales with wheat from the inland empire. This is the only water passage through the vast mountain range which extends along the Pacific seaboard from Alaska to the Panama Canal. Bonneville has the highest lift locks on earth, locks which hoist a boat 66 feet in 15 minutes.

There have been many disappointments in recent years; disappointments at home and abroad. We have watched civilization silently depart from Europe and Asia, and she is now beating a hasty retreat from Africa. Yet one of the great domestic enterprises in our own country, the "T. V. A. of the far West," has proved as successful as its counterpart in the South. For that much we can give and take thanks in these gloomy hours.

Bonneville Power Breaks Bottleneck in National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER D. ANGELL

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, one of the hurdles of national defense is the production of sufficient hydroelectric power to meet the needs of defense construction. Fortunately, the big hydroelectric plant at Bonneville, in my district, was sufficiently advanced when these war orders began to pile up, to furnish large blocks of electrical energy for these much-needed activities. Chief among the requirements is aluminum. It is the base material for any air program. We have learned that to be successful in modern warfare, airships in mass production are necessary. They may only be produced with an abundant supply of aluminum. Last year the production of this light metal represented about 425,000 kilowatts of equivalent electrical capacity. The best information available is to the effect that the Axis Powers are producing 2½ times this amount of aluminum.

Up to the middle of March the Bonneville Administrator had executed prime power contracts totaling 270,450 kilowatts, of which six industrial consumers are taking or will take 226,500 kilowatts. Recently, the Office of Production Management requested the Bonneville Administrator to make available 80,000 kilowatts of additional capacity for the production of aluminum. This request is in addition to the 165,000 kilowatts of power now under contract to the Aluminum Co. of America. This Bonneville capacity of 245,000 kilowatts will produce approximately 245,000,000 pounds of aluminum per year. This represents about 59 percent of the total aluminum produced in the United States during 1940 and approximately 30 percent of the present national-defense demands. Thus Bonneville, together with the power soon to be produced at Grand Coulee, will break the bottleneck in needed hydroelectric power in carrying forward our defense program.

Power for the production of aluminum, however, is not the only major defense activity being prosecuted in Oregon. Since July 1, 1940, contracts and expenditures aggregating approximately $161,000,000 have been made by the Federal Government with Oregon concerns for the manufacture of defense material and equipment in Oregon. Included in these contracts is one for $46,500,000 with the United States Maritime Commission for 31 cargo ships, and an additional contract with the same Commission of $19,800,000 for 12 additional ships. One contract calls for the construction of steel mine layers, with an expenditure of $24,000,000. There is also now under construction at Hermiston, Oreg., an ordnance depot, involving expenditure of $10,200,000. These are in addition to the work now being carried on on the airport bases in Portland and Pendleton and the Tongue Point air base, at Astoria.

Under leave granted, I include the following recent news releases from the Bonneville Power Administration, showing additional contractual commitments by the administration for Bonneville power:

BONNEVILLE POWER BUILDS SHIPS

More federally generated Columbia River power was scheduled to go to work today to speed the country's national-defense program with the execution of a 10-year contract for the sale of between 6,000 and 10,000 kilowatts of Bonneville-Grand Coulee Dam energy to the Oregon Shipbuilding Co., of Portland, Oreg.

The contract, executed by Edgar Kaiser, president of the shipbuilding company, now engaged on Government ship contracts at its new yards on the lower Willamette River, south of Portland, will be signed in the next few days by Power Administrator Paul J. Raver.

Power deliveries to the shipbuilding plant will begin Friday, May 23, with an initial service of 1,000 kilowatts. At the end of 1 month deliveries will be increased to 2,500 kilowatts; at the end of the second month to 5,000 kilowatts, and at the end of the third month to 6,000 kilowatts. The contract provides for power deliveries up to 10,000 kilowatts if that amount is required by the company. Payment will be made on the basis of 75 cents a month per kilowatt of demand plus 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour of actual power usage.

"This agency's ability to serve a vital defense industry at a time of national power shortage is a matter of considerable satisfaction to us," D. L. Marlett, acting Bonneville administrator, commented. "It proves the principle that government and private enterprise can work together, and it is new proof of the soundness of building power facilities in advance of market demand."

The shipbuilding contract was the fifth executed by the power administration with defense industries, which include electrometallurgical and electrochemical operations throughout the Pacific Northwest. Total contract demand by such agencies at present is 252,500 kilowatts.

To date the power administration has executed 42 contracts with all types of distribution agencies and industries. These agreements commit the administration to deliver 308,855 kilowatts of Columbia River power.

BONNEVILLE POWER BRINGS LOW RATES

New low rates for consumer members of the Nehalem Valley Cooperative Electric Association of Clatsop County, Oreg., will be put into effect with the next bills rendered, the Bonneville Power Administration was informed today.

The new rates, recommended by power-administration engineers, will represent reductions in customers' monthly bills ranging from 9 percent for minimum-bill users to 22 percent for average use of 50 kilowatt-hours monthly. They are lower than rural retail rates now in effect in other parts of Clatsop County, excepting those for customers using less than the energy included in the cooperative's minimum bill.

The cooperative has been receiving power from the Columbia River system since February 1941. First rate reductions have awaited completion of the Rural Electrification Administration's investigation of the cooperative's operations.

The new rate schedules follow:

FARM AND HOME

First 50 kilowatt-hours at 5 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 50 kilowatt-hours at 3 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 100 kilowatt-hours at 2 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 100 kilowatt-hours at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.

Over 300 kilowatt-hours at ¾ cent per kilowatt-hour.

Minimum bill, $2.50.

COMMERCIAL

First 50 kilowatt-hours at 5 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 100 kilowatt-hours at 3.5 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 350 kilowatt-hours at 2.5 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours at 1.5 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 13,500 kilowatt-hours at 0.8 cent per kilowatt-hour.

Over 15,000 kilowatt-hours at 0.6 cent per kilowatt-hour.

For customers with demands larger than 10 kilowatts there is an additional charge of $1.30 per kilowatt of demand in excess of 10.

Minimum bill, $2.50.

The Nehalem Valley Cooperative was one of the first R. E. A. projects organized in the State of Oregon, and was the seventh such agency to buy Columbia River power. It serves about 330 customers in the upper Nehalem River Valley. Headquarters are at Jewell, Oreg. The electricity is bought at wholesale from the Bonneville Power Administration at the Government's optional prime power rate of one-fourth cent per kilowatt-hour of monthly use, plus 75 cents per kilowatt of monthly demand.

Mr. Speaker, it was the purpose of the Congress that the power generated on the Columbia River should be furnished throughout the entire area contiguous to the generating plants at the lowest possible rate consistent with the amortization of the plants, repaying to the Government, with interest, the entire outlay made by the Government in the erection of these projects. Notwithstanding, this program is being strictly adhered to, power is now being furnished throughout this area, as shown by the releases I have set forth, at a rate which is the lowest in power history in the United States, and will ultimately save the users of hydroelectric power many millions of dollars.

Against War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JEANNETTE RANKIN

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 27, 1941

ADDRESS BY LILLIAN GISH

Miss RANKIN of Montana. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Lillian Gish, stage and screen star, delivered before the Executives' Club, of Chicago, Friday, May 9, 1941.

President HAROLD O. MCLAIN. One of the terrible attributes of a war economy is the submergence of accuracy and truth and the elevation of distortion and falsehood under the name of propaganda. Propaganda is now recognized and employed as one of the most powerful and deadly weapons of warfare. Our speaker, now, knows a great deal about propaganda from her firsthand experience with it in the last war.

You all know Miss Lillian Gish. Regardless of the enormous theatrical and moving-picture productions which have blossomed in the last decades, I suppose general opinion would still regard The Birth of a Nation as the most outstanding moving picture of all time and, of course, Miss Lillian Gish was the outstanding personality in that picture.

Most of you have no doubt seen Miss Gish recently in her delightful production in which she is appearing here in Chicago entitled "Life With Father." You know also that Miss Gish has been effective and devoted in her public appearances for the cause to keep America out of this World War. She has taken her stand at some sacrifice, because, as you no doubt appreciate, the theatrical profession is largely dominated by influences which are anxious for the United States to participate in this world struggle. Miss Gish has a deep conviction which she courageously expresses concerning a subject she knows, and we are delighted to have Miss Gish tell us now of her experiences and her views. I am happy to introduce Miss Gish to you. [Applause.]

Miss LILLIAN GISH. Please let me talk to you, not as an actress whom you may know from the films or the theater, but as an American citizen who is deeply concerned about her country.

I belong to no group, nor organization, outside of Actors' and Radio Equity, the International Women's Peace League, and America First. I was baptized and confirmed an Episcopalian by Bishop Leonard of Ohio. Because we were very poor, I began working at the age of 5 and have been earning my living in the theater or on the screen ever since.

In 1936 I voted for Mr. Roosevelt, wrote and delivered my only political speech for him on The Women of 1936 program, which Mrs. Curtis Bok sponsored.

My platform is pro-America and antihate. I didn't vote in the last election, as I felt both candidates were more interested in other countries than in their own. This conviction is shared by many of my countrymen here in the Middle West, where I have been for over a year. Had we had a candidate last November running on an all-American ticket—one who would have settled our own internal problems, who would have armed this country and made it stronger than any other and used that strength to keep us out of war, I believe he would have been elected.

Naturally, all of us would like England to go on ruling the world, as she has since she seized Canada from the French in 1759, but we still believe George Washington was right when he said "The nation which holds toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interests."

This country was founded by a brave people, who were willing to suffer untold hardships to escape from the eternal wars of Europe. Take my own average case. My mother's people were French Huguenots who came here in 1632 and settled in Deerfield, Mass. They intermarried with the Scotch, English, and Irish. By the time my mother was born they had moved as far west as Ohio, and she was christened Mary Robinson McConnell. In 1733 one Mathias Gish left Luxemburg and came to Philadelphia, and bought land in Lancaster County, Pa., where he settled as a farmer.

These people and their descendants helped to build this great land and have fought for its freedom. This background, I am sure, is similar to the background of many of you who feel a deep respect for our country. And now, for the second time in 24 years, we are being propagandized into a war that is no more our business now than it was in 1917.

Everyone over 30 remembers how we were screamingly told then that we were fighting for our liberties and to make the world safe for democracy. It was to be a war to end all wars. Just go ask some of our poor wrecks of men in some of the badly equipped, understaffed, and forgotten veterans' hospitals about that. Or let me tell you how I helped to sell the idea of hate to the American people.

FIRST WORLD WAR FILM PROPAGANDA

When D. W. Griffith was in London early in 1917 with his film Intolerance, he was approached by Lloyd George, Lord Beaverbrook, and the heads of the British and French propaganda departments about making films to interest Americans in fighting for them. They told him that they thought the films were more powerful than the press for spreading propaganda.

Mr. Griffith agreed to undertake the assignment and began assembling his players. Being very young at the time, imagine my surprise to find myself on a boat bound for France, even before the soldiers got there. My mother and I sailed for England on the first camouflaged boat to leave America after war was declared in April of 1917. We sailed with the first contingent of doctors and nurses sent from the Presbyterian Hospital in New York. My sister, Dorothy, sailed a few weeks later with General Pershing on the Baltic.

We remained in England and France for 6 months. We were sent up front with the French. As there were only three in my family—my father having died when we were children—mother insisted upon going everywhere with us. She was 36 years old at the time, and suffered such a severe case of shell shock that she is an invalid today as a result of it. But we got 86,000 feet of film, with everyone working for us from the King and Queen of England to the French and British common soldiers, before we sailed for home late in October. From this material we made three pictures. Perhaps some of you may recall them. There was a 12-reel film, called Hearts of the World, which was the story of a little girl living in France, who was about to be married to a French boy when the war broke out and he became a common soldier.

You may recall two of the most effective scenes in this picture. One after the girl sees her home and mother and grandfather blown to bits before her eyes, loses her mind, and goes roaming along the battlefield, hugging all that is left of her wedding veil, when she stumbles upon her fiancé wounded and unconscious, and goes to sleep peacefully at his side. The other scene shows three small French children, left alone with their dead mother, digging her grave and burying her without help.

They were most effective scenes, calculated to stir the emotions of the Americans so that they would be willing to fight and die for the cause. The Great Love was the story of English bravery while under fire from the Zeppelins. The Greatest Thing in Life was the story of an American snob being drafted and finding himself in a shell hole in no-man's land, with a dying American colored soldier in his arms. The colored man, in his delirium, thinks the other man is his mammy, and asks her for a farewell kiss, which our American snob gives him, thereby learning something of the brotherhood of man. These were good stories, and deeply moving ones.

The only trouble with them, however, that we could find when we ran them 6 or 7 years ago, was that the Huns, as the Germans were then called, and the Beast of Berlin, the favorite title those days for the Kaiser, the man who was destroying civilization and our liberties, were so villainous and dastardly that the audience, looking at the pictures, screamed with laughter. Every time a Hun came near me, he knocked me down, kicked me, or beat me with a cat-o-nine-tails. Now, with propagandized hysteria at its present peak, who knows but what the audience that shrieked with such glee, might not take these films seriously again?

GRIM WAR REALITIES

We were in many air raids in London. I remember the first daylight raid. When the planes came over, flying 18,000 feet high, they looked like little specks in the sky. They hit a school in White Chapel. The bombs, coming from such height, went through the building to the ground floor and kindergarten classes before it exploded, killing 95 children around the ages of 5 and 6. We arrived on the scene to watch the mothers and fathers as they looked for the arms, legs or bits of their children. I couldn't attempt to describe in detail what we saw.

Mr. Griffith gave us orders that when we were not actually engaged in rehearsing or working on the films that we were to spend our time at Waterloo or Victoria stations to watch the farewells of the people or the wounded arriving. He said, "You want to be actresses? There never was a time in the history of the world when you could have a better chance to study human emotions off-guard."

I think it is safe to say we learned more of life in those 6 months than we could have learned in a lifetime of average living. Curiously enough, when we were in France, within easy range of shelling, we didn't suffer from fear as much as we had expected, as there the bombardment was constant, night and day. Usually, you got used to it after a few hours, and unless shelling broke very close, you somehow didn't seem to mind. Then, too, there were dugouts. We were billeted in the deep cellar of an old destroyed house, and living on flagloy, the baby lima bean of France, and we had the constant interest of getting unbelievably real and exciting scenes for our pictures. Perhaps, had we been older, it would have taken a greater toll of our health, as it did of our mother's.

RESPECT FOR THE ENEMY

One thing we noticed above all else in England and France, was what seemed to us a lack of hatred for the enemy. The English papers were full of editorials about the bravery of the Germans. They were burying with military honors the airmen brought down over England, as we were told they were paying equal respect to the British airmen brought down over Germany, because they admired bravery above all else.

We felt that a country with such sportsmanship could never be whipped, as they made every effort never to underestimate the strength of their enemy. I remember when we got back to America late in October 1917, the people asked us in all seriousness if it were true that the Germans cut off the hands and legs of old people and crucified little children. If you remember Sir Phillip Gibbs' book that was published in the early twenties, you will recall his admission that these stories were sent out for propaganda purposes. After 6 months' reading and hearing the healthy respect the English and French felt for their enemy, we were ashamed of the point of view of our own people. But in Europe, war is part of life; the people have always had it, they accept it, and don't get hysterical as we do.

I am not proud of the part I played in spreading hatred. Hate is an unhealthy and impractical thing. It has a way of acting as a boomerang to those doing the hating.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Since that time I have lived and worked in Europe for 8 years. I saw history made in Italy. Mussolini marched into Rome, October 22, 1922, with his bloodless revolution, and we arrived in Italy the last of November that same year to make Marion Crawford's The White Sister and George Eliot's Romola.

We watched that country where Florentines hated Romans, Romans hated Florentines, all of them hated Neopolitans, and so on, change from a divided nation of bad roads, where trains scheduled to leave at 2 o'clock were lucky to start at 4, telephone service so slow it was quicker to send notes by hand, gradually unite and become efficient. There was the great Catholic Church, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, there was the Italian royal family. Many mornings we passed the little King of Italy on his way to work as we were on our way to the studio. For 2 years we watched the gradual change in Italy, and when I was last there, some years ago, I found it had become as united and efficient as any other modern country.

I was to watch history being made again. This time in Germany. By 1928 the propagandized hysteria had been forgotten and Americans were flocking to Germany and Austria, some as tourists, some as students. I went there with my mother and her nurse, hoping to find superior medical aid, as she was, and still is, an invalid from the last war. Also to work on a story for the films based on the life of Theresa Newmann (of whom you may have heard), the peasant girl of Konnesreuth, with a stigmata, who suffers through the Crucifixion every Friday that isn't a feast day. Hugo von Hoffman, the Austrian poet, was to write the story, and the great impresario, Max Reinhardt, was to direct it. I had not been in Germany long before I was struck by the sense of sadness in the people. When I asked about it, a Rumanian friend, Dr. Kommer, explained that the people were so heavily taxed for the next 56 years that they felt there was no hope for them, their children, or their unborn children, and all because they had made a peace when not an inch of their soil had been invaded, and had been promised a just peace.

I watched this for 6 months, when I returned to work in America. My mother remained in Germany for a year, then on to England for 6 months. But we both know now that the finest medical aid is to be found here at home.

BEWARE OF FALSE SLOGANS

I returned to the center of Europe nearly every summer for the next 10 years. By 1930, in Germany, I saw shoulders straightening, young men looking hopeful, and heard strange words like "anti-Semetic," which were not in our vocabulary.

In 1932, the change was so apparent to an outsider that I was begging some of my good friends to come to this country, which was freer from racial prejudices. But they laughed at me, and said that it couldn't happen there.

I was in France, and saw that great country grow soft, demanding more and more, while working less and less. I was there during their sit-down strikes.

Many of my French friends told me at that time, that only the Spanish revolution had saved the French from the same fate.

In 1938, I was in Czechoslovakia, where the Czechoslovakians told me not to worry about their little country—it had too many friends to let anything happen there. Now, I see my own country marching to civil war, and there are still people saying it can't happen here.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF WAR

We believed in the last war and we won it but what good did it do anyone? We had 346,000 dead and wounded, an over-all cost of not less than $45,000,000,000, prohibition with its attendant hypocrisy, lawlessness, and gangsters, 10,000 bank failures, and a depression from which we have not yet recovered.

If there were any good that came to us out of the last war, I would like to know what it was—and we won that war. Mr. Wilson had a triumphal tour through Europe as savior (and he certainly was their Santa Claus), but we, the people, paid with blood, and tears, and suffering. The late F. Scott Fitzgerald once wrote that France was a land, England a people, and America a willingness of heart. Everyone knows that an Englishman has only one real love affair, and that is with England.

Of course, if what Maj. Al Williams said a few weeks ago is true, that you cannot get the American people to think, we may, with all this concentrated pressure, be forced into war; but if there is any foresight or justice in Washington, they will put it to a vote and let the people who have to pay for it decide.

If you were to believe what you hear and read, you would wonder if America is concerned at all with the problems a world war would bring to her own country. Why not bring freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom from fear, and freedom from want to our own land before we set out to bring it to those of other lands?

It seems to me that the only sane voice coming out of Europe at the moment is Pope Pius XII, who believes that a peace is better for the world today than a peace next week, next month, or next year.

Surely this is a time when every American citizen over 21 years of age must go deep into his conscience and decide for himself if he loves some other country better than he loves America, or hates Germany more than he loves America, or loves the United States most of all. If he loves some other country, my advice would be to go to that country and offer his or her help. If he hates Germany more, I cannot advise him, but if he loves this great land most, let him today, while there is still time, be a citizen worthy of the name and do something to keep us out of ruinous war, even if it is only a penny postal card of protest to his Congressmen and Senators.

Or perhaps he may follow me and join this committee, so appropriately named "America First." [Audience stands and applauds.]

In Defense of the People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD P. NYE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 29 (legislative day of Monday, May 26), 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial published in the Saturday Evening Post of May 31, 1941, entitled "In Defense of the People."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Saturday Evening Post of May 31, 1941]

IN DEFENSE OF THE PEOPLE

The seeds of propaganda are like natural seeds. You cannot expect the seed of the touch-me-not to grow and bring forth a thorn tree. Nor was it reasonable to expect that—

"The United States today is at peace and it is going to remain at peace"— implanted in the American mind October 30, 1940, or—

"Your President says this country is not going to war"— implanted November 2, 1940, or—

"The first purpose of our foreign policy is to keep our country out of war"— implanted November 2, 1940, all by the President, would in the spring of 1941 produce a unified passion for war.

The lend-lease law was from a seed secretly planted in the garden of the Government's mind. The people knew nothing about it. Suddenly in the winter it was revealed to them full grown, and they were dazed. Yet even as they looked at it they were told it was not what it appeared to be. They were to trust their Government, not their senses. It was not a law to get the country into war; it was a law to keep it out of war.

While it was on passage through Congress under this false representation, the reporters at every White House press conference asked the President the question the Congress was asking in vain, What would he do with the extraordinary powers about to be conferred upon him? His replies were jaunty, evasive, or sarcastic. They pointed out to him that within the powers of the lend-lease law he could give away American warships. At least it was not prohibited. He replied that neither did the law prohibit the President of the United States from standing on his head in the middle of Pennsylvania Avenue; and was there anybody who supposed he was going to do that?

Very soon after the enactment of the law he transferred to Great Britain a fleet of Coast Guard cutters, and after that, such a thing as the transfer of a motor-torpedo-boat fleet was a piece of news that the newspapers could put on an inside page.

When it had its lend-lease law safely in the drawer, the Government was ready to get into the war. The people were not. Each time the Institute of Public Opinion inserted its sampling instrument and drew it out, the temperature reading was low. Government by Gallup poll has its embarrassments.

A trick of the gardener for getting something he did not plant is called grafting. It requires very deft procedure. So did grafting war upon the no-war tree. Let us, therefore, observe it.

On April 8 the New York chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies announced a rally to be held in Madison Square Garden, New York, to "prepare the mind of America for the next step—if it should be made necessary, not by us but by Hitler—the convoying of our goods across the Atlantic." That was saying to send in the flag if necessary.

Knowing that this extraordinary committee had hitherto unerringly forecast "the next step," many people still were unbelieving. They remembered that the Secretary of the Navy, testifying for the lend-lease law before the House Foreign Relations Committee, had said about convoys under escort of American warships, "No, no; in my judgment that would be an act of war"; and especially they remembered that the President himself had said, "Convoys mean shooting, and shooting means war."

On April 15, the Secretary of War, testifying before a special committee of the Senate, said: "Our forces must be prepared for the possibilities of war in many and varied terrains, it being quite uncertain in what part of North or South or Central America, or even possibly other regions, it ultimately may be necessary to use them."

Other regions. That was startling. But after all, this was only the Secretary of War, and people remembered that on October 30 the President had said, "And while I am talking to you, mothers and fathers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before, but I shall say it again, and again, and again. Your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars."

On April 18, at a White House press conference, the President expressed deep anxiety over the fact that the American people were apparently not aware of the country's peril. The reporters added that the President was very guarded in his exchanges with the correspondents on the subject of convoys.

On April 19, by an act of fission, a group of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies resolved itself into a Fight for Freedom Committee, under a manifesto, saying that if Hitler did not sink America's aid to Great Britain, he was beaten; and that if he did, we were beaten. "This means," it said, "accepting the fact that we are at war, whether declared or undeclared." Once we accept the fact that we are at war, it said, "we shall at last find peace within ourselves." Senator CARTER GLASS, who had long before declared himself for war, accepted the chairmanship of this committee, and you would know, therefore, that its utterances would be candid and forthright. And this, we admit, was like an oasis of emotional and intellectual integrity.

On April 20, however, the Gallup poll showed still a low temperature reading—67 percent of the people saying "No" to naval aid to Great Britain, for fear that would mean shooting.

Convoy.

That was still the dangerous question.

On April 25 the New York Times led its front-page summary of the international situation with this paragraph: "Indications that the United States Government is preparing American opinion for the major step of convoying war materials to Great Britain emerged last night in the speeches delivered by Secretaries Hull and Knox."

The Secretary of State said, "Aid must reach its destination in the shortest of time and in maximum quantity. So ways must be found to do this."

That could hardly mean less than convoy and escort and to face the shooting. What else? And yet he did not quite say it.

The Secretary of the Navy, who while the lend-lease law was on passage announced that he was against transferring any more of the Navy to Great Britain and then immediately changed his mind, in his speech that same night said: "We have declared that the fight that England is making is our fight. We have likewise affirmed that the enemies she is fighting are our enemies. * * * we are in the fight to stay. * * * We have irrevocably committed ourselves. * * * Having gone thus far, we can only go on." And he adopted the words of the Fight for Freedom Committee, saying, "Hitler cannot allow our war supplies and food to reach England—he will be defeated if they do. We cannot allow our goods to be sunk in the Atlantic—we shall be beaten if we do."

Before this the Post had said it was too late to talk about staying out of a war we were already in; that we were already so far in that there could be no turning back but with humiliation and defeat. People did not believe it. For saying it we received a great many letters of grieved and indignant protest. Well, here was the Secretary of the Navy saying it for the Government, and that was a shock. If we turned back, we were beaten; therefore we could only go on. And yet he, too, avoided the fatal word—convoy.

The next day, at a White House press conference, the reporters questioned the President on these two speeches, one by his Secretary of State and one by his Secretary of the Navy. The President said he believed they spoke for a majority of the American people. But did they speak for him? To that he replied, "Yes; yes."

Was it then to be inferred, the reporters asked, that the Government had made up its mind to adopt the convoy system under escort of American warships? No. The Government, said the President, was not thinking of convoys. It had thought of another word—patrol. The "American neutrality patrol" would be extended. How far? He was glad somebody had asked that question—how far? It would be extended as far as was necessary, even beyond the Atlantic into the seven seas. On the difference between patrol and convoy, he said United States warships on neutrality patrol would be like the scouts that went ahead of the wagon trains in pioneer days on the plains to watch for savages. He was asked what the scouting warship would do if it sighted the savage on the high sea. He supposed it would relay the information back to the wagon trains.

After the words of the Secretary of the Navy the night before—words endorsed by the President—imagine an American neutrality patrol.

There we leave the record. It is a record of the Government treating the American people as if they were children.

More than that, it reveals a Government not sure of itself and afraid of the people, blaming them for a confusion in which they did not involve themselves, impatient with them for believing so many things that were not so that when the time came they could hardly believe they were in a war their Government was pledged to keep them out of.

Never did the Government tell the people they were in the war until it could say to them it was too late to turn back, or that to turn back would mean national defeat.

In defense of the people, we say, let the blame for disunity lie where it belongs. And yet the people are somewhat to blame. Knowing better, they believed a campaign book.

The Tennessee Valley Authority and National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. NORRIS

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 29 (legislative day of Monday, May 26), 1941

PRESS RELEASE BY TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a release issued by the Tennessee Valley Authority referring to the national-defense activities of that corporation.

I should like to call the attention of the Senate, and of others who may read this release, to the fact that it is almost beyond the power of imagination, considering all the circumstances, to realize what has been done by the Tennessee Valley Authority in the way of furnishing power for national-defense purposes. For instance, the statement says that in furnishing to the Aluminum Co. of America power to make aluminum they had a contract commencing in 1936 by virtue of which they furnished to the Aluminum Co. 30,000 kilowatts yearly of firm power. However, in order to keep that company going, they have been furnishing 150,000 kilowatts, which is 120,000 kilowatts above the amount called for by the contract. The Authority at the present time has power commitments of about 600,000 kilowatts, but it is averaging an output of 750,000 kilowatts. It is also conveying power from private companies of which eight are mentioned in this statement—from the place of generation to the place where it can be used and is being used now in national-defense operations.

There being no objection, the press release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The consumers of electricity in the Southeast can assist in the national-defense program by conserving electrical energy, the Tennessee Valley Authority announced today.

National-defense requirements have placed a tremendous strain on power systems of the Southeast, both public and private, but elimination of all unnecessary or wasteful uses of electricity will help meet the demand.

Drought conditions have caused a serious reduction in power available from the Aluminum Co. of America's generating plants and the T. V. A. is making every effort to provide enough power to make up this deficiency and continue the company's Alcoa plant at full defense production.

The Authority at the present time has power commitments of about 600,000 kilowatts, but it is averaging an output of 750,000 kilowatts. The excess is going almost entirely into the production of aluminum at the Alcoa, Tenn., plant of the Aluminum Co.

The Aluminum Co., a customer of the Authority since 1936, has a contract with T. V. A. for the purchase of 30,000 kilowatts of firm power. During the last 3 months the Authority has provided the company with power at the rate of about 150,000 kilowatts, or 120,000 kilowatts above the amount called for in the contract.

In the last month of this period, the Authority has provided the company with an average of about 175,000 kilowatts, or 145,000 kilowatts in excess of the contracted amount.

The Authority is now engaged in emergency construction to provide more power for the production of aluminum and for other national-defense uses in the Southeast. The projects, Cherokee Dam, on the Holston River, and a 180,000-kilowatt steam plant at Watts Bar, together with installations at downstream dams to use Cherokee storage, will add about 300,000 kilowatts to the T. V. A. system.

The Authority has advanced the construction schedule on the steam plant so that the first two units of the steam plant, aggregating 120,000 kilowatts, will be ready for operation November 1, instead of in February.

Other steps by which the T. V. A. is assisting in bringing power to Alcoa for production of aluminum are:

1. Cutting off of three of the four electric furnaces in the phosphate fertilizer plant at Muscle Shoals, freeing approximately 20,000 kilowatts of power.

2. Plans are under way for the construction of a 154,000-volt transmission line from Norris to connect with the Kentucky Utilities Co., at Pineville, Ky., and the Kentucky & West Virginia Power Co., at Hazard, Ky., to bring power from these sources to the defense industries.

3. Carrying out arrangements by which eight privately owned electric utilities will transmit off-peak power to the Authority for transfer to the Aluminum Co. plant. The companies participating are Appalachian Electric Power, Arkansas Power & Light, Kentucky-Tennessee Light & Power, Kentucky Utilities, Carolina Power & Light, Duke Power Co., Georgia Power, and Alabama Power.

Veterans' Legislation—Memorial Day

REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

Mr. RANKIN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to the fact that we had a World War a few years ago. The World War Veterans' Committee does not have the privilege of presenting bills from the floor as the Invalid Pensions Committee has, and therefore we have been unable to get consideration so far of our bill H. R. 4, to take care of the widows and orphans of veterans of the World War. We also have a bill to increase the pay of the totally disabled men and to take care of the veterans who are now disabled by old age.

I want to serve notice on the House now that I am going to make every effort to get the Rules Committee to give us a rule and that I shall object to any further suspensions of calendar Wednesday until we get this bill before the House.

If I cannot get the bill before the House in one of these ways, or get it up under suspension of the rules, then I shall have to resort to a petition.

MEMORIAL DAY

I appreciate what the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] said about Memorial Day, the day on which we pay tribute to our heroic dead. In that connection let me again remind the House that Memorial Day did not start with the order of General Logan in 1868. It was started by the Daughters of the Confederacy at Columbus, Miss., on April 25, 1866, when in decorating the graves of the Confederate dead they also decorated the graves of the Federal dead. Although the war had been over less than a year and Federal drumbeats echoed throughout the South, it brought from the pen of the Honorable Francis Miles Finch, a distinguished New York jurist, a little poem called The Blue and the Gray that will live as long as the Stars and Stripes continues to float over a free people or as long as the southern heart is stirred by the strains of Dixie.

This poem was first published in the Atlantic Monthly of September 1867, under the following caption and explanation:

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY

The women of Columbus, Miss., animated by nobler sentiments than are many of their sisters, have shown themselves impartial in their offerings made to the memory of the dead. They strewed flowers alike on the graves of the Confederate and of the National soldiers.—New York Tribune.

The example set by these noble women so impressed the American people that it prompted the setting aside of one day in each year for the purpose of strewing flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of the dead and, as I said, inspired Judge Finch to write his immortal poem, The Blue and the Gray, in which he said:

By the flow of the inland river;
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave-grass quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead.

Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the one, the Blue;
Under the other, the Gray.

These in the robings of glory,
Those in the gloom of defeat,
All with the battle-blood gory,
In the dusk of eternity meet.

Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the laurel, the Blue,
Under the willow, the Gray.

Concluding, he said:

No more shall the war cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead.

Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray.

John Fletcher Lacey

REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL M. LeCOMPTE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, in these days when wealth and natural resources are being destroyed in Europe and even in America, the rules of thrift and foresight seem for the moment almost hopelessly outmoded. I desire to call attention to the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of a distinguished citizen of my own State, Maj. John Fletcher Lacey, known by men and women everywhere as the father of our Federal conservation movement.

Major Lacey was born in New Martinsville, Va., now West Virginia, on May 30, 1841, just a century ago. As a brave soldier and a distinguished citizen, it is a fitting coincidence that the anniversary of his birth should become the day when each year we pay tribute to those illustrious warriors and public servants and those loved ones who have gone before.

John Fletcher Lacey migrated with his parents, John M. and Eleanor Patten Lacey, to Iowa in 1855, when he was a youngster of 14. Like Lincoln, his education was self-acquired. He once said:

When I was a boy in Virginia there was no schoolhouse in my town. A flood had carried it away, but the jail remained and was generally unoccupied; the debtor's prison in the second story was always empty, so the school was resumed in the jail.

It was under handicaps such as these that the youth of early America received the rudiments of learning. But their education was completed in the school of experience. Honesty, frugality, and industry were their schoolmasters.

Young Lacey early answered the call to arms for the preservation of the Union. He rose from private to lieutenant, was then elevated to Assistant Adjutant General United States Volunteers, and then brevetted Major of Volunteers on March 26, 1865, "for faithful and meritorious service during the campaign against Mobile."

Major Lacey was united in marriage with Martha J. Newell, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, September 19, 1865. With the war ended, he entered into the practice of law at Oskaloosa during the same year. He was named city solicitor in 1869 and his record as an attorney was a successful and an honorable one.

Like many public-spirited citizens of his native State, Major Lacey early became interested in politics. He was elected member of the Iowa House of Representatives in 1870 and served as a member of the city council of Oskaloosa in 1880–81. His interest in politics continued and his reputation as a statesman grew. He was elected a Member of the Fifty-first Congress (1889–91) from the Sixth Iowa District and served, too, in the National House of Representatives in the Fifty-third to the Fifty-ninth Congresses, inclusive (1893–1907). He was temporary chairman of the Iowa State Republican convention in 1898.

In addition to his other duties, Major Lacey found time for writing. He was the author of Lacey's Iowa Digest, 1870, and of Lacey's Railway Digest, 1875–84. In 1913 he was appointed a member of the advisory board on migratory birds.

It was during his long and illustrious service in Congress that Major Lacey won himself the title of father of Federal conservation. He was one of the pioneers in the national conservation movement. He worked for it from its inception. The legislation which bears his name was not something just handed to him by a bureau chief or department head for introduction in Congress. He was an authority along conservation lines and a conservationist not only in heart but in mind as well. He formulated bills, investigated, studied, and urged conservation outside Congress as well as within the walls of the National House. His reputation as a sponsor of Federal conservation soon became Nation-wide. His counsel and his assistance were sought by conservationists from every part of the United States. I think it appropriate that I mention some of his important activities specifically. Among the measures which he wrote or handled in the House of Representatives were the following:

1894, bill protecting game in Yellowstone National Park; 1897, first Lacey bill protecting birds; 1899, second Lacey bill protecting birds; 1900, third Lacey bill protecting and regulating importation and interstate shipment of birds, known as the Lacey Act; 1900, bill for buffalo refuge in New Mexico—failed to pass; 1902, appropriation for purchase of buffalo for Yellowstone National Park, act authorizing importation of eggs of game birds for propagation, Alaska game law; 1904, act protecting birds in bird reservations; 1905, act establishing Wichita Game Preserve in Oklahoma—the first national game preserve—approved January 24, 1905; transfer of forest reserves from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture; 1906, National Monuments Act.

In 1907 Major Lacey led the fight to maintain the Biological Survey, and in 1909 he provided important assistance in amending the Lacey Act.

It may be stated that the Lacey Act which was approved May 25, 1900, is the cornerstone and foundation of the entire structure of Federal conservation. On it have been built the present important and valuable fish and wildlife service of the Nation.

Major Lacey died at Oskaloosa, September 29, 1913. His interest in conservation and in wildlife did not terminate with the ending of his service in Congress. He frequently, in his later years, made the trip to Washington at his own expense in the interest of some legislation needed to carry on the conservation program.

Such in brief were the services of Major Lacey, soldier, lawyer, author, statesman, and father of the American conservation movement. While the years of his early youth were spent in the great Commonwealth of Virginia, it is with pride that I note he grew to manhood in the great Middle West, drew inspiration from and performed his valuable public service as a citizen of my own State of Iowa. His works are not sufficiently known to this generation of Americans. Let us take occasion to commemorate them on this Memorial Day, which marks the one hundredth anniversary of his birth.

In closing I beg to quote one paragraph from an address delivered before the Oskaloosa High School by Major Lacey on May 31, 1912, a little over a year before his death.

I am an optimist. * * * The bright side of a picture is the one most worthy to look upon. I take pleasure in believing that the last of May is the loveliest in the year; * * * that the American Republic is the best country in the world; that Iowa is the fairest and best State in the Union; that Mahaska is the finest one of the 99 counties; that Oskaloosa, though not the largest, is the best city in the State.

The Honorable Walter M. Pierce

REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

Mr. RANKIN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that tomorrow will be the eightieth birthday of one of the most active and one of the most valuable Members of this House, the Honorable WALTER M. PIERCE, of Oregon.

Governor PIERCE has rendered a most signal service throughout his long and useful career, and, as I have often said, he has done more for the people of the State of Oregon than any other man I have ever known in public life.

The Clerk of the House says it is an all-time record for a man to be elected to Congress after reaching his seventieth birthday, to serve here for five terms, being reelected four times. Maj. Charles M. Stedman, of North Carolina, was the only other man to be sworn in after reaching the age of 70, but he was elected at 69. He served in the House 19 years. Never before has a Democrat represented the Second Oregon District in this Congress. Our colleague is a real Democrat of the old school. He was Democratic national committeeman from Oregon during his early years in Congress.

Side by side, my colleague, WALTER M. PIERCE, and I have fought for public power, for public ownership and distribution of electricity. I have found him, as we have all found him, a good fighter, vigorous, active, tolerant, friendly, and kindly. He is a good forgetter, too, and when the battle is over he bears no ill will. His genius for friendship has made him warm friends in this House. Watching the Governor read without glasses and rushing around to get bills through, we feel inclined to say, "80 years young."

I said we had fought side by side for public power, and I take satisfaction in the fact that I have been with him in his big fight in Congress for support of the Bonneville project and the preservation for the public of the great electric power stream which flows from it. The Representative has made a series of speeches on public power which have stimulated interest in public ownership throughout the Pacific Northwest and, in fact, throughout the entire Nation. In those speeches he has presented a remarkable sequence of arguments for public ownership and distribution of electric power. They are a source of statistical and factual information which will long be of value. His background and experience have made him a strong member of the public power group in Congress.

He entered the light and power business as a sideline, building and operating a system which was later bought by the Power Trust. He learned the game.

Many years ago he became a public-power advocate and a foe of monopoly, especially as related to essential public utilities, forests, and other natural resources. Twenty-five years ago our colleague organized a people's power league designed to further the use of the Columbia for power and transportation. He has pioneered in this movement which will mean so much to the future.

Our colleague serves on the important Committee on Agriculture, where he has usually been the only member from the far West and from a great wheat-growing section. His speeches on agriculture form a real contribution to the subject which so vitally interests him now from the legislative aspect, and has so long interested him because of his associations with farming and farm organizations. Although he was graduated in law from Northwestern University and practiced law 10 years, his life has been devoted chiefly to farming, as a livestock and wheat grower. He loves cattle and wheat fields and farm life and farm people.

Oregon has magnificent forests—the finest left on our continent. The preservation of these forests is one of the major interests of the Congressman. He has served for the past few years on the Joint Forestry Committee, and, as an outgrowth of the hearings and the work of that committee, he has prepared a series of bills setting forth fundamentals of forest conservation through Federal and State cooperation.

The Governor's political career began in his early youth when he was elected to county offices. He was twice sent to the State Senate in Oregon, serving in that body 8 years, and was Governor for 4 years. He led a strong and winning fight for the income tax in Oregon, for market-road legislation, and for educational measures of vital importance to the State school system.

Always a liberal, he was closely identified with the popular government movement in Oregon which resulted in the initiative and referendum, direct primary, and the popular election of Senators. Oregon, "the political experiment station," was the first State to put into operation direct election of Senators, paving the way for amendment to the Federal Constitution.

No mention of Congressman PIERCE would be complete without recording his lifelong interest in education. He was a teacher in Kansas and in Illinois and arrived in Oregon a boy of 22 with a trunk full of good books. He continued teaching and was county school superintendent two terms. He was a stimulating teacher, long remembered and loved by students. He fathered much educational legislation and is especially proud of the Oregon Soldier's Education Act. Enacted from his bill after the World War, this law provided for State payments on college expenses for returned soldiers. For nearly a quarter of a century Mr. PIERCE was a member of the board of regents of Oregon State College.

Our colleague delights in his private library. He has a fine background of history and economics; he is bookish and intellectually eager. He likes to apply the knowledge gained from wide reading, and this is apparent in the series of his speeches recorded in our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

His friendliness often takes him over to the Republican side for visits, so on his eightieth birthday the good wishes of both sides of this House are generously meted out to him.

Someone said:

'Tis the sunset of life gives me mystical lore,
And coming events cast their shadows before.

In the long years that are stretched out before him I trust there will be just enough clouds to make a glorious sunset and that the shadowy figure of WALTER M. PIERCE will stretch across the State of Oregon to transmit his memory to generations yet to come.

May he be abundantly blessed with those things which Shakespeare says should accompany old age, as honor, love, obedience, troops of friends.

Anniversary of Birth of General Grant

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HATTON W. SUMNERS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. HATTON W. SUMNERS, OF TEXAS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the ninety-eighth anniversary of the birth of General Grant, I made some remarks in this Chamber, a sort of tribute of a southern man to General Grant whose military achievement had won for him the respect of the soldiers of the South and whose magnanimity had won for him the affection of the southern people.

Last week there died near my old home in Tennessee Mr. John Henry Gunter, the last Confederate soldier in that section of the State. He and my father were boyhood friends. They enlisted at the same time as privates in the Thirty-second Tennessee Regiment. They were each wounded in the Battle of Missionary Ridge. My father, who was promoted to the captaincy of their company, told me that John Henry was a brave soldier and a fine man. I know that he was a great citizen, a great man.

Mr. Speaker permission having been given, I tender to be reprinted, the address referred to, and with great respect and deep affection dedicate the address in which reference is made to the Confederate soldier to this grand old man, who lived honorably and usefully his nearly 98 years on the farm where he was born, respected and loved by all the people who knew him.

The request made is also not without the hope that it may be helpful at home and that possibly somewhere, sometime, in this war-torn world this example of Grant and the universal tribute to his magnanimity and decency may tend to shame the bloody deeds of brutal men.

The address follows:

SPEECH OF HON. HATTON W. SUMNERS, OF TEXAS, APRIL 27, 1920

NINETY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF GENERAL GRANT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, 98 years ago today Ulysses S. Grant, commander in chief of the Union Army during the decisive battles of the Civil War and eighteenth President of the United States, was born.

My colleagues may be curious as to what impulse should have prompted me, a southern man, true to the traditions of his people, the son of a Confederate soldier, proud of his father's service and sacrifice, to offer now words of commendation for the service and in commemoration of this leader of the military forces arrayed against my own people, this chieftain who forced the surrender of the immortal Lee at Appomattox.

A few months ago by the merest accident I came across the records of General Grant's testimony before the Judiciary Committee of the House in 1867. This testimony gave to me a new insight into General Grant's attitude toward the southern people and a clearer understanding of the peril in which he placed himself in order to protect them at a time when he alone could do it and of the service which he rendered the Nation by that protection.

I realize fully that I am on dangerous ground today, but I would despise myself utterly if danger of being misunderstood should cause me, in silence, to permit this day to pass while every sentiment of gratitude and of justice bids me speak, especially as there is no legislative program today. [Applause.]

I speak because I am a southern man; because I love my people of the South and am grateful to those who served them in the hour of their distress. In the darkest hour which ever hung its shadows over the Southland, General Grant was the friend of my people and the servant of the highest interest of my Nation. [Applause.] I speak because I love my Nation and its unity, my Nation and its people everywhere. I speak the gratitude of a southern man, and in behalf of my Nation I speak the profound appreciation of one who believes himself to be a patriot, through whose patriotism there runs no line of sectional cleavage. I honor the memory of Grant not only for the magnanimity shown Lee and his army at Appomattox, but for the fact when Lincoln had fallen General Grant was the only man in the Nation with the power to defend who had also the purpose and the courage to defend those who had been the military leaders of the South; those whom the South, bleeding and exhausted, could no longer defend. General Grant stood between them in that terrible crisis and that breed of human jackals not peculiar to the North, not peculiar to any time or to any people, which always follow in the footsteps of brave men in conflict. They were demanding that Lee and Johnston and others of Confederate service and fame be delivered up for humiliation and punishment. There would have been no danger if Lincoln had lived. When Richmond was captured, Lincoln's attitude was epitomized in a story which he told, the point of which was expressed in the words, "Let 'em up light." Lincoln understood, but Lincoln was gone.

The South was helpless. There were many noble, generous men of position and influence in the North, but there was but one man left in all the broad confines of the Nation who both willed to protect and who had the power to protect my people and preserve for my Nation that thing of inestimable value, the possibility of that to which we have attained today—a Union; not of States held together by words and force merely, but a Union of people, of people so united in purpose, in interest, in love for each other, and in loyalty to a common flag that no discord can penetrate their solidarity even to test the strength of the Federal compact. [Applause.] This might have come in some other age, but Grant made that possibility for this generation.

He made it possible for us to do that which the framers of the Constitution, if they could have taken all the words of all the languages of all the ages and from them extracted all the elements of their strength and fashioned them into a declaration of perpetual, indissoluble unity, could not have done. He made it possible for us to put the cement into the sand, to supply that which among a free people must constitute the real cohesive element in government.

We southern people recognize Grant as a great general, but it was not in military conflict that he was greatest. General Grant was a great military leader at Appomattox, but he was greater when the battle was over. [Applause.]

This is the picture: Sheridan was in front of Lee's decimated, hungry, exhausted army. Meade was on his rear and right flank, and Ord on the south. Grant knew that the end had come. On April 7, 1865, he opened negotiations with Lee with this remarkable communication. I quote:

"GENERAL: The result of the last week must convince you of the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia in this struggle. I feel that it is so, and regard it as my duty to shift from myself the responsibility of any further effusion of blood by asking of you the surrender of that portion of the Confederate States army known as the army of northern Virginia."

Lee replied with the request for "the terms you will offer on condition of its surrender," on the same date. On April 8 Grant replied:

"I would say that, peace being my great desire, there is but one condition I would insist upon, namely, that the men and officers surrendered shall be disqualified for taking up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged. I will meet you, or will designate officers to meet any officers you may name for the same purpose, at any point agreeable to you, for the purpose of arranging definitely the terms upon which the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia will be received."

In reply Lee declined to meet General Grant solely "with a view to surrender the army of northern Virginia."

On April 9 General Grant replied that he had no authority to treat on the subject of peace.

At sunrise on the 9th, Gordon had found himself unable to open up the way for the retreating army, and General Lee dispatched the following note to General Grant:

"GENERAL: I received your note this morning on the picket line, whither I had come to meet you and ascertain definitely what terms were embraced in your proposition of yesterday with reference to the surrender of this army. I now request an interview in accordance with the offer contained in your letter of yesterday for that purpose."

The desired interview was given by General Grant. The two commanders met in the village of Appomattox Courthouse.

It is probable that no scene like that was ever before witnessed. In order to appreciate how remarkable it was we must bear in mind that not only was the army of General Lee about to be surrendered, together with its general, one of the greatest military geniuses of all times, but the South had reached the end of its resources. Grant was the absolute master of the situation. His hands were free, his will was supreme. He could have driven the dagger of humiliation into the heart of his defenseless foe, but instead he voluntarily stipulated, I quote:

"The officers to give their individual paroles not to take up arms against the United States until properly exchanged and each company or regimental commander to give a like parole for the men of his command. The officers to retain their sidearms, private horses, and baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to his home (note this language), not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as they observe their parole and the laws in force where they may reside."

These terms were made with Lincoln's approval. In addition to these terms Grant instructed his commissioners designated to receive the surrender of Lee's army to permit the private soldiers to take away the horses to reestablish themselves on their farms and directed that the hungry men being paroled should receive the rations which Lee requested for them.

During the whole of the negotiations those who were present tell us, and so does General Grant himself, that Lee was compelled more than once to direct the attention of General Grant to the business which had called them together. On that occasion this rugged man of many battles demonstrated a tender deference and a profound respect and sympathy for General Lee, which appeals to the gratitude and to the affectionate regard for Grant of every true southern man [applause]; and not only do I feel that gratitude as a southern man, but as a citizen of this Republic who has never felt estranged from it, I realize that General Grant's conduct on that occasion, and especially during the 2 fateful years which followed, more than anything else has made it possible for the hearts of the southern people to thrill, as now they do, with real vital love for the selfsame flag which waved in final victory that day over Appomattox bloody field. The facts permit not a shadow of doubt. [Applause.]

That day, when the battle was ended, and the stars and bars, the proud emblem of the Confederacy, was furled forever above the broken fragments of the lost cause—that was the day and the occasion which challenged Grant in magnitude of possibility of service, not merely to the distressed, helpless people of the South, but to our common country, as no given battle had challenged him. He arose to the full limit of the possibilities of that day, and in so doing reached a height sublime among the servants of his country which no man since his day has had the opportunity to measure up to. [Applause.]

I am not unmindful of the fact that no true soldier unnecessarily could have humiliated Lee at Appomattox or failed in consideration for the brave men who surrendered with him there. Lee challenged, his character and military genius compelled, respect and sympathy from every brave man, and no man unafraid to die for what he believed to be right could have failed in honor to the hungry, naked, brave-hearted men who were with Lee at the last. But Grant's treatment of Lee and his men at Appomattox was more than that. Only the bravest of the brave, inspired by true nobility of soul, could have done all that Grant did that day. I know of no parallel in the military history of the world. [Applause.]

But Grant's service to my people, and his defense of them did not end there; time will not permit the tracing of this heroic figure through the maze of the 2 terrible years—terrible for my people and dangerous for the Nation—when Grant, practically alone, with his prestige and power and at the peril of their loss, defended the men who had surrendered to him. [Applause.]

But I cannot close without giving you another glimpse of Grant. A scene which properly to portray would challenge the greatest genius of a Shakespeare. This is the setting:

The conflict between Congress and President Johnson had reached a crisis. Hot burned the flame of public passion. The Judiciary Committee of the House, laying the predicate for the President's impeachment, called General Grant as a witness. He faced a committee of northern men. To the North were the victors; to the South the vanquished. All that Grant had ever received had come from the North. From the northern viewpoint the South had been in rebellion and its people traitors.

President Johnson from many sources had been criticized for not having brought the southern leaders to trial and to punishment. That had become a definite subissue in the general controversy. I shall ask to be printed in connection with these remarks excerpts from General Grant's testimony on that occasion, and as you read, if you will, having in mind the temper of those times and General Grant's peculiar circumstances, you will see him before that committee, and as he was during those times, standing out in colossal proportions, as heroic a figure as the history of any age has produced, and you will all see clearly how great a debt the South owes, and now, since the smoke of conflict has rolled away, and we can see the truth, you will see how great a debt a reunited people owe to this man whose natal day we celebrate.

[Excerpts from General Grant's testimony before the House Judiciary, July 18, 1867]

"Q. * * *.

"A. * * * I frequently had to intercede for General Lee and other paroled officers, on the ground that their parole, so long as they obeyed the laws of the United States, protected them from arrest and trial. The President at that time occupied exactly the reverse grounds, viz, that they should be tried and punished. He wanted to know when the time would come that they should be punished. I told him not so long as they obeyed the laws and complied with the stipulation. That was the ground I took.

"Q. Did you not also insist that that applied as well to the common soldiers?

"A. Of course, it applied to everyone who took the parole. * * *

"Q. You looked on that in the nature of a parole and held that they could only be tried when they violated that parole?

"A. Yes; that was the view I took of the question.

"Q. That is your view still?

"A. Yes, sir; unquestionably.

"Q. Did you understand that to apply to General Lee?

"A. Certainly.

"Q. That was your understanding of the arrangement which you made with General Lee?

"A. That was my understanding of an arrangement which I gave voluntarily. * * *

"Q. You considered that the like terms were given by General Sherman to the armies which surrendered to him?

"A. Yes, sir; to all the armies that surrendered after that.

"Q. And you held that so long as they kept their parole of honor and obeyed the laws they were not subject to be tried by courts?

"A. That was my opinion. I will state here that I am not quite certain whether I am being tried or who is being tried by the questions asked.

"Q. Did the President insist that General Lee should be tried for treason?

"A. He contended for it.

"Q. And you claimed to him that the parole which General Lee had given would be violated in such trial?

"A. I did. I insisted on it that General Lee would not have surrendered his army and given up all their arms if he had supposed that after surrender he was going to be tried for treason and hanged. * * *

"Q. Did the President argue that question with you?

"A. There was not much argument about it; it was merely assertion.

"Q. After you had expressed your opinion upon it, did he coincide with you?

"A. No, sir; not then. He afterward got to agreeing with me on that subject. * * *

* * * * * *

"A. The conversations were frequent after the inauguration of Mr. Johnson. I cannot give the time. He seemed to be anxious to get at the leaders to punish them. He would say that the leaders of the rebellion must be punished, and that treason must be made odious. He cared nothing for the men in the ranks—the common men. He would let them go, for they were led into it by the leaders.

"Q. Did you not give your opinion at all that amnesty ought to be granted to those people to any extent?

"A. I know that I was in favor of some proclamation of the sort, and perhaps I may have said so. It was necessary to do something to establish governments and civil law there. I wanted to see that done, but I do not think I ever pretended to dictate what ought to be done.

"Q. Did you not advise?

"A. I do not think I ever did. I have given my opinions, perhaps, as to what has been done, but I do not think I advised any course myself any more than that I was very anxious to see something done to restore civil government in those States.

"Q. Did you recommend certain generals of the Confederate Army to the President for pardon who fell within the exemptions?

"A. Yes, sir; I recommended General Longstreet, I think, a year and a half ago; and, although I cannot recollect the names of anybody else, I think I recommended several others.

"Q. Do you recollect recommending J. G. French, a graduate of West Point?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What part did he take in the rebellion?

"A. He was a brigadier general.

"Q. Was he a graduate of West Point?

"A. He was; and a classmate of mine.

"Q. Do you recollect recommending the pardon of George H. Stuart?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What part did he take in the Confederate service?

"A. He was a general, and commanded a brigade or division. He took no very conspicuous part.

"Q. Was he a graduate of West Point?

"A. I think so.

"Q. He was not a classmate of yours?

"A. No, sir; he came along after me.

"Q. Do you recollect P. D. Roddy, said to be a rebel brigadier general?

"A. Yes, sir; I do not recollect what my endorsement was in Roddy's case, but I know that if I had it to do over again I would recommend his pardon very quickly, and I presume I did so. If he is not pardoned yet, I would be very glad to sign a recommendation for him now.

"Q. Did you ever advise the pardon of General Lee?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were you ever consulted on that question by the President?

"A. I do not recollect having had any conversation with him on the subject. I think it probable that I recommended verbally the pardon of General Johnston immediately after the surrender of his army, on account of the address he delivered to his army. I thought it in such good tone and spirit that we should distinguish between him and others who did not appear so well. I recollect speaking of that and saying that I should be glad if General Johnston received his pardon on account of the manly manner in which he addressed his troops.

"Q. By the CHAIRMAN: You supposed his pardon would have a good effect?

"A. Yes; I thought it would have a good effect. I am not sure whether I spoke on the subject to the Secretary of War or to the President.

"Q. By Mr. WOODBRIDGE. What did you mean by saying that the President's views afterward changed?

"A. I meant to say that while I was contending for the rights which those rebel paroled soldiers had, he was insisting on it that they should be punished. My remark was confined to that particular subject.

"Q. By Mr. THOMAS. You have stated your opinion as to the rights and privileges of General Lee and his soldiers; did you mean that to include any political rights?

"A. I have explained that I did not.

"Q. Was there any difference of opinion on that point between yourself and President Johnson at any time?

"A. On that point there was no difference of opinion; but there was as to whether the parole gave him any privileges or rights.

"Q. By Mr. ELDRIDGE. He claiming that it did not and you claiming that it did?

"A. He claiming that the time must come when they could be tried and punished, and I claiming that the time could not come except by a violation of their parole. I claimed that I gave them no political privileges, but that I had a right, as military commander, to arrange terms of surrender which should protect the lives of those prisoners. I believe it is conceded by everybody that I had that right. I know that Mr. Lincoln conceded it at that time."

I also include a most interesting letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29, 1920.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have read with great emotion your speech in the House of Representatives on the anniversary of the birth of General Grant. You eloquently uttered the feelings and sentiments of all old Confederate soldiers in regard to General Grant. I have the honor of being one of them, having been a member of Company B, Second Maryland Infantry, McComb's Brigade, Gen. Harry Heath's Division, of A. P. Hill's Corps.

The Federals broke through Wilcox's Division of the same corps at Hatchers Run on the 2d day of April 1865, and that morning we started on our retreat toward Appomattox Court House. We had marched 7 days on the retreat, with a pint of raw corn issued to us for rations every day until the morning of the 9th of April, when, upon emerging from a skirt of woods upon an open field at the top of a gentle hill with a slight valley below us, we beheld the Federal line of battle drawn up upon the opposite hill with skirmishers advanced and our own skirmishers facing them, about 250 or 300 yards apart. We felt sure we were about to charge them when, to our amazement, we were given orders to stack arms. One of our men exclaimed, "We are going to surrender." Capt. John W. Torsch, who was commanding our regiment, all our field officers having been killed or wounded, promptly ordered him under arrest; but in a very little while the reality became known and within half an hour Confederate and Federal soldiers were all intermingled.

Not an insulting word was uttered upon either side, and in little groups they began discussing the different battles they had been in against each other, and the Federal soldiers freely admitted that we had given them hell in the most of them.

General Grant ordered beeves from his own Army to be driven into our camp, and when they were butchered we cut slices of meat off the carcasses, stuck them on the ends of our ramrods, thrust them in the fire, and ate the meat without any bread. The commissary wagons had not been able to keep up on the rapid march.

In a little while we saw a squad of horsemen coming from the Federal lines and saw that it was a general and his staff. It proved to be General Lee coming from General Grant's headquarters. He was in full-dress uniform, boots and spurs beautifully shined, and as erect on old Traveler as is his statue in Statuary Hall. A day or two afterward we heard that General Grant apologized to General Lee for being in fatigue uniform, saying his headquarters wagon had not been able to keep up. When the men recognized General Lee, both Confederates and Federals lined the sides of the road as he passed along with his hat lifted above his head, the Federal soldiers cheering him as lustily as the Confederates.

Now, Mr. SUMNERS, begging you to excuse me for having troubled you with this little narrative of a great event in history, which I have hastily jotted down from memory, "et quorum pars parva fui," I wish to express to you my thanks and appreciation for your eloquent speech on General Grant's anniversary and subscribe myself.

Very truly yours,

A. W. NEALE.

[Applause.]

In properly estimating General Grant's service, not to the sections—North and South—but to a Nation reunited and conscious of the value of its national solidarity, it is necessary to bear in mind that the southern people at the time they seceded from the Union and at the time of the surrender believed they had a constitutional right to secede. They were conscious that in responding to the call of their respective States they had responded to the impulse of patriotism and not of treason. They believed their invaders and not themselves guilty of wrong.

Regardless of opinions on the point, it matters not such a people so believing, if ever to become dependable, helpful allies of those against whom such belief is held, must have something around which to build their allegiance. Suppression cannot make a people dependable; coercion is ineffective in that regard. Love alone can do it, and love is not a thing which can be put on and taken off at will, like a coat. It must be inspired by the object toward which it is directed. Patriotism is not of the head; it is of the heart. [Applause.]

When the poor, hungry Confederate soldiers rode in home where death and desolation reigned they were on old horses and mules, some of them were, which General Grant had allowed them to take. They told the people that General Grant had permitted them to have these animals. That fact, at that time, balanced with mighty weight against the load of bitterness and hatred with which the heart of the country was laden. We cannot estimate the possibility of that for the future good understanding between the sections. And when they learned in the South that General Grant seemed sad and depressed, as Grant himself states when he was receiving Lee's surrender, and the soldiers told the people at home that Grant stopped the firing of the cannon in celebration of Lee's surrender, and then when Grant with his mighty influence and unconquerable purpose defended their leaders against the violation of the terms of their parole there was put into the bitterness of the souls of the southern people, which they felt against the North at an hour when it would be most effective, this antidote of magnanimity from General Grant, the military chieftain of the North. [Applause.]

I am glad, and so are the southern people glad, that the institution of slavery is gone. The price for its riddance was terrible; that it had to be paid is a reflection upon the leadership of that time, but that price, if nothing else would have sufficed, was not too great to rid ourselves of that thing which was destroying the superstructure and the very foundation of our civilization. [Applause.]

I will not apologize for the Confederate service of my father nor the act of secession on the part of the Southern States. Neither will the southern people apologize, nor need they apologize, but I am glad beyond words to express, and the southern people are glad, that the Union is not divided. [Applause.]

Wonderful history of a wonderful people. Here I, the son of a Confederate soldier, stand in my place in the Federal Congress. About me there are my colleagues from the South, practically all of whom, except the grand old man of North Carolina, Major Stedman, who himself wore the gray, are sons of Confederate soldiers, and now, in very truth and in fact, without reservation or qualification, we hold all we have, every drop of our blood, dedicated to that flag, glorious emblem of a united people. We, my brethren, North and South, by this achievement write a new chapter in the history of the world. [Applause.]

During the great war just ended, insofar as I know, no suspicion of disloyalty in a single instance attached itself to a Confederate soldier or to the son or daughter of a Confederate soldier. I am proud of that fact, and I challenge the history of the world for its parallel. How much Grant helped only a southern man can appreciate.

I saw these old men, with the fire of patriotism shining through their age-dimmed eyes, bring their sons and their grandsons to the flag of this Nation and sending them forth to die in its defense. I claim for my people no superior merit. My father taught me profound respect for the brave soldiers who came down from the North. My own association has taught me the worth and the sense of justice of northern people.

Ours is not to forget but to understand, not to forgive but to measure by the correct standards. One of the most remarkable spectacles in human history—one of the most difficult for an outsider to understand—is that of these old soldiers of the South, kindling the enthusiasm, and leading the procession of the sons of the South, marching to the defense of the same flag which Grant had carried at Appomattox. I would not detract from their glory. I am proud of them beyond words to express. [Applause.] The Nation ought to be proud of them. But I know how much Grant helped; I wonder if the North realizes what difficulties lay about the Confederate soldiers, unheeded, and what appeals to prejudice, involved in their experiences, fell on unresponsive ears, in that hour when the Nation called. Will you not go back through the intervening years to that day when the politicians of the two sections had wrought their work of disunion and view the situation from the viewpoint of the southern soldier? Then you can realize what Grant did. The southern soldiers faced then the choice and only the choice of fighting with their States to repel invasion or of joining the invaders of their homes. They had not originated the idea of secession. It was declared in this Chamber first in 1811 by Mr. Quincy, of Massachusetts. These statements are not made either in criticism or apology. They are just facts—facts which constitute the historical background and make understandable the psychology of the South and the importance of what Grant did. The first representative assembly to declare the right of a State to judge of the Constitution and to act upon its independent, sovereign judgment was the Hartford convention, held in 1814.

Mr. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, whom the people of that State sent to the seat of the great Webster, redeclared this right just 16 years before the Southern States seceded.

In 1843 it was declared by a group of northern statesmen. I quote:

"We hesitate not to say that annexation (of Texas) effected by any act or proceedings of the Federal Government or any of its departments would be identical with dissolution. * * * Not only inevitably result in dissolution of the Union but fully to justify it, and we not only assert that the people of the free States ought not to submit to this but we say with confidence they would not submit to it."

The States represented by these gentlemen did not secede, probably because it was beginning to become evident then that the section of which they were a part was coming into control of the Federal Government. But they did declare the identical doctrine of the southern secessionists, for the putting into execution of which Southern States 17 years later were invaded and ravaged by the States which these gentlemen represented at the time they signed this declaration. This address was signed by John Quincy Adams, ex-President of the United States; Seth M. Gates, of New York; William Slade, of Vermont; William Calhoun, of Massachusetts; Joshua R. Giddings, of Ohio; Sherlock J. Andrews, of Ohio; Nathaniel B. Borden, of Massachusetts; Thomas C. Chittenden, of New York; John Mattocks, of Vermont; Christopher Morgan, of New York; Joshua M. Howard—probably J. M. Howard—of Michigan; Victory Birdseye, of New York; Hiland Hall, of Vermont, all Members of the National Congress at the time they signed the address. This was the historical background.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired

Mr. HUDGSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be given 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his colleague may have an additional 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Confederate soldiers were conscious of the fact that they sought no conquest nor the exercise of coercion. They sought only to withdraw from the Northern States, between which and themselves there had developed unending bitterness and controversy, only the right of self-determination and self-government. They sought only to exercise a right which northern men had often declared to exist, and for which declaration no northern statesman had ever been repudiated by his constituency. I mean no offense. These things may be observed not only from the southern but from the general viewpoint.

Down upon the South came the host of the North with the sword in one hand and the torch in the other, for such are the instruments of war. The flag of this host was the flag of the Nation, the selfsame flag to which in the late war these old soldiers made the supreme contribution. When they made it there were upon their bodies the scars inflicted in the name of that flag. In its name as fair a land as ever the sun shone on, their own, their native land, had been made desolate.

When the fortunes of war had written its decree against them, that flag waved over their country the emblem of conquest and suppression. Beneath that flag the carpetbagger, the agent and representative of the National Government, pillaged this people in safe protection. No commission of restoration had ever borne to them the spirit of helpful human sympathy to build again in the ravaged theater of war.

The hand of the Federal Government when extended in their direction held no bounty, it was the hand of the tax gatherer, by the authority and power of that flag enforcing contributions from their poverty for those who had brought to them a visitation of death and a judgment of subjugation.

In a sense they had been ostracized, and for years after the Civil War traitor and treason had been the characterization which many of those who presumed to speak the Nation's voice uttered with reference to them; and yet, when the Nation called, I saw these old soldiers fight their way through these barriers, bringing with them all they had, their money and their young men, bone of their bone and blood of their blood, to lay upon the altar of the National Government. I want to emphasize that I claim for them no merit which I am not willing to concede to the Union soldier; and in that statement, which I make without reservation, I pay to the Union soldier the highest compliment which lies within the possibility of my command of words. The very qualities which made it possible for them to do this would have made it impossible if Grant, instead of doing as he did at Appomattox, had reversed his conduct, and if he had failed in his protection of Lee in that tragic hour in the Nation's life when passion sat in the seat of justice and Lee, the idol of the South, had been judicially murdered.

I do not want to speak extravagantly of General Grant on this occasion. It would be absurd to claim for him the major part of the credit for the attitude which the South sustains toward the National Government. The southern people and the northern people have wrought the situation; but I do not exaggerate when I declare that General Grant preserved for us the possibility of doing that in this generation. Nobody will charge me with being sectional or intensely partisan, but as I search my own heart I declare it to be my deliberate judgment that if, in addition to what had been done to the South in the name of the National Government, Grant had not in its name done as he did at the time of the surrender and the things had been done which Grant prevented, the great-grandsons of the Confederate soldiers would have been in the Nation, but not of it. That is my deliberate judgment.

I am grateful to General Grant not only for what he did for my people of the South, but I am grateful to him for preserving for me and my people the possibility of feeling toward our Nation as we feel today. That was his great service. He preserved that possibility. I want my people of the South to see him, and I want the Nation to see him in the great crisis, sublimely magnificent in his humanity, in his understanding, in his sense of justice, and in his dauntless courage.

And may I not be pardoned if I confess gratification that incidentally we are brought to where a close-up view of the old soldiers of the South may be had, where, from their viewpoint, the vision may run back through the years of conflict and reconstruction, and we may see them when the Nation called breaking through the entanglements of wrongs inflicted, and wrongs imagined, of conflicting sentiments and dark uncertainty, into the clear light of a newborn national patriotism, bringing in their hands the resources of the South and about them the fighting men of the South. [Applause.]

Some day some man on that side of the aisle who comes from the Northland, with the spirit of Lincoln and the courage of Grant, will stand in his place here and will tell the world of the obscured facts of history which place the soldiers of the Southern Confederacy, as such, high among the world's patriots and heroes. We of both sections have too long hidden the clarifying and prejudice-eradicating facts behind the curtain of sectionalism. One people we were, one people we are and ever shall be, led at one time by circumstances into a great tragedy and placed in that conflict by the accident of environment upon the sides which we respectively occupied. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. How different might have been the story, gentlemen, if General Grant at Appomatox, instead of applying the balm of sympathy, a sort of first-aid to the terrible wounds of mind and soul, more terrible in some respects than their wounds of body, had driven the dagger of humiliation into the souls of those men who felt then that they had sought to act within their rights and had been invaded and pillaged and coerced by the North, for exercising a right which many of the northern leaders had often asserted and threatened to resort to.

How differently might have been the story if General Grant had not held back those who sought to reach the person of Lee, Joseph E. Johnston, and others of Confederate service and fame, until the sense of justice of the North could break away from the grip of prejudice which the war had fastened upon both sections.

As President Grant was the victim of evil times and of evil men, but as Commander in Chief of the Federal Army he saved the States from political disunion, and then by his magnanimity and courage he made it possible for us, for you, the sons of Union soldiers, and for us, sons of Confederate soldiers, and for our fathers, to form now so solid a Union among ourselves, in purpose, in sympathy, in mutual interest, in common love for a common country and a common flag that no sectional discord can ever again reach through even to test the strength of the Federal compact. This is glory enough and service enough for any man.

As the son of a Confederate soldier, proud of the service and the sacrifice of his father, as one who believes himself to be a patriot through whose patriotism there runs no line of sectional cleavage, with gratitude for the service which General Grant rendered to our common country, with gratitude for his magnanimity to my people of the South in the hour of their darkest distress, and for his protection of them in the hour of their utter helplessness, I have asked the privilege of making this statement on this anniversary of the birth of General Grant. [Loud applause, the Members rising.]

America's Air Force Our First Line of Defense

REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

Mr. RANKIN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, any man who has had the illusion that our first line of defense was the British Navy, or the navy of any other foreign country, certainly has had that illusion dissipated in the last few days, with the battle of Crete, in which the air force of Germany almost destroyed a large portion of the British Navy, and in the battle of the Atlantic, in which the British Air Force destroyed Germany's most powerful battleship, the Bismarck.

The people I represent are disturbed over the fact that our first line of defense, which is our air force, is suffering as a result of strikes in our defense industries. They are worried over the fact that our program of national defense is being slowed down by these strikes. I received this morning a letter from Governor Johnson, of Mississippi, a former Member of this House, in which he asks why something is not done about these "damn Communists."

Governor Johnson further says:

Why should my child, who is only 21 years of age, be taken into the Army to do the menial labor necessary about the camps and to drill and do everything else that a private has to do for $21 per month, when many of the defense workers, that is, men who are working on defense projects, are striking and interfering with other people working on defense programs? I think they are the worst enemies that we have.

Any man who interferes with the Government's projects to defend itself is a traitor. The failure of the Government to control such situations is injuring the morale of the people of this country. I am astonished that the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States will not control them.

Mr. Speaker, I believe Governor Johnson expresses the views of an overwhelming majority of the people of Mississippi. Every Member of the House knows that I have done everything I could to stop these communistic activities in our defense industries.

Pleas to Union Fail to Release Potash Supply

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY R. SHEPPARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

ARTICLE FROM THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Raymond L. Hoadley, which was published in the New York Herald Tribune of May 29, 1941:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of May 29, 1941]

PLEAS TO UNION FAIL TO RELEASE POTASH SUPPLY—CALIFORNIA STRIKE, NOW IN ELEVENTH WEEK, THREATENS NEEDED NAVY SUPPLIES

(By Raymond L. Hoadley)

Despite urgent appeals from Sidney Hillman, Codirector of the Office of Production Management, and other defense officials, neither the Naval Research Laboratory nor industrial defense plants have been able to secure much-needed chemicals from the strike-bound Trona, Calif., plant of the American Potash & Chemical Co. The strike, now in its eleventh week, was certified as a defense strike by Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins to the National Mediation Board on April 29. Meanwhile all efforts to persuade the Congress of Industrial Organizations Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers' Union at Trona to permit the removal of defense material on hand at the plant have been unavailing.

The naval laboratory, it was learned yesterday, needs 40 tons of potassium chloride, chemical grade, for confidential use. American Potash is the only American company making this material and naval officials first took up the matter with the Office of Production Management about a month ago. The union also has refused to release a large quantity of borax and boric acid requested by Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y., makers of optical products, radio insulators, and other defense articles, while Maywood Chemical Co., Maywood, N. J., has made repeated appeals to Government officials for lithium salts—essential in the manufacture of submarine storage batteries—of which American Potash & Chemical is the sole source of supply.

DELAWARE CORPORATION

The Trona Co. makes a number of chemicals directly associated with defense and is one of the country's largest producers of borax, boric acid, and potash. It is a Delaware corporation, largely owned by a syndicate of Dutch and English bankers, whose holdings are understood to be impounded because of the war.

The C. I. O. union was recognized last December as the bargaining unit for the company's 1,200 employees, and subsequently a list of proposals were submitted to the management which included a closed shop, preferential hiring, unilateral arbitration of grievances, right to strike during the life of the contract, and a wage scale ranging from $1 to $1.50 an hour.

The company, in turn, offered to raise wages from 62½ cents an hour for Mexican and 67 cents for white common labor to 75 cents for both, while the mechanics' and machinists' pay was changed from $1.05 to $1.15 an hour. The latter rate, company officials say, is the same amount demanded by west coast shipyard machinists now on strike. The strike was called on March 14, with the closed shop and preferential hiring generally admitted to be the principal issues in dispute.

Besides the United States Conciliation Service, the Mediation Board was brought in to settle the strike. Both sides were called to Washington from April 29 to May 3 for conferences and a mediation panel is still attempting to end the dispute.

VERIFICATION REQUIRED

When the strike started the company had on hand a 2-month supply of borax, 1 month's supply of boric acid, and stocks of chemical potash and lithium salts. In reply to the requests of defense officials that some of these materials be released for armament and aid-Britain purposes, it is understood the union replied that under no circumstances would any cargo be released unless the union is fully satisfied of the defense need and that any representations would not be accepted without verification of the evidence tendered, regardless of its source.

Dies committee representatives have asserted that they have "uncontrovertible proof" William Gatley, a union leader in this prolonged tie-up, is a member of the Communist Party. Representative JOE STARNES, Democrat, of Alabama, exhibited in the House on Monday photostatic copies of alleged Communist registration books containing Mr. Gatley's name. Mr. STARNES charged at that time that the strike was being carried on under Communist influence. He assailed Reid Robinson, head of the International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, and Robert Lamson, who appeared before the mediation board for the strikers, and warned that "we are confronted with organized treason masquerading under the guise of certain C. I. O. unions." He termed the strike "a case of sabotage of our national-defense program."

Maywood Chemical Co. takes the entire lithium salt output of American Potash & Chemical Co. In answer to an inquiry yesterday concerning the strike, M. J. Hartung, vice president of Maywood, said, "If we had those salts it would very much speed up completion of substantial armament orders, for whose shipment both the British and Navy officials are pressing." Pointing out that there is no other place to get this material, Mr. Hartung said that the strike was "delaying and slowing up" these defense and export orders, whose nature he declined to disclose.

In the case of the Corning Glass Works, it was learned that three of six melting units producing borosilicate glasses were shut down 2 weeks ago, throwing several hundred employees out of work. The three other units, through cooperation of priority officials in O. P. M. and other borax makers, have been kept in operation on a wide range of defense products, including gage glasses, chemical ware for the medical departments of the Army and Navy, explosion-resisting globes for ship and submarine lighting, running lights for the Navy, Coast Guard, and aircraft. Material supplies are low and should one or more of these units be forced to close down it would take from 3 to 8 weeks to get them back in operation.

The shortage of bulk supplies of borax due to the strike is becoming more acute generally in the glass industry, according to the American Glass Review. McKee Glass Co., of Jeannette, Pa., is cited by the authoritative trade magazine as one of the plants with defense orders that may have to close down. Other companies mentioned as reporting a shortage are Macbeth-Evans Co., Charleroi, Pa.; Kopp Glass, Swissvale, Pa.; Anchor Hocking Glass, Lancaster, Ohio, and Consolidated Lamp & Glass, Coraopolis, Pa. Kimble Glass Co., Vineland, N. J., is reported as another company with defense orders that has felt the shortage.

Whom Will the United States Intern?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STEPHEN A. DAY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

Mr. DAY. Mr. Speaker, in further emphasis of the spirit of intolerance which is growing in the Nation by threats of our actual involvement in war, already inspired articles are appearing which reflect the acute division of our people. We have millions of good Americans descended from foreign stocks of various kinds and they are just as good citizens as others who would reflect upon them cruelly if we are to become involved in war. Many of us recall the bitterness of 1917 and 1918 when prejudice ran rampant.

Can it be possible that anyone would seriously suggest that the rank and file of such organizations as the America First Committee and Keep America Out of War Committee should be scrutinized and perhaps interned by Federal investigators? Can it be possible that the rank and file of such organizations as Federal Union which openly advocates the overthrow of our Constitution and a a union now with foreign nations will be unmolested if war comes while prejudiced officials will inflict their venom on patriotic organizations which are opposed to war and actively support our present form of government and our free American institutions?

Many will be shocked to know that plans are being considered to intern millions of good Americans and in this connection we call attention to the following article appearing in the May issue of this year in the magazine the Living Age, written by Stephen Naft:

[From the Living Age of May 1941]

WHOM WILL THE UNITED STATES INTERN?

(By Stephen Naft)

Infinitely more complex problems of internal defense will confront the United States if it enters the war than it faced during World War No. 1. Chief among these problems will be that of internment of individuals hostile to American intervention once they have been apprehended, which may not be so simple a task. In 1917-18, on the one hand there were certain abuses in the internment procedure followed, while on the other there was also a considerable quantity of sabotage committed by aliens who should not have been at large. The problem of locating dangerous aliens, or those potentially dangerous, and the various measures that should be taken to guard against sabotage is one of vast complication. Common sense dictates that mob action and antialien hysteria must be prevented, but at the same time it is obvious that a serious outbreak of industrial sabotage could nullify America's war effort and win the struggle for Germany.

It is well to remember that World War No. 1 was a war of nations, and that so far as the problem of aliens was concerned agents of the Department of Justice had only to maintain surveillance over German nationals in this country; the number of German-Austrians, Bulgarians, and Turks in the United States during that period was negligible. The present war, however, is not one of nations alone. It is a war of conflicting ideologies, and the potential enemies of this country cannot be easily ranged according to their national allegiances. There are, for example, a certain number of American citizens who, consciously or otherwise, are enemies of the democratic status quo, and some of these are third-generation Americans. In other words, the ideological loyalties and enmities in this world revolution are a much more potent factor in the situation than that of mere national loyalties.

In point of fact, there are only 5,000,000 persons classified as aliens in this country. But there are approximately 12,600,000 foreign-born residents here, many of whom continue to live in their own native, transplanted environment, and millions of them read newspapers (and propaganda publications) published in their own languages and printed here. For many of them, American citizenship has meant no more than handing over $5 to a clerk of the Department of Labor, that sum representing insurance against deportation.

According to the last published census (1930), the total number of individuals in the United States classified as "white, foreign stock" was nearly 39,000,000. It should be noted that in "white foreign stock," the Census Bureau includes those individuals of American birth, one or both of whose parents are foreign born. Of this total, 6,873,000 originated from Germany, with 1,609,000 individuals of German birth, and 4,547,000 originated from Italy, of whom 1,790,000 were born in Italy. It is obvious that the United States cannot consider, in the event of war, interning some 11,500,000 persons of "foreign stock" or, for that matter, even the 3,400,000 individuals who were born in Axis Nations, although that is precisely what has been done by all of the present belligerents, even in the case of naturalized citizens.

By reason of our number of aliens, and of naturalized subjects of Axis Nations, the task of the United States, should the necessity of interning them arise, will be a more arduous one than in any of the nations now at war. There is no simple mechanical or statistical operation by which the Federal Government could put all enemy aliens behind barbed wire; even if it were feasible, the result would be both grossly unjust and inefficient. By far the majority of American-born individuals here of German and Italian stock are interested only in earning a better living than they were able to in the countries of their origin; that holds true also of the foreign-born Germans and, particularly, of foreign-born Italians. Only a small percentage of this fraction of the population is interested in politics. The fact is that a substantial number of the Italian and German immigrants in the United States are more determined and fanatical enemies of the Fascist regimes in their native lands than are some native-born Americans who, until recently, freely expressed the belief that Hitler and Mussolini were public benefactors in their respective countries.

It may be safely assumed that few Jewish immigrants from Germany, Austria, and Czechoslovakia would represent any threat to a United States at war with the Axis. Of all the inhabitants here of foreign stock, only the few thousand Japanese can be regarded as loyal in a body to their ruler. Except in their case, consequently, the question of loyalty to the United States must be studied independently of geographical origin and naturalization documents.

It is not alarmist exaggeration to say that, should war come to the United States, the danger from enemies from within will be considerably greater than during the last war—and in the latter period, there was certainly no lack of sabotage committed by agents of the Central Powers. To take a sensational case: During the night of July 30, 1916 (more than 8 months before American entry into the war), most of the residents of New York and New Jersey were awakened by the explosion of 2,000,000 pounds of dynamite on Black Tom Island, in New York Harbor; the detonation was heard as far away as Camden and Philadelphia. Every window in Jersey City was shattered, as were most of those in downtown Manhattan and Brooklyn. Damages were estimated at $14,000,000. That German agents were responsible for this gigantic act of sabotage was the finding of the German Mixed Claims Commission which, in 1939, awarded damages to American plaintiffs.

There were hundreds of other, less spectacular, acts of sabotage both before and after Black Tom. Repeatedly, sticks of dynamite, equipped with detonating fuses, were uncovered aboard American cargo ships carrying war supplies to the Allies. Explosions destroyed parts of the Du Pont powder plants in New Jersey and Delaware, and the Hercules Powder Works and the Atlas Powder Mixing Plant were razed by sabotage. That these acts of destruction were planned and executed by German agents—while this Nation was still at peace—was eventually proved by seizure of correspondence between the agents responsible, Dr. Heinrich Albert, commercial attaché of the German Embassy at Washington, and the notorious Capt. Karl Boy-Ed, the German naval attaché. British agents found documents lost by the irrepressible Franz von Papen then military attaché at Washington and Mexico City, disclosing sums paid to enemy agents and the sabotage assignments given to them. The United States Government found evidence proving conclusively that German agents were plotting to blow up the main locks of the Welland Canal, connecting Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, through which munitions were carried from this country to Canada.

Most of the agents who committed or planned this sabotage acted solely for reasons of the monetary reward. But the situation that may now confront the United States is more serious. For every hired saboteur active here during World War I, there will be at least dozens of scores of voluntary, enthusiastic saboteurs who will act from what they regard as their principles and convictions, and who will be less likely than hired saboteurs to reveal their accomplices, if caught. The estimate has been made by the Department of Justice agents that there are between 20,000 and 50,000 determined Nazis and non-German pro-Nazis in America, who are expected to attack the security of the United States. Whatever their actual number may be, it is clear that they belong to all nationalities, that some of them are native Americans who will work either out of sympathy with totalitarian ideals or because inspired by hatred of England.

There is no doubt that the F. B. I. is in possession of a fairly accurate list of the most active and fanatic Nazis in this country. Many of them, incredibly enough, have revealed themselves by open display of swastikas, by the wearing of Storm Trooper uniforms (before that was forbidden in some States), and by their attendance at various Nazi camps in the United States. Others belong to organizations—whose names are almost all prefixed by "American"—that ostensibly stage demonstrations of "harmless sports"—these take the form of target practice, group instruction in the handling of explosives, night hikes which stage mock guerilla warfare, etc. Lists of such organizations have been published many times since their first enumeration last year in the bulletions of the Committee for Cultural Freedom and in various volumes on the "fifth column" in America—some of which admittedly are worthless pulp productions. The entire list of such groups would occupy more pages than space permits, but typical among them are such organizations as the American Nationalist Party, the American Nationalist Labor Party, the Deutsche Frontkämpferschaft (German Front Fighters), the Deutsch-Amerikanischer Zentralbund, Deutscher Kulturkampf Bund, German-American Civic Association, German-American Citizens Alliance, German League of Honor in America, Institute of Germans Living Abroad, Reichskrieger Bund, etc., etc. In addition to these groups, which do not deny their Nazi allegiance, there are various lesser societies which are either openly Nazi or which disguise their allegiance by half-hearted measures. Typical of these groups are the League of Sudeten Germans in America, the Steel Helmets, Friends of New Germany, the One Hundred Percent American Organization, Swastika League of America, the Ludendorff Bund, the Von Mackensen Drill Korps, Loyal Aryan Christians, and so on. Some of these groups serve as a "front" for pro-Nazi associations operating in secret.

There is a good reason to believe that the lists and other data of the F. B. I. are now sufficiently complete that leaders in the more dangerous of these groups could be interned before they might execute large-scale sabotage, although it is true that there already have been a number of explosions and fires of decidedly suspicious origin. Other "candidates for internment," as it were, would certainly be found by the F. B. I. among the editors and contributors to various Nazi and Fascist newspapers and weeklies in the United States.

The various groups in America of Fascist Italians, whose activities even now are of particular interest to the F. B. I. as well as to State, municipal, and county authorities, are organized along much the same lines as the Nazis. There are a large number of pro-Fascist organizations here which only differ in the degree of their militancy—for example, the Circolo Morgantini, Circolo Rossoni (Rossoni, a former I. W. W. leader in the United States, and publisher of a syndicalist weekly in New York, is now a member of Mussolini's cabinet), Dopolavoro Dux, Circolo Nazionale Impero, Lictor Federation, etc. Several radio stations in this country, among them WOV in New York and WMEX and WCOP in Boston, for a considerable time had Fascist broadcasts, and if war comes, such speakers as Negri, Neri, Capozzucchi, Forno, Garofalo, Cammarota-Cammi, Scotti, Guidi, Giannantonio, Gallucci, and a few others will doubtless be silenced by one or another means. (These speakers and their activities were the subject of a study by the American Council on Public Affairs, published last year.)

Until recently there was a tendency to regard Italian Fascists in this country as potentially less dangerous than their Nazi equivalents. There are indications that this view, in official quarters, is undergoing a marked change. It is recognized that Fascist agents here may be less experienced in terrorist acts and in sabotage methods than Nazi agents, but certainly recruits in considerable number could be found in the Italian gangster underworld here.

The two large Italian-language dailies in this country, Il Progresso Italo-Americano and the Corriere d'Italia, with a combined circulation of about 100,000, have supported the aggressive policies of the Axis, although they no longer declare themselves openly Fascist. The publisher, Generoso Pope, a member of Tammany, succeeds in the astonishing feat of supporting Mr. Roosevelt on one hand and Mussolini and Hitler on the other. If the United States enters the war Pope will certainly declare that he is for America first, in the same sense as the America First organization. That metamorphosis was performed during the last war by the New Yorker Staatszeitung, which was rabidly pro-German until America entered the war, when overnight it plumped for the Allies.

In the Spanish colony in the United States there is very little allegiance to the regime of the Spanish Fascists, or Falangists. There is a minimum of pro-Franco feeling among Latin Americans in the United States, probably none among the Puerto Ricans, and certainly not much among native-born Spaniards in this country. The few active Falangists can be easily traced by their association or connections with the several Falangist publications in this country, among them the Cara al Sol.

Officials who will decide who is to be interned will be compelled, in the event of war, to consider with some seriousness the ranks of those of Irish birth, or descent, who are followers of Father Coughlin. The latter, it will be recalled, vigorously defended those members of the Christian Front in New York City who last year were arrested for theft of firearms stolen from armories. Their leader, a German Nazi, committed suicide before their acquittal.

The question will arise, inevitably, what Americans of native birth might be regarded as dangerous by the Department of Justice in the case of war. Britain has not hesitated to intern those of her nationals who are Fascist sympathizers, among them Sir Oswald Mosley and his followers. It is to be expected that this Government will adopt the view—as in the last war—that discretion dictates the isolation of some Americans. Leaders of outspoken American Fascist organizations upon whom the eye of the Federal authorities will fall, will certainly include such individuals as Lawrence Denny, the "theoretician of American fascism," Maj. Gen. VanHorn Moseley, George Deatherage, James True, Dudley Pierrepont Gilbert, George W. Christians, Robert Edmondson, William Dudley Pelley, chief of the Silver Shirts; Joseph E. McWilliams, leader of the Christian Mobilizers; Gerald Winrod, who publishes the Defender, and Charles Hudson, who publishes America in Danger. There are other "super-patriots" of the same predilection for fascism who issue pamphlets arguing for fascism who issue pamphlets arguing that the President, Mrs. Roosevelt, and most high officials of the Federal Government are all "fifth columnists," and kindred fictions. While some of their members are well-meaning people who are not fully aware of the objectives they support, the rank and file of such organizations as the America First Committee, Keep America Out of War Committee, and particularly the Communist-controlled American Peace Mobilization Committee and the Yanks Are Not Coming Committee will be scrutinized by Federal investigators.

There are other elements which, although now professing violent opposition to the Nazi and Fascist regimes, might prove even more of a menace to the Nation's war effort than many more outspoken opponents of this Government. These are the Communists, the third totalitarian group. They are, of course, opposed to all aid to the democracies at war, and in their propaganda they demand the stoppage of all American aid to the belligerents, which at present means Britain. If we go to war, the Communists' propaganda will doubtless be suppressed, as it now has been in England. Moreover, the F. B. I. is well aware that many Communists are active in the C. I. O. unions whose members are at work on defense contracts, and that some of these Communists may be expected to obey implicitly Moscow orders to hamper this work. Representative MARTIN DIES, whose record for accuracy is not impeccable, recently estimated that about 8,000 Nazis are employed in direct or subsidiary war industries in the Middle West. It is recognized at Washington that while Communist workers belonging to the C. I. O. might not commit sabotage more serious than intermittent sit-down strikes, the Nazi workers (most of whom are naturalized citizens) would not shrink from direct acts of destruction. There is reason to believe that the F. B. I. knows where every one of these Nazi workers is employed and where he (or she) resides.

The United States has experienced one world war, and there is at least surface evidence that a few lessons have been learned. If the country declares war, past history has shown what measures may be adopted against indiscriminate antialien hysteria. Even in the World War, the Government was able to distinguish not only between friends and enemies at home, but also between dangerous and harmless nationals of enemy countries. Perhaps too much credence at that time was given by the Secret Service to the tens of thousands of anonymous or signed denunciations from private citizens of individuals suspected of espionage. Spy hunts became a national pastime, and too often were undertaken by private citizens only for purposes of venting their personal animosity. A letter written recently by Attorney General John J. Bennett, of New York, to Gov. Herbert Lehman suggests that, if war comes, better judgment may be exercised than was the case almost a quarter century ago.

"We have many letters listing as subversive groups, every German society and business organization in the State. Others complain that American-born sons of naturalized Germans are permitted to serve in the armed forces of the United States. Many are patently spurious and were designed clearly to impress us with the knowledge and the detective skill of the writers.

"The hysteria that was generated during the last war with its injustice and its injuries to American methods is still vivid in our memories. It should not be permitted to spring up again."

Action on the Home Front

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK B. KEEFE

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE CHILTON (WIS.) TIMES-JOURNAL

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, the Chilton Times-Journal, published in the city of Chilton, Wis., and edited by Mr. William McHale, has for many years maintained a courageous and enlightening editorial policy that has truly reflected the thought and attitude of the great rank and file of our people.

In its issue of May 22 appears an editorial entitled "Action on the Home Front." I consider this editorial exceedingly thought-provoking and one which should have the widest distribution. I am pleased to incorporate this editorial as part of these remarks.

[From the Chilton (Wis.) Times-Journal of May 22, 1941]

ACTION ON THE HOME FRONT

It must strike the thinking people of this country as a strange paradox to read the voluminous news stories and hear the unending radio discussions dealing with the gravity of the crisis which the Nation faces and read and hear, on the other hand, about the number of strikes that are holding up the preparedness program. One is compelled to wonder whether the internal situation does not hold a threat almost as grievous as that from outside. For unless the people of this country, and especially employers and employees, can get together and place the country's welfare above individual profits and wages, our Nation faces dark days.

We have been faced with an emergency now for a year, but no definite labor policy has been laid down. The great majority of strikes are based on demands for higher wages. In most cases the arbitration of them consists simply in granting part or all of the wage increase asked. Last week the National Mediation Board granted the entire wage demand made by an auto union against General Motors. With the Government agency sympathetic to the union's demand, there was nothing General Motors could do but accept. As most of the defense contracts are on a cost-plus basis, the bill for this vast wage increase will be passed on to the taxpayers. The action sets the stage for similar demands in other plants and probably for future demands by that particular union.

The wage increases are reflected in increasing costs of manufacturers. The farmers realize this and they want better prices for their products. The Government obliges by boosting loan values on the principal crops. Presently the laborers will be able to say that the cost of living is going up and may use that as the reason for a further wage increase. And so the spiraling process goes.

It would be unfair to the great majority of the workingmen of America to assume from the strike epidemic that their patriotism is measured by wage dollars. The great majority of the workers are, without a doubt, as ready to do their part and make sacrifices for the defense of their country as any other section of the population. Employers also have evidenced a willingness to do their share on a moderate profit basis. Anyway the income tax will practically confiscate large profits.

Why this lack of harmony and teamwork at a time when this country should be united and devoted religiously to the job of building the kind of defense that we are so capable of building? The answer is politics. Labor is powerful at the polls. No political party wants to antagonize the workers, even at this critical time when production delays threaten to imperil the Nation's safety.

It is a time when we need leadership that will place the national welfare above politics, leadership that will junk consideration of future votes to insure our future right to vote.

What is needed is so obvious that the man in the street can see it. The people are aware of the Nation's peril from within as well as from without, notwithstanding the sirupy words we hear about all being well. They are waiting for someone who has the vision and courage to speak out against the sordid dollar bickering. They will rally to the support of such a leader, and it is a pretty safe guess that with them will be the majority of industrial workers, that great body of men who would welcome a check on the wave of wildcat strikes.

To the casual observer it would seem that a small group of radical labor leaders have the Government hypnotized into believing that they express the will of the rank and file of the workers. If someone in authority could forget politics long enough to challenge this, he likely would be surprised at the response from all sections of the population.

We tried to cure the depression by the simple expedient of borrowing and spending, and it didn't work. We are trying to promote a defense program by pacifying agitators with a wage increase as often as they ask for it, and it isn't working and won't work. It is time that we realized appeasement at home may be as disastrous as appeasement abroad. It is time for action on the home front, time to adjourn domestic bickering and unite to meet the foreign threat.

Worse Than War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

EDITORIAL FROM THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial by Roy L. Smith, editor of the Christian Advocate, official publication of the Methodist Church:

[From the Christian Advocate of May 29, 1941]

WORSE THAN WAR

It is a common thing to hear it said these days that "there are some things worse than war." And the statement is true.

The destruction of cities, the impoverishment of populations, the sinking of ships, the sacking of libraries and art galleries, and the waste of natural resources during the last 2 years have combined to total the most staggering losses the race has ever known.

In other wars the soldiers at the front have bled and died. The conflict has been between armed forces, prepared for the struggle. But in this present horror, little children, the aged, the defenseless and helpless civilians have all been in the front lines. The number of casualties among the unarmed forces, with the possible exception of the Balkan campaign, have been greater than among the armed forces.

It is beyond the power of the human mind to compute the terrible record of hunger, disease, sufferings, fears, and tragedy which the war has written. The physical energy that has been consumed is without estimate. But even when all the agony and tears have been reckoned, and when all the losses of property have been accounted for it must still be admitted that there are other evils more evil than the deaths of men on the battlefield and the destruction of great and beautiful cities.

According to the Christian interpretation of life, there is no greater wrong than the debauchery of the human soul. Because we believe that man is made in the image of God we also believe that any debasement of humanity is a crime against the divine plan.

To plant hatreds in the human heart which corrode away the godliness of man is to work a worse havoc than to infect his body with a virulent disease. To turn nation against nation and race against race is to multiply the woes of the world and postpone the dawn of the spirit of brotherhood for a thousand years. It is to build barriers higher than the Andes, and separate men by gulfs more impassable than any known sea.

Nothing is dearer to the heart of the Christian than human liberty and freedom. The long history of our faith, reaching back almost twenty centuries, has been one unremitting struggle for the right of the individual to be the master of his own soul. Much worse than death is the enslavement of a soul that has the mint-mark of divinity.

Nothing can be more repugnant to the Christian conscience than to surrender the right to worship God in the pure air of freedom. Nothing is more contradictory of Christian idealism than life which is dictated in its every aspect by a state which acknowledges no authority higher than its own.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," our Master said, and the whole Christian enterprise has proceeded upon the principle that purity of heart and cleanness of soul is the goal toward which all children of God must strive. To fill the souls of men with the lust to kill, to stamp out all humanitarian sympathies, to order hordes of men by the millions to kill and to destroy is to brutalize the most glorious creature God ever created.

The glory of our American civilization has appeared in the opportunity it has accorded to all men to choose their own life work, their own form of worship, their own interests, and their own political principles. In spite of our failures to establish justice in all its forms and to provide privilege on an entirely equitable basis, our success in these directions has caused the exploited and the depressed of all the world to turn longing eyes in our direction and pray to whatever gods they worshiped for the chance to get to America and be free.

To sequester property, to dictate to free men how and where they shall work, to forbid youth the right to marry and rear children, to spend the accumulated treasure of a nation, to transform men of liberty and training into cogs in the machine of the state, to ration men's food, to prostitute all the human resources of a nation to the operation of the machinery of destruction—this is worse than war.

Everything that the modern civilized man enjoys as a benefit of civilization is the product of the administration of life through organized government. To destroy government is to destroy the very institution that has protected us thus far in the enjoyment of those rights with which we were endowed by the fact of our creation at the hands of God.

To weaken the confidence of men in the plighted word of their government, to undermine the faith of men in the righteousness and virtue of those who rule over them, to betray sacred trusts under the authority of military necessity, to make it impossible for men to believe in the most sacred institutions of their own making, to cause humanity to lose faith in itself and its capacity to govern itself in righteousness and equity is to sin against the race far more grievously than when we kill men's bodies.

The Christian faith, of all the great ethnic religions of the world, looks for the golden age of humanity to come sometime in the future. It is the only great world religion that does not turn the eyes of men back to a glory that is gone. Christians for 1,900 years have prayed, under the instructions of their Master, "Thy kingdom come." Our eyes are on the future.

To destroy the hopes of men and to send them back to welter and blood in utter despair is worse than mere killing and burning. To cause them to lose faith in the power of righteousnes to triumph, and in the survival value of goodness, is to destroy the fountains of greatness and glory.

To transform a nation of peace-loving, sober, kindly people into a mass of hating, imprecating, bombing, vengeful, frenzied, and fanatical individuals is worse than snuffing out their lives and leaving their bones to whiten unburied on battlefields.

Terrible as are the sins of the aggressors, it has always been true that the most fiendish fighter drags the bravest and the worthiest down to his level. Because he bombs our hospitals we bomb his. Because he torpedoes hospital ships flying our flag we drop incendiary bombs on the residential areas of his cities. Because he descends to bestiality we undertake to subdue him by greater ferocity.

It is perfectly true that there are other things that are worse than war, and, in the words of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, "war produces every one of them."—R. L. S.

The Cloakroom

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. LAMBERTSON

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, cheer up; it's to be a jolly war.

There really is such a thing as being scared stiff.

Our Bunker Hill can never be east of the Atlantic.

It is flattering Hitler too much to emphasize civilian defense.

The Chief has his new-made chance to show courage with labor in defense.

We'll bet Adolf never crosses our deadline if we don't cross it ourselves.

The ability of the Queen's fleet and planes to run down the Bismarck is refreshing.

A continued militant opposition to war will help the President to keep his promise.

Reducing W. P. A. one-third and tripling war production is in line with our new social gains.

We are not going to have unity for war over there until we declare it in the democratic way.

If we are going to command respect for the Monroe Doctrine, we must not stick our necks out too far.

The next thing for unity will be radio censorship, and even before an overt act is committed against us.

If Lindbergh had lied about what he was privileged to see in Germany, he would now be at the head of our air forces.

We agree completely with the message in that the wider the Nazi land effort the greater the danger to themselves.

If we hold our fire until we see the whites of their eyes, there is a big chance that there won't be any eyes there.

Corwin Hatfield, of Vermillion, writes not to shed salty tears over "the silenced peoples of Europe," for they are used to it.

One thing we didn't like about Woodrow Wilson as President was that he talked too much. That is the cause of most fist fights.

Franklin Roosevelt's fear of Hitler, of course, helps him to increase his own authority and to demand of his subjects that they "take loyal part from this moment forward."

Aviation and the Future Welfare of America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

ADDRESS OF HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH, OF WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, last Sunday afternoon it was my pleasure to have participated in the appropriate and largely attended exercises incident to formal ground breaking for the municipal airport for the city of Cumberland, Md.

This project, just now getting under way, will cost more than $2,000,000, and when completed will give that trading territory one of the finest commercial airports in the country.

The port itself is located on the West Virginia side of the Potomac River. In the matter of its location there was the fullest cooperation between the officials of the sister States. Such splendid understanding is particularly important in this ever-enlarging field of aeronautics.

My address on this occasion follows:

The lifeblood of a nation is its trade. To exist at all it must produce and sell its produce or its people die. To become great it must create markets for its production both within and without its borders. Even in the midst of war only a nation in its death throes would fail to prepare for peace and peaceful trade. That preparation may go no further than organized thinking by groups of experts. It may extend to the approved continuance of commercial activities, carefully selected for their post-war values. This is true today in both England and Germany. It is true to an even greater extent here in the United States, since we are yet so much less involved and hampered by war activity.

One lesson that the present war has taught us—a lesson that our airmen have been trying to pound into our heads for a long time—is that the future of world trade is inexorably bound up with the development of flying. The nation that has the best and the most planes, the best and the most highly trained pilots, the best and most ingenious designers, laboratory technicians, and productive capacity will, at that time, be in a favored position. But many other factors will enter into the problem. There must, above all else, be the national ability for long-range vision in a field that is so new to the thinking of the average citizen that he can only be educated to it over a period of years.

AIRPORTS ARE MAIN STREETS OF AVIATION

This airport that we are dedicating today is a symbol of what is ahead. An airport is the Main Street of aviation. Without it there can be no flying. To the city that possesses it, it becomes the focus of radiating lines of communication with other cities, other States, other countries. Through it the city has extended its circumference of living into the far reaches of the earth. The same might be said of other means of transportation but for the time element. Aviation has shrunk the earth to miniature dimensions. It has ended all normal conceptions of isolation. We have been told a great deal lately of the dangers to the United States in terms of flying time—that our great metropolitan areas are within easy bombing range of such and such a place; that our oceans no longer protect us. If this is true in time of national emergency—and it is bitterly true—then it will be equally true in another sense when there is nothing to fear from the skies above us. The nations now engaged in the cyclonic struggle abroad, because of the sacrifices they have made—in manpower, money, and commerce—will be all the more intent on reconstituting themselves in the markets beyond their borders. They will have developed aerial equipment and trained pilots to an extent that will give them immediate reason to make use of these resources in swiftly gaining those markets. They will do everything possible to win in that new battle of commerce.

WE MUST BUILD GREAT AIR FLEETS

And if we are not awake then to the new necessity, if we do not plan ahead for it now, we will be left very far to the rear of the procession. There was a time in our history when our foreign commerce was melting away before our eyes, because we had no real merchant marine comparable to that of other countries. We were an infant in world affairs, but we had the native shrewdness to realize what we needed—ships and more ships, the best and the fleetest possible. We built them, and the racing clippers went out across the world, under their clouds of canvas, to put the United States into the head of the procession.

We have been slow to recognize new international developments too many times in the past, but we cannot be slow this time. We can no longer satisfy ourselves by complacent regard of our riches at home. To a greater extent than ever before, we are a part of the world economy. We reflect its rising and falling curves with terrible rapidity. The balance of our foreign trade is practically always now the difference between profit and loss. Whether we like it or not, we must do what our forbears did and send our winged clippers searching the earth for the trade that will keep us lusty and growing.

We were 10 years late in beginning to try our wings in foreign air after the last war. Germany, England, Holland, and France were that much ahead of us when we entered the field. But we have made up for lost time. We have today the greatest flag service abroad in the world—46,000 route miles. We circle the southern half of the hemisphere, cross the Atlantic and Pacific, tap the Hebrides and the China coast. But that is only a bare start. With the secret plans on the factory drawing boards now—no mere draftsman's dream, but ships ready to leap into the air as soon as they can be built, we can emulate the story of those magnificent, tough clippers of old and maintain ourselves at the head of the procession. But it will not be too easy even then.

A MILLION PILOTS TO BE USED

One of the most encouraging facts in the picture is the number of highly trained pilots we will have available. In January 1939 we had just short of 23,000 certificated civilian airmen. By July 1, this year, we will have 100,000. That does not include the thousands of Army and Navy fliers who will come from the service schools. The day is not far distant when the total will number a million. These men are keen, young, eager, in love with their profession. They are among the world's finest. They will want jobs—they will not be content to go into offices and factories as groundlings, not after living so long in the freedom of the sky. If we are farsighted and intelligent, they will not have to—we shall need them for our urgent business elsewhere. They will take the place of the clipper crews of the older days and will bring home cargoes of treasure from far places.

And there will be need of others among them to carry our domestic cargoes here at home. The air transport industry here has just begun. In 1940, it flew 1,264,468,615 passenger miles. But at that it carried only about 1 percent of our population. The amount of air express and mail loading was infinitesimal.

ALL MAIL CARRIED BY AIR

Let me give you a look into what is ahead. All first-class mail carried by air—at a cost to the Government much less than is now being paid. You'll put an ordinary 3-cent stamp on your letters and they'll go by air. All the lighter cargo flying, with time cut so materially and cargo planes so increased in size and carrying capacity that the cost there will be no higher than it now is by rail. Passenger rates as low as 2 cents a mile—the present rail rates—because of the larger and more efficient planes and the tremendous increase in numbers of people flying. The family plane as cheap, as common, and as safe and easy to operate as the family flivver. Startling? Yes—but entirely provable.

That is where this airport of yours takes its place. I have called it the main street of aviation. It is just that. For the aviation of the future, we must have many thousands of airports, large and small, military and commercial, and private. Every one we build now, when they are so vitally necessary to our defense, is a dollar put into the bank of that future.

What do we have now? Increasing traffic problems, increasing safety problems. About 2,300 landing fields of all types, ranging from those that are little better than farm pastures to a handful with the finest runways, lighting, control, and other vital equipment. It has taken a long time to make the country realize how badly we need to improve and extend this airport system. We should have 1,500 more—not 10 years from now but within the next 2 or 3. Not any old fields, but planned, built, and managed on the basis of the ships that the factories will be turning out before we know it.

AIR TRAFFIC SHOWS BIG INCREASE

The Civil Aeronautics Administration, under which the national airport program is handled, in 1940 offered to Congress a long-range plan. It had watched commercial air traffic increase 136 percent between July 1938 and December of last year. It had seen the rapidly mounting certification of pilots as the civilian pilot-training program did its work. On top of all this, following the course of the emergency, it saw the military forces, to take care of their expansion, move into over 100 of the best fields. It seems hard to believe, but while all this was taking place the number of usable airports decreased by 33.

Because of these facts, action was imperative. Last October Congress appropriated $40,000,000, of the nearly $600,000,000 the C. A. A. had estimated as the cost of its plan, to be used for improvement or construction of not more than 250 fields necessary for defense. This program is well under way at nearly 200 sites. The sites were selected after conferences between the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce. Most of them, for strategic reasons, are concentrated around the perimeter of the country. For the next fiscal year a bill now before a conference committee of the Senate and House will give the C. A. A. an additional $94,000,000 to continue and expand this defense program.

IMPROVED AIRPORTS MUST BE BUILT

We have been extremely fortunate in all this, that as one good result of the depression the make-work program for the idle included another $200,000,000 spent on airports. That has been our backlog in the work now going on. But all of it adds up to a fraction of what we will have to do. The time will come, and come before we realize it, when every city of any size will not have one airport, but a series of them, designed for different purposes and different classes of planes. The private fields will be planned for safe and convenient pleasure and tourist flying; the military planes, fast and difficult to handle, will keep to their own areas; the air liners will, like the ship in Kipling's poem, a "lady" who will mage her more leisurely landings on spacious, obstruction-free ports. This division of purpose will be effective not only for efficiency but for safety as well.

Because the defense motive is so completely uppermost in our minds now, we are liable to forget that what we are building will be commercially valuable after the emergency has passed. But it is, as I have said before, only a beginning. The time must come when every city and town has overnight mail service, coast to coast. When the air liners come into every city of a size to justify their stops on an economic basis, and the smaller communities receive air-mail pick-up and feeder-line service suitable to their needs. When you can take the family plane and fly off to your favorite air park for a week end of fishing, even though it is hundreds of miles away. Or take a transport on a round-the-world cruise of a couple of weeks as casually as you took a steamer trip before the war.

ALL WILL PROFIT BY AVIATION

That is why you are dedicating this airport today. You are taking the first step for your city into active participation in the air age. Every one of you will benefit by it—the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker will prosper from this new freedom of communication. And that freedom will bring other freedoms with it and a new and greater growth for the democracy we are now defending. The wings of the eagle grow strong.

Tributes to Gutzon Borglum

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANCIS CASE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 6, 1941

EXCERPTS FROM VARIOUS NEWSPAPERS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the death of Gutzon Borglum March 6, 1941, called forth a most remarkable outpouring of editorial tributes to his life and work. Since the last years of his life were devoted to the shrine of democracy, the great American memorial at Mount Rushmore, in which he was commissioned by the Congress, it is appropriate that portions of those tributes should be preserved in the RECORD. Accordingly, under permission given by the House on the day of Mr. Borglum's death, I offer the following excerpts:

[From the McLaughlin (S. Dak.) Messenger]

A PRODUCT OF THE WEST

Borglum, the great sculptor is dead. His carving in granite on majestic Mount Rushmore, in the Black Hills of South Dakota, will endure until the dawn of doom. Gutzon Borglum was a product of the West. He was born in what is now the State of Idaho, where the border meets Utah. His father came from Denmark, a refugee following the Prussian War of 1864. Borglum as a youth displayed talent for art. His father sent him to the Thorvaldsen Royal Academy in Copenhagen, Denmark, where he received his initial training in marble. Following, he studied in Paris and other art centers of the world. He came to South Dakota and met Doane Robinson, at that time State historian. Mr. Robinson was interested in the sculptor's work in Georgia. Following other meetings Mr. Robinson conceived the idea of a memorial in the Black Hills. When President Coolidge spent his summer vacation in the Black Hills, in 1927, United States Senator Peter Norbeck suggested the idea to Mr. Coolidge. The President was impressed. At the following session of Congress funds were provided to carry out the project. Thus came about the world's greatest memorial in South Dakota.

[From the Minneapolis (Minn.) Star-Journal]

WORLD'S MOST DURABLE MONUMENT

No nation or civilization—not Egypt with its Pyramids, nor China with its Great Wall, nor England with its Stonehenge ruins—has a more durable monument than the one the late Gutzon Borglum hewed for the United States in the granite of Mount Rushmore in South Dakota's Black Hills. Beside it such man-made edifices as the Empire State Building or Rockefeller Center are tinsel toys.

Geologists say the huge figures of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt may erode about an inch every thousand years, but faces 60 feet high will begin to look only slightly weathered after 20,000 years, by which time they will be about four times as old as the Pyramids are today.

[From the Lemmon (S. Dak.) Tribune]

SHRINE OF DEMOCRACY

Borglum was the genius who created the heroic granite heads of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt on a mountain top in South Dakota's Black Hills. For the past 13 years he had poured his soul and his energies into the undertaking. He had pleaded with Presidents, argued with Congressmen, and braved the hazards of rocky slopes to shape the memorial, and he gloried in the colossal task.

Borglum called the big undertaking—the heads alone are 65 feet from crown to chin—the shrine of democracy. It was his conviction Americans would worship there a thousand years hence absorbing the spirit of vigorous freedom these Presidents fostered. Each curve and hollow was designed to stand 100,000 years of weathering.

[From the Sioux Falls (S. Dak.) Argus Leader]

ONE OF WORLD'S WONDERS

Rushmore today is something more than just a chiseled rock. It is a vivid realization of a majestic American dream. Borglum, the dreamer and the creator, drew out of the rugged mountain the picture he framed in his own mind—the mammoth busts of four extraordinary American citizens—Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt.

There, for all time, these quiet faces supreme in their size and in their conception, will gaze out upon America to inspire in all who see them a fresh and vital appreciation of the principles they emblazoned in the history of this Nation.

Rushmore was the enterprise that Borglum himself appraised as his masterpiece. He had other claims to fame, to be sure artistic achievements of sufficient quality and renown to set him apart. But they are dwarfed by Rushmore, which is already established in the public mind as one of the wonders of the world.

[From the Edgemont (S. Dak.) Tribune]

WILL SPEAK OF LIBERTY

Borglum is no more but his memorial in these Black Hills will live for centuries yet to come to attract liberty-loving peoples from all parts of the world. They will stand before the shrine and mediate the true meaning of democracy—the worth of liberty, of freedom, and of free action. They will reflect what it takes of energy, and of blood, to gain and to preserve for ourselves and for posterity America's prized liberty and freedom.

[From the Watertown (S. Dak.) Public Opinion]

SOUTH DAKOTA MISSES HIM

While South Dakota will always remember Mr. Borglum for the role he played in the creation of the Mount Rushmore Memorial and the resultant publicizing of the Black Hills and the State, this work was but a small part of this creative art, of which there are examples in many cities in so many parts of the world that he was an international figure in sculpturing.

He will be genuinely missed by South Dakota where there is a feeling of deep regret that he could not have lived to see the completion and final dedication of the national shrine he created on Rushmore.

[From the Pierre (S. Dak.) Capital-Journal]

A WORLD ARTIST

The death of Gutzon Borglum takes from the world one of its great artists. There is no great museum of sculpture which does not recognize his work, and some of the outstanding monuments in this Nation are the result of his genius. His most colossal work of course is the group on Mount Rushmore in the Black Hills.

[From the Rapid City (S. Dak.) Guide]

SCULPTOR'S GREATEST WORK

Borglum will not see Rushmore completed. The models he made are, however, complete, and his work will be carried on by his son, Lincoln. He left perfected plans and the transfer can be made, though he, himself, will not be here to direct it. Of course, his master touch will not be there to put on the final finish, but let us hope that his spirit will be here to hold the chisel and to strike the hammer.

Rushmore, of all the great works of the sculptor, will be Gutzon Borglum's shrine. Into it he poured his soul and his genius. From it he will gain world-wide renown and a chair among the world's most famous and noted artists.

[From the Lead (S. Dak.) Daily Call]

ARTIST'S CONCEPTION REALIZED

Borglum lived to achieve his dream, for even if those huge, calm stone figures never were touched again, their meaning and significance is there forever in imperishable granite for posterity. The fine carving on those expressive faces, which appear to gaze across the centuries with the aloof wisdom of time, is completed. Whatever remains to be done is concerned with fininishing the hands and the coats of the figures, or extraneous features of the project, such as the hall of records. Those four faces are finished, and they convey the meaning of the memorial—the essence of the artist's conception.

[From the Camp Crook (S. Dak.) Range Gazette]

HIS WORKS WERE COLOSSAL

Borglum, whose best known work was the nearly completed Mount Rushmore memorial in the Black Hills of South Dakota, was one artist whose work could be described as "colossal" without fear of overstatement. Countrysides were his studios, weather-beaten mountains his granite blocks and dynamite and power-driven hammers and chisels his tools of art.

[From the Aberdeen (S. Dak.) American News]

SCULPTOR'S MEMORIAL, TOO

Despite Borglum's international fame as a sculptor, the colossal Mount Rushmore Memorial in the Black Hills surpasses anything of its kind in contemporary artistry. Intended primarily, of course, to honor the memory of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt, the memorial, incidentally, brought lasting fame to the sculptor—fame which, even though secondary to the United States Presidents, is not to be minimized.

[From the Lemmon (S. Dak.) Leader]

RUSHMORE—AMERICAN SHRINE

Mount Rushmore will be his monument. It is there today because of his desire to create in the heart of America a memorial typical of the Nation itself, one that would endure forever where the atmosphere is always clean and fresh, where the surroundings are always beautiful.

He told us once that it was his desire that Mount Rushmore might become not only an outstanding scenic spot, but a shrine that would provide peace of mind and soul and inspiration for everyone who loved America. The master left before his work was finished, but his chisel has made a mark that will be both a beacon and an inspiration to all patriots through the ages to come.

[From the Los Angeles (Calif.) Times]

TRADITIONS OF UNITED STATES IN STONE

A man whose stupendous artistic visions were equaled by his enormous capacity for executing the work was Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor whose career has endured at the age of 69. America always will be a better place artistically and patriotically because he lived and labored. Not only was his outdoor work—hewed out of the faces of mountains—colossal. It was inspiring. It preserved the tradition of the United States in imperishable stone.

Borglum's work in many other forms has entered definitely into the sculptural destiny of America. He literally has earned a grateful remembrance along with the immortals he brought forth from stone.

[From the Mankato (Minn.) Free-Press]

INTEGRITY OF SPIRIT

His teachers used tiny hammers and chisels; Borglum expressed himself with dynamite and blasters and the hewing of hundreds of thousands of tons of stone. He expressed himself also in a life of utter art independence, and the refusal to take anybody else's word for it. That, his career told, was the artist's way

He was revered by sculptors and painters as a genius, and his work in many galleries and parks in America will be the best monument to his fame; but he will be remembered also in print because of the integrity and independence of his spirit. To him art came first, and for the authenticity of his place in the world he fought against Presidents, States, influential societies, powerful groups, all of which came at the end to respect and honor him.

[From the Buffalo (S. Dak.) Times-Herald]

WILL CONTINUE TO GROW

Mount Rushmore is proving one of the greatest attractions in the Nation and will continue to grow as people come to realize the wonderful work of Borglum in transforming the side of the mountain into giant figures of our noted Presidents.

[From the Black Hills Weekly, Deadwood, S. Dak.]

THE CANVAS INCOMPARABLE

Gutzon Borglum, his tanned, weather-beaten face turned to the ever-constant winds of Mount Rushmore, will carve no more on the granite side of the mountain on which the faces of Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, and Teddy Roosevelt will gaze out unperturbed over the peaceful pine-clad hills and valleys for half a million years to come.

Long after even the location of his final resting place is forgotten, the memorial will remain his shrine of democracy, his monument to the country which gave his penniless Danish parents their chance, the country which gave him his start, his opportunity to study, to work in a land of freedom, to become an international figure, and the power and the ability to carry on the fight for freedom.

But the national shrine at Rushmore will know him no more. No more will his short, stocky figure, his eyeglasses dangling from their button, swing energetically into the cage that carries his workmen from the studio across to the mountain. No more will he take readings and measurements from the studio model to transfer them to the gigantic structure on the mountain.

No more will his bright eye twinkle merrily as he approaches some stranger at the studio and asks his opinion of the memorial.

To some men are given oils and canvas for their paintings; to others clean white paper and ink; to others, the celluloid film. But to Gutzon Borglum had been given the canvas incomparable; a majestic granite cliff, over 6,000 feet above sea level, with a limitless background of cloud-drifted, blue sky. In enduring rock, which will outlast his youngest critics by millions of years, the figures which he carved on Mount Rushmore must be his masterpiece.

Into them so simply that their meaning is at once apparent he put all the force of his character, all the beauty of his art, all the dignity and power of the four men who typify periods in the development of the democracy. All this fits into the background of mountain and sky. It was a collossal undertaking, one that required patience and courage and deep sense of the artistic.

All these things appear on Mount Rushmore. "The figures of these four great men, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Teddy Roosevelt, are within the granite," the sculptor once said, "it is my duty and my privilege to remove the granite so that they may be seen."

Physical Defects of Young Men Drafted Into Military Service Should Be Corrected

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 28, 1941

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, it was gratifying to read news dispatches today in which Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Deputy Director of Selective Service System, is quoted as advocating corrective measures be taken immediately to remedy the physical disabilities discovered during examination of draftees.

In this connection I include at this point the text of a letter in which I recommended that such action be carried forward, following receipt of his letter to me in which suggestions were requested. The communications follow:

MAY 19, 1941.

Brig. Gen. LEWIS B. HERSHEY,
Deputy Director, National Headquarters Selective Service System, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GENERAL HERSHEY: I appreciate your letter of May 16 in which you express interest in the comments which members of Congress might desire to make on the operation of the Selective Service System.

It shall be my purpose to contact certain officials of the draft boards in my congressional district and get their reaction to the operations of the Selective Training and Service Act. I shall be glad to forward constructive suggestions to Captain Keesling, whom you have appointed as assistant operations executive.

It has been brought to my attention that 43 percent of the men examined for military training have been found ineligible for service due to physical disabilities. I believe that the large proportion of these have had trouble with their teeth. It would seem to me that a definite program should and must be undertaken to correct these physical shortcomings just as soon as possible. It is not enough to find the trouble, but attempts should certainly be made to improve the physical condition of these refused men. That procedure would seem to me to be the part of a good national policy, vital to our continued preparedness program.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1941.

The Honorable JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RANDOLPH: The Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 has been in effect for some months and during that time we have been bending every effort to secure the smoothest and most efficient possible operation of the Selective Service System.

We have, of course, been confronted with innumerable problems, and we will be faced with additional problems from time to time. However, we believe that we are satisfactorily solving these problems as they arise.

We have received many helpful comments and criticisms from time to time from Senators and Representatives, and have answered the many inquiries they have submitted concerning the operation of the Selective Service System.

We will welcome your comments, criticisms, and inquiries concerning the operations of the Selective Service System, and we shall endeavor to furnish you with satisfactory explanations and answers.

I have recently appointed Capt. Francis V. Keesling, Jr., as legislative officer for the Selective Service System in addition to his other duties as assistant operations executive, and he will be available to cooperate with you in the above matters.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS B. HERSHEY,
Deputy Director.

Mr. Speaker, I have as yet had no formal reply to my letter of May 19, but indicative of General Hershey's attitude are excerpts from the following news stories which appeared today in the Washington Post and the Washington Daily News.

The Post story follows:

HERSHEY SEES USE FOR MEN DRAFT REJECTED

Of approximately 400,000 registrants found unfit for general military service, at least 200,000 can be used for limited service, and perhaps half of the latter group are capable of rehabilitation for full service, which task should be done by Government agencies, Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, of the Selective Service System, yesterday told the National Nutrition Conference for Defense.

General Hershey, Deputy Director, national headquarters, did not specify what agencies might undertake the task, but inquiries among Government officials at the meeting indicated that the Civilian Conservation Corps, National Youth Administration, and the Vocational Rehabilitation Division of the Office of Education have been suggested.

"The 200,000 who are fitted for limited military service create a special problem. * * * I do not believe our people will continue indefinitely to accept avoidance of military obligations by the class to which I have just referred," General Hershey said at the afternoon session at the Mayflower Hotel.

IT'S A NATIONAL SHAME

On the basis of rejections for service, "we are physically in a condition of which we nationally should be thoroughly ashamed," he said.

General Hershey said he believes "it will be necessary to place the responsibility for the rehabilitation" of rejected registrants directly upon the Government.

"I realize that there are agencies in the Government at the present time which might be modified to serve as rehabilitation agencies—their part in the rehabilitation of the general public may or may not be feasible, but for this group liable for military service voluntary methods will not suffice. In the interest of public morale, these individuals should be compelled to render service to the Nation. In the public interest they should be improved physically while they are performing this national service," General Hershey said.

"I realize the tremendous task which has been placed upon the War Department by the necessities of the past year," he continued. "I am aware of the task which the induction of 100,000 or 200,000 limited service men would impose on an already overburdened agency. I am aware of the financial responsibilities which may accrue to the Government by the acceptance of below-standard men. On the other hand, there seem to be no other agencies capable of carrying out this task in a manner which will insure that the Government shall require service from the individual, while at the same time effective measures are undertaken to improve the physical condition of the individual," General Hershey said.

Martha Strayer, writing in the News, says this:

Brigadier General Hershey, speaking yesterday at the National Nutrition Conference, Mayflower Hotel, advocated Army induction for class I–B's (men found fit for limited military service, with minor physical defects) whose defects are correctible.

He would resort to forced correction of such defects, first inducting the men into the Army and assigning them to noncombat work which would relieve physically fit soldiers for combat duty.

Grand total of I–B's out of 1,000,000 physically examined, General Hershey reported as approximately 200,000. Of this total 120,000 were placed in the limited service classification by local doctors, and 55,000 more after examination at Army induction stations.

"Many of these individuals have every appearance of an able-bodied man," the draft head continued. "They are known in their communities as individuals capable of performing physical labor, or of participation in activities that require a reasonable amount of physical proficiency.

"We are confronted with the necessity for rehabilitation for members of this group where it is possible to better their physical condition and to attempt to discover an efficient place in defense for those with uncorrectable disabilities. * * *

ADDITIONAL ADVANTAGE

"There is work which can be done by limited service men that will relieve combat units from tasks which must be done, but whose doing interferes seriously with the training programs of these men inducted into service, for advantage to be gained by having these men inducted into service, for as they become rehabilitated they can take their places in combat units. * * *

"Noninduction of the limited service group constitutes a grave morale problem which will tend to increase. Measures must be taken to require service of these individuals and their development to a physical condition where they can do full physical duty if inducted. In general, this cannot be accomplished by voluntary efforts of the individuals concerned."

Association of Consistent Americans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN S. GIBSON
OF GEORGIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

LEAFLET DISTRIBUTED BY ASSOCIATION

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following leaflet put out by the Association of Consistent Americans in my district:

ASSOCIATION OF CONSISTENT AMERICANS,
ADEL, GA.

To Every Loyal American:

Realizing that every true American citizen deplores the apparent communistic influence over labor and inherently desires the practice of consistency in the matter of our preparedness program and national-defense efforts because of the grave peril we now face, and that each of them would like to contribute in some way toward the correction of this inconsistency in administration, this organization has been inaugurated.

The primary purpose is, of course, to acquaint the administration with that which is in the minds of the American people, believing that if the demand is great enough and sufficiently widespread it will obtain the desired result.

We are calling upon everyone that will to write to the President and to their respective Senators and Congressmen.

We are calling upon those that will to set up an organized group in their respective communities to see that the will of the people in that locality is properly expressed and presented to the administration.

Will you please appear before civic clubs, Legion posts, parent-teacher associations, and other such organizations and secure their cooperation in acquainting the President and the Congress with what is in the mind of the American public?

Your efforts in this regard will not only be a source of real joy to you as a patriot but will be appreciated by the millions who are equally perturbed over the conditions existing. Though we are facing a war unto death and destruction, our greatest enemy today is right in our midst because of utter inconsistency.

Respectfully yours,
ASSOCIATION OF CONSISTENT AMERICANS.

ASSOCIATION OF CONSISTENT AMERICANS

We believe in the fairness of the selective draft and in collective bargaining for labor, but we believe our Government should not permit a mere handful of men to completely nullify its effort toward preparedness. Our boys in the Army, who are expected when the time comes to make the supreme sacrifice, are not permitted to strike and lay down their arms and quit; neither should those engaged in the manufacture of the implements of war, so essential to our boys, be allowed to strike—lay down their tools and quit.

We do not believe the strikes now taking place in our industries are promoted by labor itself, but by certain leaders who are engaged in a movement wholly alien to the best interests of our Government.

We believe that Congress should exert its power in the same manner toward labor in defense industries as it has toward the flower of American manhood in the Army of defense by putting an immediate stop to strikes, or disband the Army and send our boys home.

ARTICLES OF ORGANIZATION

Name: The name of this organization shall be Association of Consistent Americans.

Purpose: To bring to the attention of the American people the inconsistency present in our program of national preparedness and to seek its correction.

To remove the stigma upon our democracy which permits the conscription of the flower of American manhood to be sacrificed on the field of battle at a wage of $21 per month and at the same time permit the leaders of those engaged in the manufacture of the essentials of warfare to promote strikes and through mass force nullify the efforts of our Government and the American people, though they are being paid the highest wages paid labor by any nation on earth.

Plan: To enlist the voluntary service and influence of every loyal American citizen in the creation of a widespread demand for consistent treatment of the Nation's defense efforts.

To provide the means through which the President of the United States and the Members of Congress may be informed as to the mind and attitude of the electorate of the Nation on the matter.

To call upon those of like mind to immediately give expression to their thoughts on the matter by communicating with the President and their respective Senators and Congressmen, and to set up in their respective localities a voluntary unit for the purpose.

Membership: Open to any American citizen who is willing and who desires to express himself on the matter. There are no membership dues, fees, or other obligations involved.

Slogan: Stop strikes in defense industries or disband the Army and send our boys home.

We have instigated a chain letter, a specimen of which is shown below, which is proving very effective. While chain letters are somewhat passe and are frowned upon by many, the matter is of sufficient importance for us to forego our dislikes of chain letters, as it provides the means of reaching many who would not otherwise take part in the movement. Get as many of these letters written as possible.

This is strictly a patriotic movement; no funds are solicited; every citizen pays his own expenses.

SPECIMEN CHAIN LETTER

ADEL, GA., April 16, 1941.

Americanism versus Communism

DEAR FRIEND: Shall we permit 1 percent of our total citizenship to damn the other 99 percent?

Shall we, the 99 percent, stand idle and permit the utter sacrifice of our boys on the field of battle, because of the utter disregard of our Nation's peril by the 1 percent who are permitted to promote strikes and otherwise delay the Nation's defense program? As true American citizens, our answer is emphatically no.

We do not believe that the strikes now taking place in our industries are promoted by labor itself, but by certain leaders who are engaged in a movement wholly alien to the best interests of our Government.

We believe in the fairness of the selective draft and in collective bargaining, but we believe our Government should not permit a mere handful of men to completely nullify its effort toward preparedness. Our boys in the Army, who are expected, when the time comes, to make the supreme sacrifice, are not permitted to strike or lay down their arms and quit, neither should those engaged in the manufacture of the implements of war, so essential to our boys, be allowed to strike—lay down their tools and quit.

We believe that Congress should exert its power in the same manner toward labor in defense industries as it has toward the flower of American manhood in the army of defense, by putting an immediate stop to strikes, or disband the Army and send our boys home.

Will you please write a personal letter to the President, mailing copies to your Congressman and to your Senators, expressing your views on this matter and under your rights as an American citizen, demand immediate correction of this injustice. Do it today, for time is precious.

Will you also copy this letter, or approximately so, and mail to each of five or more of your friends. Enlist other of your friends to do the same. If possible, set up a voluntary group in your locality to push the matter. In letters to friends, please add P. S. below, and sign as this letter is signed, if you will. Thanks.

ASSOCIATION OF CONSISTENT AMERICANS.

Value of a Public-Utility District in Distributing Electric Power

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER M. PIERCE
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. WALTER M. PIERCE, OF OREGON

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, on May 24, 1941, I made an electrical transcription for the use of the radio station at Baker, Oreg., urging the people there to vote to establish a public-utility district.

The following are the words of the transcription:

From the Capitol of our country, I speak to the citizens of Baker County, Oreg., who are considering whether they shall make ready to use Bonneville electric power. There is just one way to get that power at a cheap rate. That is to vote now to establish a public-utility district. The question before you May 27 is not whether you shall take over a private business. The question is whether you shall decide to conduct your own proper public business and enjoy its profits. The question is whether you will, for no consideration of value to you as citizens, continue the practice of giving away to eastern investors your most precious and profitable municipal right. Unquestionably, the franchise given a private utility for a monopoly on furnishing electric light and power is the most valuable asset Baker County people have or could hold for themselves. The fight the power company is putting up to keep that asset shows that they think it is something of real value. It is a gold mine.

Most private utilities are Wall Street controlled. That is not true of Baker County, but it is an absentee ownership. Make it a home-owned and home-controlled business. The home people are not rich enough to pour great sums of money into this campaign to regain the rights they once relinquished. Just think—the Federal Power Commission reports over a million dollars spent within the last 5 years, in our section, to keep our people from using the privileges which are theirs by law, and to keep them from gaining the profits which should be theirs as a right.

It is not safe to put off until some future time the establishment of a public-utility district. Bonneville power will soon be at your door. If you once let the profit-seekers get you down, you may have a hard time getting back into the ring.

You would have it all to do over—money, time, energy lost. Take the business over now, and remember, that my last Bonneville act amendment reserved half the Bonneville power for public districts only until January 1, 1942. It was difficult to get that extension through Congress. We certainly cannot get money for a transmission line to Baker County if you vote "no" on public-utility district. Take Bonneville power now or see yourselves the slaves of a private utility company. That would be going backward and it would be expensive to Baker County.

BE AS SMART AS ALCOA

The Aluminum Co. of America is one of the strongest financial institutions in the world. It has an immense plant at Niagara Falls valued at more than $200,000,000. Why did it come to the Pacific coast and locate at Vancouver, Wash., just below Bonneville? I will tell you, friends, why Alcoa came West. Because Bonneville has the cheapest power in the world and they are smart enough to take advantage of it. No one has to persuade them to use Bonneville power. They use it because it saves them money. The bauxite, from which the aluminum comes, is imported from South America. It is turned into alumina at Mobile, Ala., and then taken to Bonneville, where it is, by electric current, made into aluminum. Think of it. They carry that material over a great part of our hemisphere to reach Bonneville electricity, which the Government now offers to carry to Baker. The Reynolds Metals Co., another big manufacturer of aluminum, has located on the Columbia River in order to get cheap Bonneville power. Why is Pepco of Portland pressing Bonneville for contracts for more power? Because they can make money from it. Bonneville power can be bought in Baker County, and make money for you, if you organize your public-utility district. You can have it on the same terms at which it is being bought by the Aluminum Co. or Pepco. Are you going to miss the opportunity that Mellon's company and Pepco were smart enough to grasp? Think of the millions of tons of valuable mineral ore in the Baker hills that can and will be processed in electric furnaces in Baker County when Bonneville power is available at $17.50 per kilowatt year. Think of the hundreds of acres of land which can be irrigated by pumping if the power is cheap enough. Think of the possible byproducts of the lumber industry. Power cannot be had cheaply enough except through a public-utility district buying Bonneville current. The development ahead of you is marvelous, not just a defense project, but a permanent prosperity. Have an industrial survey made at once and learn just how far Baker can go in building a great future.

THE TAX MYTH: WHO PAYS UTILITY TAXES?

Nothing is urged harder, nor more unjustly, against public distribution of electric energy than nonpayment of taxes. The facts of the case are that the private utilities pay no taxes. No money comes from outside Baker County to pay their taxes. That is part of the money which you have already contributed in exorbitant rates. The private utilities are tax collectors charging a mighty high fee for their services.

The State Utilities Commissioner fixes their rates high enough so taxes will not interfere with their profits. Remember, the Oregon law provides that the P. U. D. shall be assessed and taxed in the same manner and for the same purpose as the properties of the private power company. No part of the local system would be exempt, the false statement of the company, notwithstanding. As earnings increase, taxes increase. As rates go down earnings do increase, because so much more power is used.

On page 17 of the Eastern Oregon Light & Power Co.'s pamphlet telling you why you should delegate to them the rights and profits of your electric business, they give a table showing how their taxes have increased. In 1915, the company paid $8,820 in taxes; and for 1941 they claim to have paid $124,000—not in Baker alone, but for their entire system, and for all kinds of taxes, Federal, State, and local. We all know that there has been very little additional property construction by the private utility since 1915; therefore, the big increase in taxes must have been largely increased income taxes, showing conclusively the excessively large and increasing income over expenses which the company has enjoyed for the last 25 years.

The furnishing of electric current is the finest business in all the world. There are no bad debts. There is a small pay roll, no big investment, no competition. Everyone wants the service—an expanding market. Who else has such a business?

Taxpayers of Baker County, that profit belongs to you, and it has been unjustly taken from you by the high rates of the private company, under franchise privileges you lent them. Thank Heaven, it was a loan, and you have the legal and moral right to take it back. They talk about the little franchise tax they pay. Just own that franchise yourselves, and you will be glad to pay the taxes on it. All their taxes on Baker County properties are under $30,000. Yours would be the same, and you would never feel them.

Is the private power company really concerned about what you will lose in taxes if you establish a P. U. D.? No; it is really concerned about what you will gain in profits.

DO P. U. D.'S LEVY TAXES?

They tell you that thousands of dollars in taxes have been imposed by P. U. D.'s in Oregon. Not many thousands, my friends, because P. U. D. law in Oregon prohibits the levy of more than 2 mills on each dollar of assessed value. This is to be used for organizing and development expenses, and ordinarily ending as soon as revenue begins. Just as soon as a public power distribution system gets into action it becomes a money maker and levies no taxes. It is so exceedingly profitable it makes no fuss about taxes. Milton, Canby, Cascade Locks, Forest Grove, McMinnville, plenty of places in Oregon, can open their account books to prove this to you. That little preliminary tax to start you up in business is nothing compared to savings in rates beginning the very first year. It will be spent to help you—by your own friends. The tax argument is just a bogey put up to scare you. I never heard that the people of Baker were particularly timid. I do not know why anyone should expect them to be cowards now and run from a bogey. Remember, too, that the rate reductions so widely advertised in Oregon have all been forced by Bonneville and by threat of public ownership. If you vote yourselves into helplessness, there will be no more rate reductions.

RATE REDUCTIONS

In this same circular, put out by the private utility, rate reductions are shown. In 1925 they claim to have had an average residential rate of 8.46 cents, and they claim to have reduced that to 3.88 cents per kilowatt-hour, still twice as high yet as Canby rates, and Canby now has $20,899 in its surplus fund, and no debts. Remember, when you vote, friends, that the 3.88 cents, the average residential rate in Baker County, is 20 times what your P. U. D. will pay, wholesale, for power. The private utility is still exacting excessive profits on the electric energy they are delivering through your meters. Your people are not able to afford all the current they could use.

DOES PUBLIC OWNERSHIP COMPETE WITH PRIVATE BUSINESS?

This is not a case of the Federal Government "competing with its own citizens"; it is a case of a private monopoly fighting to control the citizens and hold the rights which belong to the public. It is the greatest private monopoly the people have tolerated—to their own undoing and their own great loss.

A community which votes for a public cooperative electric-distribution system is not interfering with private business. When the private business campaigns against a P. U. D., that private business is interfering with the community. The community has the sole right to determine who shall run its most profitable business, which is a natural monopoly and does not admit of any competition. Except for electric power, practically every community has decided to take over the natural monopolies or public services. The only reason all our communities have not taken over the electric monopoly is that the electric monopolies beat them to it. The private utility companies are not locally owned and not locally controlled. The profits go to absentee owners who do not live in the community and who contribute nothing to it.

A P. U. D. is nothing more than a cooperative organization to distribute electric power. It is similar to a city government or a school district. It is no more socialistic than a public school, a public road, a public fire company, a public sewerage plant, or a public water plant. The only difference is, and that is why private business attacks the P. U. D.'s, that the P. U. D.'s make so much money for the people. Profits make the difference. Under a cooperative system the profits go to the people of the community, to whom they rightfully belong.

The private company has no large investment in its Baker County properties. The community gave that company its values, which the community created. The private company has no rights there which are not given by the community. This election is for the purpose of determining whether you give these large profits to someone else or whether you take them for yourselves.

PROFITS FROM PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

There are many kinds of profits under public ownership—reduced rates, wider use of electricity, and rich earnings, even under low rates. These earnings pile up so that at the end of a few years the city actually owns its entire electric system, free of debt, and still coining money.

Public ownership builds community capital. Any community which continues under a private system is not buying anything of permanent value when it pays its rates. It is subject to higher rates, absentee control, skimpy use of electricity, and never owns anything. A community which invests in a P. U. D. has its rate payments applied on ownership. It is like buying a house through rentals. The rates are immediately reduced, and even those low rates make it possible to own something. The public-ownership locality is building something.

There is no guesswork about public power. Its success is not doubtful. Successful operation has been demonstrated. Any section which votes to continue under private ownership votes its belief in its own incompetence. Certainly Baker County has people just as competent as the people elsewhere in Oregon who have faced this power issue and made a success of public ownership. There are people ready to manage the system who are just as competent as those who have operated the private utilities.

The labor employed would undoubtedly be the same or even more, because of the extension of the system. The conditions under which labor works in public systems have been made fully as advantageous and usually even more so, than those in private systems.

DO PUBLIC-UTILITY DISTRICTS OPERATE?

Those anxious to make profits out of the electric business in Baker County tell you that public-utility districts never operate; that people vote them, but they never amount to anything. Now, if that were true, I am sure they (the private companies) would not bestir themselves to attempt to block a public-utility district. It costs them thousands of dollars to campaign against a public-utility district. If it were true that public-utility districts do nothing but levy taxes and never sell electricity, there would be no use of a campaign against them. They point to Union County as an example of delay. I suspect that the citizens of Union County may be awaiting your vote to determine joint action in negotiations. Delay in other public-utility districts in our section has been caused partly by the fact that private power systems and the public-utility districts do not cover the same territory, but overlap, so that negotiations must be conducted by several public-utility districts jointly. The first step is not so easy as are the later steps.

The facts of the case are that there are 28 county-wide public-utility districts in the State of Washington serving about two-thirds of the State's population. The cities and public-utility districts there have been successful. They got an earlier start. They have financed the purchase of private electrict properties by issuing bonds, payable solely out of utility revenue. They have reduced rates; they have set aside moneys to be used in the communities in lieu of taxes. Their low rates have served as yardsticks which have compelled millions of dollars of rate reductions by private companies.

Oregon just passed its revenue bond law in 1939. Our public-utility districts in Oregon are getting ready to operate, and they will be humming very shortly.

WILL THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DO IT FOR YOU?

I hear that the private utilities have been telling the people of Baker there is no need for voting a public-utility district, because the Federal Government will buy and operate the local electric distributing systems. That might not be constitutional. The Government wholesales electric power. The only legislative provision even discussed is that the Bonneville Administration be allowed to acquire the private holdings for the purpose of selling or leasing them to the public power organizations already formed to distribute electric current at retail. No responsible person ever suggested that Bonneville should operate local distributing systems. The business of the Bonneville Administration is to generate current and carry it over transmission lines to its retail market. If Bonneville should be authorized to buy private systems, Baker County could not profit unless it had formed a public-utility district to distribute electricity locally.

STATE HYDROELECTRIC COMMISSION ESTIMATES

Competent, reliable, and neutral engineers of the State Hydroelectric Commission say that in 30 years, without considering any changes in rates, the public-utility district will pay for itself, set aside a depreciation fund sufficient to keep the properties efficient, pay taxes on the same basis as the existing private companies now pay, and give the people of Baker County a total net gain of $3,426,877—almost unbelievable, but easily proved. Every user will make savings in rates, and thus he will become part owner in valuable property.

Have confidence in that report of the Oregon State Hydroelectric Commission which followed the duty given it by law and made a careful report on the feasibility of a public-utility district in Baker County. That report, made by competent engineers, showed that over a 30-year period you could accumulate a surplus of over $2,000,000. Is not that "acres of diamonds"? If you do not earn it on a public system, the power company will earn it on a private system.

HIGH RATES AND LOW POLITICS

Why are rates cheaper under public ownership? Partly because the public system borrows money more cheaply. Also because the public system needs no slush funds, no advertising, no contributions to the Edison Electric Institute, and no large payments to owners off in the East.

THE TWO WORST THINGS ABOUT PRIVATE UTILITIES ARE HIGH RATES AND LOW POLITICS—PUBLIC OWNERSHIP TAKES THE POWER BUSINESS OUT OF POLITICS

The final appeal of the private companies will be made to you over the radio. It will be dictated by self-interest and private profits. They surely have a right to be heard, but the basis of their arguments should be clear to all concerned.

Citizens of Baker, the streets and roads belong to you. You have given the use of them to the private utility and outside interests for their financial benefit. Through your gift, they have for many years enjoyed a perfect business; you have paid for it. Buy them out; pay a reasonable price for the equipment that you can use; take it for yourselves, and you will own the finest business in Baker County.

It is an assault upon your sovereign rights for them to attempt to coerce you into continuation of that valuable grant or franchise. The time has come to have and to hold for your own well-being the right to provide and distribute electric current to your citizens. By retaining this right you will secure for yourselves great profits through cheaper rates and accumulated capital investment. Baker County's richest gold mine is the electric current distribution system which should belong to its people.

ACRES OF DIAMONDS

If there are questions I have not answered, I am sure you will find them answered in the Baker County edition of the Oregon Grange Bulletin. Many other points I have covered in my speech, Acres of Diamonds, mailed to some of you and available for anyone.

You remember the famous lecture about the man who hunted the world over for diamonds and came home and found acres of diamonds right on his own farm. That describes it.

LET'S USE BONNEVILLE

Bonneville gives us our acres of diamonds, and they are brought to our doors by the Government.

Town and country are united in this project. Any city which tries to shake off the country people will soon find itself rather lonesome. Together they can bring untold benefits to the community.

CANBY POINTS THE WAY

Eighteen years ago I became Governor of Oregon, and at that time the little village of Canby, about the size of Haines, was just getting under way to distribute electric energy cooperatively. The town has never owned a generating plant. It has always bought its electricity wholesale—first from a private company, now from Bonneville. During the intervening years, this village of about 1,000 people has paid for the distributing plant and all the debts on the water plant. They have paid just about one-half the rates charged in Baker, and they have a cash surplus in their treasury, surplus earned from their power plant, of $20,899.

I would hate to think that my friends of Baker were not as intelligent and enterprising as the citizens of Canby.

I put their story in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4000, a few days ago.

Remember, when you go to the polls on May 27, vote "yes" for Baker's P. U. D.

Local Control of Education

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL T. CURTIS

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

LETTER FROM NEBRASKA STATE SCHOOL BOARDS ASSOCIATION

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from the Nebraska State School Boards Association:

THE NEBRASKA STATE SCHOOL BOARDS ASSOCIATION,
May 19, 1941.

Hon. CARL CURTIS,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The Association of School Board Members sees evidence every day of a growing effort to intrench Government relief agencies in positions of an educational nature. We believe that many of the educational projects carried out by Federal relief set-ups may have some value, but we believe that they should be kept at an absolute minimum for the following reasons.

1. The W. P. A., the N. Y. A., and to a lesser degree the C. C. C. were organized as relief and work projects and should, especially in the case of the first two organizations, be confined to that field.

2. Each of the three organizations has a separate administrative and supervisory staff of high-salaried people who are unnecessary and in many cases not trained or successfully experienced in supervisory and administrative work.

3. The instruction in some of these educational projects is in some cases carried on by unqualified and uncertified people.

4. The cost per individual in each of these three separate agencies is tremendous when compared to the cost per pupil in the public schools. This will be borne out by figures, if they can be secured.

5. There is a crying need for greater Federal aid for schools in the South and in the Middle West, because more children per capita may be found in these areas and less wealth is found in these areas. If even a fraction of the funds now expended in W. P. A. and N. Y. A. educational projects could be allocated to the schools, it would enable them to do much to improve their vocational education. We would further point out that there already exists in each State a department of public instruction. There is absolutely no need for two or three other supervisory agencies. However, we would favor a strict accounting by the Federal Government for all funds expended. This could be done with a very small fraction of the present administrative and supervisory officers employed under W. P. A., N. Y. A., and C. C. C.

6. We further believe that there is being conducted determined effort to centralize the control of educational forces in agencies which have their centers in Washington. We believe that this centralization of educational efforts is not in keeping with good democratic government, and we believe that people will greatly oppose it when they become acquainted with the real situation.

7. We believe these agencies when operated as educational projects are not in harmony with the theory of democratic, locally controlled education.

This organization opposed educational projects conducted under W. P. A. and N. Y. A. We would also urge careful investigation for the claims that have been made for education in C. C. C. camps. We would urge that in every camp a report be made on the number of these boys who are actually productively employed and who show evidence of real training. We would urge a study of the cost per individual trained in W. P. A. and N. Y. A. educational projects. The W. P. A. and N. Y. A. projects were set up as relief work projects. They should be kept in that field for we believe that their efforts in the field of education have been wasteful, inefficient, and contrary to the principles of American public education. We urge the allocation of funds now expended in W. P. A. and N. Y. A. educational projects to the use of the public schools in the Nation in order that the opportunity for public education be equalized and that the funds result in training by people who are properly certified and qualified to carry on the education of American youth.

Under existing conditions, unless something is done to support the public schools and eliminate competition from political and bureaucratic organizations for funds, we foresee a time when free public schools, the bulwark of democracy, will be pushed into the background to make way for agencies whose primary purpose is to promote special interests and bureaucratic control. We urge you and every other Congressman to do all in your power to remedy this situation. We are not opposing relief agencies organized for the benefit of the unemployed worker but we do stand opposed to the use of such agencies as a screen for building up two or three additional educational systems.

Respectfully yours,

W. F. HEMPHILL,

Secretary-Treasurer, the Nebraska State School Boards Association.

Joint Session of Pennsylvania State Legislature Celebrates Americanism Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANCIS J. MYERS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

ADDRESS OF HON. FRANCIS J. MYERS OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania observes May 1 as Americanism Day, and that day is celebrated throughout the State by fitting and appropriate ceremonies.

The legislature by resolution unanimously adopted set aside a part of the afternoon of April 30 for a joint session of the house and senate and arranged a most interesting program in anticipation of the following day's State-wide observance of Americanism Day.

It was my very proud and happy privilege to join with the legislature, the Governor and his cabinet, various State officials, and my colleague, the Honorable JAMES E. VAN ZANDT, and to participate in those ceremonies.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following address, which I delivered on that occasion:

You have graciously invited me here today to participate with you in these ceremonies in the anticipation of tomorrow's observance of Americanism Day.

You have asked me to say a few fitting words. This is difficult, for great men, great Americans, have spoken great words for their beloved America long before any of us were born.

So let me as an humble man speak a few humble words today.

We are gathered here this afternoon, not as partisans but as patriots, not as lawmakers but as citizens. We have assembled here not to denounce others or to speak too boastfully of our own accomplishments but rather we have come here to speak earnestly together as Americans.

The American ideal is not one of great riches, buying a lavish progress from servile nations.

The American ideal is not one of power, tramping feared and unmolested throughout the world.

The American ideal is not that we shall all be kings but that we all shall be free men.

Our forebears and our comrades fought that they might have as good a chance as any and that all might have as good a chance as they.

They fought that they and their children—and their children's children—might have a homeland which would set a new course in the world, a course of decency, friendship, and democracy.

They had in mind no marble halls or dainty luxuries.

They had in mind work-hardened hands, modest comforts, proper rewards for their leaders and a dignified decency of life for their followers, including even the least fortunate.

They fought that their son's dreams, that your boy's dreams and my boy's dreams, might come true; they sacrificed for a country where he might gain the ambition and the desire of his heart.

They struggled so that their aspirations, their aims, their impulses, their very life might have expression. They loved this country and this land for the opportunity which it gave them—whatever might have been their origin—to rise to the fullness of manhood.

They gave this country a new philosophy of Government, founded upon the theory that government to be practical and to be ultimately successful should be conducted in the interest of all the people and be participated in by all the people regardless of their station in life or their ownership of property. They believed that the entire people could be trusted to do justice better than any one man or group of men. For such a theory makes for safety in government and for orderly progress instead of revolution.

Officers of the American Legion, Post No. 51, and of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Post No. 47, of Uniontown, Fayette County, are with us here today. And it is just and proper and fitting that they are. For it was in that western city of Pennsylvania that Americanism Day was first conceived by the veterans of that community.

Some of their comrades never returned from the fields of France, and too often do we hear it said that their struggle was in vain. All too frequently has it been said—and I might add, said sneeringly and disparagingly—"they died to make the world safe for democracy."

Well, my fellow Pennsylvanians, I believe they died to give us a respite to carry on the American ideal; to carry it on toward a perfection for which we must always strive. Those patriots and our forebears died to make or to preserve our Nation.

They died to protect our freedom and our liberty.

They died, whether 25 or 165 years ago, to insure that the children of today and tomorrow and next year—children as yet unconceived and unheralded—might live in the American way.

They died that we might have a free America in 1941, whose greatness we might be free to observe tomorrow.

But let us not boast of our Americanism unless Americanism is truly in our souls. We intend to preach Americanism tomorrow but what is it?

We know it does not exist, that there is no such thing unless it is in our souls.

It is the spirit of our country. It is the never ending searching of the mind and the heart and the soul for an ideal, for the thing that is better. It is high in the heavens and has come to us from the very throne of the living God.

You are men of the people, the makers of laws, the living symbols of our democratic way of life. You are the people's representatives, and into your keeping is entrusted the safety, the welfare, and the liberty of the people of Pennsylvania.

But you have a greater responsibility even than this. A more sacred trust has been imposed upon all of you. For in the soul of each of you is a spiritual quality which represents your Americanism. It is finer and better than the individual himself. It is that quality which makes us discontented to stand still; which compels us to push ever forward and onward; which prompts us to strive for perfection and the unattainable.

That is the very essence of Americanism, for America is truly an aspiration.

We must secure it within our hearts, every last one of us; we must develop a passion for Americanism, not only because Americanism is the living, vital spirit of this Nation, but because it is one of the most uplifting things that has come to man's soul from our omniscient Creator.

On the European Continent today democracy, the kind of democracy so sacred to us in America, is dead as a doornail, "gone with the wind."

There are only two basic systems of government in the world today. One is the theory of natural rights, and that is democracy. The other goes by the high-sounding title of totalitarianism.

It all boils down to Americanism versus the other thing—call it communism or nazi-ism or fascism—but it is easier to say liberty or tyranny, right over might.

In the fateful struggle which has enveloped practically the entire world, in which the destiny of civilization will probably be determined, the issue is clear, for the ideals which we cherish have been shattered and destroyed and trampled into the earth in foreign lands.

The fight is for the vindication of the individual, if need be, against the world; the triumphant proclamation of God in your conscience; the complete blackout, the final destruction of all "isms," with their cold, brutal absorption of men and women in the remorseless schemes and ambitions of a soulless state.

A few years ago the President saw the danger ahead and spoke these words: "America hates war. America hopes for peace. Therefore America diligently searches for peace."

What has happened in the world since the President uttered these words? Peaceful peoples who sought and hoped for peace—just as we do—have seen their countries overrun by the mad dogs of nazi-ism, their freedom and liberty and way of life destroyed.

During those fateful months, before the war, the President was striving for world peace. He raised his voice time and time again in an effort to halt the mad rush of foreign dictators. He endeavored to calm them before the world became embroiled in this present mess. He sought to have them settle their difficulties around the conference table.

But the dictators heeded not. They closed their ears to reason. They turned their backs on God and marched their mighty legions to the four corners of the European Continent.

After war was declared the President labored to avert a similar tragedy in the western world.

Again and again the President warned the American people of the smoldering fires abroad and of the need for adequate defense at home only to have his opponents accuse him of warmongering.

During those years your President had the vision and the foresight to warn America to build its defenses, and yet the opponents of his foreign policy ofttimes reached into the garbage cans for political hatred and abuse.

I believe it is high time to throw off the cloak of complacency, forego our smug security, and cease minimizing the dangers of economic and military aggression on this side of the Atlantic.

Why? Because there is a very real danger, a living, actual menace. Let us not be lulled to an eternal sleep by an appeasement refrain.

Each conquered nation in Europe was deliberately encircled by the Axis Powers before the pincers were applied and invasion attempted. And during the process of encirclement, the misguided isolationist groups of each of them counseled against the risk of helping their neighbors. Hitler, therefore, embraced them individually and with little difficulty finally conquered a continent.

Don't disregard these vivid lessons taught by recent European history. Don't say, "It can't happen here." It can.

Two years ago, the Nazis were hundreds of miles distant from Turkey and Suez and Dakar and Syria. Now they, too, are encircled.

Liberty has been blitzkrieged on the European continent and hate and intolerance have ascended the throne where once reigned freedom and justice and human happiness. But even more important, democracy and Americanism are on trial in our own land.

Undercover organizations are fanning the fires of hatred and sowing the seeds of discord and appeasement among our people.

They work quietly, desperately, busily, to stir up and spread throughout the land false doctrines, crude and cruel hatreds designed to split our Nation and obstruct and slow up our national-defense efforts.

These subversive elements, alien in their origin and foreign in their loyalties, are penetrating into every activity of our people. They have attached themselves to peace groups, joined civil liberty organizations, wormed their way into pacifist committees, associated with those who preach prejudice and intolerance. They have played race against race and religion against religion, and have had the effrontery to participate in the affairs of civic and patriotic organizations.

Our people are ofttimes contaminated because they do not realize that we are at the crossroads; they do not yet comprehend that total victory for the Axis Powers in Europe lengthens the shadow of war across the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific.

With what joy Hitler and Stalin and the military of Japan must witness the progress of their emissaries in dividing our people; in fact, they are giving generous space in their newspapers and periodicals to every attack made upon the President and his foreign policy by Americans of high and low estate; every utterance of the appeaser brings new rejoicing to the dictators; every vicious assault upon the White House is sweet music to the Communist and the Nazi.

What large comfort these derogatory and abusive attacks upon the President and our Government give to Hitler, for it plays right into his hand. He joyfully joins in the struggle to divide our people and soften America.

If Britain falls, America stands as the final safeguard for democracy.

The foreign policy adopted by your Government has been predicated upon such premises. We desire and we hope to maintain peace in the Western Hemisphere, but we have not been blind to the forces of war and destruction which were let loose upon the world. We are building our defenses strong and impregnable so that we will be secure from any attack.

I believe that this Nation has arrived at the very definite conclusion that there can be no just and lasting peace anywhere in the entire world—or for that matter any free or democratic way of life—if the forces of aggression are triumphant in this war.

And, therefore, we have thrown the entire industrial and economic strength of our Nation on the side of democracy and freedom.

I do not believe that Great Britain is fighting our war, but I do contend that Great Britain is fighting for a just cause, a democratic cause, and as long as she holds out the Western Hemisphere should be safe from any frontal attack. And I believe this to be a cause and a war in which we are vitally concerned as to the outcome. Yes; I am convinced, too, that it is in our national interest that she survive.

How can we enforce the Monroe Doctrine with a one-ocean navy if she goes down tomorrow; how can we possibly preserve the American standard of living if all the rest of the world is doing business with slave labor; how can we maintain the free way of life for ourselves if all the rest of the world is in bondage?

How can we live alone and compete and survive in a dictator-ridden world unless we, too adopt a dictator economy and build and maintain continually a military machine equal to theirs? How can we avoid the maintenance of an armed camp in America for generation upon generation? And how can America's business and American labor stand up under the appalling and hitherto undreamed-of taxation which must inevitably follow?

That there is a certain risk involved in doing what we have done, I admit. But there would be a much greater risk in doing nothing in the face of a combination of dictator nations which have already overrun 14 independent countries. Your Government has charted the course for America, and there can be—there will be—no turning back. We have determined that we must not—we will not—be encircled as were those 14 fallen nations; that we must not—that we will not—allow the gaping jaws of the dictator's pincers to snap shut on the United States of America, for we recognize the character of this world aggression; we recognize that it is a living menace, not only to the American way of life but to Americanism itself.

The President has held true to this course, and I believe this course is least likely to lead us over the brink of war—is most likely to preserve the American spirit from crucifixion upon the swastika of hatred which the foreign infidels have prepared for it.

America has become the world's hope that the spirit of democracy will continue to live and breathe and flourish; it is the champion of liberty and religion and right as against tyranny and might and intolerance. Hers is the voice which carries comfort and faith to peoples all over the earth who, though in temporary slavery, still cherish and believe in and hope again for freedom.

May God in His infinite goodness and wisdom prevent the horror of war from spreading over here. May He watch over the American spirit which itself came from His bountiful heart. May He give our President the strength and courage to carry on and spare him to keep us at peace and lead us all out of the maze of world destruction, this valley of death and tears, into the bright sunlight of hope and faith and contentment.

Hovering about us here today, consoling us, counseling us, must be the undying spirit of our fathers and of all those who have served America in the years that have fled, for they all had a burning passion for their beloved country and an all-consuming hatred for oppression and aggression.

My friends, let us hold high the flying banners of faith and loyalty and courage, sure of the nobility of our cause, sincere in our devotion to principle; let us on the morrow, Americanism Day of 1941, rededicate ourselves to the American spirit and make America more worthy of all our dreams.

Galveston—Romantic and Greater Galveston

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

ARTICLE BY ROSELLA H. WERLIN

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the city of Galveston on the Gulf shore of Texas has long been noted as a pleasure resort as well as a great commercial port, daily visited by the ships of the leading maritime nations of the world. The city is situated upon an island known in legend and in song as Treasure Isle. It is connected with the mainland by two causeways across the bay, 2½ miles in length.

Three large military fields have been established on the mainland within a few miles of Galveston. In these fields and in the permanent military and naval establishments in and near the city, more than 100,000 men are being trained in the arts for the defense of this country.

These defense establishments are being visited daily by the relatives and friends of the men engaged, coming from nearly every State of the Union. They are all, of course, interested in the splendid pleasure and recreational facilities afforded on the beach along the 7½-mile sea wall and promenade in front of the city.

Mrs. Rosella H. Werlin has written a very interesting historical and descriptive sketch of Galveston. It is of general interest, and especially to those contemplating a visit to their relatives and friends in the military service. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD to include Mrs. Werlin's interesting article.

GALVESTON—ROMANTIC AND GREATER GALVESTON

(By Rosella H. Werlin)

Bathed by a glowing sun, fanned by the chameleonlike waters of the foamy Gulf of Mexico—azure in the sunlight, silver in the moonlight—swept by the continued fragrance of countless species of tropical foliage—multicolored oleanders, scarlet poinsettias, snow-white magnolias, roses of every hue and blend, honeysuckles, jasmine—nature truly did love Galveston to shower it as it did with these most glorious of beauties known to man.

Historically, this island city dates back to 1528 with credit falling to Cabeza de Vaca as the first white man to touch these shores. Only by 36 years did he follow in the wake of Columbus' immortal trans-Atlantic achievement.

Then in 1686 that French explorer La Salle laid claims to this land for his kind and country, naming it San Louis. But this proved a short-lived honor; for in 1777 the area succumbed to Spanish sway with the glorification of this achievement—which later translated itself to Galvestown and finally to Galveston.

Nature and destiny joined forces to make Galveston what it is today. Approximately 32 miles in length and varying from 1 to 2 miles in width, this island lies about 2 miles off the southeast shore of Texas in the Gulf of Mexico.

Galveston's role is inseparably linked with the exciting story of the Lone Star State and its colorful rule under the following six flags: Spanish, French, Mexican, its own Republic, the Confederacy, and the United States.

Here the second Republic of Texas was set up in 1836, and here President Burnett and his Cabinet established headquarters until the announcement of the victory of the battle of San Jacinto—a story which every Texas schoolboy knows by heart—when Texas freed itself from the yoke of Mexico, April 21, 1836.

The present Galveston celebrated its one hundred and second birthday last December 9, dating its inception from the purchase of this area from the First Congress of the Republic of Texas by Col. Michel B. Menard. He then organized the Galveston City Government, which is now recognized as the oldest surviving association in the State.

Galveston's noted wide streets and broad boulevards persist as proofs of the founder's architectural genius and keen foresight. In planning the city, Menard furthermore set aside ample tracts for such public institutions as schools, hospitals, parks, playgrounds, and esplanades—making for an ideal cultural and social center.

His own century-old home, The Oaks, still stands today as a landmark of yesterday's grandeur and a shrine for all those steeped in Texas lore.

Because of its natural harbor and ideal setting, the city early enjoyed a wave of prosperity, growth, and development. Even the ill-fated 1900 storm merely served as a torch in firing its brave citizens with a more determined spirit of forging ahead undaunted.

Securing the services of an engineering board, with the aid of city, State, and Federal funds, as well as private capital, approximately $13,000,000 was expended in completing three projects which rank among the greatest of engineering achievements in the United States. Only recently with the serious flood damages on the northern seaboard, Galveston's accomplishments were cited as a model example for study purposes.

These included, first, the building of a solid concrete, 7½-mile sea wall, ranging from a height of 17 to 21 feet, and built upon piling driven into the ground for 40 feet. Paralleling the Gulf of Mexico, this wall not only serves as a protectorate but provides an ideal boulevard 100 feet in width for passing throngs and motorists. It offers a colorful rendezvous, indeed, for the thousands annually flocking to this resort.

Secondly, followed the gradual process of grade raising, with the entire city being filled in with sand to the level of the sea wall's height. Here, again, the spirit of its loyal citizens was evidenced when its property owners willingly contributed further finances and cooperation in fulfilling an arduous task of several years' duration and which involved millions of dollars.

Thirdly, came the completion of a 2½-mile causeway—one of the longest in the world, linking this island to the mainland at an estimated cost of $3 000,000.

As a means of further handling that rapidly increasing traffic parade, another $2,500,000 causeway, financed through county, State, and Federal aid and paralleling the first one in location and construction, has just been completed. Not many cities, if any at all, of Galveston's size can boast of two arteries of such magnitude and grandeur.

Incidentally, it was in 1901, shortly after the reorganization, that Galveston established a commission form of government, with a mayor as city manager, assisted by four commissioners. Still functioning under this same system, Galveston holds the distinction of having the first and oldest commission form of government in the country.

Commercially, Galveston maintains the unique position as America's port of quickest dispatch, its natural harbor providing a 40-minute steaming outlet to the sea. Here a docking facility of 37 piers affords space for 100 oceangoing vessels and here a range of 69 steamship lines, including the well-known Clyde-Mallory Line, flying flags from every nation, ply in and out the harbor.

What a vision as proud ocean liners, their mighty turbines throbbing, slip into the quays with travelers from overseas; as tramp ships, shouldering the spray, plough down the channel to Cairo, Singapore, and Capetown; as little fishing vessels, the mosquito fleet, put out to Bolivar Point at sunrise.

Galveston holds title as the world's largest sulphur port, one of the largest cotton ports, as well as for handling more grain and flour than all other Gulf ports combined. Here, too, is situated the country's largest export grain elevator, with a storage capacity of 7,000,000 bushels, the Galveston Wharf Co.

Here, a thousand and one cargoes come and go, including steel, iron, and, oh, yes—bananas—lots of bananas. Two of the world's largest banana companies use these facilities all the year 'round.

The Intracoastal Canal, a valuable adjunct to the port of Galveston, makes it possible for shippers to send bulk cargoes by waterway to and from all navigable river or canal ports in the Middle West and East.

Five trunk-line railroads are at Galveston's disposal, including the State's oldest railroad, which was organized and incorporated here on February 7, 1853, and is still operating under its original charter. The Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railroad, employing hundreds, maintains its main headquarters here.

Galveston also has an excellent airport.

Among the city's permanent industries are included Texas' only nail and wire manufacturing company, the State's largest brewery, a flour mill, rice mill, iron foundries, cotton-bagging firms, 6 insurance companies, Affiliated National Hotels—the second largest system of hotels in the United States, operating 35 hotels, totaling over 10,000 rooms, in 10 States—and 10 concentration and warehouse companies.

The county of Galveston embraces a large section of rich agricultural land, with field and truck crops constituting an important source of income.

This area has also recently struck oil, with several large oil fields now actively in operation.

Galveston leads the State with many "firsts" and "oldest," a few on its roster being the Galveston Daily News, oldest newspaper, established in 1842, having also the first telephone; the first hospital, St. Mary's Infirmary; the oldest medical school, which is a branch of the University of Texas; the first training school for nurses, established at John Sealy Hospital in 1894, the first orphanage; the first privately owned bank as well as the first national bank; the first gas lights; the first cotton exchange and board of trade; the first Y. M. C. A.; the first chamber of commerce; the first post office; and the first customhouse, with Gail Borden as collector of the port.

Incidentally, it was here that this same Mr. Borden invented condensed milk.

Besides, Galveston ranks tops as a playground and sportsmen's paradise.

Here the beauties of nature or the bounties of man's nurture ever beckon—depending on one's mood and inclination, one's taste and temperament.

Treasure Isle—that's what Galveston is called.

Here summers cool and winters mild, combined by a year-round even temperature, make this a rendezvous for the traveler seeking relaxation or the tourist in quest of recreation—its annual mean temperature hovering at 69.9 degrees.

Here a variety of diversions stir the blood to action—bathing in the rolling Gulf, boating, golfing, hunting, horseback riding, and fishing. A variety of 51 edible fish tempt even the most amateur of nimrods, whereas for the expert angler tarpon aplenty venture to these shores.

Or here one may revel in sheer relaxation, lounging on the glittering beach, by basking in the sunlight, perhaps watching with delight the ever-present clusters of sea gulls as they gracefully wing their way about, noisily chattering to each other—or perhaps beholding the more tame ones swoop down and nip off morsels of bread extended them by friendly hands.

The free-from-pollen salty Gulf breezes make Galveston a haven for hay-fever sufferers, its colony numbering persons from the country over.

For the lover of the esthetic, the boulevards with overhanging bushes of varihued oleanders offer a picture of rare enchantment. Ranging from the most delicate tones of pink to the deepest shades of orange—nowhere else do they flourish in such profusion. Periodically, new specimens spring into being—the latest named in honor of the President's visit—blending from a soft golden tint to a deeper hue of bronze.

Galveston is known as the Oleander City.

But it is romantically that Galveston plays one of its most thrilling roles.

For it was on these very shores that the South's most famous and glorious pirate—Jean Lafitte—set up headquarters. Calling this area Campeachy, he built himself an imposing castlelike mansion, from where he defied the world for 4 hectic years, living like a lord in feudal splendor, until 1821.

Here he issued orders to prey upon Spanish vessels, relieving them of their golden cargo, and to levy tribute on commerce in the Gulf—a privilege accorded the buccaneer by virtue of letters of marque furnished him by Mexican revolutionists. This was the hour when the Mexicans were attempting to break away from Spanish rule. And Lafitte waxed prosperous—extremely so.

But one day the steel grip slipped and his men captured and burned a United States merchant marine. Lafitte apologized and even hanged a man or two as proof of his "honorable" intentions. But after a second offense, Uncle Sam refused to be content and demanded his complete abandonment from these parts.

Legend has it that in the still of the night, he and his men did slip away, burying their entire fortune underground near what is now called the site of the Three Oaks. Perhaps he planned to return to claim the stake, but death is said to have overtaken him in Venezuela in 1826. He left no heirs.

And though a century has passed, sagas of buried treasure still continue to drift up and down this seaboard. And there are those who say that when the moon rises above Galveston Island like a ground round golden ball, and the green waves kiss the shore in the silver light, the ghost of Lafitte walks these sands again, his wide cape whipped by the tropical winds, his sword and cutlass glittering in the moonlight, and his lean, tanned face ever toward the sea to feel the beat of the winds against it, with the whip and tang of salt sea spray against his sailor's breath.

That's why Galveston is known as Treasure Isle.

Menace of Debt

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN TABER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

LETTER OF HON. SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, FORMER MEMBER OF CONGRESS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I submit a letter by former Congressman Samuel B. Pettengill from the New York Herald Tribune of May 26, 1941:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Monday, May 26, 1941]

MENACE OF DEBT—LOCAL CLUBS SUGGESTED TO COMPEL ECONOMY

To the New York Herald Tribune:

Your readers probably need nothing more than your able editorials to remind them of present debt and tax burdens. But what of the future? And have any of your readers ever figured out their share of these mounting public debts?

Let's begin with the city of New York. According to the World Almanac your municipal debt is $2,428,400,000. That is approximately $329.03 for every man, woman, and child in New York City. Or, $1,645.15 for each family of five.

Next, there's the State of New York. The debt is $490,172,000. That means $36.65 more for every human being in New York City. Or $183.25 for each family of five.

But the worst is yet to come—the Federal debt. At present it is $47,231,000,000. Your city's share is $2,652,686,502, which is $359.43 for every person in New York City, or $1,797.15 for a family of five. Each billion dollars of public debt takes $7.61 out of the per capita pocket of every person in New York City.

Now combining the Federal, State, and municipal debt, the share of each man, woman, and child in New York City would be $725.11, or $3,625.55 for a family of five.

Long before the present emergency is over the Federal debt may be $100,000,000,000. And some Washington forecasts reach $140,000,000,000. When the debt reaches $100,000,000,000, New York City's share would be $5,616,377,099. Should it reach $140,000,000,000, New York City's proportion would be $7,862,927,939.

The Nation cannot scrimp on defense and preparedness, but it can and should economize elsewhere. The Committee for Constitutional Government has compiled debt-burden data covering communities of various sizes throughout the Nation. It urges citizens everywhere to bestir themselves by urging their Representatives in Congress to prune and pare the ordinary Budget as Mr. Morgenthau has suggested. The ordinary expenses of the Federal Government should and can be cut $1,000,000,000 annually, but it is unlikely that Congress will act unless citizens speak emphatically.

That they may speak emphatically on this and upon other matters which vitally affect our form of government and our system of competitive enterprise, our committee favors the organization of local constitutional clubs. This organization, which is chartered in the District of Columbia and is a nonprofit, nonpartisan, educational institution, will be glad to hear from responsible, public-spirited citizens who wish to form local affiliates. Further information on this subject and upon public-debt burdens may be had by writing to the Committee for Constitutional Government, National Press Building, Washington, D. C.

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL,
Chairman, Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc.
NEW YORK, May 18, 1941.

Hawaii and the National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SAMUEL W. KING
DELEGATE FROM HAWAII
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

ADDRESS BY HON. SAMUEL W. KING, DELEGATE FROM HAWAII

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the substance of the following address made by me before the Washington Medical and Surgical Society, Washington, D. C., at its spring banquet held May 10, 1941 at the Mayflower Hotel:

I am happy to be here tonight to have this opportunity of discussing with you some of the problems of the Pacific area. My subject is Hawaii and the national defense. Recent developments and the tension throughout the world make the subject one of general interest.

Of course, I realize that the general American public has always had a friendly interest in Hawaii as a glamor spot, an exotic, tropical land of the hula and the ukulele, which came under the American flag somehow or other about the time of the Spanish-American War.

Perhaps our tourist bureau oversold the glamor of Hawaii in its desire to attract visitors to the islands, and rather left a distorted picture of America's outpost in the Pacific in the minds of the average mainland citizen.

But I do not desire to destroy all of your illusions about Hawaii; nor undo all of the splendid work of our tourist bureau in making our mainland compatriots Hawaii-conscious.

Hawaii is a beautiful land of great mountains, deep valleys, and high plateaus—of beaches and coves and rugged cliffs. Above all, it is a green land—hillsides and valleys and coastal plains alike verdure covered all the year 'round. It is a grand place to play, to loaf, or to work.

The climate and the humidity are subtropical rather than tropical. Lying in the middle of the North Pacific, the surrounding ocean and the trade winds from the northeast mitigate the full effect of the sun. Our thermometer never reaches 90° F. and rarely goes below 60° F. The average range is from 65° to 85°, a mean of 75° F.. Easily accessible heights bring colder temperatures, until at about 5,000 feet elevation we can enjoy—if that's the word—frosty mornings; and on our highest mountains go skiing in the snow that covers their peaks.

The average citizen of Hawaii, while enjoying life perhaps somewhat more leisurely than his mainland equivalent, does, however, work for a living and is preoccupied with the pressing problems common to us all. From our industry, as a part of the economic life of America, over a hundred million dollars' worth of commodities are produced and sold in mainland markets, about 60 percent of which is sugar, 35 percent pineapples, and 5 percent miscellaneous, including coffee and other products. With this income we buy from mainland factories and farms all that we require to maintain an American standard of living.

Being included within the American tariff barriers we spend our money exclusively in home markets. The United States Treasury gets its share of this interstate commerce in Federal taxes to the tune of several millions every year, a larger amount than that paid by any one of a number of States, varying from 12 to 19. Over the years this contribution—if the Bureau of Internal Revenue's collections can be called a contribution—has exceeded Federal expenditures in Hawaii for local purposes in the ratio of four to one, a total credit of over two hundred millions in the forty-odd years since we became a part of the United States. Our trade, as an offshore unit of the Nation, helps maintain an American merchant marine, only American vessels being permitted to carry our goods and passengers to and from other American ports.

So much for the economic picture, important to us locally and therefore of some concern to the Nation, to the extent that we are a part, even if but a small part, of that Nation. But it is in the strategic field that we become of vital importance to the Nation, and a matter of concern and interest to every American citizen.

A glance at the map of the Pacific tells the story. Hawaii dominates the North Pacific. It could hardly have been better located for America's purposes than if we had selected the very place in the ocean for Pele, the Hawaiian goddess of volcanoes, to spout forth her lava from the sea's great depths. It lies closer to the continent of North America than to any other large body of land. Its ownership by a foreign nation would present a continuing menace to the United States as a possible base for an attack on the west coast. Its control by the United States, while advancing our frontier 2,000 miles into the Pacific, is on the whole a defensive asset, because of the great distances from Hawaii to any foreign nation. It is therefore as the western outpost of our defense that Hawaii is invaluable.

From Honolulu, to the north and east, within a radius of less than 2,500 miles, every day a shorter distance in time, lie the principal ports and bases of the Pacific coast, from Alaska to Mexico. From Honolulu, to the northwest, through west, to the south, within a 2,000-mile radius, lie islands that are ideally located as advance bases of our western outpost. The early naval visitors to Hawaii recognized this strategic location, and suitability as a naval base, from which a fleet could control all the approaches to the west coast of America. Because of their reports, and America's other interests in the islands, Daniel Webster, as Secretary of State in 1842, announced as the policy of America, the benevolent interest of the United States in the destiny of the then Kingdom of Hawaii, and warned other powers to keep hands off. From Webster's time to 1898, the drift of events and the ties of trade and commerce brought Hawaii ever closer to its great neighbor. The Spanish-American War simply hastened the inevitable, and consummated through voluntary annexation the incorporation of Hawaii as a part of the United States.

Fortunately, Hawaii contains, besides the advantage of its position, a great land-locked harbor on the island of Oahu, in which an entire fleet can be berthed for repairs and the replenishment of supplies. Also, in the Hawaiian group there are roadsteads and other anchorages in which the fleet can lie at anchor, ready at a moment's notice to proceed to sea and seek the enemy.

Over the years since 1898, at a steadily increasing pace, these natural facilities have been improved and equipped, until today Pearl Harbor is one of the great, if not the greatest, fleet naval bases in the world. Its docks and piers, its repair shops and stores, its ammunition depots and fuel supplies, will keep a fleet ready for action at all times to intercept any attack on our Pacific coast.

As the use of air forces has increased, the Pearl Harbor base has been augmented by air bases, both in Hawaii and advance bases in the islands nearby, forming an arc that covers Hawaii from the northwest to the south. Midway, 1,200 miles to the northwest; Wake Island, another 1,000 miles in approximately the same direction; Johnston Island, 700 miles southwest; Palmyra Islands, about 1,000 miles due south; and now American Samoa, also south, about 2,300 miles from Honolulu, form a screen of naval air bases through which no enemy can expect to pass without detection. Some of these bases will also harbor submarines, whose operations will further hamper any enemy approach.

For the protection of this great naval base from raids or from an attack in force when the fleet might be elsewhere, the Army has made of Oahu one great fortress. The Hawaiian Department of the United States Army, complete in all arms—air forces, both bombing and fighting; coast artillery, field artillery, motorized infantry; and the various specialized combat troops, all under one commander, a lieutenant general—is prepared to fight off any attack. The military force of the United States Army in Hawaii has been increased as the demands of modern warfare showed the need for new arms and new methods and is today, if not completely up to full strength, so close to it as to present but a minor problem of logistics.

The military picture, therefore, in Hawaii is highly satisfactory. I speak as a layman and make no pretense of being an expert because of my 20 years' service in the Navy. It is a matter of public information that in Hawaii we have shown some foresight and have prepared ourselves in large degree for what may come. Hawaii is today about as impregnable a fortress as human ingenuity can make it. Some parts of the full program of defensive works are still under construction, some equipment and manpower may yet be needed, but military preparations, any more than any other human activity, are not ever-static, and such supplementary increases and additions will always be necessary. The important fact is that the main job is done, and Hawaii is ready as America's outpost to serve its purpose—to harbor the fleet and to protect the fleet base against any eventuality in the Pacific.

Our defenses in other areas of the Pacific are perhaps not quite so nearly completed. But in Alaska, at Dutch Harbor, on the island of Unalaska, a great naval air base is being built which will, together with Pearl Harbor and Midway, close this northern approach effectively. Other bases, both naval and Army, will provide the defenses, too long overlooked, to completely block this side door to America.

Now may I go back again to Hawaii itself, the green-clad land of romance and charm, in the euphonious Hawaiian phrase "ka pae aina o Hawaii nei." Hawaii is more than a military outpost, as proud as its people are to fill that function. As large as Connecticut and Rhode Island together, a fruitful land, blessed by nature with many great advantages, where human industry has developed a stable economy, supporting 400,000 people, Hawaii will always be the home of several hundreds of thousands of American citizens, producing its quota of the national wealth, paying its share of the costs of the National Government, as well as maintaining at its own expense its local government. Wars come and go, but humanity goes on forever. Sometimes peace reigns, and our thoughts return to the vocations and interests of peaceful pursuits. It does not increase Hawaii's efficiency as a naval base to disregard the reasonable aspirations of its people. It will not hinder the value of this outpost to accord its people the same treatment, no more nor less, that would be accorded any other group of American citizens similarly situated.

The great American people whose word is the final law, have a right to know about Hawaii, and about its citizenry, because we, in this Pacific Territory of the United States, do hold the fort for the Nation. Too often lately there have been articles and even books about Hawaii that would imply that all was not well in the paradise of the Pacific. Usually such statements are based on misinformation or only partially correct information, and are written from the viewpoint of those who desire to write dramatically, without too much regard to accuracy.

There are two or three pet bogeys which our critics emphasize, the principal one being the racial constituency of Hawaii. We are a mixture of races, of course, just as America as a whole is a mixture. Lack of immunity to the diseases of civilization nearly destroyed the native Hawaiian people. When immigration apparently became necessary for the expanding industries of Hawaii, it was just as inevitable that such immigration should come in the main from the Orient as it was that Europe should send its people into America to fill its empty places.

Now there is no need for any further immigration, and our task is to weld together into one common allegiance all the peoples of our Nation. In this task Hawaii has done better than many other parts of the country, and our people, regardless of the country from which their parents came, are, I assure you in all sincerity and with the utmost emphasis at my command, as loyal to the United States as any other like number of Americans.

There are less subversive activities in Hawaii, less teaching of un-Americanisms and ideologies than in many other parts of the Nation. We are in more danger from "sixth columnists" than we are from "fifth columnists." The "sixth columnists" who preach hatred and suspicion between Americans, array race against race, class against class, and who use race as a test of patriotism rather than character and behavior, cause more disunity than the disciples of totalitarianism or the agents of foreign governments. Perhaps that is equally true on the mainland.

True, we have the transitory evidences of recent immigrations in the continued use of various foreign languages and the retention of some old country customs; but this is a common practice with all immigrant groups throughout the United States. Time changes all these hold-over habits; the younger generation accepts the American pattern of life; and in a very few years, as the life of a nation is measured, our immigrant people are indistinguishable from the older stock.

Of course, I know that the principal point of attack on Hawaii's loyalty as an American community is its Japanese population. Some utterly ridiculous statements are made as to their numbers, their activities, and their conduct. In fact, they comprise about 37 percent of our total population. About 8 percent are aliens, denied by our own laws from being citizens, an elderly group, rapidly passing off the scene through natural causes. The remainder, about 29 percent, are citizens by birth; about one-half of whom are still in their childhood, comprising a group almost entirely of the second generation native-born. They are, without the shadow of a doubt, as loyal as any other Americans. Perhaps I can best support this affirmation of my own conviction by quoting Lt. Gen. Charles D. Herron, for many years on duty in Hawaii, and until recently the commanding general of the Hawaiian Department of the United States Army. In Collier's Weekly of October 19, 1940, General Herron authorized the following direct quotation:

"The Army is not worried about the Japanese in Hawaii. Among them there may be a small hostile alien group, but we can handle that situation. It seems people who know least about Hawaii and live farthest away are most disturbed over this matter. People who know the islands are not worried over possible sabotage. I say this sincerely after my years of service there. I am sold on the patriotism and Americanization of the Hawaiian people as a whole."

It is not sufficiently realized that Hawaii is not only the western outpost of our military defenses, but is also the outpost of American culture and civilization, and has been such for 100 years or more. American missionaries brought Christianity to Hawaii in 1820. From that time on the influence of America and of its institutions spread steadily and thoroughly throughout every phase of Hawaii's life.

We adopted universal, free, and compulsory public education when Dr. Horace Mann was a prophet without honor in his own country. Our business firms were founded by men from Boston and New York, and later California. Our legal practice is based on the common law, and our governmental institutions are modeled after the best mainland practice. English was the language of Hawaii before annexation, taught in the public and private schools and used throughout the islands.

This pattern of American life, this devotion to American ideals, caused President McKinley to say, in transmitting the treaty of annexation to the United States Senate with his approval: "Under such circumstances annexation is not a change, it is a consummation."

No alien influences, no ineffective agents of foreign governments, whose activities are undoubtedly known to the agents of our own Government, can change Hawaii from the American way of life. The principles of liberty and justice on which this Nation is founded have too strong a hold on the hearts and souls of the people of Hawaii to permit any divergence from the straight path of loyalty to the Nation of which we are so proud to be a part. Our future lies entirely within the American orbit. As a part, and not a mean nor an unimportant part, of this great Nation, we expect to fulfill our destiny in the traditional American manner, a destiny which can have only one ultimate goal for a community such as ours, set off as we are into a separate and distinct entity, self-reliant and self-sufficient in our local affairs, and contributing our full share to the national welfare, and that is Statehood.

Congressional Redistricting in Massachusetts

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR D. HEALEY
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

RESOLUTIONS BY THE CITY COUNCILS OF EVERETT AND MALDEN, MASS.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the city council of the city of Everett hereby go on record as protesting the gerrymandering methods being pursued in the redistricting of the congressional districts of this Commonwealth, if the method being pursued is carried through democratic government as it is understood in our Commonwealth will have been utterly disregarded and the rights of minorities as guaranteed by the constitution of Massachusetts violated, we urge a fair and honorable redistricting with due regard for the rights of all our citizens.

The city clerk is hereby directed to transmit copies of the foregoing resolve to President Goodwin of the senate, speaker of the house of representatives Christian Herter, Representatives Davis, Whittier, and Skerry.

COUNCILMAN DEVITO.

In common council, May 5, 1941, passed.

In board of aldermen, May 12, 1941, passed.

This resolution was presented to his honor, the mayor, for his signature on May 14, 1941, and at this writing has not been returned by him with his signature. He has until May 25, 1941, in which to sign.

RESOLUTIONS BY THE CITY COUNCIL OF MALDEN, MASS., TO THE GREAT AND GENERAL COURT

Whereas the Constitution of the United States declares that a census of the Nation be taken every 10 years; and

Whereas a census was taken in 1940 showing a decrease in the population of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; and

Whereas, as a result thereof, said Commonwealth of Massachusetts will be represented in the National House of Representatives in 1943 and for the next 10 years thereafter, by a delegation of 14 Members instead of 15 Members; and

Whereas the Great and General Court of said Commonwealth of Massachusetts shall construct 14 new congressional districts comprising 308,000 people of the population for each district; and

Whereas, there have been published proposals for redistricting said Commonwealth of Massachusetts into 14 congressional districts; and

Whereas, if said proposals were enacted into law, they would constitute gross inequities, dishonest politics, autocratic misuse of power in an attempt to carve out one of said districts for the sole benefit of one man; a vicious disregard of the franchise and a bold attempt by a political party to control the people in the National House of Representatives: Be it

Resolved, That the City Council of Malden, in a regular meeting held in the council chamber of city hall in said Malden on the evening of Tuesday, May 13, in the year 1941, does most respectfully implore and importune the Great and General Court of said Commonwealth of Massachusetts in its wisdom and fairness to construct 14 congressional districts based on a logical, compact grouping of cities and towns with similar interests; and be it further

Resolved, That the great and general court guard itself against establishment of boss rule by diabolical political interests who would establish congressional districts predicated on party control by linking cities and towns together that are dominated by one political party; and be it further

Resolved, That the great and general court, in its wisdom and fairness, guard itself against the dismemberment of cities and towns whose majority of voters are of other political extractions, to enhance the political ambitions of any one man who is so undemocratic and un-American in his tactics as to boldly attempt to carve out a congressional district for himself; and be it further

Resolved, That in this period of contemporary history where daily the world is being apprized of brutal assaults on small nations; where a mighty military machine is stamping out liberty and freedom and the sacred right of the franchise; that Massachusetts is in the forefront for the preservation of democracy and will not countenance such tactics in these times; and be it further

Resolved, That the wishes of the voters for adequate and equitable representation in the National House of Representatives be complied with; that as a result of the redistricting the charge of evil political manipulation cannot once again be raised against our great Commonwealth; that Massachusetts has forever repudiated the dubious honor that has been conferred upon her for being the birthplace of the nefarious and diabolical gerrymander.

Public Ownership and Distribution of Electricity

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER M. PIERCE
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 29, 1941

LETTERS BY HON. WALTER M. PIERCE, OF OREGON

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, public ownership of essential public utilities is being considered in many sections of our country. In the Pacific Northwest, the movement has been greatly stimulated by the availability of power from Bonneville Dam. An election for a public-power district recently took place in Baker County, Oreg. I wrote my friends there, giving some of the reasons for supporting the project. I desire to include that letter as a part of my remarks and to add to it my reply to an adverse editorial in a Baker paper:

FRIENDS IN BAKER COUNTY: As many of you know, I have made a study of the electric-power business and was at one time an operator of a company In this letter I am replying to those who have written to me in regard to the important subject of voting "yes" or "no" in your public-utility district election, May 27. Certainly, you must inform yourselves. My printed speech Acres of Diamonds, answers many points raised, and I have prepared a radio statement in reply to other queries.

You are being charged an extortionately high rate for electric energy. Even with reductions, forced by the threat of public ownership, you are still paying double what you will pay if you organize your own public-utility district.

The Bonneville transmission lines are now in Pendleton. Money has already been appropriated and allocated to construct the lines across the mountains into Union County, which has voted the public-utility district. If at this election you vote down the public-utility district, you will set back your own county many years—and for the benefit of whom? The absentee stockholders of the private utility. City people will surely swing along with the country people rather than to throw them down for outsiders.

The roads and streets of Baker County belong to you. Pay the private company for that part of their equipment you can use. They claim a tremendous investment. Much of that money has been very unwisely invested. I know for I invested part of it myself.

There is not a private plant operating in Union County that can continue to operate in competition with a Bonneville rate of $17.50 per kilowatt-year, and I think the same condition exists in Baker County.

Forest Grove has standing idle a modern $100,000 generating plant, with Diesel engines, because they can buy Bonneville power cheaper than they can manufacture electric power with the cheapest of fuels.

An opportunity of this kind comes once in a lifetime. Should you vote down the public-utility district, the Bonneville transmission lines will stop in La Grande. You cannot afford to see your neighbors and friends in Grande Ronde Valley benefiting from Bonneville power, furnished there as cheaply as at Hood River, while you remain a vassalage of private interests and pay twice the rates paid by those who seized this great opportunity.

At the rates offered you, hundreds of electric pumps can pump water for irrigation. Byproducts of lumber can be used. This country needs the strategic metals that are in the Baker hills. They can be made available with cheap power. Without it, they will lie unused. The ores can be reduced through electric furnaces right there because your public-utility district can sell you Columbia River electricity at a rate that cannot be duplicated anywhere in the United States—$17.50 per kilowatt-year.

One of the strongest financial companies in the United States, the Aluminum Co. of America, has already invested millions of dollars at Vancouver, Wash., for the purpose of electrically treating alumina, which is made in Mobile from bauxite brought from South America to be transformed into aluminum where electric power is cheapest. They pay heavy transportation costs and haul ore thousands of miles to reach Bonneville power. That company already has under contract more than half the electric energy generated at Bonneville and is clamoring for more. They want to monopolize Bonneville as they have Niagara.

Do not let the private utilities, for their own gain, deceive you and mislead you. Remember, their chief campaigner advised the companies not to be "afraid of the expense—the public pays." You are footing their bills now, while they fight your right to your own business. Do not let them get control of all the power of Bonneville.

Fortunately for you, under my own amendment, half that power is reserved for cooperative associations, until January 1, 1942. If you organize now, you can contract for it before the time expires. No one else can do that for you. Bonneville can, by law, sell at wholesale only. Public ownership does the rest.

The year I became Governor, the little town of Canby, about the size of Haines, was just getting under way to distribute electric energy cooperatively. Since then Canby has had rates of about one-half of what you have paid in Baker. They own their plant, which is free of all debt. They have always bought power wholesale, but have been enabled to make greater rate reductions since contracting for Bonneville power. They have $20,859 surplus in their treasury. I would hate to think that my friends of Baker County are not as intelligent and enterprising as the citizens of Canby.

There is no record of bankruptcy of a public power plant. They usually help to pay the other public debts. Winnepeg shows a capital and surplus of $42,888,330.

No wonder those who are working the gold mine are making a desperate fight to save it. Remember, that mine belongs to you.

WALTER M. PIERCE, M. C.

To the Editor of the Baker Herald:

I have read with absorbing interest your editorial published in your valuable paper of Tuesday, May 13, 1941.

For the future prosperity of Baker, still I urge that at this time, while you have the opportunity, you make arrangements to distribute Bonneville power cooperatively by voting your public-utility district on May 27. The question before you is not which way you prefer to get Bonneville power but whether you will get it at all.

DEBTS

Your first objection to the public-utility district is that you are in debt; therefore, you must vote "no." If that were a valid objection, this Government would cease all defense expenditures and aid to England, because this Government is heavily in debt. Baker, you say, is in debt; therefore, do not buy a new fire engine, although it may be five times as effective as the old one. All those who have felt the grinding weight of public or private debt agree with you that debts should not be piled higher, except for pressing necessities.

The first and most pressing question always is, when creating a debt, either public or private, "What is to be done with the money"? Will the income pay interest and amortize or pay off the debt within a reasonable time? If the debt be public, one of the questions asked is, "What advantage is it to the community; what civic value has it"?

You mention the city natatorium of Baker. Well, the good citizens of Baker could have known before investing their money in a bathing establishment that money so invested was always lost. The "investment" was made for welfare and not for gain.

